

THE BARNHART CONCISE DICTIONARY OF ETYMOLOGY

THE ORIGINS
OF
AMERICAN ENGLISH WORDS

ROBERT K. BARNHART

THE BARNHART CONCISE
DICTIONARY OF ETYMOLOGY

THE BARNHART CONCISE
DICTIONARY OF ETYMOLOGY

EDITED BY ROBERT K. BARNHART

 HarperCollins Publishers

The unabridged edition of this book was published in 1988 under the title The Barnhart Dictionary of Etymology. This edition is published by arrangement with The H. W. Wilson Company.

THE BARNHART CONCISE DICTIONARY OF ETYMOLOGY

Copyright © 1995 by H. W. Wilson Company. All rights reserved.
Printed in the United States of America. No part of this book may be used or reproduced in any manner whatsoever without written permission except in the case of brief quotations embodied in critical articles and reviews. For information address HarperCollins Publishers, Inc., 10 East 53rd Street, New York, NY 10022.

HarperCollins books may be purchased for educational, business or sales promotional use. For information, please write: Special Markets Department, HarperCollins Publishers, Inc., 10 East 53rd Street, New York, NY 10022.

FIRST EDITION

designed by Nancy Singer

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data
The Barnhart concise dictionary of etymology / edited by Robert K. Barnhart — 1st ed.

p. cm.

Rev. ed. of: The Barnhart dictionary of etymology. 1988.

Includes bibliographical references.

ISBN 0-06-270084-7

1. English language—Etymology—Dictionaries. I. Barnhart, Robert K.

II. Barnhart dictionary of etymology.

PE1580.B35 1994

422'.03—dc20 94-17922

97 98 99 00 PS/RRD 10 9 8 7 6 5

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Preface	vii
Editorial Committee of Contributing Scholars	xi
Editorial Staff	xii
Explanatory Notes	xiii
Short History of the English Language by Einar Haugen	xvii
Dictionary A-Z	1
Glossary of Language Names and Linguistic Terms	899
Bibliography	915

PREFACE

The Barnhart Concise Dictionary of Etymology explains the immediate origins of words in English. It contains some 25,000 words, recording the development of native words in English and the many points of contact with other cultures from which English has borrowed new words and adopted new ideas.

This dictionary is an American reference work, basing much of its material on points of view developed by American scholars. It is made from the Barnhart Dictionary of Etymology, the first dictionary of etymology to be produced by an editorial staff working in close collaboration with American scholars from various fields of language study.

Many years ago our original Editorial Committee prefaced its work on that of James Murray in England and William Dwight Whitney in the United States. The Committee's research benefited from findings and interpretations of linguistics scientists in the tradition of Edward Sapir, Edgar Sturtevant, Roland G. Kent, and Kemp Malone, and later specialists such as Zelig Harris, Yakov Malkiel, and Joseph Greenberg. In addition, we have adapted the work of William G. Moulton, Robert A. Hall, Jr., and Ralph L. Ward, who solved many problems in etymology for the Thorndike-Barnhart dictionary series.

Further research has been augmented by the late Einar Haugen, whose study of the Scandinavian element in English is markedly evident throughout this book. In studying the borrowing process of Romance words in English, Ralph de Gorog has contributed not only to explaining Continental influences but also to the Scandinavian influence on French that indirectly affects English. Ralph Ward's study of Latin and Greek and of the Classical element in borrowing into the Romance languages has made it possible to supply forms, especially in Gallo-Romance and Vulgar Latin, that have provided logical steps in tracing many derivations.

Beyond the immediate Romance and Classical borrowings into English, we have devoted space generously to our inherited Germanic structure. Proto-Germanic forms are supplied for our native words and, in most instances, for borrowings from Germanic sources. For native English words, reconstruction of Proto-Germanic forms makes it possible to show the underlying relationships among Germanic cognates. The inclusion of cognates in Germanic languages, especially those cognates obviously related to English in form and meaning, demonstrates in a most concrete way that English is a Germanic language.

Cognates may also show that many developments of meaning are not inventions of English alone. If certain Germanic cognates are old enough, some words in Old English may actually have derived from them, originally brought to England by the "Continental" (Angles, Saxons, or Jutes). Other words in Old English were adopted from the Danes, such as egg, skirt and thrive. Meanings in English may also derive from senses in other languages long after the word itself was originally borrowed into English. Such is the case for prosaic of prose (originally borrowed from French, 1656), but with the meaning "ordinary" (also from French, 1813), demonstrating that the borrowing process has a continuing function.

In our etymologies we have tried to forge a close association between dating the first recorded appearance of a word in English and its semantic development and its development of form. We have also reexamined the function of affixation and of compounding. In both of these undertakings the late Sherman Kuhn and his assistants on the staff of the Middle English Dictionary provided generously of their time and help. In numberless instances the chronological record in our work has been revised from that of the Oxford English Dictionary, drawing the year of first recorded appearance back sometimes as much as two, or even three hundred years. In some cases, such as cork, antedating has clarified an etymology; in others, such as apricot and bicycle, it has made the course of borrowing more specific. Careful attention to the application of dating also demonstrates many instances of multiple borrowing. Perhaps the most striking is that of chalice (recorded from Latin as early as 830 in Old English and later replaced by Anglo-French chalice before 1325, which also replaced a variety of older Middle English forms).

As dictionary makers, we examined not only the extensions of borrowing and semantic development, but also the shift in function from noun to verb, verb to noun, adjective to noun, and so forth, often attributed to influences of the same functions in another language but actually taking place quite regularly in English. Again the Middle English Dictionary provided a broad base of evidence that permitted a systematic study of this process and for the study of replacement of forms in English.

Two periods in the development of English are especially notable for the introduction of a large number of forms, principally from Latin, but some also from Greek, that replaced earlier spellings altered in the course of borrowing from their original classical form. Many of these replacements appeared in the 1300's and early 1400's; others were introduced in the 1500's and 1600's. During the earlier period the object does not seem to have been a conscious effort to "purify" the language so much as an introduction or replacement of familiar spellings in Latin and an attempt to regularize spelling. The later period was an acknowledged interval of purification to be sure, but by resorting to Latin it was also an easy way to introduce new words that would be recognizable or quickly understood coinages. Other replacements include those that involve meaning, such as the term scurvy for which the meaning of scurvy was replaced by the Dutch meaning for scorbutic to cover the disease of vitamin deficiency we know today.

In this dictionary we have included a brief history of the English language, which explains the various events and influences that have affected the language and relates them to language processes. It discusses our long history of borrowing, evident in the arrival of the Continental groups (Angles, Saxons, Jutes, Danes and the Frisian weavers, etc.). Our borrowing process also extends to the return of native-speaking soldiers from long foreign duty, as in the low countries from which they introduced words from Dutch, Walloon, etc., during their service in the Hundred Years' War and the Thirty Years' War (an outstanding example of which is wagon). There is also a short glossary of language names and linguistic terms used in the etymologies.

The form of the Barnhart Concise Dictionary of Etymology parallels the conception of its unabridged version which was shared by two language scholars: my father, Clarence Barnhart, who was chiefly responsible for the application of principles of linguistic science to the craft of dictionary making, and Kemp Malone, who wrote the first modern etymologies to appear in a general-purpose English-language dictionary.

For many years the ideas of these two men were developed by criticism and advice from a group of scholars that included Reason A. Goodwin, Elliot V.K. Dobbie, Ralph L. Ward, Henry and Renee Kahane, Yakov Malkiel, Robert A. Fowkes, A.E. Alexander, Harry Hoijer, and many others. Now with the help and support of Carol Cohen and Robert Kaplan of Harper-Collins and the efforts of Bruce R. Carrick, who encouraged and nurtured the original unabridged version for the H.W. Wilson Company, we have been able to revise and condense our work. Our aim throughout has been to make examples of the development of English an understandable subject for those with no specialized knowledge of language study. We also hope this work will serve as a reference for language scholars, but our chief purpose is to contribute to greater interest in serious study of language.

Robert K. Barnhart
Brewster, New York

EDITORIAL COMMITTEE OF CONTRIBUTING SCHOLARS

RALPH LAWRENCE WARD (CHAIRMAN) Professor Emeritus of Classics, Hunter College, City University of New York

ELLIOTT V. K. DOBBIE Formerly Professor of English, Columbia University (deceased)

C. WILLIAM DUNMORE Formerly Associate Professor in Classics, University College, New York University

F. F. FALES Formerly Associate Professor of Romance Languages, Queens College, New York

RALPH PAUL DE GOROG Professor Emeritus of Romance Philology, University of Georgia

JOSEPH H. GREENBERG Professor of Anthropology, Stanford University

EINAR HAUGEN Victor S. Thomas Professor of Scandinavian and Linguistics, Emeritus, Harvard University (deceased)

HARRY J. HOIJER Formerly Professor of Anthropology and Sociology, University of California, at Los Angeles (deceased)

GARY B. HOLLAND Assistant Professor, Department of Linguistics, University of California, at Berkeley

ROMAN JAKOBSON Formerly Professor of Slavic Languages, Literature, and General Linguistics, Harvard University, and Institute Professor, Massachusetts Institute of Technology (deceased)

GEORGE A. KENNEDY Formerly Director, Institute of Far Eastern Languages (deceased)

SHERMAN M. KUHN Professor Emeritus of English, University of Michigan; Editor Emeritus of the Middle English Dictionary (deceased)

—assisted by

David Ruddy, Department of English Language and Literature (Medieval Studies), University of Michigan

EDITORIAL COMMITTEE OF CONTRIBUTING SCHOLARS

Michael Delahoyde, Department of English Language and Literature (Middle English Literature), University of Michigan

Richard Smith, formerly of the Department of English Language and Literature, University of Michigan

ALO RAUN Professor of Uralic and Altaic Languages, Indiana University (deceased)

BENJAMIN SCHWARTZ Formerly Chairman, Classics Department, Lincoln University (deceased)

Editorial Staff

General Editor: Cynthia A. Barnhart

Associate Editor: Anne L. Bartling

Assistant Editors: David F. Barnhart
Michael G. Barnhart

Office Assistant: Albert S. Crocco

EXPLANATORY NOTES

This dictionary traces the origins of the basic vocabulary of modern English. It contains some 25,000 entries, more than the reported vocabulary of Shakespeare, who was writing in the first period of modern English. The dictionary examines not only the antecedents of modern English, but emphasizes its development.

Articles and Glossary

Einar Haugen has written a "Short History of the English Language," that will serve as background against which specific cultural influences in an entry can be compared.

A glossary is included that lists language names and terms used in the etymologies.

Dates of Words and Meanings

Every word and meaning entered in this dictionary is given the year of its earliest recorded appearance or use as far as the editors and critics can ascertain. We consulted not only historical dictionaries (and general-purpose dictionaries of the 17th, 18th, and 19th centuries) but the Barnhart files of citations that incorporate the original Oxford English Dictionary quotations augmented by Sir William Craigie for the Dictionary of American English as well as those of the Middle English Dictionary made accessible by its editors.

In using the carefully framed system of dating in the Middle English Dictionary we have substituted the word probably for their question mark, and cited the presumed date of composition whereas the MED gives both the date of composition and the date of the manuscript used by the MED editors.

The dates in most cases probably show no more than relative occurrence in English, and in other cases may be no more than an accident of the record. In many sources where citations from early writings were found by reading only odd or even pages or half pages, we have a very imperfect record of English; despite such practice, English remains the best recorded language.

Development, Borrowing, and Word Formation

An important feature of this dictionary is the distinction drawn between development within English and borrowing from other languages. Sometimes native words have been influenced in their development by the existence of words in neighboring languages (e.g., bush and she), and sometimes they have even been reinforced or revived by the existence of foreign terms (atone and capon). In either case, the distinction between foreign and native elements is maintained in this work. The editors have also taken into consideration the fact that many English words have been absorbed from more than one language, particularly when Medieval Latin flourished as the international language of Europe alongside the various national languages.

In addition to borrowing, many internal processes were at work in English that expanded its vocabulary. Among them, back formation played at least as prominent a part in forming new words earlier as it does today (as in gyrate from gyration). One of the contributions of this dictionary is to show the significant productive role played by back formation in creating new forms (admire, assert, liberate, etc.). Also carefully noted are the shifts in function from noun to verb, noun to adjective, verb to noun, etc., functional shift always having been an active process in English (even today we find this process in such a usage as “the book is a good read”).

Diacritic Marks

Among the practices followed in this dictionary to account for the development of form and meaning is the use of diacritic marks, especially in Greek and Latin, where vowel quantity is phonemic. However, absence of such marking in Medieval Latin words is the result of its widespread use, as Medieval Latin became the common scholarly language of Europe and was known in the Near East, and was probably known even in parts of Asia and India. Consequently any marking of vowel quantities in Medieval Latin is only parochial.

Scandinavian Forms

Where borrowing into English comes from a probable Scandinavian source, relevant forms from Scandinavian languages (Swedish, Danish, Norwegian, Icelandic) are given. These words show several possible forms from which the English word may have been borrowed. In other instances words borrowed from Scandinavian and attributable to ancient formation are given in Old Icelandic, the classic literary language of the North, which is the language of record for the sagas and poetry.

Influence of Dutch and the Low Countries

Closely involved with Scandinavian loans is the borrowing from other Germanic languages, particularly of the coastal areas of the Continent near England. In the languages of Friesland and the Frisian Islands, the Netherlands, and the Low German areas, words are often similar to the Scandinavian forms, and it is sometimes difficult to determine whether an early borrowing is from Scandinavian or from one of the coastal languages. We have been mindful of the possibility of a greater influence of this cultural contact than others have in the past, especially by listing possible sources of borrowing among Frisian, Middle Dutch, and Low German cognates.

Development from Anglo-French

During the early years of the Middle English period, a dialect of Old French developed as the language of government, the law courts, and the social life of the new aristocracy. This became the dialect of the French residents in England and of their descendants and is designated Anglo-French (the French of England). Originally it was probably a dialect known as Old Norman French, spoken in Normandy by the gallicized Viking settlers who had not entirely given up their native Scandinavian dialects. It was also in part a mixture of other closely related dialects of the north French coastal region. We have, in so far as evidence shows, differentiated the antecedents of Anglo-French from Old French by using the term “Old North French” to indicate a basis for the French dialect brought to England.

French and Latin Borrowings

Both French and English have borrowed directly from Latin, and in this dictionary we have made a particular effort to show where the borrowing from Old and Middle French was probably augmented by direct borrowing from Latin, and similarly in French where borrowing took place directly from Latin.

French words in which regular phonetic development did not take place, and which are truly Latinisms, constitute a cultural group by themselves. These borrowings are important for the understanding of English vocabulary as they are the heritage of the age of the humanists.

The emphasis on Latin was evident in French and English before the 1300's but gained an increasing momentum in both languages after that time, gradually dying out in France towards 1550 but remaining as an active process in English throughout the 1600's. In French the trend was partly a result of the influence of literary Italian, and coincided with the spread of the Renaissance movement and its attendant admiration for the classical languages.

Where French did not adopt a form directly from Latin and the Old French word developed more or less regularly from a locally differentiated form of the Vulgar Latin of the late Roman Empire, we have tried to reconstruct the necessary hypothetical Gallo-Romance form. These phonetic and morphological conceptions explain the normal process of development of Latin into French and represent unattested Late Latin words which were probably limited to the territory of Gaul.

Replacement in English

In English much of the later borrowing from Latin, especially in the late 1400's through the 1600's, is often characterized as an attempt to "purify" the language by replacing what were considered corrupting influences, principally derived from adoption of French forms and the normalizing processes of Anglicization. In fact it was also perhaps originally as much the reflection of a desire to introduce familiar spellings (even to standardize spelling) by individuals who were more familiar with Latin than with English.

Whenever writers in English reached back into Latin for a new formation, a replacement occurred (e.g., advance, advise, advocate). The concept of replacement in the development of English often explains spelling changes that at first seem inconsistent by giving immediate evidence of the source of new spelling patterns. A replacement may also indicate continued or revived use of a word or even of an intellectual concept (e.g., appreciation, fault, scent, and victuals).

Affixes and Combining Forms

Particular attention is given to word elements. We have separated and analyzed all living prefixes and suffixes in English and indicated combining forms where they appear. Sometimes this dictionary also includes word elements that are no longer active in word formation but are of particular interest. To the native speaker, many will seem obvious, but their systematic treatment reinforces the formative processes in English and explains their proper semantic function.

Where such derivatives are especially numerous, they are listed alphabetically, as under out-, over-, psycho-, *un-*¹, *un-*² and under-.

Cross References

This dictionary has a system of cross references that extends the association of cognates within a group of words and suggests some of the more remote connections of Proto-Germanic. Cross references are given in SMALL CAPITAL LETTERS. They deserve attention if the user is studying remote source as well as more immediate formation.

Abbreviations and Symbols

As a rule, this dictionary does not use abbreviations beyond those for the parts of speech (n., v., adj.).

We have also eschewed the use of symbols except for the traditional asterisk (*) to indicate hypothetical forms. The chief function of hypothetical forms is to serve as a bridge in tracing an etymology. To be sure, a hypothetical form must be reconstructed by rules of sound change on the basis of parallel formations and other comparative evidence. It must also be of appropriate construction to fit logically as a missing link.

In the transcription of forms we have used the symbol h to represent the sound in German ach, Scottish loch (pronounced as k without closing the breath passage).

Language Periods

The dates given to various periods in the history of a language are broad periods generally agreed upon by most scholars. By and large they indicate the end of one stage and the beginning of another in the development of a given language. Following are the dates of language periods frequently cited in this book (all the dates are A.D., except where noted; those in parentheses refer to dates preferred by some scholars):

Modern refers to the period in any language after the Middle period, except for Latin (called New Latin, see below) and Greek, where the accepted term before modern Greek is Medieval Greek.

Late refers to the language period following the Classical period of Greek and Latin and to the end of a language period such as Old English:

Late Greek 300–700

Late Latin 300–700

Middle refers to an intermediate language period before Modern:

Middle Dutch	1100–1500
Middle English	1100–1500 (1475)
Middle French	1400–1600 (1350–1600)
Middle High German	1100–1500 (1450)
Middle Low German	1100–1500(1450)

Old refers to the earliest known or recorded period of a language:

Old English	before 1100
Old French	before 1400 (before 1350)
Old Frisian	before 1500
Old High German	before 1100
Old Icelandic	before 1500 (from the Viking period to about 1300)
Old Provençal	before 1500 (before 1350)
Old Saxon	before 1100
Old Slavic	before 800
Greek	from Homer to A.D. 300
Latin, Classical Latin	200 B.C.–A.D. 300
Medieval Greek	700–1500
Medieval Latin	700–1500
New Latin	after 1500
Anglo-French	1066–1400, but especially to about 1164

SHORT HISTORY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE

The etymology of a word is essentially an account of its history. This history opens vast perspectives on the past, not only of the English-speaking peoples but also of the many others who have interacted with them. There are words that can be traced back thousands of years and others that sprang into being just yesterday. Everyday words are used quite unconsciously which, if their full stories were known, would reveal the panorama of the glory and the shame of the past, its fears and hopes, its prejudices and its faith.

The framework of our knowledge of language we owe to the diligent and sometimes inspired labors of historical linguists, or philologists, over the past two centuries. Through the pioneering work of such men as the Dane Rasmus Rask (1787–1832), and the Germans Jakob Grimm (1785–1863), and Franz Bopp (1791–1867), a discipline known as comparative philology (or linguistics) was born. Since their time the growing insights gained from the studies of hundreds of linguists have made it possible to place English in its proper relationship to the other languages of the world. One aspect of their work has been to compile etymological dictionaries, not only of English, but also of other languages. This dictionary is a continuation of that tradition, a distillation of many older scholars' detailed studies, and an explanation of how English has developed to its present (and still changing) form.

The Tradition of Writing

English has been written only since about 700 A.D. The language of these early texts was formerly often described as Anglo-Saxon—since it was largely Angles and Saxons who became the English people—but is now more properly referred to as Old English. This language soon became quite distinct from the other Germanic dialects that followed divergent development on the Continent. In the eighth century the Anglo-Saxons suffered an invasion by their old northerly neighbors, the Vikings, Scandinavian marauders who overran the northern and eastern sections of England. Ultimately halted by an army of men from Wessex under King Alfred the Great, the invading Scandinavians in the course of time settled down with the natives in what became the Danelaw. Though the English language survived, its vocabulary absorbed numerous words from the invaders' Scandinavian dialects (awkward, birth, egg, sky, thrive, window). Not until the Norman Conquest, some 250 years later, in 1066, was the survival of English threatened. The use of the new invaders' native Old French dialect in government and literature brought the Old English period to a close.

Old English

Old English was a language of many dialects by the time of the Norman Conquest, but much of the surviving literature is found only in the West Saxon tongue. This includes such classics as the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, the epic poem Beowulf, the shorter poems of the Battle of Maldon and of Brunanburh, as well as a host of Christian writings. Nevertheless, outside West Saxon, some of the finest writing is to be found in works of Caedmon and Cynewulf, in the Northumbrian dialect.

To modern users of English, the language of all of these texts seems strange and remote because of its older Germanic structure. In spite of obvious word elements that are a part of Modern English and loans that are recognizably Latin and Scandinavian forms, Old English has an outward appearance that resembles German or Icelandic. Nouns are inflected for four cases (nominative, accusative, genitive, dative) in the singular and plural in a variety of declensions. Every noun is also marked for gender (masculine, feminine, and neuter), which determines the form of accompanying articles and adjectives. Verbs are inflected for each person (first, second, third) of their subject in the singular and to some extent in the plural. Both nouns and verbs have strong and weak forms of their inflections.

However, there is abundant evidence that the inflectional system of Old English was beginning to break down some time before William of Normandy ever set foot on English soil. A certain simplification in verbal inflection had already occurred by then, and the complicated system of inflections of nouns and adjectives was beginning to break down. What the Norman Conquest did do was to eliminate the influence of the Anglo-Saxon upper classes, and in so doing, destroy many of the forces of language conservatism which tend to slow down linguistic change. In other words, the Norman Conquest accelerated the process of linguistic change that presumably would have occurred in any case.

Transition to Middle English

The end of the Old English period marked a great sea-change in English. The conquest by the Norman French imposed a new political and cultural life on the insular land of the Anglo-Saxons and dramatically altered the development of their language. After 1066, the Germanic language that was Old English was relegated to an inferior position. For three centuries it remained only the spoken tongue of the common people. Norman French was the language of supremacy: the power of the Court and its administration was expressed in a tongue foreign to the subject Anglo-Saxon citizenry. Likewise the Church, which continued to conduct all its affairs in Latin, was another "foreign" presence. Nevertheless, this grotesque situation greatly benefited the English language which, in a mostly unwritten form as the language of the common people, was gradually adapted to necessity and circumstance. Vocabulary swelled with borrowing that resulted from wider and closer contact with Old French and its Anglo-French dialect, and the structure changed with the gradual substitution of word order for inflectional endings. The language of Robert Mannyng, Geoffrey Chaucer, and John Gower reveals this process taking place in a language too deeply rooted to be replaced by French. These two languages operated in parallel for a long time, as French was the language of the law courts until 1362 and was still used widely for writing documents well past the 1450's.

The Middle English that emerged had lost most of the inflections of noun and verb, becoming much more like Modern English. Nouns had only the suffix -s, functioning both as a possessive and a plural (boy's, boys); verbs had only -s to mark the third person singular in the present (competing with -th) and an -ed or -t for the past tense (wanted, swept). There were still anomalies in both classes: such plurals as men, mice, or past tense verb forms like thought, sang, both reminders that English was still a Germanic language in structure. But the vocabulary was transformed as borrowing added a huge number of French and Latin loanwords to the old Germanic word stock. This process continued at an ever-quicken pace into early Modern English. There was no inner, linguistic necessity for this; Anglo-Saxon literature was at a high point prior to the Norman Conquest, and manuscript illumination and metalwork had achieved such a state of perfection that England became the training ground for many European apprentices.

The flowering of English through the borrowing process occurred as a consequence of two languages of different cultures in intimate day-to-day contact. In contrast, languages such as German and especially Icelandic have managed with much less outside influence to coin words from their native linguistic stock to satisfy their modern needs. For English the most marked result has been that, while retaining its Germanic structure, it acquired a large Romance element in its vocabulary and thereby assimilated a great deal from the Classical world, to become a more sophisticated and cosmopolitan language than it was before the Norman Conquest. Another and less favorable result has been a loss of predictability in its spelling, which now reflects numerous and conflicting spelling patterns. These developed from the often imperfect interpretations of English writers transcribing words from the various languages of borrowing. Thus many Old and Middle English spellings have been retained in the vocabulary (as in the gh of dough, bough, and rough) against all phonetic reason. In addition, the influence of French has left many ways to write the same sound, such as the sound traditionally represented by sh—conscience, sure, ocean, machine, nation, tissue, and fuchsia.

The Middle English of the 1300's and 1400's was still split into dialects of Northern or Northumbrian, Midland, Southern, and Kentish. But in the fifteenth century the center of English cultural and political life began to shift to London and its environs. This meant that the East Midlands exerted a new dominance in the history of English. London was the seat of the Court and the center of an expanding government; as the center of English commercial life, it attracted people from all parts of the country. Courtiers and civil servants became the elite whose fashion of speaking and writing was normative. Accents leveled out into a more or less standard form used by the gentry, but the cement that held English together was primarily its written form, which was more conservative than the spoken form.

Modern English

In the 1500's and 1600's, the introduction of printing democratized literacy within all language groups, and literary enterprise was no longer largely restricted to the scribes of the Church and Courts. Coupled with the intellectual enthusiasms of the Renaissance, printing forced attention to the written form of language and encouraged standardization. In English especially, the rediscovery of Classical literature and widespread familiarity with it among the intellectuals of the day led to the introduction of innumerable terms from Latin (and Greek) into the English of learned men. Although some contemporary critics regarded the plethora of Classical borrowings with much disfavor, calling the Latinisms "inkhorn terms" in reference to their somewhat self-conscious introduction into English, many of the terms were nonetheless accepted, adding richness and variety to the English vocabulary.

If Chaucer was the quintessential Middle English writer, then Shakespeare, by virtue of his creative use of the English vocabulary, must occupy a similar position during the Elizabethan period. He and other great stylists—Donne, Bacon, Sidney, Spenser, Raleigh, among others—produced a flowering of literature such as English had never before experienced. They made full use of the syntactical and grammatical resources that the language provided, often using forms that later ages have branded as "ungrammatical," such as the double negative. It was left to the 1700's, the "Age of Reason," to create an atmosphere where grammarians and lexicographers could achieve success in a campaign to standardize the language. The Italians and French had set up academies to regulate development of their languages, and under that influence many English writers (Dryden, Defoe, Swift, etc.) called for similar measures in England. As it turned out, the English "Academy" took the form of a dictionary, compiled by an individual, not by a government-sponsored committee. Samuel Johnson's great Dictionary of 1755, originally conceived as a prescriptive work, was adopted as a standard of acceptable English well into the nineteenth century.

One aspect of the language that resisted all standardizing and that no dictionary, in spite of the several attempts by Walker and Sheridan, could regulate, was pronunciation. From the Middle English period to the Modern, changes continued to occur which altered the relation of sound to symbol. In Old and Middle English the letters represented much the same sounds as in other European languages. But toward the end of the Middle English and well into the Modern period the long vowels changed drastically. This Great Vowel Shift was marked by a systematic series of changes in which the pronunciation of vowels resulted in the vowel system of Modern English. Old ī became ai as in mine, ū became ow as in house (from hūs), ē became the i of machine (as in beet) and ō became the u of sue (as in boot), while ā turned into ey (as in mate). The short vowels were more consistent with the past, but a shifted to æ (as in can, chance), with some examples restored to ah in London English (chance, path). Unstressed final -e (representing the sound of a in sofa) was lost in words such as name, rate, with the result that thousands of words which once had two syllables became monosyllabic in Modern English. Interestingly, the pronunciation of Latin by Englishmen followed the same path, so that in legal English we still have idiosyncratic pronunciations of sine die, habeas corpus, instead of the assumed classical sounds.

Though Modern English can be dated from 1500, the real expansion and extension of the language commenced in the 1700's. Even though English was largely standardized, its vocabulary did not remain static. Within England the language responded to the rapid proliferation of scientific and technological developments that led to the Industrial Revolution. One need only mention Sir Isaac Newton as a key to the spirit that resulted eventually in the thousands of words required to describe the new knowledge of the times. Physics and astronomy led the way in giving humanity an entirely novel view of the universe. Technological advances brought railroads and led to factories and machines and products that required naming. Outside the British Isles English spread with the voyages of discovery and the colonization of North America, Australia, South Africa, and dominion in India.

American English

The United States secured its political freedom from England in 1783, but in spite of independence and an open reception of immigrants from many other lands, America's language remained English. Though not precisely the English of England, American English did not depart in structure from its English model. The new nation's need to establish a separate identity did not go unnoticed, however. By 1813 Thomas Jefferson was admonishing his fellow citizens to create a "new language" fit for the new nation; he referred specifically to the need for a vocabulary that would describe the innumerable different aspects of the American landscape and social order. Old words were extended in meaning: the name robin was used for a bird that was not the same as the English robin. American Indian names were adopted for plants and animals, and words from the languages of other immigrants were borrowed. In addition, there were borrowings from the established vocabulary of the French explorers and traders who had preceded even the early colonists in their push West, as well as from the American Spanish of the southwest. The new American English was first recorded in 1828 by Noah Webster, who compiled a prescriptive American counterpart to Johnson's Dictionary, and the name Webster signified a standard of its own as the first fruits of American lexicography.

Webster's dictionary and spellers were significant in the standardization of American English through the schools. Printing had made the written form of English readily available. The common citizen learned to read and sent his children to school to follow suit. Both in England and America (and in western Europe generally) the nineteenth century was a time when reading and writing became a widely acquired accomplishment important to the dissemination of information and ideas. Development of a popular press and an increasingly rapid pace of scientific, social, and cultural advancement have accelerated the growth of English in the twentieth century. Modern inventions of travel and communication (the telephone and telegraph, automobile and airplane, radio, television, and satellite) have brought almost instantaneous contact and interchange of information. In this context, modern technology, because it is largely couched in American English, has assured American English of a major role throughout the world as a language of international communication, supplanting French which, in a much earlier era, replaced Latin.

The Origins of English

The English language is of course much more than its written tradition; it is first and foremost spoken, although the present-day emphasis on writing has caused many to forget the significance of speech. Every child learns to speak before he or she can read and write; most people spend a great deal more time talking than either reading or writing. A distinguishable form of English was spoken in Great Britain long before it was ever written, and we are fortunate in being able to trace the origins of English back far beyond the dawn of its writing. While all users of English read and write in much the same way, their speech may vary widely, and certainly deviates a great deal from what they read and write. Modern English speech obviously varies regionally by local dialects; but it also varies more subtly by social status: the "Cockney" London speech and the distinctive "Brooklynese" and "New Yorkese" of New York City are but a few examples. Similarly there are marked differences between British and American English, and within American English one distinguishes the New England dialect from Midwestern or Western and both from the Midland speech of Pennsylvania and western settlement areas, and all from Southern.

As we have seen, English has also been enormously affected in its development by many languages with which it has been in contact. Language contact (either face-to-face contact or indirect contact through the written word) has made English a singularly heterogeneous language, in which the majority of its words have been borrowed and are not lineally descended from earlier native forms. The most important sources of borrowing have been Old and Middle French, Latin, and Greek, as well as the early infusion from the Scandinavian languages. Almost by historical accident, the Indo-European element has been strengthened in English, because many such words that are lost in Germanic have been restored in English by borrowing from other members of the Indo-European family. Borrowing is a more haphazard process of vocabulary development than lineal descent within a family, but insofar as external factors induce borrowing, the resulting forms are relatively predictable.

Any dictionary of etymology is to a great extent the by-product of language studies, a compilation of the research of many linguistics scholars. This dictionary reflects work over the years of many American scholars who have contributed extensively to our knowledge of etymology.

Einar Haugen
Harvard University

THE BARNHART CONCISE
DICTIONARY OF ETYMOLOGY

A

a, a form of the indefinite article. A is a reduced form of an (from Old English ān one); the process of losing the nasal sound began before 1160, perhaps as early as 1130. The n was frequently lost before sounded h in the 1300's and 1400's.

a-¹ a prefix forming adjectives and adverbs from nouns, as in abed, afire, especially verbal nouns, as in a-hunting.

The prefix is a survival of a low-stressed variant a of the Old English preposition on (or an) meaning on, in. Occasionally in late Old English and commonly in Middle English this a occurred in prepositional phrases such as those which developed into the compounds alive, afloat, afield, asleep, and the like.

a-² a prefix in a few words of Latin origin as a variant of ab-¹ from, away from. Latin ā- replaced ab- before m-, p-, and v-, and in English this a- is seen in avert and related words.

a-³ a prefix taking the place of ad- to, toward, in words of Latin origin, especially before sc-, sp-, and st-, + as in ascribe, aspire, astrigent.

a-⁴ a prefix having the general meaning of not, without, lacking, as in apolitical (= not political), atonal (= without tone). It has the form an- before vowels.

The prefix a- came into English from Greek a-, an-, meaning not, without, and is found in words taken directly, or through Latin, from Greek, as in amorphous (Greek ámorphos without form), anonymous (Greek anōnymos nameless), and apathy (Greek apátheia lack of feeling). As a naturalized English prefix, a- is also found in new formations, such as amoral and asocial.

In English the form a- occurs before h- in a new coinage, as in ahistorical; in Greek an initial h- was dropped and the prefix was an-, as in anaimiā bloodlessness (from háima blood) which came into English as anemia; but the h- is sometimes restored by analogy with English words with h- of Greek origin, as in anhydrous (from Greek ánydros waterless, from hýdōr water).

a-⁵ a prefix marking an act as momentary, as a single event, added to verbs, and found in such words as abide, amaze, ashamed. Old English ā- (originally or-), cognate with Old Saxon ur-, ar-, Old High German ir-, ur- (modern German er-), Gothic us-, ur-, meaning away, out, also usable as an intensive prefix. Old English ā- is an unaccented variant of or-. These prefixes are from Proto-Germanic uz-*.

A 1 or A-1 adj. first-class, excellent. 1837, originally a symbol used by Lloyd's of London to denote ships in first-class condition.

aardvark n. 1833, borrowed from earlier Afrikaans aardvark, meaning literally "earth pig," a compound of aard earth + vark pig. In modern Afrikaans the word is spelled erdvark.

ab-¹ a prefix that entered English as a component of many words taken from Latin or French, and used also to some extent in forming words in English.

Latin ab- is a special use of the preposition ab (with variants ā, abs), meaning from, away from. Combined with a verbal stem Latin ab- adds meanings of separation, removal, motion away from. In these formations, the prefix has the form ab- before a vowel or h, as in abhor shrink from; a- before m, p, or v, as in avert turn away; and abs- before c or t, as in abstract draw out.

In a rarer instance, the prefix converted from a Latin phrase as in the case of aborigines, which is possibly formed on the Latin phrase ab origine from the beginning.

In a few adjectives formed in English, ab- recalls its prepositional function of away from as in aboral away from the mouth; abnormal deviating from the normal.

ab-² a form of the prefix ad-, meaning to, toward, before b in words of Latin or French origin, as in abbreviate. In words from Latin the form is due to the assimilation of the d to the following consonant (b).

aback adv. Probably before 1200 abac, developed from Old English (1000) on bæc at or toward the back.

The idiom taken aback was originally a nautical term meaning (of a ship) caught by a head wind that presses the sails back against the mast. The figurative sense caught suddenly by surprise, appeared in 1840.

abacus n. Before 1387, borrowed from Latin abacus, from Greek ábax (stem ábak- as in the genitive form ábakos) counting table.

abaft prep., adv. 1594, developed from Middle English baft behind, and the prefix a- on, on the model of adverbs like about, around, aside. Baft developed from Old English (before 800) bæftan, formed of bi- BY, + æftan AFT.

There is also before 1325 a Middle English word obaft from the phrase on baft or of baft, but a gap of almost three centuries between obaft and abaft makes it doubtful that they are the same word.

abalone n. 1888, American English abalone, alteration of earlier (1850) avalone; borrowed from Mexican Spanish aulone, from Costanoan (American Indian language of the California coast) aülun red abalone.

abandon v. 1390 abandonen borrowed from Old French abandoner leave to one's mercy or discretion, from abandon surrender, from the phrase a bandon at the power of (a at + bandon power, jurisdiction, of Frankish origin and related to the source of BAN² edict). —abandon n. 1850, borrowed from French, from Old French abandon. The noun was a re-borrowing of a word that existed in Middle English (probably before 1400) as abandoun, borrowed from Old French abandon. —abandoned adj. 1692, formed from English abandon, v. in imitation of French abandonné immoral, past participle of abandonner.

abase v. Alteration in 1539 (influenced by *base*² low) of abaishen, abassen (before 1338); borrowed from Old French abaissier bring low (à to + baissier make lower, from Vulgar Latin bassiāre*, seen in Medieval Latin bassus low, humble; see BASE² low). —abatement n. 1561, formed from English abase + -ment.

abash v. About 1303 abaishen, abassen to lose one's composure, be upset; borrowed through Anglo-French baïss-, from Old French esbaïss-, stem of esbaïr, also esbaer be astonished (es- out + baïr, baër to be open, gape). Related to ABEYANCE.

abate v. About 1300 abaten, borrowed from Old French abatre, abatre beat down, from Vulgar Latin abbattere* (Latin ab- to + battere*, from Latin battuere to beat). Related to BAT³ wink and BAT¹ stick.

The sense "to become less, diminish" appeared probably before 1325. —abatement n. Before 1340, borrowed from Middle French abatement, from Old French abatre; for suffix see -MENT.

abbess n. About 1300 abbesse, borrowed through Old French abbēsse, from Late Latin abbātissa, feminine of abbās (stem abbāt- as in the genitive form abbātis). Abbess alternated with and finally replaced the earlier forms abbatess and abbotess. See ABBOT.

abbey n. About 1300 abbeye, borrowed through Old French abaie, from Late Latin abbātia, from abbās (genitive abbātis). See ABBOT.

abbot n. About 1123 abbot, also abbat, alteration of Old English (about 880) abbod, also abbad; borrowed from Late Latin abbās (genitive abbātis), from Late Greek abbās, from Aramaic abbā father.

abbreviation n. Probably before 1425 abbreviacion a shortening; borrowed through Middle French abréviation from Late Latin abbreviatiōnem (nominative abbreviatiō), from abbreviāre make brief (Latin ab- to, + breviāre shorten, from brevis short); for suffix see -TION. —abbreviate v. Before 1425, borrowed from Late Latin abbreviātus, past participle of abbreviāre; for suffix see *-ATE*¹.

abdicate v. 1541, borrowed from Latin abdicātus, past participle of abdicāre renounce, reject (ab- away + dicāre proclaim); for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —abdication n. 1552, borrowed from Latin abdicatiōnem (nominative abdicatiō) renunciation, from abdicāre; for suffix see -TION.

abdomen n. 1601, borrowed from Latin abdōmen; also known in 1541 in a translation from French. Perhaps the original meaning is concealment (of viscera) and derived from Latin abdere conceal (ab- away + -dere combining form meaning to put, place; see DO¹ perform). —abdominal adj. 1746, borrowed from New Latin abdominalis, from Latin abdōminis (genitive of abdōmen); for suffix see *-AL*¹.

abduction n. 1623, borrowed from Latin abductiōnem (nominative abductiō), from abducere lead away (ab- away + ducere to lead); for suffix see -TION. —abduct v. 1623 (implied in abducted), probably borrowed from Latin abductus or perhaps a back formation from abduction.

aberration n. 1594, borrowed from Latin aberratiōnem (nominative aberratiō), from aberrare go astray (ab- away + errare wander); for suffix see -TION.

abet v. About 1380 abetten, borrowed from Old French abeter (à to + beter hound on, from a Germanic source: 1) either Middle or Low Franconian bētan incite; compare Old English bētan to hunt, bait, or 2) Scandinavian, compare Old Icelandic beita cause to bite, from bīta to BITE). The sense of instigate or encourage in a crime appeared in 1590.

abeyance n. 1528, borrowed from Anglo-French abeiance (legal) expectation, from Old French abeër covet (à at + beër, baër to be open).

abhor v. Probably before 1425 abhorren; borrowed from Latin abhorrere shrink away from in horror (ab- from + horrere bristle with fear).

abide v. Probably before 1200 abiden, developed by fusion (about 1000) of Old English ābīdan remain, (ā- a-⁵ + bīdan) and abīdan (earlier onbīdan) stay on, both compounds with bīdan stay, wait. —abidance n. 1647, formed from English abide + -ance.

ability n. Before 1398 ablete, borrowed from Old French ableté. The spelling ablete was replaced in the 1400's by abilite, from Old French habilité, a learned borrowing from Latin habilitatem (nominative habilitās) aptitude, from habilis easy to manage, handy, see ABLE.; for suffix see -ITY.

abject adj. Before 1415 abiect, abject outcast, wretched; borrowed from Latin abjectus, past participle of abicere throw away, cast off (ab- away, off + -icere, combining form of jacere to throw, cast).

abjure v. 1430, borrowed through Middle French abjurer, or directly from Latin abjūrare deny on oath (ab- away + jūrare swear). —abjuration n. Before 1439, borrowed from Latin abjūratiōnem (nominative abjūratiō), from abjūrare; for suffix see -TION.

ablation n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Latin ablātiōnem (nominative ablātiō) a taking away; for suffix see -TION. —ablate v. 1902, back formation from ablation. This is a new formation of a word that was originally borrowed in the 1500's from Latin ablātus (see ABLATIVE def.1) but became obsolete by the early 1600's.

ablative n. 1 case in grammar. About 1434, borrowed from Middle French ablatif, ablative, from Latin cāsus ablātīvus case of removal, once thought to be coined by Julius Caesar. The grammatical case that expresses direction from a place derives its application from Latin ablātus removed, past participle of aufferre carry away (au- away; see AB-¹ + ferre carry); for suffix see -IVE. 2 a substance that ablates. 1959, formed from English ablate + -ive.

able adj. Probably about 1375, borrowed from Old French hable, able, from Latin habilis easily managed or held, from habēre to have, hold.

-able a suffix freely forming adjectives from verbs, with a generally passive meaning "able, liable, fit, etc., to be _____ed" (as in enjoyable = able to be enjoyed, breakable = liable to be broken); in some older words it has an active meaning "able to _____" (as in suitable = able to suit); it is also used to form nouns meaning "giving or inclined to _____" (as in pleasurable = giving pleasure, peaceable = inclined to peace).

The suffix has only a superficial resemblance and no historical connection with the adjective able, the latter has affected productivity of the suffix in English in modern coinages as jumpable, actionable.

As a suffix -able came into the language in words from Old French, or directly from Latin -abilis. In Latin the suffix is -bilis (-abilis in adjectives derived from verbs with infinitives in -āre such as amāre to love: amābilis lovable); in other conjugations -ibilis, English -ible. On that account, there has been uncertainty between -able and -ible; probably compounded by use of -able in verbs of all conjugations in French.

In English -able is the spelling when added to native English words, -ible when the underlying verb is clearly derived from a Latin verb in -ēre, -ere, -īre such as terrible (Latin infinitive terrēre).

abnormal adj. Formed about 1835 from English ab- off + normal. Under the influence of Latin abnormis deviating from a rule (ab- off, away from + norma rule), abnormal outlived the now obsolete anormal, which came through French from Medieval Latin anormalis (Latin ā- away from + normalis NORMAL); for suffix see -AL¹. —abnormality n. 1854, formed from English abnormal + -ity.

abode n. Probably about 1200 abad; later abod (probably about 1300) a stay, delay, continuance (verbal noun with the same vowel alternation as the past tense of abiden to abide, developed from Old English ābidan ABIDE). The extended meaning "habitual residence, dwelling" appeared in 1576.

abolish v. 1459 abolishen, borrowed from Middle French aboliss-, stem of abolir to abolish, learned borrowing from Latin abolēre destroy, cause to die out, related to abolēscere die out (ab- off + -olēscere, as in adolēscere grow up; see ADOLESCENCE); for suffix see -ISH².

abolition n. 1529 borrowed through Middle French abolition, or directly from Latin abolitiōnem (nominative abolitiō), from abolēre destroy, ABOLISH; for suffix see -TION. —abolitionist n. 1788, formed from English abolition + -ist.

abominable adj. 1340, borrowed from Old French abominable, and from Late Latin abōminābilis (from the stem of Latin abōminārī deplore as an evil omen; see ABOMINATION); for suffix see -ABLE.

abomination n. About 1350, borrowed from Old French abomination, from Latin abōminātiōnem (nominative abōminātiō), from abōminārī deplore as an evil omen (ab- off, away from + ōminārī prophesy, foreboding, from ōmin-, stem of ōmen); for suffix see -TION. —abominate v. 1644, possibly a back formation from abomination, or borrowed from Latin abōminātus, past participle of abōminārī; for suffix see -ATE¹.

aborigines n.pl. 1547, borrowed from Latin Aborīginēs the first inhabitants, especially of Latium, possibly formed from the phrase ab origine from the beginning. The tendency to regard this word as a normal English plural produced the singular aborigine (1858) by back formation. This form replaced the singular use of aboriginal, which appeared in the late 1700's. Aborīginēs is a proper noun in early Latin histories, perhaps a tribal name altered by popular etymology. See ORIGIN.

abortive adj. Before 1382, borrowed from Latin abortīvus causing abortion, from abortus, past participle of aborīrī disappear, miscarry (ab- amiss + orīrī appear, be born, arise); for suffix see -IVE. —abort v. 1580, borrowed from Latin abortāre, from abortus, past participle of aborīrī. —abortion n. 1547, borrowed from Latin abortiōnem (nominative abortiō), from abortus, past participle of aborīrī; for suffix see -TION.

abound v. About 1325, borrowed from Old French abunder, learned borrowing from Latin abundāre to overflow (ab- off + undāre rise in waves, from unda a wave).

about adv., prep. Old English abūtan about 1000, developed from earlier (about 880) onbūtan (on on + būtan outside of, a compound of bī, be by + ūtan outside, from ūt out). In Old English ymbe and ymbūtan served the function of about, around, but onbūtan began to absorb their function as the original Old English words disappeared by the 1200's.

above adv., prep. Old English (about 896) abuſan, reduction of earlier onbuſan (on on + buſan over, a compound of bī, be by + uſan over, related to Old English upp UP). Our English, uſan is cognate with Old Saxon oban(a), Old High German oban(a) (modern German oben), and Old Icelandic ofan, from Proto-Germanic uſan-, uſan-.

abrade v. 1677, borrowed from Latin abrādere (ab- off + rādere to scrape).

abrasion n. 1656, borrowed through French, or directly from Medieval Latin abrasionem (nominative abrasio) a scraping, from Latin abrāsus, past participle of abrādere scrape off; see ABRASE; for suffix see -SION.

abridge v. About 1303 abregen curtail, lessen; borrowed from Old French abregier or abreger, from Late Latin abbreviāre make brief. For an explanation of -g- in French abrégé see ASSUAGE. The sense of make shorter, condense appeared about 1384. —abridgment n. 1494, borrowed from Old French abrege-ment, from abreger; for suffix see -MENT.

abrogate v. 1526, verb use of earlier abrogate archaic adjective and participle borrowed before 1464 as abrogat abolished, from Latin abrogātus, past participle of abrogāre (ab- away + rogāre propose a law, request); for suffix see -ATE¹. —abrogation n. 1535, borrowed from Latin abrogātiōnem (nominative abrogātiō), from abrogāre; for suffix see -TION.

abrupt adj. 1583, broken away, borrowed from Latin abruptus, past participle of abrupere break off (ab- off + rupere to break).

abs- + a prefix appearing instead of *ab-*¹ from, away from, before c or t in words of Latin or Latin and French origin, as in abscond, abstract, abstain.

abscess n. 1615, borrowed from Latin abscessus a going away; in medicine, a congestion, an abscess, from abscessus; (genitive abscessūs), from abscess-, stem of abscedere withdraw (abs- away, variant of ab- before c + cedere go).

abscond v. 1565, borrowed through Middle French abscondre, or directly from Latin abscondere hide, conceal (abs- away, variant of ab- before c + condere put together, store, from con- together + -dere put).

absence n. About 1380, borrowed from Old French absence, ausence, learned borrowing from Latin absentia, from absentem (nominative absēns), present participle of abesse be away; see ABSENT¹.

absent¹ adj. not present. About 1382, borrowed from Old French, learned borrowing from Latin absentem (nominative absēns), present participle of abesse be away (ab- away + esse be).

absent² v. keep away. Probably before 1400, borrowed from Middle French absenter, learned borrowing from Late Latin absentāre cause to be away, from Latin absentem (nominative absēns), present participle of abesse be away; see ABSENT¹. —absentee n. 1537, formed from English absent + -ee. —absenteeism n. 1829, formed from English absentee + -ism.

absinthe n. 1842, borrowed from French absinthe, learned borrowing from Latin absinthium the plant wormwood, from Greek apsinthion.

The sense of the plant appeared before 1500.

absolute adj. About 1380, borrowed from Latin absolutus, past participle of absolvere to set free, make separate or complete; see ABSOLVE.

absolution n. About 1200, absolucion, borrowed from Old French absolution, from Latin absolutiōnem (nominative absolutiō) completion, acquittal, from absolū-, stem of absolvere, see ABSOLVE; for suffix see -TION.

absolve v. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Latin absolvere to set free, acquit (ab- from + solvere loosen).

absorb v. Probably about 1425, borrowed from Middle French absorber, refashioned from Old French assorbir, after Latin absorbere swallow up (ab- from + sorbere suck in). —absorbent adj. 1718, borrowed from Latin absorbentem (nominative absorbēns), present participle of absorbere; for suffix see -ENT.

absorption n. 1597, borrowed from Latin absorptiōnem (nominative absorptiō) a sucking in, from absorbere; see ABSORB; for suffix see -TION.

abstain v. About 1380, Middle English abstēnen, absteynen, borrowed from Old French abstenir, learned borrowing from Latin abstinere withhold (abs- away, variant of ab- before t + tenere to hold).

abstention n. 1521, borrowed from Middle French abstention, from Late Latin abstentiōnem (nominative abstentiō), from Latin absten-, stem of abstinere withhold; see ABSTAIN; for suffix see -TION.

abstinence n. 1340, borrowed from Old French abstinence, astinence, from Latin abstinentia, from abstinentem (nominative abstinēns), present participle of abstinere withhold; see ABSTAIN; for suffix see -ENCE.

abstract adj. Before 1398, borrowed from Latin abstractus, past participle of abstrahere draw away (abs- away trahere to draw).

The noun abstract appeared before 1456, the verb in 1542, both from the adjective. —abstraction n. Before 1400, borrowed from Old French abstraction, from Latin abstractiōnem (nominative abstractiō), from abstrac-, stem of abs-trahere; for suffix see -TION.

The sense of an abstract idea appeared in 1644, a work of abstract art about 1915.

abstruse adj. 1599, borrowed through Middle French abstrus, or directly from Latin abstrusus, past participle of abstrudere conceal (abs- away + trudere to thrust, push).

absurd adj. 1557, borrowed from Middle French absurde, from Latin absurdus out of tune, senseless (ab-, amiss + surdus deaf, dull, mute). —n. the absurd 1954, from French l'absurde (in the philosophy of Albert Camus). —absurdity n. 1472, borrowed from Middle French absurdité, from Late Latin absurditatem (nominative absurditās), from Latin absurdus; for suffix see -ITY.

abundance n. 1340, Middle English aboundance, aboundaunce; borrowed from Old French abundance, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin abundantia fullness, plenty, from abundantem overflowing; see ABUNDANT; for suffix see -ANCE.

abundant adj. About 1380, aboundaunt, borrowed from Old French abundant, and directly as a learned borrowing from abuse v. Probably before 1425 abusen, borrowed from Middle French abuser, from Vulgar Latin abūsāre*, from Latin abūsus, past participle of abūtī use up (ab- away + ūtī to use). —n. 1439 abus, borrowed from Middle French abus, from Latin abūsus (genitive abūsūs) a using up, from past participle of abūtī. —abusive adj. 1583, formed from English abuse + -ive.

Latin abundantem (nominative abundāns), present participle of abundare to overflow; for suffix see -ANT.

abut v. Before 1250 abuten to end at, border on; a fusion of Old French abouter join end to end (ā to + bout end) with Old French abuter touch with an end (ā to + but end); see BUTT² target. —abutment n. 1644, formed from English abut + -ment.

abysmal adj. 1656, formed from English abysm + *-al*¹. Obsolete abysm, an abyss, is first recorded in English as abime before 1325 and as abysm in 1483. The earlier form was borrowed from Old French abisme, from Vulgar Latin abismus*, an alteration of Late Latin abyssus ABYSS. The m in abismus was introduced by the influence of nouns ending in Latin -ismus -ism.

abyss n. 1534, borrowed from Late Latin abyssus as a learned substitute for abysm (see abysmal). Late Latin abyssus is from Greek ábyssos (a- without + byssós bottom, possibly related to Greek báthos depth).

ac- a form of the prefix ad-, meaning to, toward, before c and q in words of Latin or French origin, as in accept, account, acquaint.

acacia n. Before 1398 acacia a medicinal gum, borrowed from Latin acacia, from Greek akakíā a thorny Egyptian tree, probably related to Greek aké point.

academy n. 1474, borrowed from Latin acadēmīa, name of a park near Athens and of a school held in a grove of the park where Plato taught, from Greek Akadēmeia, the grove belonging to Akadēmos, a Greek hero of the Trojan War. The sense of any school or place for training came into English in the 1500's possibly through Middle French académie, from Italian accademia; or from New Latin academia, both ultimately from Latin acadēmīa. —academic adj. 1588, borrowed from Medieval Latin academicus; or from Middle French académique; for suffix see -IC.

acanthus n. 1667, borrowed from Latin acanthus, from Greek ákanthos (aké point, thorn + ánthos flower).

accede v. Probably before 1425 acceden become adapted, come near to; borrowed from Latin accēdere approach, enter upon (ac- to, variant of ad- before c + cēdere move, go).

accelerate v. 1525–30, perhaps modeled on Latin from Middle French accélérer, but more likely borrowed directly from Latin accelerātus, past participle of accelerāre quicken (ac- to, variant of ad- before c + celerāre quicken, from celer swift); for suffix see -ATE¹. —acceleration n. 1531, perhaps borrowed from Middle French accélération, but more likely from Latin acceleratiōnem (nominative acceleratiō), from accelerāre; for suffix see -TION. —accelerator n. 1611, formed from English accelerate + *-or*².

accent n. Before 1398, borrowed from Middle French accent, from Old French acent, from Latin accentus song added to speech (ac- to, variant of ad- before c + cantus (genitive cantūs) a singing, from canere sing; see CHANT).

Latin accentus was a loan translation of Greek prosōidīā PROSODY. —v. 1530, borrowed from Middle French accenter, from accent ACCENT n.

accentuate v. 1731, borrowed from Medieval Latin accētuatus, past participle of accētuare to accent, from Latin accentus ACCENT; for suffix see -ATE¹.

accept v. About 1380, borrowed from Latin acceptāre take or receive willingly, from acceptus, past participle of accipere receive (ac- to + -cipere, combining form of capere to take). Some scholars derive accept from Old French accepter, which may be a parallel borrowing from Latin. —acceptable adj. About 1384, borrowed from Old French acceptable, learned borrowing from Latin acceptābilis worthy of acceptance, from acceptāre; for suffix see -ABLE. —acceptance n. 1574, borrowed from Middle French acceptance, from accepter; for suffix see -ANCE.

access n. About 1300 aces an attack of fever; borrowed from Old French aces onslaught, attack, learned borrowing from Latin accessus (genitive accessūs) a coming to, an approach, from past participle of accēdere to approach.

The original meaning in Latin, approach, entrance, appeared in about 1384. —v. 1970, from the noun. —accessible adj. Before 1400, borrowed from Old French accessible, learned borrowing from Late Latin accessibilem, from Latin accessum, past participle of accēdere; for suffix see -IBLE. —accession n. 1646, borrowed from French accession, learned borrowing from Latin accessiōnem (nominative accessiō) a going to, joining, from accēdere; for suffix see -SION. —accessory n. 1414 accessorie an accessory to a crime; borrowed from Middle French accessoire accomplice, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin accessorius additional, from Latin accessus a coming to; for suffix see -ORY.

accident n. About 1380, borrowed from Old French accident, from Latin accidentem (nominative accidēs), present participle of accidere happen, fall out (ac- to + -cidere, combining form of cadere to fall); for suffix see -ENT. —accidental adj. 1386, borrowed from Middle French accidental, or directly from Medieval Latin accidentalis, from Latin accidentem (nominative accidēs); for suffix see -AL¹.

acclaim v. 1633, perhaps borrowed from Middle French acclamer, but more likely from Latin acclamāre shout approval or disapproval of (ac- toward + clāmāre cry out; see LOW², v.). The spelling was influenced by claim.

acclamation n. 1541, perhaps borrowed from Middle French acclamation, but more likely from Latin acclamatiōnem (nominative acclamatiō) shout of approval, from acclamāre ACCLAIM; for suffix see -TION.

acclimate v. 1792, borrowed from French acclimater (ā to, from Latin ad-) + (climat CLIMATE).

accolade n. 1623, a ceremony bestowing knighthood with an embrace or tap on the shoulder; borrowed from French acolade an embracing about the neck. The modern French and English spellings are an alteration (after nouns in -ade) of Old French acolée, from acoler to embrace, from Vulgar Latin acollāre* (Latin ac- to + collum neck). The meaning of praise or award appeared in the late 1800's.

accommodate v. 1525, as a participial adjective; later as a verb (1531); both forms probably borrowed from Latin accommodatus, past participle of accommodare fit one thing to another (ac- to + commodare make fit, from commodus fit; see COMMODE); for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —accommodation n. 1611, borrowed from French accommodation, from Latin accommodatiōnem (nominative accommodatiō), from accommodare; for suffix see -TION.

accompany v. 1426 accompanien, borrowed from Middle French accompagner, from Old French acompaignier take as a companion (à to + compaignier from compain companion).

accomplice n. 1589, perhaps arising from the phrase a complice in which the indefinite article was absorbed into the noun complice by assimilation as accomplice on analogy with accomplice, accomplice, etc. Complice a confederate, 1485, is borrowed from Middle French complice, learned borrowing from Late Latin complicem, accusative of complex partner, confederate, from Latin complicare fold together; see COMPLICATE.

accomplish v. About 1380 accomplishen, borrowed from Old French acomplir-, stem of acomplir to fulfill, from Vulgar Latin accomplere* (Latin ac- to + complere fill up); for suffix see *-ISH*². —accomplishment n. About 1425, Middle English accomplishment, borrowed from Old French acomplissement; for suffix see -MENT.

accord v. Before 1121 acorden, borrowed from Old French acorder, from Vulgar Latin accordare* make agree, be of one heart (Latin ac- to + cor, cordis HEART). The Vulgar Latin form accordare* was patterned on Latin discordare to disagree and concordare to agree. The spelling acorden became fixed in the 1400's.

The noun accord came into English about 1300, borrowed from Old French acord, from acorder v.

accordion n. 1831, borrowed from earlier German Akkordion, from Akkord concord of sounds, from French accord, from Old French acord ACCORD. The instrument was invented in 1829 in Vienna.

accost v. 1578, borrowed from Middle French accoster move up to, from Late Latin accostare come up to the side (Latin ac- to + costa side, rib; see COAST).

account n. About 1300 account, acunt, borrowed from Old French acont, acunt, and later (in imitation of Latin) acompt account (à to + count count, from Late Latin computus a calculation, from Latin computare calculate, COMPUTE). —v. About 1300, Middle English acounten, acunten, borrowed from Old French aconter, acunter to count (à to + conter, cunter, from Latin computare COMPUTE). —accountable adj. Probably before 1387, formed in Anglo-French from acounte (Old French aconte); for suffix see -ABLE. —accountant n. 1453, borrowed from Old French aconter, acunter, present participle of aconter, acunter to count; for suffix see -ANT.

accouter or accoutre v. 1596, borrowed from Middle French accoustrer, accouter, from Old French acostrer arrange (originally sew up), from Vulgar Latin accosturare* to arrange, sew, from cōstūra*, cōsūtūra* a sewing; see COUTURIER. —accouterment or accoutrement n. 1549, borrowed from Middle French accoustrément, from accoustrer; for suffix see -MENT.

accredit v. 1620, borrowed from French accréditer (à to + crédit credit, from Middle French; see CREDIT). —accreditation n. 1806, formed possibly from obsolete English (1654) accredit + -ion.

accretion n. 1615, borrowed from Latin accrētiōnem (nominative accrētiō) a growing larger, from accrētum, stem of accrēscere grow larger, see ACCRUE; for suffix see -TION.

accrue v. 1440 acreuen, borrowed from Old French acreüe growth, increase, from acreü, past participle of acreistre to increase, from Latin accrēscere (ac- to + crēscere grow). Accrue was said to be from the obsolete noun accrue, but the first citations of noun use appear more than 135 years later in 1577. —accrual n. 1880, formed from English accrue + *-al*².

accumulate v. 1529, borrowed from Latin accumulatus, past participle of accumulare heap up in a mass (ac- in addition + cumulare heap up, from cumulus a heap; see CUMULATE); for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —accumulation n. 1490, perhaps borrowed from Middle French accumulation, or more likely from Latin accumulatiōnem (nominative accumulatiō), from accumulare; for suffix see -TION.

accurate adj. 1612, borrowed from Latin accūrātus prepared with care, exact, past participle of accūrāre take care of (ac- to + cūrāre take care; see CURE); for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —accuracy n. 1662, formed from English accurate + -acy.

accusative adj. About 1434, borrowed through Anglo-French accusatif, accusative, corresponding to Old French acusatif, or borrowed directly from Latin cāsus accūsātīvus case of accusing, from accūsātus, past participle of accūsāre ACCUSE; for suffix see -IVE.

The Latin cāsus accūsātīvus arose out of a mistranslation of Greek ptōsis aitiātikē case of that which is caused or effected, because of the coexistence of Greek aitiāsthai accuse.

accuse v. About 1300 acusen, borrowed through Old French acuser, or directly from Latin accūsāre (ac- against + causari give as a cause or motive, from causa reason, CAUSE). In the late 1300's the English form with the prefix a- was refashioned to ac- after the Latin. —accusation n. Before 1387, borrowed through Old French accusation, or directly from Latin accūsatiōnem (nominative accūsatiō), from accūsāre ACCUSE; for suffix see -TION.

accustom v. 1422 acustumen, borrowed from Middle French acostumer (à to + costume CUSTOM). In the 1400's forms with the prefix a- were refashioned to ac- in conformity with Latin spelling.

ace n. Before 1250 as (about 1450 ace); borrowed from Old French as, from Latin as (genitive assis) a unit, as of coinage or measure, possibly borrowed from Etruscan. The as (plural asses) was the ancient Roman pound.

The meaning “best or highest” developed in English in the 1700’s from card games in which the ace is the most valuable. Ace, a crack combat pilot, appeared in World War I and in sports, “to score” in the 1920’s. Ace as a verb, in “ace out” appeared about 1970.

—aceous an adjective suffix, borrowed from Latin -āceus, and meaning of or like, having the appearance of, as in arenaceous looking like or composed of sand (Latin arēna sand), and tuffaceous like tuff.

—Aceous is used in botany in adjectives relating to families of plants as in liliaceae relating to New Latin Liliaceae, the lily family. In zoology -aceous is used in adjectives relating to classes or orders of animals, as in cetaceous relating to the order Cetacea, including the whales and related animals.

acerbity n. 1572, borrowed from Middle French acerbité, from Latin acerbitatem (nominative acerbitās) bitterness, from acerbus bitter, related to acer sharp; for suffix see -ITY. —acerbic adj. 1865, formed in English from Latin acerbus + the English suffix -ic.

acetic adj. 1808, borrowed from French acétique, or formed in English from Latin acētum vinegar (originally past participle of acēre be sour; related to acer sharp) + the English suffix -ic.

ache v. Old English (about 1000) acan, spelled in Middle English ake or aken and pronounced with k, as in make; cognate with Low German āken to hurt, from Proto-Germanic akanan* n. Old English (before 899) æce, spelled in Middle English ache, eche and pronounced with ch, as in match. Old English ææce, is from Proto-Germanic akiz*.

The present identical spelling and pronunciation of verb and noun became widespread in the 1700’s.

achieve v. About 1300 acheven, borrowed from Old French achever finish, from the phrase à chef at an end, or perhaps from Vulgar Latin accapāre* bring to a head, either form from Latin ad to + Vulgar Latin capum*, from Latin caput HEAD. The spelling achieve was influenced by Old French variant achiever as well as chief, older form of chef. —achievement n. 1475, borrowed from Middle French achèvement, from Old French achever; for suffix see -MENT.

acid adj. 1626, probably borrowed through French acide, a learned borrowing from Latin; or borrowed directly from Latin acidus sour, from acēre be sour, related to acer sharp. —n. 1696, noun use of acid, adj. —acidity n. 1620, probably borrowed through French acidité, a learned borrowing from Latin; or borrowed directly from Late Latin aciditatem (nominative aciditās), from Latin acidus; for suffix see -ITY.

acknowledge v. 1481, acknowlechen, formed from a blend of acknow admit + knowlechen admit, from knowleche, n., KNOWLEDGE. Acknow developed from Old English oncnāwan, a compound of on and cnāwan recognize, see KNOW. —acknowledgment n. 1594, formed from English acknowledge + -ment.

acme n. 1620, borrowed from Greek akmé (highest) point, related to aké point.

acne n. 1835, New Latin, borrowed from Late Greek akné, misspelling (in the 6th century author Aëtius) of Greek akmé (highest) point; see ACME.

acolyte n. About 1300, borrowed through Old French acolyte, or directly from Medieval Latin acolytus, alteration of Late Latin acolūthos, from Medieval Greek akólouthos following, attendant, from Greek akólouthos following, attending on.

acorn n. Old English (about 1000) æcern, in Middle English akern, akkorn, accorn, acorn. The original meaning in Old English was fruit of the field, mast of the oak, beech, etc., with cognates in Old High German ackern, pl., Old Icelandic akarn, and Gothic akran fruit. In the 1400’s and 1500’s, the Middle English forms akorn, akkorn, etc., were popularly taken to be a compound of ake oak (Old English āc) and corn kernel; hence the modern spelling acorn.

acoustic adj. 1605, borrowed from French acoustique, from Greek akoustikós, from akoustós heard, audible, from akouéin HEAR; for suffix see -IC.

acquaint v. Probably before 1200, aqueyntien, acointen, borrowed from Old French acointer, acointier, from Vulgar Latin accognitāre* make known, from Latin accognitus, past participle of accognōscere know well (ac- to + cognōscere come to know). —acquaintance n. Probably before 1200 aqueyntance, acointance, borrowed from Old French acointance, from acointer; for suffix see -ANCE.

acquiesce v. 1620, borrowed from French acquiescer, from Latin acquiescere remain at rest, be satisfied with (ac- to + quiescere become quiet, rest). —acquiescence n. About 1631, borrowed from French acquiescence, from acquiescer; for suffix see -ENCE. —acquiescent adj. 1697, borrowed from Latin acquiescentem (nominative acquiescēns), present participle of acquiescere; for suffix see -ENT.

acquire v. 1601, borrowed from Latin acquirere get in addition (ac- to + querere seek; related to QUERY). Latin acquirere shows the “weakening” of querere to -quirere in derivatives, in early Latin. Connection with querere was restored in Vulgar Latin acquācere*, yielding Old French acquere, borrowed in Middle English acqueren (1450) but later replaced by acquire to restore the literary Latin form.

acquisition n. Before 1400, borrowed through Old French acquisition, or directly from Latin acquisitionem (nominative acquisitiō), from acquisi-, stem of acquirere get in addition; for suffix see -TION. —acquisitive adj. 1637, formed from Latin acquisitus, past participle of acquirere + English suffix -ive.

acquit v. Probably before 1200, acviten, aquiten settle a claim or debt, borrowed from Old French acquitter settle a claim (à to + quite free, clear; see QUIT). Middle English aquiten was replaced by acquit in imitation of Latin with the prefix ac-.

The meaning clear of a charge appeared about 1390. —acquittal n. 1430, probably formed from English acquit + *-al*².

acre n. Old English (about 975) æcer tilled field, a measure of land, from which acer, aker developed in Middle English before 1124. Under the influence of Old French acre and Medieval Latin acra (both from Old English æcer), the spellings acer, aker were changed to acre.

Old English æcer is cognate with Old High German achar, Old Icelandic akr, Gothic akrs, from Proto-Germanic akraz*, —all in the sense of field or earlier a pasture and originally a wild area, untenanted and open. —acreage n. 1859, formed from English acre + -age.

acrid adj. 1712, borrowed from Latin ācer, ācris sharp, related to Greek akrē point. The suffixal ending -id was probably added by influence of earlier acid.

acrimony n. 1542, pungency of taste; borrowed through Middle French acrimonie, or directly from Latin ācrimōnia, from ācer, ācris sharp + -mōnia suffix signifying action, state, condition; see ACRID. The current English meaning appeared in 1618.

acrobat n. 1825, borrowed from French acrobate, from Greek akrobátēs, related to akróbatos going on tiptoe, climbing up high (ákros tip, high point + -batós, from balainein go).

acronym n. 1943, coined from acro- combining form from Greek ákros tip, end + English -onym name, as in SYNONYM.

acropolis n. 1662, borrowed from Greek akrópolis (ákros highest, upper + pólis city).

acrostic n. 1587, borrowed through Middle French acrostiche, or directly from Medieval Latin acrostichis, from Greek akrostichis (ákros highest, upper + stíchos row, line of verse).

across adv. About 1325 acros from one side to another; earlier a-croiz in a crossed position (about 1300), and o cros in the shape of a cross (probably before 1200); all alterations of Anglo-French phrase an cros (an in, from Latin in + cros CROSS). —prep. from side to side of, over. 1591, from the adverb.

acrylic adj. 1855, formed from English acryl + -ic a suffix meaning containing. Acryl, denoting allyl derived from garlic and onion, was abstracted from acrolein (Latin ācer, ācris sharp + olēre to smell + English -yl). —n. 1960, from the adjective.

act n. About 1380, borrowed, perhaps in a legal sense, from Old French acte, from Latin āctus a doing, and āctum a thing done, both from agere do, set in motion, drive, cognate with Greek ágein lead, draw. —v. About 1460, probably in part influenced by the noun already used in English and Latin āctus, past participle of agere to do.

actinium n. 1881, New Latin, formed from Greek aktís (genitive aktínos) ray + New Latin -ium. The element was originally thought to occur in zinc, and because of a peculiar action of light upon its salts the Greek word for ray of light was used to form the new name.

action n. Before 1338, borrowed from Old French action, learned borrowing from Latin actiōnem (nominative actiō), from stem of agere ACT; for suffix see -TION. —actionable adj. 1591, formed from English action + -able.

active adj. 1340, borrowed through Old French actif, active, or borrowed directly from Latin āctīvus, from āctus ACT; for suffix see -IVE. —activate v. 1626, probably formed from English active + *-ate*¹. —activity n. Probably before 1400, borrowed from Old French activité, from Medieval Latin activitatem (nominative activitas), from Latin āctīvus active; for suffix see -ITY.

actor n. About 1384 actour, borrowed from Latin āctor an agent or doer, from stem of agere ACT; for suffix see -OR². The sense of one who acts in plays was first used in 1581 and was applied to both men and women.

actual adj. Before 1333 actual, actuel, borrowed from Old French actuel and (before 1398) from Late Latin actuālis active, from Latin āctus (genitive āctūs) a doing, see ACT; for suffix see -AL¹. —actuality n. Before 1398 actualite, perhaps borrowed from an Old French form, but traditionally recorded as a borrowing from Medieval Latin actualitatem (nominative actualitas), from Late Latin actuālis; for suffix see -ITY. —actually adv. Probably before 1425 actualli, formed from English actual + *-ly*¹.

actuary n. 1553, a registrar or clerk, borrowed from Latin actuārius copyist, account keeper, from āctus public business, see ACT; for suffix see -ARY. In the current sense the word was first used in 1849. —actuarial adj. 1869, formed from English actuary + *-al*¹.

actuate v. 1596, borrowed from Medieval Latin actuatus, past participle of actuare, from Latin āctus a doing, see ACT; for suffix see -ATE¹.

acuity n. Probably before 1425 acuite, borrowed through Middle French acuité, or directly from Medieval Latin acuitatem (nominative acuitas) sharpness, from Old French agüeté, from agu sharp, from Latin acūtus ACUTE; for suffix see -ITY.

acumen n. 1531, borrowed from Latin acūmen sharpness, shrewdness, from acuere sharpen; see ACUTE.

acupuncture n. 1684, formed from Latin acus needle + English puncture; see ACUTE. —v. 1972, from the noun. —acupuncturist n. 1952, formed from English acupuncture + -ist.

acute adj. Before 1398, describing a brief and severe disease, fever, etc., as opposed to a chronic condition, borrowed from Latin acūtus sharp-pointed, past participle of acuere sharpen to a point, related to acus needle.

Later acute began to develop figurative and other extended meanings: sharp, pointed (1570); penetrating, sharp-witted (1588); intense, sharply felt (1727).

-acy a suffix forming abstract nouns with a general meaning of quality, state, or condition (such as accuracy, intricacy, lunacy) or of activity or function (such as advocacy, candidacy). It often takes the place of -ate or other suffix in the noun or adjective from which it is formed (accuracy from accurate, lunacy from lunatic); occasionally it is simply added to the other word (as in supremacy, from supreme).

The suffix -acy is one of the special forms of the suffix -cy. The form in Middle English was -cie; it entered English in words borrowed from Old or Middle French words in -acie or -atie, or directly from Latin words in -ācia or -ātia.

ad n. 1841, shortening of advertisement.

ad- a prefix that entered English as a component of many words taken from Latin (directly or through French); it has some use in forming words in English.

Latin ad- is a special use of the preposition ad to, toward, cognate with English at, Old English æt, Gothic at, Proto-Germanic at-*. As a prefix to verbs it adds a meaning of direction toward, addition, or the like. When prefixed to words beginning with certain consonants, it changes form by assimilation of the d to the following consonant: ad- becomes ab- before b: abbreviate; ac- before c, q: accede, acquaint; af- before f: affix; ag- before g: agglutinate; al- before l: ally; an- before n: annul; ap- before p: apprehend; ar- before r: arrogant; as- before s: assist; a- before sc, sp, st: ascribe, aspire, astrigent; at- before t: attract.

The prefix ad- was transformed to a- in Old French, and so appears in words that entered Middle English through Old French. In the 15th century many of these words were respelled with the ad- to restore the connection with Latin. When the process went too far, as in advance, English acquired a d that had no historical justification.

In English, ad- is sometimes employed in adjective formations in its ancient prepositional sense, as in adrenal at (above) the kidneys.

adage n. 1548, borrowed from Middle French adage, learned borrowing from Latin adagium (ad- to, and root ag-, related to aiō I say).

adamant adj. 1677, extended from the earlier meaning extremely hard; unbreakable, before 1387.

The adjective derived from adamant, n., 1345, a hard rock or mineral, which came from a confusion of meaning: either very hard (diamond) or magnetic (loadstone), recorded as early as 885; borrowed from Old French adamant the hardest stone, from Latin adamantem, accusative of adamās, from Greek adámās (genitive adámantos) the hardest metal, (later) diamond (perhaps from a- not + damnánai conquer; see TAME; but very possibly of foreign origin).

adapt v. Probably before 1425 (as past participle adapted meaning "fitted"); borrowed from Middle French adapter, from Latin adaptāre adjust (ad- to + aptāre join, from aptus fitted, joined, APT). —adaptable adj. 1800, formed from English adapt + -able. —adaptation n. 1610, borrowed from Medieval Latin adaptationem (nominative adaptatio), from Latin adaptāre; for suffix see -ATION.

add v. About 1380 adden, borrowed from Latin addere add to, join (ad- to + -dere, combining form meaning to put, place; see *DO*¹ perform).

adder n. The Old English form (about 950) was nædre, with cognates in Old Saxon nādara, Old High German nātra, nātara (modern German Natter), from Proto-West-Germanic nædrō*, and Old Icelandic nadhr, Gothic nadrs, from Proto-North-Germanic nadrás*, all in the sense of a snake.

During the period about 1300–1400 the initial n was lost by misdivision of a nadder as an adder. Compare APRON for a similar instance of misdivision.

addict v. 1534, borrowed from Latin addictus, past participle of addicere deliver, yield, devote (ad- to + dīcere say, declare). —n. About 1909, noun use of addict, v. —addiction n. 1641, borrowed from Latin addictionem (nominative addictiō), from addic-, stem of addicere; for suffix see -ION.

addition n. Before 1388, borrowed from Old French, learned borrowing from Latin additionem (nominative additiō), from addi-, stem of addere ADD; for suffix see -TION. —additive adj. 1699, borrowed from Latin additivus, from addi-, stem of addere; for suffix see -IVE. —n. 1945, noun use of additive, adj.

addle adj. About 1250, rotten (eggs), an attributive use of Old English adela mud, mire, liquid filth (about 1000), cognate with Middle Dutch adel liquid manure and Old Swedish -adel urine, of unknown origin.

The phrase adel eye rotten egg is a translation of Medieval Latin ovum urinae egg of urine or putrid liquid, an erroneous rendering of Latin ovum ūrinum, Greek ourinon oion wind egg (an addle egg, supposed to be caused by impregnation by the wind). By the end of the 1500's the usage extended to confused, muddled, on analogy with the condition of an addle egg, and at the same time the adjective use in addle brain, addle pate was evinced. —v. (at first as addled), 1646, from the adjective.

address v. Before 1325 adresen to guide, direct; borrowed from Old French adresser (earlier adrecier), from Vulgar Latin addrēctiāre* make straight (Latin ad- to) + (drēctiāre* straighten, from Latin drēctus straight, DIRECT). The present spelling with -dd- is a refashioning of the prefix a- into ad- in English, after the Latin form. —n. 1539, noun use of address, v. The sense of direction written on a letter appeared in 1712.

adduce v. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Latin adducere lead to, bring to (ad- to + dūcere to lead).

-ade suffix meaning an act or process (as in blockade), a product or result (as in lemonade), or a person or thing acting (as in cavalcade). Borrowed from French -ade, from Latin -āta, originally the feminine of the past participle -ātus.

adenine n. 1885, borrowed from German Adenin, from Greek adēn (genitive adēnos) gland, because it was first isolated from the pancreatic gland of an ox.

adenoid adj. 1839, borrowed from Greek adenoidēs (adēn, genitive adēnos, gland + eidōs form). —adenoids n. pl. glandlike tissues in the upper part of the throat. 1891, from the adjective.

adept adj. Before 1691, borrowed from Latin adeptus, past participle of adipiscī to attain to, acquire (ad- to + apiscī grasp, obtain, related to aptus fitted, apt).

adequate adj. Before 1617, borrowed from Latin adaequātus, past participle of adaequāre equalize (ad- to + aequāre make level, from aequus EQUAL); for suffix see *-ATE*¹.

adherent n. 1425, borrowed from Middle French adhérent, or directly from Latin adhaerentem (nominative adhaerēns), present participle of adhaerere stick to (ad- to + haerere stick, cling); for suffix see -ENT. —adhere v. 1597, borrowed from Middle French adhérer, or directly from Latin adhaerere.

adhesion n. 1624, borrowed from French adhésion, or directly from Latin adhaesiōnem (nominative adhaesiō) an adhering, from adhaes-, stem of adhaerere ADHERE; for suffix see -ION.

adieu interj., n. About 1385 adew, borrowed from Old French adieu, earlier a dieu (vous) commend I commend (you) to God (a to, from Latin ad + dieu God, from Latin deum, accusative of deus). Compare ADIOS.

adios interj. 1837, American English; borrowing of Spanish adiós, earlier a dios, in a dios vos acomiendo I commend you to God (a to, from Latin ad + dios God, from Latin deus).

adipose adj. 1743, borrowed from New Latin adiposus, perhaps also influenced by French adipeux, adipeuse, both New Latin and French from Latin adeps (genitive adipis) fat of animals, from Greek áleipha unguent, fat.

adjacent adj. Before 1420, borrowed from Latin adjacentem (nominative adjacēns), present participle of adjacere lie near (ad- near + jacere lie, rest, related to jacere to throw).

adjective n. Probably before 1387, borrowed through Old French adjectif (feminine adjective), from Latin adjectivum; see adj. below. —adj. Before 1398, in the phrase noun adjective, borrowed as a translation of Late Latin nōmen adjectivum, from Latin adjectivum, neuter of adjectivus added, from adjectus, past participle of adiciere add to (ad- + -icere, combining form of jacere to throw); for suffix see -IVE.

It was not until the Middle Ages that the categories of noun and adjective were clearly separated.

adjoin v. About 1303 ajoinen, borrowed from Old French ajoin-, stem of ajoindre, from Latin adjungere join to (ad- to + ungere join; see YOKE), refashioned in the 1400's to adjoinen in imitation of the Latin form.

adjourn v. Before 1338 ajornen assign a day, especially a day to appear in court; borrowed from Old French ajorner, from the phrase a jor to a stated day, (a- to + jorn day, from Latin diurnum, neuter of diurnus daily).

The English spelling with ad- was influenced by Middle French ajorner.

The sense of to put off until a later time appeared in 1427. —adjournment n. 1444, borrowed from Middle French ajournement, from Old French ajornement from ajorner; for suffix see -MENT.

adjudge v. About 1380, Middle English ajuggen, adjuggen, borrowed from Old French ajugier, from Latin adjudicāre adjudicate.

adjudicate v. 1700, borrowed from Latin adjudicātus, past participle of adjudicāre grant or award as a judge (ad- to + jūdicāre to JUDGE); for suffix see -ATE¹. —adjudication n. 1691, borrowed from French adjudication, or directly from Late adjunct n. 1588, borrowed from Latin adjūctus, past participle of adjungere join to; see ADJOIN. —adj. 1595, joined to another, subordinate; adjective use of adjunct, n. The title adjunct professor appeared in 1826 in American English.

Latin adjudicātiōnem (nominative adjudicātiō), from Latin adjudicāre; for suffix see -TION.

adjure v. 1382 adjuren put to an oath; borrowed from Latin adjūrāre confirm by oath, (later) put to an oath (ad- to + jūrāre swear). —adjuration n. About 1390, borrowed from Late Latin adjūrātiōnem (nominative adjūrātiō) from Latin adjūrāre; for suffix see -TION.

adjust v. About 1380 ajusten, borrowed from Old French ajoster, ajuster, from Vulgar Latin adjuxtāre* to set beside, add (Latin ad- to + juxtā next, related to ungere join). Before 1611, adjust was reborrowed from Middle French ajuster (modern ajuster), where it had already been refashioned as if from Latin jūstus right. —adjustment n. 1644, formed from English adjust + -ment.

adjutant n. 1600, army officer assisting a superior officer; borrowed from Latin adjūtāntem (nominative adjūtāns), present participle of adjūtāre to help; for suffix see -ANT.

adlib v. 1919, formed from (1811) abbreviation of AD LIBITUM. —n. 1925, noun use of adlib, v.

ad libitum Music. 1610, New Latin ad libitum at one's pleasure, from Latin ad at, and New Latin libitum pleasure, from Latin libere to please.

administer v. About 1380 amyynis-tren, administren, borrowed from Old French aministrer, administrer, from Latin ministrāre serve, manage (ad- to + ministrāre serve, MINISTER). —administrate v. 1651, possibly a back formation of administration or borrowed from Latin administrātus, past participle of ministrāre; for suffix see -ATE¹. Modern use of administrate, confined chiefly to the U.S. and Canada, is almost certainly a back formation from administration. —administration n. About 1333, borrowed from Latin administrātiōnem (nominative administrātiō), from ministrāre; for suffix see -TION. —administrator n. 1434, borrowed through Middle French administrateur, or directly from Latin ministrātor manager, servant, from ministrāre; for suffix see -OR².

admirable adj. About 1450, borrowed from Latin ad-mīrābilis, from admīrārī ADMIRE; for suffix see -ABLE.

admiral n. 1297 amiral, borrowed from Old French, said to come from Arabic āmīr-al- chief of the _____ (in titles) and misinterpreted by Christian writers to be a word with the ending *-al*². Later scholars have suggested the source in Arabic is more likely through cultural contact to be āmīr-ar-rahl chief of the transport, referring to the fleet plying between North Africa and Andalusia.

The spelling admiral with d, in the sense of a Muslim emir or prince, came into Middle English before 1200 borrowed from Medieval Latin admiralis; influenced by Latin ad-mīrābilis ADMIRABLE, alteration of aminalis, borrowed through Old French amiral, or borrowed directly from Arabic. See AMIR, admiration n. About 1425 admiracioun, borrowed through Middle French admiration and Old French, or directly from Latin admirātiōnem (nominative admirātiō), from admirārī ADMIRE; for suffix see -TION. —admire v. About 1579, borrowed through Middle French admirer and Old French amirer, or perhaps directly from Latin admirārī wonder at (ad- at + mīrārī wonder, from mīrus wonderful; see MIRACLE).

EMIR. —admiralty n. 1419 Admiralte, Amiralte, borrowed from Middle French amiralte, from Old French amiral admiral; for suffix see -TY².

admissible adj. 1611, borrowed from Middle French admissible, from Latin admissus (past participle of admittere ADMIT); for suffix see -IBLE.

admission n. About 1430, borrowed from Latin admissiōnem (nominative admissiō), from admiss-, stem of admittere ADMIT; for suffix see -ION.

admit v. Before 1387 admitten, borrowed from Latin admittere (ad- to + mittere let go, send; see MISSION).

From a phonetic standpoint transmission from French does not seem likely, because Old French forms have e (ametre, amette, admettre) rather than i.

admixture n. 1605, borrowed from Latin admixtus, past participle of admiscere (ad- in addition + miscere MIX); for suffix see -URE.

admonish v. 1340 amonesten, from Old French amonester, from Vulgar Latin admonestare*, alteration of Latin admonere advise, remind (ad- to + monere advise, warn).

The ending -ish developed because the -t in amonesten was thought to be the past participial ending that would produce the stem amoness-, from the pattern of English verbs like abolish (from Middle French aboliss-); the form amonesh, later admonish, was constructed by imitation.

Sometime later the prefix a- was replaced by ad- after the Latin form.

admonition n. About 1380 amonicioun, borrowed from Old French amonicion, from Latin admonitiōnem (nominative admonitiō) from admonere advise, see ADMONISH; for suffix see -TION. The original Middle English form was fully replaced in the 1600's by admonition after the Latin.

ado n. About 1380, contraction of at do, recorded about 1280 as a Northern dialectal form of to do, possibly influenced by Old Icelandic, in which at was used with the infinitive form of the verb, the way to is used in English.

adobe n. 1739, American English, borrowing of Spanish adobe, from Arabic (oral form) at-tōb, (written form) at-tūb the brick (al- the + tūb brick).

adolescence n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Middle French adolescence, from Latin adolēscētia, from adolēscēntem (nominative adolēscēns), present participle of adolēscere grow up (ad- to + -olēscere grow up, derived from -olēre, related to alere nourish); for suffix see -ENCE. —adolescent n. 1459, borrowed through Middle French adolescent, or directly from Latin adolēscēntem.

adoption n. 1340 adopcioun, borrowed through Old French adoption, or directly from Latin adoptiōnem (nominative adoptiō), from adopt-, stem of adoptare choose for oneself (ad- to + optare choose, wish); for suffix see -TION. —adopt v. Before 1500, perhaps a back formation of English adoption, traditionally considered a borrowing through Middle French adop-, or directly from Latin adoptare.

adore v. About 1375 adouren, aouren, borrowed from Old French adourer, adorer, from Latin adorare speak to formally, beseech, and in Late Latin, to worship (ad- to + orare speak formally, pray). Adouren replaced aouren before 1300, borrowed from Old French adorer, from Latin adorare. —adoration n. 1543, borrowed from Middle French, learned borrowing from Latin adorātiōnem (nominative adorātiō), from adorare; for suffix see -TION.

adorn v. About 1385 adournen, borrowed from Old French adourner, adorning, from Latin adornare equip, embellish (ad- to + ornare prepare, furnish). Adournen replaced aournen before 1325, borrowed from Old French aourner, aorner, from Latin adornare. —adornment n. About 1385, borrowed from Old French adornement, aournement, from adourner to adorn, from Latin adornare; for suffix see -MENT.

adrenal adj. 1875, formed in English from Latin ad- at, by + Late Latin rēnālis of or pertaining to the kidneys, from Latin rēnēs kidneys; for suffix see -AL¹.

adrenalin n. 1901, formed in English from adrenal + -in (chemical suffix). Coined by Jokichi Takamine, 1853–1922, Japanese chemist, who discovered the hormone.

adroit adj. 1652, borrowed from French, from Old French adroit, adreit, from a- to (from Latin ad-) + droit, dreit right (from Late Latin directum right, justice, from Latin, accusative of directus straight).

adsorb v. 1882, formed in English from ad- + -sorb, abstracted from absorb, from Latin sorbere suck in. —adsorbent n. 1928, formed in English from the verb + -ENT. —adsorption n. 1882, formed in English from ad- + -sorption, abstracted from absorption.

adulate v. 1777 back formation of adulation; perhaps influenced by French aduler to flatter.

adulation n. Before 1400, borrowed from Old French adulacion, from Latin adulātiōnem (nominative adulātiō), from adulārī to flatter; for suffix see -TION.

adult adj. 1531, borrowed from Latin adultus, past participle of adolēscere grow up, mature; see ADOLESCENCE. —n. 1658, noun use of adult, adj.

adulterate v. 1531, possibly a back formation of adulteration, or borrowed from Latin adulterātus, past participle of adulterare to corrupt, alter (ad- to + Late Latin alterare to alter); for suffix see -ATE¹. —adulteration n. 1505, borrowed from Latin adulterātiōnem (nominative adulterātiō), from adulterare; for suffix see -TION.

adultery n. About 1415 adultrie, adulterie, borrowed through Middle French and Old French adulterie, or directly as a learned borrowing from Latin adulterium, from adulterāre to corrupt, ADULTERATE; for suffix see -Y³. Adultrie, adulterie, adulterie was a replacement of advoutrie and earlier (about 1303) avoutrie, borrowed from Old French avoutrie; from avouter adulter, from Latin adulterum, accusative of adulter, from adulterāre. —adulterous adj. Replaced (before 1400) avoutrious, from avouter, borrowed from Old French avouter; for suffix see -OUS.

advance v. Before 1200 avauncen move forward; borrowed from Old French avancer, avancier, from Vulgar Latin abanteāre*, from Latin abante from before (ab from + ante before; see ANTE-).

The form advance resulted because the initial a was thought to represent Latin ad. The same error led to the spelling advantage in place of avantage. —advancement n. About 1300 avauncement, borrowed from Old French avancement, from avancer; for suffix see -MENT.

advantage n. About 1300 avantage, avauntage a being ahead, superiority; borrowed from Old French avantage, from avant before, from Latin abante, see ADVANCE; for suffix see -AGE.

The spelling advantage is mistakenly from Latin ad-, —advantageous adj. 1598, formed in English from advantage + -OUS.

advent n. Old English Advent the season before Christmas (963); borrowed from Latin adventus (genitive adventūs) arrival, from adven-, stem of advenire arrive, come to (ad- to + venire come; see COME). In the 1400's Advent was extended to the Second Coming, and in the 1700's to any important arrival (advent of spring).

adventitious adj. 1603, borrowed from Medieval Latin adventitiū, alteration of Latin adventiciū, from adventum, past participle of advenire arrive, see ADVENT; for suffix see -ITIOUS.

adventure n. Before 1200 aventure that which comes by chance; borrowed from Old French aventure, from Vulgar Latin adventūra* a happening, from the Latin future participle of advenire to come about, see ADVENT; for suffix see -URE.

In the 1400's and 1500's the French form was often respelled adventure in imitation of Latin, and though the fashion died out in France, the respelled form passed permanently into English. —adventurous adj. About 1380 aventurous, borrowed from Old French aventuros, from aventure; for suffix see -OUS.

adverb n. About 1425, borrowed perhaps through Old French averbe, or more likely directly from Latin adverbium (ad- to + verbum word, verb; translation of Greek epírrhēma, from epi- on, to + rhēma verb).

adversary n. 1340, borrowed through Old French adversaire, or directly from Latin adversarius, from adversus turned against, ADVERSE; for suffix see -ARY.

adverse adj. About 1385, borrowed from Old French avers, advers, from Latin adversus turned against, past participle of advertere; see ADVERT. —adversity n. Before 1200 adversite, borrowed from Old French adversité, from Latin adversitatem (nominative adversitās) opposition, from adversus turned against; for suffix see -ITY.

advert v. Before 1420 averten turn toward, notice; borrowed from Old French avertir, from Latin advertere (ad- to + vertere to turn). Compare AVERT. The spelling advert replaced the Middle English form in the 1500's, partly in imitation of the Latin form, partly by influence of Middle French avertir warn (see ADVERTISE).

advertise v. Probably before 1425 advertisen take notice (of); borrowed from Middle French advertiss-, stem of avertir, variant of Old French avertir warn, from Vulgar Latin advertere*, corresponding to Latin advertere turn toward (ad- toward + vertere to turn). —advertisement n. 1426, borrowed from Middle French advertissement, from advertiss-, stem of avertir; for suffix see -MENT.

advice n. About 1300 avis opinion; borrowed from Old French avis, from the phrase a vis, as in ce m'est a vis my view is, an alteration of (ce) m'est vis it seems to me, from Vulgar Latin mī est vīsum*, corresponding to Latin mīhī vidētur seems (best) to me. The source of the borrowing is Latin ad to + vīsum, neuter past participle of vidēre to see.

The spelling advis was popularized in English by Caxton in the late 1400's, from the occasional French spelling advis, in imitation of the Latin. In the 1500's final -e was added to show vowel quantity of i; and in the 1700's the s was changed to c apparently to distinguish the word from the verb advise.

advise v. About 1300 avisen examine, find out, consider, decide, devise; borrowed from Old French aviser, from avis opinion; see ADVICE. The spelling advise replaced avisen in the late 1400's by influence of the occasional Middle French spelling adviser, in imitation of the Latin. —adviser n. 1611, formed from English advise + -er, perhaps after Late Latin advisor.

The later form advisor is a back formation from advisory, or a direct borrowing of the Late Latin advisor. —advisory adj. 1778, formed from English advise + -ory, as if an adaptation of Late Latin advīsōrius*, from Late Latin advisor.

advocacy n. About 1385 advocacie, borrowed from Old French advocacie, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin advocacia, from Latin advocātus ADVOCATE; for suffix see -ACY.

advocate n. 1340 avocat, borrowed from Old French, learned borrowing from Latin advocātus, originally past participle of advocāre call to, as a witness or advisor (ad- to + vocāre to call, related to vōcem VOICE); for suffix see -ATE¹. The original Middle English spelling was largely replaced after 1380 by advocat after the Latin form. —v. 1641, from the noun.

adz or adze n. Old English (before 830) adesa, eadesa, of unknown origin.

In Middle English the term was spelled adese, adse; the current forms with z appeared in the 1700's.

aegis n. 1793, figurative sense of earlier (1611) aegis shield, especially the shield of Jupiter or Minerva; borrowed from Latin aegis, from Greek aigís the shield of Zeus (said to be made of goatskin, and popularly derived from aig-, the stem of aîx (goat).

aeolian adj. 1605, formed in English from Latin Aeolius (from Aeolus the god of the winds, from Greek Alolos, from aiôlos quickly moving) + English -an.

aeon or eon n. 1647, borrowed from Latin aeon, from Greek aion age, lifetime; see AGE.

aerate v. 1794, formed in English after Latin aër air (from Greek āēr) + English suffix *-ate*¹; perhaps influenced indirectly by Old French aérer.

aerial adj. 1604, formed in English after Latin aërius airy (from Greek aërios, from aër air) + English suffix *-al*¹. —n. 1902, noun use of aerial, adj.

aerie or aery n. Before 1475 eyre, later airie (1581); borrowed from Medieval Latin aeria, from Old French aïre, from Latin ārea level ground, garden bed, AREA. The spelling eyrie was introduced in the belief that the word was derived from Middle English ey(e), meaning egg, and its literal meaning was “a repository for eggs.”

aero- a combining form meaning: 1 air: Aerometer = air meter. 2 atmosphere: Aerology = science of the atmosphere. 3 gas: Aerodynamics = dynamics of gases. 4 aircraft: Aerodrome = landing field for aircraft. Before 1393, abstracted in Middle English from aeromance divination by studying the air; borrowed from Old French aeromancie, or from Medieval Latin aeromantia. The combining form is ultimately from Greek āero-, from āēr, aëros air. Most of the aero- compounds are relatively late coinages. Some that date from the late 1700's were coined in France, reflecting concern with flight, especially in lighter-than-air craft; examples adapted into English, include aerology 1736, aeronaut 1784, aerostatics 1784, and aerostat (the original term for a balloon) 1784.

aerobic adj. 1884, formed in English after French aérobie (coined in 1863 by Louis Pasteur, 1822–1895, from Greek āēr, aëros air + bíos life) + English suffix -ic. —aerobics n. 1968 (coined by Kenneth H. Cooper, American physician), formed in English from aerobic + -s, on analogy with gymnastics, calisthenics, etc.

aeronautics n. 1824, formed in English from aeronautic + -s on analogy with aerostatics, etc.; or from New Latin aeronautica (1753) + English suffix -ics. —aeronautic adj. 1784, borrowed from French aéronautique, from aéro- (from Greek āero-, from āēr, aëros air) + nautique of ships, nautical (from Latin nautica, nauticus, from Greek nautikós); for suffix see -IC.

aeroplane n. 1873, borrowed from French aéroplane, from aéro- of air (from Greek āero-) + plane, stem of planer to soar; see PLANE¹, v. and AIRPLANE.

aerosol n. 1923, formed in English from aero- of air + sol (1899) colloidal solution, shortened from solution.

aerospace n. 1958, formed in American English from aero- atmosphere + (outer) space.

aesthetic adj. 1798, of or having to do with sensuous perception (after Immanuel Kant); borrowed from French esthétique and German ästhetisch, from Greek aisthētikós perceptible to the senses, from aisthānesthai perceive; for suffix see -IC.

The broad sense of an appreciation of beauty was already established in German (1750–58) by the time Kant (1781) used the word, but did not develop in English until sometime between 1803 and 1825. —aesthetics n. 1803, possibly formed in English from aesthetic + -s, on analogy with athletic + -s; or borrowed from German ästhetik, from Greek aisthētikós; or from New Latin aesthetica; for suffix see -ICS. —aesthete n. 1881, borrowed from Greek aisthētēs person who perceives; cited in most sources as a formation on analogy with athlete, athletic.

af- a form of the prefix ad-, meaning to, toward, before f, as in affect, affirm. In words from Latin it is due to assimilation of d to the following consonant (ff).

affable adj. Probably about 1475, borrowed from Middle French affable, learned borrowing from Latin affābilis easy to speak to, from affārī speak to (af- to fārī speak; related to FABLE); for suffix see -ABLE.

affair n. Probably before 1300 afere, in the plural use aferes things to do; activities, borrowed from Anglo-French afere, from Old French afaire (à faire to do, from Latin ad to + facere DO¹ perform).

The Old French spelling was refashioned in Middle French as affaire after Latin words with aff-, and this spelling was popularized in England by Caxton.

affect¹ v. have an effect on. 1410 affecten, borrowed from Latin affectus, past participle of afficere act on, exert influence on (af- to + facere DO¹ perform).

affect² v. make a pretense or show of. Probably before 1425 affecten to desire, aspire to; borrowed from Middle French affecter, learned borrowing from Latin affectāre strive for, frequentative verb form of afficere act on; see AFFECT¹. —affectation n. 1548, borrowed through Middle French affectation, or directly from Latin affectātiōnem (nominative affectātiō), from affectāre; for suffix see -TION.

affection n. Probably before 1200, emotion or feeling; borrowed from Old French affection, learned borrowing from Latin affectiōnem (nominative affectiō) inclination, influence, from affect-, stem of afficere act on, AFFECT¹; for suffix see -TION.

afferent adj. Physiology. conducting inward. 1839–47, borrowed from Latin afferentem (nominative afferens), present participle of afferre bring to (af- to + ferre bring); for suffix see -ENT.

affiance n. Before 1338, borrowed from Old French afiance, from afi- stem of afier, affier to trust, from Medieval Latin affidare (Latin af- to + Vulgar Latin fidāre* to trust, from Latin fidus faithful); for suffix see -ANCE. —v. 1555, borrowed from Middle French afiancer, from Old French afiance, n.

affidavit n. 1593, borrowed from Medieval Latin affidavit he has stated on oath, third person singular perfect of affidare to trust; see AFFIANCE.

affiliation n. 1751, adoption; later joining in association, borrowed from French affiliation, from Medieval Latin affiliationem (nominative affiliatio), from affiliare adopt as a son (Latin af- to + filius son); for suffix see -ATION. — affiliate v. 1761, borrowed after French affilier, from Medieval Latin affiliatus, past participle of affiliare; for suffix see -ATE¹. — n. 1879, from the verb.

affinity n. About 1303, relationship by marriage; borrowed from Old French afinité, affinité, learned borrowing from Latin affinitatem (nominative affinitās), from affinis kin by marriage (af- to + finis border, end); for suffix see -ITY.

affirm v. Probably before 1300 affermen make firm; borrowed from Old French aferner, from Latin affirmare (af- to + firmare strengthen, affirm, from firmus strong, FIRM). In the 1500's the original spellings were refashioned after the Latin as French affirmer and English affirm. — affirmation n. About 1410, borrowed through Middle French, or directly from Latin affirmationem (nominative affirmatio), from affirmare; for suffix see -TION. — affirmative adj., n. About 1400, through Middle French, or directly from Late Latin affirmativus, from Latin affirmatus past participle of affirmare affirm; for suffix see -ATIVE.

affix v. 1533, borrowed from Medieval Latin affixare, frequentative verb form of Latin affigere fasten to (af- to + figere fasten). — n. 1612, borrowed from French affixe, from Latin affixum, past participle of affigere.

affliction n. About 1303 affliccioun, borrowed from Old French affliccion, from Latin afflictionem (nominative afflictio), from affligere; for suffix see -TION. — afflict v. Before 1393, to cast down or deject; borrowed from Old French afflicter, from Latin afflictus, past participle of affligere to dash down, distress (af- to + figere to dash, strike). The meaning of trouble, distress is first recorded in 1535.

affluent adj. 1413, flowing in abundance, copious; borrowed through Middle French, or directly from Latin affluentem (nominative affluens), present participle of affluere flow towards (af- to + fluere to flow); for suffix see -ENT. The meaning of wealthy appeared in the 1700's. — affluence n. About 1350, borrowed from Middle French, from Latin affluentia, from affluentem (nominative affluens), present participle of affluere; for suffix see -ENCE.

afford v. 1588 alteration of aforthen (probably before 1387); earlier ivorthen (probably before 1200); reduced forms of Old English geforthian to further, accomplish (ge-, prefix implying completeness + forthian to further, from forth forward, onward, FORTH).

The change from th to d, which occurred in the 1500's, was similar to the earlier change of such forms as burthen to burden and murther to murder.

affray n. About 1303, disturbance, alarm, fright; borrowed from Old French effrei disturbance, fright, from effreer, esfreer disturb, frighten, from Vulgar Latin exfridare* (literally) to take out of peace. The Vulgar Latin is formed of Latin ex- out of + Frankish frithu* peace, represented in Old High German fridu, Old Saxon frithu, and Old English frithu peace, from Proto-Germanic frithuz* consideration, forbearance.

affront v. About 1330, borrowed from Old French afronter, from Vulgar Latin affrontare* to face, confront (literally) strike on the forehead, from Latin ad frontem to the face. — n. 1596, noun use of affront, v. See FRONT.

aficionado n. 1845, borrowed from Spanish aficionado amateur, (literally) fond of, from afición affection, from Latin affectionem; see AFFECTION. Most sources derive this word from the Spanish verb aficionar but the verb does not appear in Spanish before 1555, and the word aficionado is recorded in the 1400's.

afraid adj. Probably about 1300, originally the past participle of the archaic verb afray frighten; borrowed through Anglo-French afayer, effayer disturb, frighten, from Old French effreer, esfreer; see AFFRAY.

Afro- a combining form for African, from the stem Afr- of Latin Afer, Afri African.

aft adv. Before 1325 afte back; developed from Old English (937) æftan from behind; cognate with Old High German aftan from behind, Old Icelandic aptan (pt represents sounds ft), and Gothic aftana. Related to AFTER.

after adv., prep. Old English æfter next or following in time (before 735, in Bede's Death Song); cognate with Old High German aftar back, behind, Old Icelandic aptr back, aft, eptir after (pt represents sounds ft), and Gothic afta back, aftarō from behind, from Proto-Germanic afteraz*.

Originally æfter was a comparative form meaning "farther back, more away." Compare AFT.

aftermath n. 1523, a second or later mowing of grass; formed from English after + dialectal math a mowing, Old English mæth, cognate with Old High German mād (modern German Mahd mowing, hay crop), from Proto-Germanic mæthan*.

The figurative sense occurred before 1658.

afterward adv. Old English (about 1000) æfterweard (æfter after + -weard -ward, indicating direction). — afterwards about 1300, a derivative of afterward with the adverbial genitive ending -s and -es.

ag- a form of the prefix ad-, meaning to, towards, before g, as in aggress, aggrieve.

again adv. Late Old English (1031) agan, (1052) agean back (to a starting point), reduced before 830 from Old English ongegn, ongēan toward, opposite, against, back, again (on on + gegn against, toward); cognate with Old High German ingegin, ingagan against, in opposition to (modern German entgegen).

The Old English forms -gegn, -gēan are found only in compounds and are cognate with Old High German gegin, gagan against, toward (modern German gegen), and with Old Icelandic gegn toward, again.

against prep. Probably before 1160 agenes in opposition to, against, from agen again (Old English onægn opposite, AGAIN) + adverbial genitive -s, -es. The ending was changed in the late 1300's to -st by association with superlatives ending in -st and -est (compare amongst); or the final -t was added to -s or -es for phonetic reasons (compare be-twixt). Forms in -st began to appear about 1300, and are abstracted from the sequence agen(e)s the.

agape n. 1690, love feast held by early Christians, perhaps influenced by early French agape, but borrowed from Greek agápē love, from agapān to love.

agate n. 1570, borrowed from Middle French agate, alteration of Old French acate, learned borrowing from Latin achātēs, from Greek achātēs, named after Achates, a river in Sicily where Pliny reports the mineral was first found.

agave n. 1797, New Latin agave, from Greek Agauē, a proper name in mythology, from agaue, agauós noble, perhaps from ágasthai wonder at.

age n. About 1275, borrowed from Old French aage, earlier eage, from Vulgar Latin aetāticum*, from Latin aetātem (nominative aetās) period of life. The Latin word is a contraction of aevitās, from aevum lifetime, eternity, age, cognate with Greek aiōn age, Sanskrit āyus life, and in the Germanic languages with Old English ā, ō always, ever, Old High German eo, io (modern German je ever), and Gothic aiws time, eternity.—v. make old. Before 1420, from the noun.

-age a suffix acquired in many words borrowed from French, especially Old French, such as message, tonnage, umbrage, voyage, and extensively used in English to form nouns from other nouns, expressing various relations (as in baggage, parsonage, peerage, postage, poundage), and from verbs, expressing action or the result of action (as in breakage, cleavage, wreckage). Old French -age is from Latin -āticum, neuter of the adjective suffix -āticus, that originated as the form with -ā stem nouns of -ticus, from Greek -tikós.

ageism n. 1970, coined by R.N. Butler, American gerontologist, from (old) age + -ism, on the pattern of such words as sexism and racism, in which particular cases -ism implies discriminatory practice or behavior.

agency n. 1658, borrowed from Medieval Latin agentia, from Latin agentem (nominative agēns), present participle of agere, to do; for suffix see -ENCY.

agenda n. 1657, borrowed from Latin agenda, plural of agendum, neuter gerundive of agere to drive, lead, do.

agent n. 1471, perhaps influenced by Old French agent, but probably borrowed from Latin agentem (nominative agēns), present participle of agere to do, act, lead, drive; for suffix see -ENT.

agglomerate v. 1684, borrowed from Latin agglomerātus, past participle of agglomerāre to wind or add onto a ball (ag- on + glomerāre wind up into a ball, from glomus, genitive glomeris, ball; for suffix see *-ATE*¹). —agglomeration n. 1774, formed in English from agglomerate + -ion; or borrowed from French agglomération, from Latin agglomerātus, past participle of agglomerāre; for suffix see -ATION.

agglutinate v. 1586, verb use of earlier agglutinate, adj., glued (1541); borrowed from Latin agglutinātus, past participle of agglutināre fasten with glue (ag- to + glutināre to glue, from gluten, genitive glutinis, glue, related to Late Latin glūs glue); for suffix see *-ATE*¹. It is possible that agglutinate was influenced by earlier Middle French s'aglutiner join morally or mentally (1300's) and aglutiner bring together (1400's). —agglutination n. 1541, probably formed in English from Latin agglutināre + English -ation.

aggrandize v. 1634, borrowed from French agrandiss-, extended stem of agrandir (Old French a- to + grandir to increase, from Latin grandire make great, from grandis great, GRAND). The doubling of the g was influenced by Middle French aggrandir and Italian aggrandire. The suffix -ize was used with the original French verb stem -is, -iss, in imitation of Greek verbs or verbs thought to derive from Greek.

aggravate v. 1530, make heavy, burden down, verb use of aggravate, adj., weighed down (1471); borrowed possibly through influence of Old French aggraver, from Latin aggravātus, past participle of aggravāre make heavier (ag- to + gravāre weigh down, from gravis heavy); for suffix see *-ATE*¹. The sense of exasperate, annoy was first recorded in 1611. —aggravation n. 1481, borrowed from Old French aggravation, from Late Latin aggravātiōnem (nominative aggravātiō), from Latin aggravāre make heavy; for suffix see -TION.

aggregate adj. About 1400 aggregat collected into a mass; borrowed from Latin aggregātus, past participle of aggregāre add to (ag- to + greg, genitive gregis flock, herd); for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —v. Probably before 1400, borrowed from Latin aggregātus. —n. Before 1425, borrowed from Latin aggregātum, neuter past participle of aggregāre. —aggregation n. Probably before 1425, borrowed through Middle French agregation, or directly from Medieval Latin aggregationem (nominative aggregatio), from Latin aggregāre; for suffix see -TION.

aggress v. About 1575, approach or march forward; borrowed through French aggressor, or directly from Latin aggressus, past participle of aggrēdi to approach, attack (ag- to + gradi to step, walk). The meaning to attack or commit aggression is recorded before 1714. —aggressive adj. 1824, formed in English from aggress + -ive.

aggression n. 1611, borrowed through French agression, or directly from Latin aggressionem (nominative aggressiō), from aggress-, stem of aggrēdi to attack; for suffix see -ION.

aggrieve v. Probably before 1300 agreven, borrowed from Old French agrever bear heavily on, make heavier or more severe, from Latin aggravāre make heavier. The English form began to be written agg-, after the Latin in the 1400's.

aghost adj. Probably before 1325 agast terrified, from the past participle of earlier agasten terrify, probably before 1200 formed from a-, intensive prefix + gasten frighten, Old English gæstan, from gæst, gāst spirit GHOST.

The spelling aghash became widespread in the 1700's, probably by influence of ghastly and ghost.

agile adj. 1581, borrowed from Middle French agile, from Latin agilis, from agere to move. —agility n. 1413, borrowed from Middle French agilité, from Latin agilitatem (nominative agilitas), from agilis; for suffix see -ITY.

agitate v. 1586, verb use of Middle English agitat, adj. 1449, borrowed from Latin agitatus, past participle of agitare move to and fro, frequentative form of agere to drive, lead, do; for suffix see -ATE. —agitation n. 1596, borrowed from Latin agitatiōnem (nominative agitatiō), from agitare; for suffix see -TION.

agnostic n. 1870, coined by Thomas Huxley in 1869 from Greek agnōstos unknown, unknowable (a- not + gnōstós (to be) known) + English suffix -ic. —agnosticism n. 1870, formed in English from agnostic + -ism.

ago adj. Probably about 1300, originally past participle of agon go away, go forth; developed from Old English āgān, about 897 (from ā- a-⁵, away, forth, out + gān GO).

agog adv., adj. Before 1405, borrowed from Middle French en gogues in good humor, of uncertain origin.

agonize v. 1583, to subject to agony; borrowed from Middle French agoniser torment, from Late Latin agonizāre, from Greek agonízesthai to contend, struggle, from agōn (genitive agōnos) a contest, see AGONY; for suffix see -IZE.

agony n. About 1384, perhaps borrowed from Old French agonie, or directly from Late Latin agōnia, from Greek agōniā a struggle, from agōn a contest, assembly, from agein to conduct, celebrate; for suffix see -Y³.

agoraphobia n. 1873, coined by German psychiatrist Carl Westphal in 1871 as German Agoraphobie, formed from Greek agorā marketplace + -phobíā fear.

agrarian adj. 1618, borrowed through Middle French loy agrarienne agrarian law, from Latin agrārius of the land, from ager (genitive agrī) field; for suffix see -IAN.

agree v. About 1385, to please; borrowed from Old French agrēer to please, from a gré to (one's) liking, from Latin ad to, and grātum pleasing, neuter of grātus; see GRACE. —agreeable adj. About 1380, borrowed from Old French agrēable, from agrēer to please; for suffix see -ABLE. —agreement n. 1425, borrowed from Old French agrément, from agrēer to please; for suffix see -MENT.

agriculture n. Probably 1440, probably influenced by Old French agriculture, but borrowed from Late Latin agricultūra (compound formed with short i by analogy with Latin agricola farmer), from Latin agrī cultūra cultivation of land (agrī, genitive of ager land, field).

agro- a combining form meaning field, land, soil, as in agrol-ogy, or agriculture, as in agrochemical. Borrowed from Greek agro-, combining form of agrós field, land.

agronomy n. 1814, borrowed from French agronomie, from Greek agronómos overseer of land (agros land + -nómos administering, related to némein manage).

ague n. About 1300, borrowed from Old French aguë, from Latin acūta severe (in the phrase febris acūta severe fever), feminine of acūtus sharp; see ACUTE.

-aholic a combining form meaning a person with an addiction such as that of a workaholic, a person with a compulsive desire to work. Abstracted in 1972 from workaholic, coined in 1971 by Wayne Oates, an American pastoral counselor. The form is also found in -holic, as in colaholic and chocoholic.

aid v. Probably before 1400, borrowed from Old French aidier, from Latin adjūtāre, frequentative form of adjuvāre give help to (ad- to + juvāre to help). —n. Probably 1419, a wartime tax to the Crown; 1430, help or support; borrowed from Old French aide, from Late Latin adjūta, from stem of past participle of adjuvāre give help to.

aide n. 1777, short for AIDE-DE-CAMP.

ail v. Before 1300 ailen, eilen, developed from Old English (about 940) eglan, eglian, related to egle troublesome, oppressive, from Proto-Germanic azljaz*. It is cognate with Gothic (us-) agljan harass, Middle Low German egelen cause trouble, and perhaps Old High German egī fear, punishment, Old Icelandic agi fear. —ailment n. 1706, formed from English ail + -ment.

aileron n. 1909, borrowed from French aileron, alteration (influenced by aile wing) of Old French aleron, diminutive of ele wing, from Latin āla wing.

aim v. About 1303, estimate, calculate, reckon; borrowed from Old French esmer, from Latin aestimāre appraise, and also from Old French aesmer, from Vulgar Latin adaestimāre* (Latin ad- to + aestimāre appraise). The current meaning developed in the 1400's from the sense of calculating the direction of an object or a blow. —n. Probably about 1380, from the noun, influenced by Old French esme and aesme aim.

air n. a combination of three senses from different origins: 1 mixture of gases; atmosphere. Probably before 1200, borrowed from Old French air, from Latin aerem, accusative of aēr, from Greek āēr (earlier āuēr*), genitive āēros, earliest meaning: mist, clouds. 2 appearance; manner; bearing. 1596, borrowed from Middle French air, perhaps influenced by Old French aire quality, disposition, place, from Vulgar Latin arja*, from Latin āera, from Greek āēra, accusative of āēr. 3 melody; tune. 1590, borrowed from or influenced by Italian aria melody, ARIA. The Italian word, meaning air (mixture of gases) and coming from Vulgar Latin arja*, developed the sense of "melody, aria" from the earlier meaning "manner, appearance," taken from Middle French air (cited in def. 2).

airplane n. 1907, alteration of AEROPLANE. The spelling airplane soon replaced aeroplane in official American and some British publications.

aisle n. About 1370 ele, eill wing of a church; borrowed from Old French ele, from Latin āla wing, earlier aclā*, related to Latin axilla armpit; cognate with Old High German ahsala shoulder (modern German Achsel), Old Icelandic axl, Old English eaxl, and Latin axis AXIS. In the 1800's, through the influence of French aile wing, it was respelled aisle.

ajar adj., adv. 1718, alteration of Scottish dialect a char, contracted from earlier (about 1500–1512) on char slightly open, ajar; Middle English on char ajar (literally) on the turn; see CHAR² turn, chore.

akimbo adj., adv. About 1400 in kenebowe, later (1611) a kenebow, of uncertain origin, possibly from the Middle English phrase in keen bow at a sharp angle; or a Scandinavian word related to Icelandic kengboginn crooked.

al- a form of the prefix ad-, meaning to, toward, before l, as in alloy, allude.

-al¹ a suffix forming adjectives from nouns or other adjectives and meaning of, like, related to, as in natural, ornamental, historical.

Middle English had the forms -al and -el, borrowed in part from Old French -al, -el, and in part directly from Latin -ālis (of the kind of, pertaining to).

The form -al is freely applied to words with different endings from Latin (funereal, terrestrial), Greek (musical, rhomboidal), and other languages, including English itself (operational, genocidal, etc.).

-al² a suffix forming nouns of action from verbs, chiefly from Latin or French, and meaning act of _____ing, as in revival, survival, removal, approval.

Middle English had the forms -aille, later -aile, -al, borrowed from Old French feminine singular -aille (see ESPOUSAL), from Latin -ālia (neuter plural of -ālis, adjective suffix also used as noun suffix; see -AL¹).

In modern English -al² also forms nouns from verbs of Germanic origin, as in bestowal, betrothal.

alabaster n. 1375, borrowed from Old French alabastre, from Latin alabaster, from Greek alābastros, alteration of alābastos vase (of alabaster).

alacrity n. Before 1460, borrowed from Latin alacritatem (nominative alacritās), from alacer (genitive alacris) brisk, lively, eager. Perhaps cognate with Old English and Old High German ellen zeal, Old Icelandic eljan courage, power, and Gothic aljan zeal, as burning; for suffix see -ITY.

alarm n. Probably about 1380, a call to arms, borrowed from Old French alarme, from Italian allarme, from all'arme! (to the arms! —v. About 1590, verb use of alarm, n.

alb n. Old English (before 1100) albe, borrowed from Medieval Latin alba, from Latin vestis alba white vestment, feminine of albus white (surviving in Romanian alb white). The French aube was the usual spelling in English in the 14th and early 15th centuries.

albatross n. 1672, probably an alteration of earlier alcatraz a large sea bird related to the petrels. The name had various spellings: albitross, alगतross, albetross, alb- perhaps influenced by Latin albus white. Alcatraz is an obsolete name, recorded from the Portuguese in 1564, borrowed from Portuguese alcatraz pelican, in 1593, from Arabic al-ghattās a sea eagle.

The figurative meaning of a burden, such as one of guilt, is an allusion to the albatross shot by the ancient mariner and hung about his neck by his shipmates as a sign of his guilt in Coleridge's The Rime of the Ancient Mariner (1798).

albino n. 1777, borrowed from Portuguese albino, or from Spanish albino, from albo white, from Latin albus; see ALB.

album n. 1651, through German use as applied to a book of friends' or colleagues' signatures, verses, drawings, etc.; borrowed from Latin album white tablet on which things were inscribed (neuter of albus white).

albumen n. 1599, borrowed from Latin albūmen (genitive albūminis) white of an egg, (literally) whiteness, from albus white.

albumin n. 1869, borrowed from French albumine white of an egg, from Latin albūmin-, stem of albūmen ALBUMEN; for suffix see -IN².

alchemy n. Probably before 1387 alconomye, alkenamy; about 1378 alkemomye, alkamy; borrowed from Old French alkemie, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin alkimia, borrowed from Arabic al-kīmīyā (al the + Late Greek chymelā art of alloying metals, from Greek chýma, genitive chýmatis that which is poured out, ingot, from cheîn pour).

alcohol n. 1543; fine powder, borrowed from Medieval Latin alcohol powdered ore of antimony, from Arabic al-koḥl the powdered metal, kohl.

The original sense extended in 1672 to distillate of a liquid, essence, in 1753, to spirit of any fermented liquor. —alcoholic adj. 1790, formed from English alcohol + -ic.

alcove n. 1676, borrowed from French alcôve, from Spanish alcoba, from Arabic al-qubba the vaulted chamber, from qubba to vault.

alderman n. Old English Mercian dialect (before 810) aldor-monn a nobleman or leader of high rank; before 891, in Old English, West Saxon ealdormann; formed from aldor, ealdor patriarch, chief (from ald old + -or as in baldor prince, from bald bold) + mann man.

ale n. Old English (about 940) ealu, alu; cognate with Old Saxon alo, Old Icelandic öl ale, from Proto-Germanic aluth-*. Until the growing of hops was introduced in England in the first half of the 1400's, ale and beer were synonymous terms in Middle English.

alert adj. 1618, borrowed from French alerte vigilant, alert, from à l'herte, à l'erte on one's guard, from the Italian military phrase all'erta on the watch (erta lookout, high tower, steep slope, originally feminine of erto, past participle of ergere raise up, from Latin erigere raise). —v. 1868, verb use of alert, adj.

alfalfa n. 1845, borrowed from Spanish alfalfa, from Arabic al-fasfaṣa, al-fisfiṣa the best kind of fodder.

algae n. pl. of alga. 1551 alga, borrowed from Latin alga seaweed, of uncertain origin.

The plural form algae appeared in English in 1794.

algebra n. 1551, borrowed from Medieval Latin algebra, from Arabic al-jabr, al-jabr, "the bone setting," reintegration, i.e.

restoration or reduction of parts to make a whole, as in computation (al the + jabara reunite, consolidate, restore).

The earliest sense in English was of the surgical treatment of fractures, bone setting, used before 1400.

The use of the Arabic al-jabr in a famous work on algebra (Kitāb al-Jabr wal-Muqābala Rules of Reintegration and Reduction) popularized the word in its mathematical sense and the use of Arabic numerals in Europe.

algorithm n. 1699, either influenced by or borrowed from French algorithme and perhaps separately formed in English as an alteration of algorism, (the Arabic or decimal system of numerals, probably before 1200), influenced by Greek arithmōs number.

alias adv. About 1432, borrowed from Latin aliās at another time, from alius (an)other. —n. 1605, from the adverb.

alibi n. 1743, developed from an adverb meaning “elsewhere,” 1727, perhaps influenced by French alibi subterfuge, poor excuse; borrowed from Latin alibi elsewhere, locative adverb of alius (an)other. —v. 1909, American English, from the noun.

alien n., adj. Before 1338, stranger, foreigner; adj. probably before 1300, strange, foreign; borrowed through Old French alien, and directly from Latin aliēnus of or belonging to another, from alius (an)other.

alienate v. 1548, verb use of the earlier adjective alienate estranged (before 1420); borrowed from Latin aliēnātus, past participle of aliēnāre to make another's, estrange, from aliēnus of or belonging to another person or place, from alius (an)other; for suffix see -ATE¹. —alienation n. About 1395, borrowed through Old French aliénacion, and directly from Latin aliēnātiōnem (nominative aliēnātiō), from aliēnāre; for suffix see -TION.

alight¹ v. dismount. Old English (about 1000) ālīhtan, (ā- a-⁵ + lihtan get off, make light, from liht light in weight; originally said of taking one's weight off a horse or vehicle).

alight² adj. About 1300, adjective use of alight (probably before 1200), past participle of alighen light up, developed from Old English onlihtan (on- up + lihtan to light).

align v. About 1410 alinen of wolves, bitches, etc., to copulate; borrowed from Middle French aligner, from Old French alignier (a- to + lignier to line).

The spelling align became widespread in the 1800's in imitation of the French. —alignment n. 1790, borrowed from French or formed in English from French aligner to align + English suffix -ment.

alike adv., adj. Probably about 1300 aliche; earlier iliche (about 1175); developed from Old English gelīce and onlīce, from gelic and onlic similar, LIKE¹.

Old English gelic, gelice are cognate with Old Saxon gilik, gilikō, Old Frisian gelike, lik, Gothic galeiks Middle Dutch ghelijc (modern Dutch gelijk), Old High German galih, gilih, gelih, (modern German gleich), Old Icelandic glíkr (modern Icelandic líkur), and Gothic galeiks, from Proto-Germanic galīkaz*.

Alike is not a compound of a-¹ and Old English lic*, for Old English did not have the adjective form lic*.

alimentary adj. 1615, borrowed from Latin alimentārius (alimentum nourishment + -ārius -ary); or formed in English from aliment nourishment (1477, borrowed through Middle French aliment food, from Latin alimentum, from alere nourish) + English suffix -ary.

alimony n. 1655, borrowed from Latin alimōnia nourishment, sustenance, support, from alere nourish + -mōnia suffix signifying action, state, condition.

alive adj. Probably about 1175, reduced form of the Old English phrase on life in life, living, from on in, and life, dative of līf LIFE.

alkaline adj. About 1330, perhaps borrowed independently of alkali, in the phrase sal alkalin (retaining the foreign word order), from Medieval Latin. Later it became sal alkali and was finally reduced to alkali. —alkali n. About 1395, borrowed from Medieval Latin alkali, from Arabic al-qālī the ashes of saltwort (plant growing on alkaline soil). Many sources derive alkali through French, but it is not recorded in French until almost 115 years after alkali appeared in English.

all adj. Old English eall, al (about 725, in Beowulf); common to Germanic languages such as Old Saxon al, al, Old Frisian al, ol, Old High German al, Old Icelandic allr, and Gothic alls, from Proto-Germanic alnaz*.

Allah n. 1584, borrowed from Arabic Allāh, contraction of al-ilāh the (true) god.

allay v. About 1150 aleyen to put down; developed from Old English ālegan (about 725, in Beowulf, ā- a-⁵ + legan to LAY¹ put down); cognate with modern German erlegen lay low, and Gothic uslagjan lay out, from Proto-Germanic uz-lazjanan*.

The spelling with two l's was introduced in the 1600's by mistakenly identifying the Old English prefix ā- with al-, the assimilated form of ad- in words adopted or formed from Latin.

allege v. About 1300, plead before a court, borrowed through Anglo-French aleger, alteration (influenced in meaning and form by Latin allēgāre to charge) of Old French esligier to clear at law, from Latin ex- out + lītīgāre bring suit. —allegation n. Probably before 1425, borrowed through Middle French allégation, from Latin allēgātiōnem (nominative allēgātiō), from allēgāre to charge, send a message (al-, to + lēgāre to commission); for suffix see -ATION.

allegiance n. About 1399 alegeaunce loyalty of a liegeman to his lord; borrowed through Anglo-French alegaunce, alteration of Old French lijance, liejance, legeance, from liege LIEGE; for suffix see -ANCE.

The Old French forms were confused in England with allegeance alleviation, contributing to the development of the English spelling allegiance.

allegory n. About 1384, probably borrowed from Latin allēgoria, from Greek allēgoría, from allēgorein speak otherwise than one seems to speak, (állos another, different + agoreúein speak openly, from agoná public place); for suffix see -Y³. —allegorical adj. 1528, from earlier allegoric (about 1395), borrowed from Latin allegoricus, from Greek allēgorikós, from allēgoría; for suffix see -ICAL.

allele n. 1931, possibly borrowed from German Allel, or developed in English, the German and English forms being a shortening of allelomorph, 1902 borrowed from the stem of Greek allēlōn of one another (from állos other, ELSE) + morphé form.

alleluia n. Probably before 1200, borrowed from Latin allēlūja, from Greek allēlōia, from Hebrew hallēlū-yāh praise Jehovah, HALLELUJAH.

allergy n. 1911, borrowed from German Allergie (coined in 1906 by Clemens von Pirquet, 1874–1929, Austrian pediatrician), from Greek állos different, strange + érgon action; for suffix see -Y³. —allergic adj. 1911, though formed in English from allergy + -ic, the word is attested earlier (1906) in French allergique. —allergen n. substance causing allergy. 1912, formed in English from allergy + -gen.

alleviate v. Probably before 1425, borrowed perhaps through influence of Middle French allevier, from Late Latin alleviātus, past participle of alleviāre to lighten (Latin al- to + levis light in weight); for suffix see -ATE¹. —alleviation n. Probably before 1425, borrowed possibly through Middle French alleviation, from Late Latin alleviātiōnem (nominative alleviātiō), from alleviāre; for suffix see -TION.

alley n. 1360–61 aley, aleye open passage between buildings, alley; borrowed from Old French allée a path, passage (also meaning “a going”) from alé, past participle of aler to go, probably from Gallo-Romance allārī, back formation from Latin allātus having been brought to (al- to + lātus, serving as past participle to ferre bring).

A contrary point of view maintains that Old French aler (found in the Latinized form alare in a glossary of the 700's) developed from amlare*, from amlāre*, from Latin ambulāre.

alliance n. About 1300, borrowed from Old French aliance, from alier ally with, see ALLY; for suffix see -ANCE.

alligator n. 1623 allegater, alteration of earlier aligarto, borrowed from Spanish el lagarto (de Indias) the lizard (of the Indies), from el the + lagarto, from Latin lacertus LIZARD.

An earlier form, lagarto, appeared in English in 1568 and 1577; it was borrowed from Spanish without the article el or al and was replaced in 1591 by aligarto.

alliteration n. 1656, probably borrowed from New Latin alliterationem (nominative alliteratio), from Latin al- to, + littera LETTER, on the pattern of Latin oblitterātiōnem obliteration. —alliterate v. 1816, back formation from alliteration, on the pattern of obliteration, obliterate.

allo- a combining form meaning “other,” as in allocentric, or “different, varying,” as in allochromatic. Borrowed from Greek allo- combining form of állos other. Before a vowel the form is all-, as in allergy.

allocate v. 1640–41, verb use of earlier allocate, adj.; 1438, borrowed from Medieval Latin allocate (the word with which writs authorizing payment often began). It is the imperative plural of allocare allocate (Latin al- + locāre to place, LOCATE); for suffix see -ATE¹. —allocation n. 1447–48, borrowed possibly through Middle French allocation, from Medieval Latin allocationem (nominative allocatio), from allocare; for suffix see -TION.

allot v. 1474 alotten, borrowed from Old French aloter (a- to + lot LOT from a Germanic word). —allotment n. 1574, possibly borrowed from Middle French allotement, and formed in English from allot + -ment.

allow v. Before 1325 allowen, borrowed through Anglo-French allowen, alouer, from Old French alouer approve, from Latin allaudāre (al- + laudāre praise, LAUD).

In Old French alouer approve, was confused with alouer assign, from Medieval Latin allocare allocate, and both were considered different senses of the same word by the time alouer was adopted in English. —allowance n. Probably before 1387, borrowed from Old French alouance, from alouer approve; for suffix see -ANCE.

alloy n. Before 1325 alai, allai, borrowed through Anglo-French alei, from Old French alei, from aleier mix with a baser metal; literally, to combine, from Latin alligāre bind to (al- to + ligāre bind; see LIGAMENT).

Middle English alai was later replaced by alloy (1604), from French aloi. —v. About 1378 alaien, allaien, borrowed through Anglo-French allaier, from Old French alotier, alier, from older aleier, from Latin alligāre. Middle English alaien, allaien was later replaced by alloy (1691), from French aloyer, now allier.

allude v. 1533, mock, (later) refer fancifully to; possibly borrowed through Middle French alluder, from Latin alludere make a mocking allusion to; play with (al- to + ludere play).

allure v. 1402, borrowed from Anglo-French alurer, corresponding to Old French aleurer (a- to + loirre falconer's LURE, from a Frankish word).

allusion n. 1548, borrowed from Latin allusiōnem (nominative allusiō), from allūs-, stem of alludere ALLUDE; for suffix see -SION.

alluvium n. 1665–66, borrowed from Medieval Latin alluvium, neuter of alluvius washed against, from Latin alluere wash against, (al- to, against, + -luere, combining form of lavare to wash, LAVE). —alluvial adj. 1802, borrowed from French alluvial, or formed in English from alluvium + -AL¹.

ally v. About 1300 allien combine, unite; borrowed from Old French alier, allier, from a different stem of aleier, from Latin alligāre bind to, ALLOY. —n. Probably about 1375 allie, noun use of allien, v., to ally.

alma mater n. 1710, Latin alma māter bountiful or nourishing mother (alma, almus nourishing, from alere nourish, and māter MOTHER). Alma māter a title given by the Romans to goddesses, especially Ceres and Cybele, was used in this sense in English in 1398. In the 1700's the title was first used in reference to British universities such as Oxford.

almanac n. Before 1388, borrowed from Medieval Latin almanach, from Spanish almanaque, earlier Catalan almanac, from Spanish-Arabic al-manākh calendar, almanac, apparently from Late Greek almenichakón, probably of Coptic origin.

almighty adj. Old English (about 725, in Beowulf) ælmīhtig (æ- ALL + mīhtig MIGHTY). Cognate with Old Saxon alomahtig, Old High German alamahhtig (modern German allmächtig) and Old Icelandic almáttigr, evidently loan translations based on Latin omnipotēns, accusative omnipotentem OMNIPO-TENT.

almond n. Probably about 1300, borrowed from Old French almande, alemande, amande, from Medieval Latin amandola, alteration (influenced by Latin amandus lovable) of Latin amygdala, from Greek amygdālē.

The initial al- may have developed through influence of Spanish almoneda almond.

almoner n. 1264 as a surname; about 1303 aumener, borrowed from Old French aumosnier, almosnier, from Vulgar Latin almosinārius*, variant of Late Latin eleēmosi-, elēmosinārius, from eleēmosyna ALMS. In the 1500's the spelling with l became the accepted form by analogy with alms.

almost adv. Old English (before 1000) ealmāest nearly (a compound of eal, al ALL + māest MOST). From 1120 to 1250, Middle English almest, ealmest developed into modern almost, but it did not predominate until the 1400's.

alms n. Old English (before 810) ælmesse, corresponding to Old Saxon alamosna alms, Old High German alamuosan, and Old Icelandic ölmusa, almusa, all from a Germanic word going back to Vulgar Latin alemosyna*, an alteration of Late Latin eleēmosyna, from Greek eleēmosynē alms, pity, ultimately from éleos pity.

aloft adv. Probably about 1200, oloft; borrowed from Scandinavian; compare Old Icelandic ā lopti up above (ā in, on + lopt sky, LOFT).

alone adj., adv. Probably about 1200, literally, all by oneself (al ALL + on, one, Old English āna adv., by oneself). Compare German allein and Dutch alleen, both meaning alone; also late Old Icelandic all-einna.

along prep. Old English (887) andlang, alongside of (and- opposite, against + lang long).

aloof adv. 1532, away to the windward (a- on + loof windward, probably from Old French lof, from Germanic; see LUFF).

alpaca n. 1792, borrowed from Spanish, probably from Aymara allpaca, alpáka, possibly related to Quechua p'áko alpaca. The form pacos appears in 1753.

alpha n. Probably about 1200, borrowed from Latin alpha, from Greek álpha, from Semitic; compare Hebrew 'aleph the first letter of the Hebrew alphabet.

alphabet n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Late Latin alphabētum, from Greek alphabētos, from álpha the letter A and bēta the letter B, the first two letters of the Greek alphabet.

Alpine adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed perhaps through Middle French alpin, and directly from Latin Alpinus, from Alpēs the Alps.

already adv. About 1300, from the adjective phrase all ready fully ready. Compare Norwegian and Danish allerede already.

also adv. Before 1131 alswa likewise, similarly, form of Old English, ealswā (occasionally, alswā) entirely so, quite so (eall, all ALL + swā SO).

altar n. Old English (about 1000), borrowed from Latin altāre, earlier altāria, plural, perhaps related to Latin adolēre burn up, consume.

From about 1200 to 1500 the Old English form was generally replaced by auter, borrowed from Old French auter, from Latin altāre. During the 1500's altar, reintroduced from Latin, quickly replaced auter.

alter v. About 1385, borrowed from Old French altérer, learned borrowing from Late Latin alterāre, from Latin alter the other. —alteration n. Before 1398, borrowed from Old French alteracion and Medieval Latin alterationem (nominative alteratio), from Late Latin alterāre alter; for suffix see -TION.

altercation n. About 1390, borrowed through Old French altercacion, and directly from Latin altercātionem (nominative altercātiō), from altercārī altercate, from altercus* in turn, from alter the other; for suffix see -TION.

alternate adj. 1513, borrowed from Latin alternātus, past participle of alternāre, from alternus every other, from alter the other; for suffix see -ATE¹. —n. 1718, from the adjective. —v. 1599, from the adjective.

The derivative form alternately appears in English about 80 years before alternate, and alternation appears in 1443, which gives rise to speculation that alternate may be a back formation from alternation or that alternate may have existed earlier than the formal records indicate.

although conj. About 1325 althagh, compound of Old English al, eall ALL, and thāh, variant of thēah THOUGH.

altitude n. About 1386, borrowed from Latin altitūdō (genitive altitūdinis), from altus high.

alto n. 1784, man with alto voice, borrowed from Italian, from Latin altus high. Though originally applied to a man's voice, and therefore explaining the connection with "high," alto is now usually applied to a woman's voice and is thought of as "low" because the word is generally considered to be a clipped form of contralto.

altogether adv. Before 1200 altogeder completely; developed from Middle English phrase (about 1150) al togedere all together (Old English eall, al ALL + tōgædere TOGETHER).

altruism n. 1853, borrowed from French altruisme, possibly from French autrui for another or others (Old French altrui, from Vulgar Latin alterui*, altered under the influence of cui for whom, from Latin alteri, dative of alter the other) + French -isme -ism. —altruistic adj. 1853, formed in English from French altruiste altruistic + English -ic.

alum n. 1373, borrowing of Old French alum, from Latin alūmen an astringent substance, probably a sulfate.

aluminum n. Coined in 1812 by British chemist Sir Humphry Davy, as alteration (influenced by Latin alūmen, alūminis alum) of earlier New Latin aluminium (1808, also coined by Davy from alumina a mineral occurring in nature as corundum + -ium). Aluminium, preferred in British usage, also appeared in 1812 as an alteration of aluminum on the analogy of sodium, potassium, magnesium.

alumna n., pl. alumnae. 1882, American English, Latin alumna, feminine of ALUMNUS.

alumnus n., pl. alumni 1645, Latin alumnus, literally, foster child, vestigial present passive participle of alere nourish.

alveolus n. 1706, Latin alveolus, diminutive of alveus cavity, related to alvus belly (metathesized form by shift of l, of earlier aulos*) and cognate with Greek aulós hollow tube.

always adv. Probably about 1350, a compound of all and way (the s comes from Middle English wayes, the adverbial genitive form of way).

Beginning as separate phrases with different meanings and different grammatical application, Old English ealne weg all the way, the whole way, was an adverbial accusative phrase; alles weis at every time was an adverbial genitive phrase. However, ealne weg adopted the additional meaning of at every time, continually before 899 and survived in Middle English as alne way, along with the later phrase alles weis, until about 1350. Dropping its inflection, the phrase alne way became a compound before 1375, alway always, and survived until well into the 1800's. Concurrently with the addition of the adverbial suffix -s, -es alway became always probably about 1350, and gradually gained ground on alway from the 1400's onward.

am v. form of the verb be. Developed from Old English (about 725, in Beowulf) eom, altered from earlier em* (compare Old Icelandic em), probably on the model of bēom, bēon BE, Mercian (before 830) eam, Northumbrian (about 950) am.

In Old English the verb am had only a present tense; all other forms were part of a separate verb with the stem wes- meaning "to remain." The two verbs supplemented each other in Old English and constituted the verb am-was showing "existence" as the substantive verb. However, by the 1200's parts of am-was became obsolete and corresponding parts of be took their place, thus making up a verb am-was-be. Since be supplied the infinitive form, the name was applied to the whole verb. See BE for further explanation and ARE¹, IS, and WAS for particular details.

am- a prefix taking the place of ambi- in a few borrowings from Latin, especially amputate.

amalgam n. Before 1400, an alloy of mercury; borrowed through Old French amalgame, or directly from Medieval Latin amalgame, perhaps alteration of Latin malagma poultice or plaster, from Greek málagma softening substance, from mal-assein to soften, from malakós soft. —amalgamate v. 1660, verb use of earlier (1642–47) participle amalgamate, probably borrowed from Medieval Latin amalgamatus*, past participle of amalgamare, from amalgame; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. In some uses amalgamate may be a back formation from earlier amalgamation. —amalgamation n. 1612, probably formed from English amalgam (archaic v. to alloy with mercury) + -ation or borrowed from amalgamation (1578).

amanuensis n. 1619, borrowing of Latin āmanuēnsis, a shortened form of servus ā manū secretary (originally "servant from the hand," from ā from, manū, ablative of manus hand).

amaranth n. 1616, borrowed perhaps through French amarante, from Latin amarantus, from Greek amárantos, literally, everlasting (a- not + maranesthai wither, decay, die out; related to máranesthai fight).

The form with -th probably developed from the influence of Greek ánthos flower.

amaryllis n. 1794, borrowed from Latin, from Greek Amáryllis, typical name of a country girl (in Theocritus, Ovid, Vergil, etc.).

amass v. 1481, borrowed from Old French amasser (ā- to + masser, from masse MASS¹ lump).

amateur n. 1784, lover of (some activity or thing); borrowed from French and Old French amateur, learned borrowing from Latin amātōrem (nominative amātor) lover, from amāre to love.

amatory adj. 1599, borrowed from Latin amātōrius, from amātōrem lover; see AMATEUR.

amaze v. Probably before 1200, amasen, Middle English form of Old English (about 1000) āmasian (ā- *a-⁵ + masian to confuse; related to MAZE).

amb- a form of the prefix ambi- before a vowel, in borrowings from Latin or French, as in ambiguous.

ambassador n. About 1385, borrowed from Middle French ambassadeur, Old French embassator, from Italian ambasciatore, from Old Provençal ambaisador, from ambaisa(da) office of an ambassador, EMBASSY; for suffix see *-OR*².

amber n. 1365, earlier meaning (probably about 1350) ambergris; borrowed from Old French ambre, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin ambar, ambara, from Arabic ānbar ambergris.

ambergris n. grayish waxlike substance used in perfumes. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Middle French ambregris, literally, gray AMBER.

ambi- a prefix borrowed from Latin ambi- around, both, in two ways; cognate with Greek amphi- around, about, on both sides, Old English ymb- around, and Old High German umbi (modern German um around). The meaning of around is preserved in borrowings with the shorter forms am- and amb-, but as a word-forming element in modern English ambi- has a general meaning of both, double, as in ambisexual, ambivalence.

ambiance n. 1923, borrowing of French ambiance, but influenced by earlier (1889) English ambience; English spelling now follows the French form -ance. French ambiance, from ambiant surrounding, from Latin ambientem; see AMBIENT. English ambience was formed from ambient + -ence.

ambidextrous adj. 1646, borrowed through French ambidextre, or directly from Late Latin ambidexter (Latin ambi- both + dexter right-handed, see DEXTERITY); for suffix see -OUS.

ambient adj. 1596, borrowed through Middle French ambiant, ambient, or directly from Latin ambientem (nominative ambiēns), present participle of ambire go about (amb- around + ire go); for suffix see -ENT. — ambience n. See AMBIANCE.

ambiguity n. Probably about 1400, borrowed from Old French ambigüité, from Medieval Latin ambiguitatem (nominative ambiguitas), from Latin ambiguus ambiguous; see AMBIGUOUS. — ambiguous adj. 1528, borrowed perhaps through French ambigu, but more likely directly from Latin ambiguus, from ambigere dispute about (amb-, in two ways + agere to drive, lead, act); for suffix see -OUS.

ambition n. 1340, borrowed through Middle French ambition, or directly from Latin ambitiōnem (nominative ambitiō) a going about, from ambire go about; see AMBIENT; for suffix see -TION. The meaning desire for honor, power, etc. developed in Latin from the literal meaning a going about, from the going about of candidates for office in ancient Rome soliciting the votes of citizens, which led to "a striving for favor or good will," and "a desire for popularity, fame, etc." — ambitious adj. 1382, borrowed through Old French ambitieux, or directly from Latin ambitiōsus, from ambitiō (accusative ambitiōnem) a going about; for suffix see -OUS.

ambivalence n. 1924, formed in English from (1912) ambivalency, and borrowed from German Ambivalenz (coined 1910 by the German psychiatrist Eugen Bleuler), from Latin ambi- in two ways + valentia strength, from present participle of valēre be strong. — ambivalent adj. 1916, formed in English from ambivalency, on the analogy of equivalent, equivalency.

amble v. Probably about 1300, borrowed through Anglo-French aumbler, from Old French ambler walk as a horse does, from Latin ambulāre to walk, from amb- around + -ulāre, cognate with Greek álē wandering, alásthai wander about, Latvian aluōt go around or astray, and Tocharian āl- remove, detach.

ambrosia n. 1555, borrowed perhaps through Middle French ambroysie, and directly from Latin ambrosia, from Greek ambrosiā, ambrosios of the immortals (i.e. gods), from ambrotos immortal (a- not + brotos, from earlier mrotos* MORTAL).

ambulance n. 1809, borrowing of French ambulance, from hôpital ambulant, literally, walking hospital, from Latin ambulantem (nominative ambulans), present participle of ambulāre to AMBLE.

The meaning of a vehicle, such as a wagon to carry the injured, did not develop until the Crimean War (1853–56) when ambulances came into general use.

ambush v. About 1300 ambushen, embushen, borrowed from Old French embuscher (en- in + busche wood, bush, apparently from Frankish busk*; compare Old High German busc BUSH¹). — n. 1489, Middle English embushe, from the verb, or borrowed from Middle French embusche, from Old French embusche, from embuscher; see AMBUSH, v.

ameba n. See AMOEBA.

ameliorate v. 1767, formed from English *a-*³ to + meliorate; patterned on French améliorer, from Old French ameillorer (from a- to + meillorer to better, from Late Latin meliorāre improve).

amen interj. Frequent in Old English (before 1000) as a closing word of vernacular texts; borrowed from Late Latin āmēn, from Greek āmēn, from Hebrew āmēn truly, verily, surely.

An expression of affirmation or agreement in the Bible and adopted in Greek in the Septuagint, it passed into early Christian use in Greek and Latin.

amenable adj. 1596, answerable (to the law); borrowed through Anglo-French amenable, from Middle French amener (à to + mener to lead, from Latin mināre to drive with shouts, variant of minārī threaten); for suffix see -ABLE.

amend v. Probably before 1200 amenden, borrowed from Old French amender, alteration (influenced by Vulgar Latin am-*, for Latin ad- to) of Latin emendāre to free from fault (ē- out + menda fault, blemish). — amendment n. Probably before 1200, borrowed from Old French amendement, from amender amend; for suffix see -MENT. — amends n. Probably before 1300, borrowed from Old French amendes penalties, plural of amende reparation, from amender to AMEND.

amenity n. Before 1398, borrowed from Old French amenité, or directly from Latin amoenitatem (nominative amoenitās), from amoenus pleasant, perhaps related to amāre to love.

American adj. 1598, borrowed from New Latin Americanus, from America, the continent, named after Americus Vesputius (Italian Amerigo Vespucci, 1454–1512, who made three voyages to America and claimed to have discovered it). In 1507 a German geographer, Martin Waldseemüller, named the land America in a Latin treatise entitled Cosmographiae Introductio.

americium n. chemical element discovered in 1945. 1946, New Latin, formed from Americ(a) + -ium.

Ameslan n. 1974, formed in English as an acronym for Ame(rican) Sign Lan(guage).

amethyst n. Before 1300 amatiste, borrowed from Old French amatiste and Medieval Latin amatistus, from Latin amethystus, from Greek améthystos the amethyst, thought to be a preventive of intoxication (a- not + methýskein make drunk, from méthý wine).

amiable adj. Before 1375, borrowed from Old French amiable, from Late Latin amicābilis, from Latin amicus, n. friend.

amicable adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Late Latin amicābilis, from Latin amicus, n. friend, related to amāre to love.

amid prep. Probably before 1200 amidde, amid, developed from the Old English phrase (about 725, in Beowulf) on middan in the middle, possibly on analogy with Latin in mediō; see MID.

amidst prep. 1391 amyddes, formed from amidde AMID + adverbial genitive -s or -es.

The ending was changed in the 1500's to -st, by association with superlatives in -st and -est (compare against); or the final -t was added to -s or -es for phonetic reasons (compare betwixt).

amino adj. 1887, formed in English as a word and a combining form from earlier (1863) amine chemical compound formed from ammonia (am(monia) + *-ine*²).

amir n. 1614, borrowed from Arabic āmīr commander, EMIR. Related to ADMIRAL.

Amish adj. 1844, American English, apparently borrowed from German amisch, derived from the name of Jacob Amman, a Swiss Mennonite preacher of the 1600's who founded the sect, + -isch *-ish*¹. —n. 1884, noun use of Amish, adj.

amiss adv. About 1250 amis, amisse in a wrong manner, in fault (*a*¹ in + missen fail to hit, *MISS*¹).

amity n. 1450 amyte, borrowed from Middle French amitié, from Old French amistié, from Vulgar Latin amicitātem* (nominative amicitās*), from Latin amicus, adj. friendly, related to amāre to love; for suffix see *-TY*².

ammonia n. 1799, New Latin, so named from sal ammoniac ammonium chloride, (about 1330) armoniac; borrowed through Old French armoniac, and directly from Medieval Latin armoniacum, alteration of Latin ammōniacum, from Greek ammōniakós, literally salt of Ammon, Egyptian god identified by the Romans with Jupiter, because sal ammoniac was brought from the region of Libya near the shrine of Ammon.

ammunition n. Before 1626, borrowed from obsolete French amunition, ammunition, and an altered form amonition, all from Middle French munitio, perhaps developed from a misdivision of la munitio into l'ammunition.

amnesia n. 1786, New Latin, from Greek amnēsia forgetfulness, from amnēmōn forgetful (a- not + mimnēskesthai to recall).

amnesty n. 1605, forgetfulness, intentional overlooking; borrowed from French amnestie, from Latin amnēstia, from Greek amnēstia oblivion (a- not + mimnēskesthai to recall).

The current meaning of pardon for a past offense appeared in 1693.

amniocentesis n. 1970, New Latin, formed from amnion + centesis surgical puncture, borrowed from Greek kēntēsis a pricking, from kenteîn to prick, related to kontós pole.

amnion n. 1667, New Latin, from Greek amnion membrane around a fetus; originally, bowl in which the blood of victims was caught. —amniotic adj. 1822, formed from English amnion + -otic, as in sclerotic and narcotic.

ameba or amoeba n. 1855, borrowed from New Latin Amoeba (1841) the genus name, from Greek amoibē change, in reference to its continually changing shape, from amelbein to change.

amok adv., adj. See AMUCK.

among prep. Before 1121, reduced from Old English (before 899) onmang, ongemang, originally a phrase on gemang, gemong in a crowd (on in + gemang, gemong mingling, crowd), from the same root as gemengan mix or mingle (ge- together prefix + mengan to mix). Compare Old Saxon angimang among, amid; Old Frisian mong among.

amongst prep. Before 1250, formed from among + adverbial genitive -s or -es.

The ending was changed in the 1500's to -st, by association with superlatives in -st and -est (compare against); or the final -t was added to -s or -es for phonetic reasons (compare betwixt).

amorous adj. About 1303, borrowed from Old French amorous, amoureux, from amour love; for suffix see -OUS.

amorphous adj. 1731, borrowed from Greek ámorphos (a- without + morphē form).

amortize v. Probably before 1387 amortisen hold property in mortmain, without right of disposal; borrowed from Old French amortiss-, stem of amortir deaden, from Vulgar Latin admortire* (Latin ad- to + mortem, nominative mors, death; related to MORTAL and MORTGAGE); for suffix see -IZE. —amortization n. 1672, formed in English from amortize + -ation, or borrowed from Medieval Latin amortizationem (nominative amortizatio), from amortizare; for suffix see -TION.

amount v. About 1275, go up, rise, mount; borrowed from Old French amont, from a mont upward (literally, to the mountain), from Latin ad montem (ad- to + montem, nominative mōns mountain). The meaning of be equal (to), reach (to) appeared in Middle English about 1350. —n. 1710, noun use of amount, v.

ampere n. 1881, borrowed from French ampère, named after André M. Ampère, 1775–1836, a French physicist. —amperage n. 1894, formed in English from ampere + -age, after voltage.

ampersand n. 1837, formed in English by alteration of and per se (=) and, a phrase formerly found in glossaries, meaning “&” by itself = “and.” The phrase developed from the use of Latin per se, meaning “by itself,” which was formerly used in naming a letter that stood by itself to form a word, such as A per se A (a by itself equals or makes the word A). amphibian adj. 1637, having two modes of existence, or of doubtful nature; (later, probably after 1847) of or having to do with the Amphibia (class of animals that live both on land and in water). Both senses derive from New Latin Amphibia (1607), from Greek amphibia, neuter plural of amphibios AMPHIBIOUS; for suffix see -AN. —n. 1835, noun use of amphibian, adj.

amphibious adj. 1643, borrowed from Greek amphibios living a double life, amphibious (amphi- both + bios life).

amphitheater n. 1546, borrowed through Middle French amphithéâtre, or directly from Latin amphitheātrum, from Greek amphithēatron, neuter of amphithēatos with seats for spectators all round (amphi- around, on both sides + thēatron THEATER).

amphora n. 1323, borrowing of Latin amphora, from Greek amphoreús, earlier amphiphoreús (amphi- on both sides + phoreús bearer, ultimately from pherein to bear).

ample adj. 1437, borrowing of Middle French ample, from Latin amplus large, wide, spacious; possibly related to ampla handle, grip.

amplify v. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Middle French amplifier, learned borrowing from Latin amplificāre, from amplificus splendid, from amplus ample + the root of facere make; for suffix see -FY.

amplitude n. 1549, borrowed perhaps through Middle French amplitude, or directly from Latin amplitūdō (genitive amplitūdinis), from amplus ample; for suffix see -TUDE.

ampoule n. 1907, borrowed from French, from Latin ampulla, diminutive of amphora AMPHORA.

amputate v. 1638, possibly a back formation from amputation, or borrowed from Latin amputātus, past participle of amputāre (am- about + putāre to prune, trim); for suffix see -ATE¹.

—amputation n. 1611, borrowed through Middle French amputation, or directly from Latin amputatiōnem (nominative amputatiō), from amputāre; for suffix see -TION. —amputee n. 1910, formed from English amput(ate) + -ee.

amuck or amok adv., adj. 1672 amuck, 1772 amock, borrowed from Malay amok in a murderous frenzy.

amuse v. 1480, borrowed from Middle French amuser divert, cause to muse, from Old French amuser (a- to + muser ponder, MUSE). —amusement n. 1603, borrowed from French, from amu-ser; for suffix see -MENT.

an An is the older and fuller form of a. It originated in Old English as an unstressed form of the numeral ān one; see ONE. By 1150 it was reduced in the midland dialect of England to a before a consonant; but in the southern dialect an before a consonant was found as late as 1340. Before w and y it was used until the 1400's (an woman), and before h in a stressed syllable (an hundred) down to the 1600's and is still affected before h today.

an⁻¹ a prefix meaning not, as in analphabetic, anastigmatic, or without, as in anhydrous; the form before vowels and sometimes h-, corresponding to a⁻⁴ before consonants.

an⁻² a form of the prefix ad-, meaning to, toward, before n, as in annex. Formed in Latin by assimilation of the d to the following consonant (n).

an⁻³ a form of the prefix ana- before a vowel, as in anode.

—an a suffix of adjectives and nouns meaning: (person or thing) being of or belonging to, as in American, European, crustacean; person expert or skilled in, as in historian, magician. Derived either from Latin -ānus, adjective suffix, or by alteration of Middle English -ain, -en, borrowed from Old French, from Latin -ānus.

From the same sources (Latin -ānus, Old French -ain) English in a few cases acquired a variant -ane, sometimes in a word distinguished in meaning from the form in -an (humane: human, urbane: urban), sometimes without any such contrast (arcane, mundane).

ana- a prefix meaning up, again, back, or in words borrowed directly or indirectly from Greek ana-, as in anachronism, analysis, anathema, and in technical coinages of various kinds, as in anagram, anaplastic.

—ana, with a common variant -iana, a suffix added to a proper noun, meaning lore concerning a person or place, as in Americana, Lincoliana. Borrowed from Latin -āna, -iāna, neuter plural of the adjective suffixes -ānus, -iānus.

anachronism n. Before 1646, borrowed through French anachronisme and Latin anachronismus, from Greek anachronismós, from anachronizesthai, literally, be timed back, from anachronizein refer to a wrong time (ana- back + chronizein spend time, from chrónos time; see CHRONIC); for suffix see -ISM.

anaconda n. 1768, modification of New Latin (1693) Anacandaia, probably from Singhalese henakandayā a kind of whip snake, (literally) lightning stem.

anaerobic adj. 1884, formed in English by adding the common adjective suffix -ic to noun and adjective use of French anaérobie (coined in 1863 by Louis Pasteur from Greek an- without + āēr, āeros air + bíos life).

anagram n. 1589, borrowed probably through French anagramme, or adapted directly from New Latin anagramma, from Greek anagrammatizein transpose letters (ana- up or back + grámma letter; see GRAMMAR).

analgesic adj., n. 1875, formed in English from analgesia + -ic. New Latin analgesia, adopted in English (1706), is from Greek analgēsīa (an- without + ālgēsis sense of pain, from algēin feel pain, from ālgos pain, related to alégein to care about, originally to feel pain).

analogous adj. 1646, borrowed perhaps through French analogue adj., or directly from Latin analogus, from Greek análogos proportionate (aná lógon according to due ratio, aná up, upon + lógon, accusative of lógos ratio, reason; see LOGIC); for suffix see -OUS.

analogue n. 1826, borrowing of French analogue, from Greek análogon, neuter singular of análogos; ANALOGOUS.

analogy n. Probably before 1425, borrowed through Old French analogie, or directly from Latin analogia, from Greek analogiā proportion, from análogos proportionate, ANALOGOUS; for suffix see -LOGY.

analysis n. 1581, borrowing of Medieval Latin analysis, from Greek ánalysis a breaking up, from análein unloose (ana- up + lēin loosen, untie). —analyst n. 1656, borrowed from French analyste, from analyse analysis, from Greek ánalysis.

—analytic adj. 1601, from earlier (about 1590) noun use, borrowed through French analytique, or directly from Late Latin analyticus, from Greek analytikós, from ánalysis. —analyze v. 1601, early spelling analyse, formed in English probably by back formation from analysis, influenced by verb suffix -ize.

anarchy n. 1539, borrowed through French anarchie and Medieval Latin anarchia, from Greek anarchía, from ánarchos rulerless (an- without + archós ruler, related to arche-, archi- chief, first, ARCH-). —anarchist n. 1678, probably formed in English from earlier anarch (1667, borrowed from Greek ánarchos) leader of revolt + -ist.

anathema n. 1526, borrowed from Latin, from Greek anáthema thing dedicated or devoted, especially to evil, related to anatithénai to set up (ana- up + tithénai to set, put, place).

anatomy n. Before 1398, borrowed through Old French anatomie and Late Latin anatomia, from Greek anatómē dissection, related to anatémnein to cut up, dissect (ana- up + témnein to cut); for suffix see -TOMY.

—ance a suffix forming nouns (chiefly from verbs) and meaning action, process, state, or quality, as in allowance = action of allowing, annoyance = state or quality of being annoyed. -Ance is borrowed through Old French or directly from Latin -antia (-ant- participial stem, as in cōstantem steady, firm + -ia suffix corresponding to English -y³). Compare -ENCE.

ancestor n. About 1300 auncestre, ancestre, borrowed from Old French ancestre, from Late Latin antecessor predecessor, from Latin antecess-, stem of antecēdere precede (ante- before + cēdere go). The ending -re was Latinized to -or in the 1500's; for suffix see -OR². —ancestry n. Before 1338, borrowed with alteration (influenced by Middle English ancestre ancestor) from Old French ancestrie, from ancestour, from Late Latin antecessōrem (nominative antecessor), from Latin antecess-, stem of antecēdere.

anchor n. Middle English ancre, anker, developed from Old English (before 899) ancor; borrowed from Latin ancora, from Greek ánkēra, related to Greek ankýlos crooked, curved. —v. Probably before 1200 ancen, verb use of ancre, n. Anchor was rarely spelled with -ch- before the end of the 1500's. The adoption of -ch- was an imitation of Latin anchora, which was itself a corrupt variant of ancora.

anchorite n. About 1433, borrowed from Medieval Latin anachorita, alteration of Late Latin anachōrēta, from Late Greek anachōrētēs, from Greek anachōrēin to retreat (ana- back + chōrēin withdraw, give place, from chōros place, space); for suffix see -ITE¹. In the 1500's anchorite replaced older ancre (before 1121), from Old English ancra (before 900), a shortening of Late Latin anachōrēta.

anchovy n. 1596, borrowed from Spanish anchova, (earlier) anchoa, from Italian dialect of Genoa anciua and dialect of Corsica anchiua, apparently from Vulgar Latin apiuva*, corresponding to Latin apua a small fish, from Greek aphýē small fish of various kinds.

ancient adj. Probably about 1390 auncien, borrowed from Old French ancien, auncien, from Vulgar Latin anteānus* meaning "from before" (Latin ante before + -ānus -an). The addition of final -t to English auncien occurred in the 1400's by mistaken association of the word with adjectives in -ant and -ent that had later dropped the final -t.

ancillary adj. 1667, borrowed from Latin ancillāris of a handmaid, from ancilla handmaid, diminutive of ancula, feminine of anculus manservant (an- around + -culus, from colere attend to, cultivate); for suffix see -ARY.

—ancy a suffix forming nouns (chiefly corresponding to adjectives in -ant, such as buoyant, constant) and meaning state or quality, as in buoyancy = state or quality of being buoyant, constancy = state or quality of being constant. -Ancy is a variant form of -ance and is borrowed from Latin -antia. It became differentiated from -ance probably to emphasize the sense of state or quality.

and conj. Old English (about 700) and, end, ond; cognate with Old Frisian anda, enda and, Old Saxon ande, endi, Old High German endi, anti, enti, unti (modern German und), Middle Dutch ende, end, enn (modern Dutch en), and Old Icelandic enn and, but, from Proto-Germanic undā*.

andiron n. 1309 aundiren, aundirne, borrowed from Old French andier, aundier. The later ending -iron was influenced by Middle English iren iron.

androgynous adj. 1651, borrowed from Latin androgynus, from Greek andrógygnos male and female in one, hermaphrodite (anēr, genitive andrós man, male + gyné woman, female); for suffix see -OUS.

—ane a suffix designating a saturated hydrocarbon of the methane series (as in butane, propane). -Ane is also a variant of the suffix -an, as in humane, germane, urbane, adding emphasis to a quality described by an adjective, as in human, german, urban.

anecdote n. 1686, private or unpublished historical fact; borrowed through French anecdote, and directly from Medieval Latin anecdota, from Late Greek anékdotā things unpublished (in reference to memoirs of Procopius, consisting chiefly of gossip about the court of Justinian). Late Greek anékdotā, neuter plural of Greek anékdotos unpublished, is from an- not + ékdotos published, from ekdidónai give out, publish, (ex- out + didónai give).

anemia n. 1876 anemia; before 1824 anaemia, influenced by earlier French anémie (1722), but adopted from New Latin, from Greek anaímia lack of blood, from ánaimos bloodless (an- without + háima blood). —anemic adj. anemic after 1839; anaemic sometime before 1847, perhaps influenced by earlier French anémique (1833), but formed from English anaemia + -ic.

anemone n. 1548, borrowed through Middle French anemone, Old French anemoine, and directly from Latin anemōnē, from Greek anemónē, (ánemos wind + -ōnē daughter of, a feminine patronymic suffix).

aneroïd adj. 1848, borrowed from French anéroïde (Greek a- without + Late Greek nērón water + French -oide (-oid). Nērón derived from the Late Greek phrase nērón hýdōr fresh water, from Greek nearón, neuter of nearós fresh, from neos new; see NEW.

anesthesia n. 1721, New Latin, from Greek anaisthēslā insensibility (an- without + aisthēsis sensation, from aisthānesthai to feel, perceive). —anesthetic adj. 1846 anaesthetic, borrowed from Greek anaisthētos insensible (an- without + aisthētos sensible, from aisthānesthai to feel) + English -ic. —n. 1848, from the adjective.

aneurysm or aneurism n. Probably before 1425 aneurisma, borrowed from Medieval Latin aneurisma, from Greek aneúr-yisma, from aneurýnein dilate (ana- up + eurýnein widen, from eurýs wide).

angel n. About 1300 angel, aungel (with g as in gem), replacing earlier angel, angles (with g as in gust), a fusion of Old English engel and Latin angelus. The later Middle English angel, aungel are a fusion of Old English engel and Old French angele, angel, aungel, from Latin angelus, from Greek ángelos, originally meaning “messenger.”

The Greek word was a loan translation in the Septuagint of Hebrew mal'akh messenger, angel; and ángelos may have been suggested by the related Greek ángaros royal mounted courier.

The Old English engel was a borrowing of Latin angelus. Other Germanic languages made a similar borrowing of the Latin: Old Frisian angel, engel, Old High German angil, engil, Old Icelandic engill. —angelic adj. About 1385, borrowed from Old French angélique, from Latin angelicus, from Greek angelikós, from ángelos angel; for suffix see -IC.

anger n. Probably about 1250 anger, angre distress, affliction, grief, pain; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic angr grief); cognate with Old English enge narrow, Old High German engi (modern German eng), Old Icelandic angr, Gothic angwus, from Proto-Germanic angiz*. Related to ANGUISH, ANXIETY. —v. Probably about 1200, angren to distress, irritate, annoy, provoke; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic angra to grieve, from angr grief).

angina n. 1578, influenced by French angine, but borrowed from Latin angina infection of the throat accompanied by choking, from angere to choke; see ANGER.

angina pectoris 1744, New Latin angina pectoris sudden constriction of the chest (Latin pectoris, genitive of pectus chest).

angio- before vowels angi-, a combining form adopted from Greek angēlon receptacle (formed from ángos vessel, of unknown origin). New Latin angio-, angi- is used in scientific coinage referring to a covering or enclosure, as in angiocarpous (having a fruit enclosed in a covering), and especially to blood and lymph vessels, as in angiogram (X-ray of blood-vessels).

angle¹ n. space between two lines that meet. About 1380, corner, borrowed through Old French angle, or directly from Latin angulus corner, angle; cognate with Greek ánkōs bend, valley. *Angle*¹ is related to *ANGLE*² and ANKLE.

angle² v. fish with hook and line. About 1450, verb use of angle, n., fishhook; developed from Old English angel (before 899); related to anga hook.

Old English angel is cognate with Old High German angul fishhook, ango hook, Old Icelandic qngull fishhook.

Anglican adj. 1635, borrowed from Medieval Latin Anglicanus, from Anglicus of the English people, of England, from Latin Angli the Angles; see ANGLO-. The word was used in its Latin form Anglicana in the Magna Charta 1215.

Anglicize v. 1710, formed in English from Medieval Latin Anglicus of the English people + English suffix -ize. —Anglicism n. Anglicized idiom or language. 1642, formed in English from Medieval Latin Anglicus + English -ism.

Anglo n. Informal. 1 U.S. (Southwest) an American white who speaks English. 1941, abstracted from Anglo-American (1787). 2 Canadian. a Canadian of English descent. 1959, abstracted from Anglo-Canadian (1832). 3 British. a British citizen of English descent. 1964, abstracted from Anglo-Saxon (1610).

Anglo- a combining form meaning English, as in Anglo-Catholic, Anglo-American. Borrowed from Medieval Latin Anglo-, combining form of Angli the English, from Latin Angli Angles (a Germanic tribe, accompanied by Saxons, Jutes, and Frisians, that crossed into Britain in the 400's and 500's A.D. colonizing the greater part of it). The name of the tribe is also of Germanic origin (compare Old English Engle the Angles). Angles referred originally to the people of Angul, now called Angeln, a region of northern Schleswig-Holstein in Germany (Old Icelandic Ongull), which was so called because of its hooklike shape.

Anglo-Saxon adj., n. Old English Angul-Saxon (about 885) with the meaning “English Saxons” to distinguish them from the Saxons of the Continent, sometimes now referred to as Old Saxons.

There was no record of a collective name for the colonizers who came to Britain from the Continent in the 400's and 500's A.D. but later the term Englisc (English) appeared from the dialect of the Angles. Subsequently Englisc applied to all dialects of the Angles and the Saxons, probably sometime before 700 A.D. Then in the struggle with the Danes Englisc was used probably by 800 A.D. to describe all speakers of any dialect of the Angles and the Saxons.

After the Norman Conquest (1066) the invaders were referred to as French and the natives as English, but in a few generations Saxon was used to distinguish the natives from before the Norman Conquest.

This distinction was diluted, however, by the chroniclers of the 1100's and the meaning Anglo-Saxon was easily extended to all English. However, this use of Anglo-Saxon was not adopted in English until about 1610 to distinguish between the Saxons of England and the Saxons of the Continent, or Germany.

The modern use of Anglo-Saxon has given rise to the popular abstraction of Anglo- as meaning “English and _____” so that numerous combinations have developed; see ANGLO-.

angry adj. 1375, vexing, fierce, severe, inflamed (referring to things and events); about 1385, incensed, resentful, angered (referring to people), formed from Middle English anger + *-y*¹.

angst n. 1956, borrowed from German Angst, from Old High German angust. The word is cognate with Latin angere to choke, distress, angustus narrow. Angst was first recorded in a collection of George Eliot's letters, in a letter written in 1849. For the next 100 years the word slowly made its way into English and was given special prominence after translations of Freud's work in psychology were circulated in the U.S. anguish n. Probably before 1200, borrowed through Old French anguisse, angoisse, from Latin angustia tightness, from angustus narrow. The word is related to anger through Latin angere to choke; for suffix see *-ish*².

angular adj. Before 1398, borrowed, perhaps through influence of earlier Old French angulaire, from Latin angulāris, from angulus ANGLE¹ (space); for suffix see -AR.

aniline n. 1850, borrowing of French aniline, also perhaps reinforced by German Anilin. Both forms are from French anil, from Portuguese anil, from Arabic an-nīl (al- the + nīl indigo); for suffix see *-ine*².

It is also possible that aniline is a formation in English of anil indigo dye, the word known in English from 1581, + *-ine*², because the name aniline was applied to the dyes when a process for making it was invented in 1826.

animal n. About 1330, borrowed through Old French, or more likely directly from Latin animal. The Latin word was originally the neuter form of animālis having the breath of life, animate, from anima life, breath, which is related to animus mind, spirit.

animate adj. Before 1398, borrowed from Latin animātus, past participle of animāre, from anima life, breath; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —v. 1538, verb use of the adjective.

Both adjective and verb are recorded in French prior to their use in English, and the verb may have come into use in English by influence of French.

animism n. 1866, formed from Latin anima life, breath, soul + English -ism. The development of the term in English was probably influenced by an earlier sense of a doctrine that animal life is produced by an immaterial soul (1832), borrowed from German Animismus (coined by the German physicist G.E. Stahl, 1660–1734).

animosity n. Probably before 1425, vigor; borrowed through Middle French animosité, or directly from Latin animōsitātem (nominative animōsitās), from animōsus spirited, from animus spirit; for suffix see -ITY. The meaning of violent hatred appeared in 1605.

animus n. = animosity. 1816, borrowed from Latin animus spirit, feeling.

anion n. negatively charged ion. 1834 (introduced by the English physicist and chemist Michael Faraday); borrowed from Greek anión (thing) going up, neuter present participle of aniénai go up (aná up + iénai go).

anise n. Probably about 1300, borrowed from Old French anis, learned borrowing from Latin anīsum, anēsum, from Greek ánnēson.

ankle n. About 1350 angle; probably before 1300 anclowe; before 1150 anclowe; developed from Old English onclēow (before 800) cognate with Old High German anchal, enchil ankle (in modern German Enkel), Middle Dutch anekel (modern Dutch enkel), Old Icelandic þekla (from ankulan*), and Latin angulus corner, angle; see ANGLE¹ space.

Old English had another form anclēow (cognate with Old High German anchlāo, apparently influenced by Proto-Germanic klāwa-* claw), but eventually this was supplanted by the simpler anekel.

A later form in Middle English anekel was borrowed ultimately from Old Icelandic þekla.

annals n. pl. 1563, borrowed perhaps through Middle French annales, but more likely directly from Latin annālēs librī, literally, annual books or records, plural form of annālis ANNUAL, from annus year.

anneal v. Before 1382 anelen temper by heating and then cooling; developed from Old English (before 725) onēlan to set on fire, kindle (on-, an- on + ēlan to burn, bake, from āl fire, a burning, Proto-Germanic ailan*). The Old English term -āl was a rare word and is related to the more common Old English æld, æled fire, which is cognate with Old Saxon ēld, Old Icelandic eldr fire, Swedish eld, and Danish ild fire, Proto-Germanic ailidaz*.

annelid n. 1834, borrowed from French annélide, from New Latin Annelida, the scientific name for the phylum of worms in a system of classifying animals developed by the French naturalist Lamarck in 1801 and in which he proposed the French word annelés ringed ones, from which the New Latin term later came.

annex v. About 1370, borrowed through Old French annexer, from Medieval Latin annexare, frequentative form of Latin annectere to bind to (an- to + nectere to bind; related to CONNECT). —n. 1540, probably borrowed from Middle French annexe, from Latin annexus, past participle of annectere.

Possibly the noun developed in English from the verb. However, the meaning "an addition to an existing building" apparently is an adoption in 1861 from French annexe. —annexation n. 1611, probably formed from English annex, v. + -ation.

annihilate v. 1525, verb use of Middle English past participle annihilate, adnichilat; borrowed perhaps through influence of Middle French annihiler from anichiler, or directly from Late Latin annihilātus, past participle of annihilāre to cause to be nothing (from Latin an- to + nihil nothing, NIL); for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —annihilation n. Before 1638, formed from English annihilate + -ation, or alternatively either borrowed from Middle French annihilation, or directly from Late Latin annihilātiōnem (nominative annihilātiō), from annihilāre; for suffix see -TION.

anniversary n. Probably before 1200, borrowed through announce v. 1483, borrowed from Old French annoncier, from Latin annūtiāre (an- to, variant of ad- before n + nūtiāre announce, relate, from nūntius messenger). — announcement n. 1798, either borrowed from French annonce, or formed in English from announce + -ment.

Anglo-French anniversarie and Medieval Latin anniversarium, from Latin anniversarius returning annually (annus year + versus, past participle of vertere to turn); for suffix see -ARY.

annoy v. About 1275, Middle English anoien; borrowed through Anglo-French anuier, anoier, from Old French anoier, enoier, enuier to weary, vex, from Late Latin inodiāre make loathsome, from Latin esse in odiō be hateful (odiō, ablative of odium hatred). — annoyance n. About 1390, borrowed from Old French anoiance, from anoier to weary, vex; for suffix see -ANCE.

annual adj. Before 1382, borrowed perhaps through Old French annuel, or more likely as a learned borrowing from Late Latin annuālis, alteration of Latin annālis annual, influenced by Latin annuus yearly, from annus year; for suffix see -AL.

annuity n. About 1412, borrowed through Anglo-French annuité, or directly from Medieval Latin annuitatem (accusative of annuitas), from Latin annuus yearly; for suffix see -ITY.

annul v. 1395, borrowed through Old French annuler, or directly from Late Latin annūllāre (Latin an- to + nūllus of no value, NULL).

annunciate v. Before 1536, verb use of Middle English past participle annunciat (about 1375) or borrowed directly from Latin annūtiātus, past participle of annūtiāre make known, announce; for suffix see -ATE¹. It is possible annunciate is a back formation in English from earlier annunciation. — annunciation n. Before 1325, referring to Lady Day, the festival of the Annunciation; borrowed through Anglo-French anunciacioun, from Late Latin annūntiātiōnem (nominative annūntiātiō), from Latin annūtiāre announce; for suffix see -TION.

anode n. 1834, borrowed from Greek ánodos way up (aná up + hodós way); so called from the path the electric current was thought to take from the positive pole. Anode and cathode were introduced, though not coined, by the English chemist and physicist Michael Faraday. Compare ELECTRODE.

anodyne adj., n. 1543, borrowed from Medieval Latin anodynus pain-removing, from Latin anōdyus, anōdyus painless, from Greek anōdyus (an- without + odýnē pain).

The word was known in Middle French anodin as early as 1503 but was probably not the immediate source of English borrowing, rather it was a parallel development in French from Latin, because the first recorded appearance of the word in English is from a book on surgery translated from Latin.

anoint v. About 1303, anointen, enointen; borrowed from Old French enoindre smeared on, past participle of enoindre smear on, from Latin inungere (in- on + ungere to smear).

anomaly n. 1571, borrowed from Latin anōmalia, from Greek anōmalia, from anōmalos anomalous (an- not + homalós even, probably from homós SAME); for suffix see -Y³. — anomalous adj. 1646, borrowed from Late Latin anōmalus, from Greek anōmalos anomalous; for suffix see -OUS.

anonymous adj. 1601, borrowed from Late Latin anōnymus, from Greek anōnymos (an- without + ónyma, dialectal form of ónoma NAME); for suffix see -OUS.

anorexia n. 1626, perhaps influenced by earlier French anorexie; New Latin, from Greek anorexiā (an- without + órexis appetite, desire, from óregein to desire, stretch out).

answer n. Middle English andswere; developed from Old English (about 725, in Beowulf) ondswere, andswaru (and- against + swaru affirmation, swearing, from swerian swear), and cognate with Old Frisian ondser, Old Saxon antswōr, and Old Icelandic andsvar, all with the original sense of rebutting a charge or accusation. — v. Middle English answeren, developed from Old English (about 725, in Beowulf) andswarian, from andswaru answer.

ant n. Before 1500 ant, developed from earlier ampte, empte (1382), and still earlier amete, emete (about 1300), developed from Old English æmette (before 899, as in the form æmethyl ant hill).

The Old English æmette, literally, one that cuts off (leaves) and its cognate in Old High German ameiza ant, have elements of their compound forms (-mette and -meiza) that are cognate with Old Icelandic meita and Gothic maitan to cut, from Proto-Germanic maitanan*.

— ant a suffix forming adjectives and nouns from verbs, as in compliant (from comply), assistant (from assist). Borrowed through Old French -ant, or directly from Latin -antem, present participle suffix. Compare -ENT.

antagonize v. 1634, borrowed from Greek antagōnizesthai to struggle against (anti- against + agōnizesthai to struggle, from agōn contest; see AGONY). — antagonism n. 1838, borrowed from French antagonisme, from Late Greek antagōnisma, from Greek antagōnizesthai to contend. — antagonist n. 1599, borrowed perhaps through French antagoniste, or directly from Late Latin antagōnista, from Greek antagōnistēs opponent, rival, from antagōnizesthai to contend.

antarctic adj. 1601 antarcticke, alteration (influenced by Latin antarcticus) gradually replacing earlier Middle English antartik, about 1400; borrowed through Old French antartique, from Medieval Latin antarticus. The Medieval Latin word followed the same process of sound change as the parallel term arctic and dropped the c in -arc- which was in the original Latin antarticus, from Greek antarktikós opposite the north (anti- opposite + arktikós of the north); see ARCTIC.

ante n. stake in poker. 1838, American English, apparently from ante- before. — v. put up an ante. 1846, from the noun.

ante- a prefix meaning before, as in antedate, or in front of, as in anteroom. Borrowed from Latin prefix ante-, from ante before, in front of. The prefix is cognate with Greek anti against, instead of; see ANTI-.

antecedent n. Probably before 1387; borrowed perhaps through Old French antécédent, or directly from Latin antecedentem (nominative antecedens), present participle of antecedere go before (ante- before + cēdere go); for suffix see -ENT.

antediluvian adj. 1646, existing before the Deluge; formed in English from ante- before + Latin diluvium DELUGE; for suffix see -IAN and -AN.

antelope n. About 1417, referring to a picture of a beast on a coat of arms; borrowed from Old French antelop mythical savage beast with long, sawlike horns living on the banks of the Euphrates, from Medieval Latin antalopus, from Late Greek anthólōpos (genitive anthólōpos).

The modern meaning of a deerlike animal appeared in English in 1607, and is probably the source of the term in modern French.

antenna n. 1646, sensory organ; borrowed from Medieval Latin in the plural form antennae, used in a translation of Aristotle as an equivalent to Greek kerata "horns" of an insect. Earlier Latin antenna, antemna sail yard refers to the long yard that sticks up on the lateen sail.

anterior adj. 1611, toward the front, fore; borrowed perhaps through French antérieur, or more likely directly from Latin anterior, (formed in Latin as an opposite to posterior after) as if from anterior*, from ante before.

anthem n. Old English (before 899) ontemn, antefn antiphon (verses of a hymn, church service, etc., sung or chanted in alternate parts); borrowed from Late Latin antefana, an alteration of antiphōna antiphon (changed from anti to ante, influenced by Late Latin ante before).

The Middle English spellings antefne, antimne, antempne, antem shifted in the late 1500's to anthem. The change from t to th restored a look of Greek ancestry to the word as in author, theater, and sympathy.

anther n. Indeterminately applied between 1706 and 1759, but generally fixed in meaning and form by 1791; borrowed from French anthère and from New Latin anthera, from Latin anthēra medicine extracted from flowers. The Latin word is from Greek anthērā, feminine of anthērōs flowery, from anthē full bloom, from ánthos flower.

anthology n. 1640, collection of the "flowers" of verse (i.e., small, choice poems) by various authors; borrowed, perhaps by influence of French anthologie, from Greek anthología flower-gathering (ánthos flower + légēin gather); for suffix see -LOGY. —anthologize v. 1892, formed from English anthology + -ize.

anthracite n. 1601, a mineral resembling coals of fire; 1812, hard coal; borrowed from Latin anthracites a kind of semi-precious gem known as bloodstone, from Greek anthrakites, from ánthrax (genitive ánthrakos) live coal, charcoal, ANTHRAX; for suffix see *-ITE*¹.

anthrax n. Before 1398, antrax carbuncle; borrowed through Medieval Latin and Anglo-French antrax, from Greek ánthrax carbuncle, live coal, charcoal. The spelling with th is a replacement from the 1500's, made to restore a classical spelling.

anthropo-, anthrop- a combining form meaning man, human being, as in anthropology, anthropomorphic; borrowed from Greek ánthrōpo-, combining form of ánthrōpos man, human being.

anthropoid adj. Before 1837, probably from adjective use of the noun (1832); borrowed from Greek ánthrōpoeidēs (ánthrōpos man + eídōs shape); for suffix see -OID.

anthropology n. 1593, probably borrowed from New Latin anthropologia, or formed directly in English from Greek ánthrōpo-, combining form of ánthrōpos man, human being + -logy.

anthropomorphic adj. 1827, formed in English from earlier anthropomorphism, anthropomorphous (both 1753) + suffix -ic. Anthropomorphous is an Anglicization of Late Latin ánthrōpomorphus having human form, or of Greek ánthrōpómorphos (ánthrōpos human being + morphē form).

anti- a prefix meaning against, opposed to, or opposite of, as in antiaircraft, antifreeze, antisocial. Borrowed through Old French, or directly from Latin anti-, representing Greek anti-, from antí against, instead. Anti- is cognate with Latin ante, in front of, Gothic and, anda- against, along, Old High German ant- against, and Old English and- against.

Related in function to Old English and-, the prefix was generally confined to words such as anticrist (Antecrist), antipope (Antepope), antidot, antidotum. The formation was not popularized until the period of modern English.

antibiotic adj. 1894, borrowed from French antibiotique (anti- against + biotique of microbial life, from Late Latin biōticus of life); for suffix see -IC. —n. 1944, noun use of antibiotic, adj.

antibody n. 1901, translation of German Antikörper, condensed from such a phrase as anti-toxischer Körper antitoxic body or substance (anti- opposing + toxisch toxic, Körper body, substance).

antic n. Often antics, pl. 1529, originally antike, anticke, later antique, borrowed from Italian antico antique, from Latin antīquus ANTIQUE. Antic was originally used as an equivalent to Italian grottesco grotesque, from grotta grotto, in reference to fantastic representations of human, animal, and plant forms in murals unearthed in the ancient Baths of Titus in Rome. The term was later extended to anything similarly bizarre.

anticipation n. Before 1397, borrowed from Latin anticipātiōnem (nominative anticipātiō), from anticipāre take care of ahead of time (anti- before + -cipāre, form of capere to take); for suffix see -TION. —anticipate v. 1532, possibly a back formation from anticipation, or borrowed from Latin anticipātus, past participle of anticipāre take care of ahead of time; for suffix see *-ATE*¹.

antidote n. Probably before 1425; borrowing of Old French antidote, and directly from Latin antidotum, from Greek antídōton given as a remedy, verbal adjective of antídōnai give in return (anti- against + didōnai to give).

antigen n. 1908, borrowing of German Antigen, formed from Anti(körper) antibody + -gen thing that produces.

antimony n. Probably about 1425, borrowed through Old French antimoine, and directly from Medieval Latin antimonium, possibly developed by Latinization of some Arabic word such as 'othmud (originally 'ithmid), borrowed from, or influenced by, Greek stímmis (variant of stímmi powdered antimony used to paint the eyelids), which can be traced to Egyptian stm.

antipathy n. 1601 antipathie contrary feeling; borrowed (perhaps by influence of French antipathie, 1542), from Latin antipathia, from Greek antipátheia, from antipathēs opposed in feeling (anti- against + páthos feeling).

antiphon n. About 1500, borrowed perhaps from Middle French antiphone, antifone hymn, or, more likely, directly from Late Latin antiphōna, from Greek antiphōna musical accords, neuter plural of antiphōnos sounding in response (anti- in response to, opposed to + phōnē sound, song).

antipodes n.pl. Before 1398, those who dwell on opposite sides of the earth; borrowed from Latin antipodes, from Greek antipodes, plural of antipous with feet opposite ours (anti- opposite + pous, genitive podós, FOOT).

The meaning "things that are opposite or contrary" appeared in 1641, and earlier in the obsolete form antipos (1631).

antique adj. 1536, aged, venerable (earlier in 1530 as a noun meaning "a relic of ancient art"; see ANTIC); borrowed probably through Middle French antique, from Latin antiquus former, ancient, an earlier form of antīcus, from ante before; see ANTE-. —antiquarian n. 1610; adj. 1771, either formed in English from Latin antiquarius of antiquity + -an; or developed in English from earlier antiquary (1563) + -an. If antiquarian developed from antiquary, then the root form antiquary was borrowed (perhaps through Middle French antiquaire) from Latin antiquarius of antiquity, from antīquus; for suffix see -ARY. —antiquity n. Probably about 1280, borrowed through Anglo-French and Old French antiquité, from Latin antiquitatem (nominative antiquitās), from antīquus; for suffix see -ITY.

antithesis n. 1529, borrowed from Late Latin antithesis, from Greek antithesis, from antitithēnai to set against, oppose (anti- against + tithēnai to set, place).

antler n. Before 1398 aunteler; borrowed through Anglo-French auntiler, variant of Old French auntoillier, from Northern Gallo-Romance cornū antoculāre* horn in front of the eyes, neuter of antoculāris* before the eyes (Latin ante before + Late Latin oculāris of the eyes, OCULAR).

antonym n. 1870, perhaps borrowed from French antonyme (1866), or formed in English from anti- + -onym, as in synonym, opposite of synonym.

anus n. Probably before 1425, borrowed through Old French anus, from Latin ānus ring, circular form, anus.

anvil n. Middle English anvelt, anfelt, anvild; developed from Old English anfilte (about 1000) and earlier onfilti, before 800 (an, on on + -filte or -filti something beaten, related to Old English felt FELT).

The word is cognate with Old High German anafalz, dialectal Middle Dutch anevilt, and with modern Low German: afilts (Aachen district), amfilt (Solingen district), and anefilt, all meaning "anvil." Compare also German falzen to groove, fold, welt, Falzamboss coppersmith's anvil, and Filz felt, from Proto-Germanic *(ana-)/felt-, (ana)/falt-.

anxiety n. About 1525, probably borrowed from Latin ānxi-etātem (nominative ānxiētās), from ānxius ANXIOUS; for suffix see -TY².

The word was known in French (anxiété) as a medical term from the 1100's, but it is unknown whether it was familiar to English authors, who would have been familiar with the Latin.

anxious adj. 1623, probably borrowed from Latin ānxius, from angere choke, cause distress; for suffix see -OUS. The French anxieux was known from 1375; whether it was known to writers in English in the early 1600's has not been determined.

any adj., pron. Middle English ani or eni; developed from Old English (about 725, in Beowulf) ænig any, anyone, (ān one + -ig -y¹; see ONE and for suffix see -Y¹).

The word is cognate with Old Saxon ēnig any, Old Frisian ēnig, Old High German einag some, any (modern German einige, Dutch enig), Old Icelandic einigr no one, anyone, from Proto-Germanic ainazās*, ainizās.

Combinations of any appeared early and frequently in English writing: anything appears by 1000; anybody, about 1300; anyone by 1380; anyway or anyways, for "in any way," probably about 1200; anywhere, before 1400.

aorta n. 1578, perhaps borrowed by influence of earlier French aorte (1546), or more likely taken as New Latin aorta, from Greek aortē the aorta (the term applied by Aristotle to the great artery of the heart); earlier, the bronchial tubes (the term applied by Hippocrates).

ap⁻¹ a form of the prefix ad-, meaning to, toward, before p, as in apportion. Formed in Latin by assimilation of d to the following consonant (p).

ap⁻² a form of the prefix apo- before a vowel, as in the astronomical term apastron (ap- away + Greek ástron star), also before (and merged in pronunciation with) h, as in aphelion, aphorism.

apart adv. Before 1325, borrowed from Old French à part to the side, from Latin ad partem to one side or part (ad to + partem, accusative of pars PART).

apartment n. 1641, borrowed from French appartement, from Italian appartamento, literally, separate part, from appartare to separate (a parte to the side, from Latin ad partem; see APART); for suffix see -MENT.

apathy n. 1603, borrowed from French apathie and Latin apathia, from Greek apátheia, from apathēs without feeling (a- without + páthos feeling; for suffix see -Y³). —apathetic adj. 1744, formed in English from apathy + -ic, on analogy pathetic.

ape n. Old English apa (about 700). Related to and probably cognate with Old Saxon apo ape, Frisian apa, Middle Dutch āpe, aep (modern Dutch aap), Old High German affo (modern German Affe), Old Icelandic api (Swedish apa, Danish abe); of uncertain origin; perhaps borrowed through contact in exploration or trading, and so related to Irish ap, apa; Welsh ab, epa; Old Russian opica; all borrowed in very early times apparently with loss of an original k found in Sanskrit kapt-s ape. —v. to imitate; mimic. 1632, verb use of the noun sense, “an imitator or mimic” (probably developed before 1200).

aperture n. 1649, borrowed perhaps through Middle French aperture, or directly from Latin apertūra, from apertus, past participle of aperire to open, uncover; for suffix see -URE.

apex n. 1601, borrowed from Latin apex (genitive apicis) peak, tip (of the small rod on top of a Roman priest's cap, possibly from apere connect).

aphasia n. 1867, New Latin, from Greek aphasiā (a- without + phásis utterance, from phánaí to speak).

The word aphasie was known in French by 1826, but the form of the word introduced into English was Latinat.

aphelion n. 1676, borrowed from New Latin aphelium with the Greek ending -on. The earlier New Latin aphelium (1656, in a translation of Hobbes' Elements of Philosophy) was coined by the German astronomer Johann Kepler writing in Latin about the findings of Ptolemaic astronomy, which were written in Greek, and therefore show the connection for the Greek origin of many terms in astronomy. Kepler coined aphelium after Greek apò hēllou away from the sun (apò away from + hēllou, genitive of hēlios sun).

aphid n. 1884, an alteration of New Latin aphides, plural of aphis (a term of uncertain origin coined or, at least first applied, by Linnaeus and attested in English since 1771).

aphorism n. 1528, borrowed from Middle French aphorisme, from Late Latin aphorismus, from Greek aphorismós definition, pithy sentence (ap- off + hóros boundary); for suffix see -ISM.

aphrodisiac n. 1719, borrowed from Greek aphrodisiakós inducing sexual desire, sexual, from aphrodisios pertaining to Aphrodítē Aphrodite, the Greek goddess of love. Compare VENEREAL.

apiary n. 1654, borrowed from Latin apiarium, neuter of apiarius of bees, from apis bee; for suffix see -ARY.

aplomb n. 1828, borrowing of French aplomb, from earlier à plomb according to the plummet (i.e., poised upright); see PLUMB.

apo- a prefix meaning: 1 from, off, away, as in apogeotropic = turning away from the earth. 2 free from, without, as in apochromatic = free from chromatic aberration. 3 formed from or related to, as in apoenzyme = protein portion of an enzyme or enzyme system. 4 apart, separate, detached, as in aposepalous = having separate sepals. Apo- was acquired in English through French or directly from Latin in borrowings, such as apocalypse, apologia, apology, apoplexy, apostasy, apostle, apostrophe, and apothecosis and comes from Greek apo-, from apó away, from, off.

apocalypse n. About 1384 apocalips a vision or hallucination; developed from earlier Apokalypsis (name of the last book of the New Testament, usually called Revelation), probably about 1200. The name of the biblical text was borrowed through Anglo-French apocalipse, from Old French apocalypse, and from Late Latin apocalypsis revelation, from Greek apokálypsis uncovering, from apokályptein uncover (apo- off, un- + kalýptein to cover, veil). —apocalyptic adj. 1663, borrowed through French apocalyptique, from Greek apokalyptikós, from apokályptein; for suffix see -IC.

apocrypha n. pl. Before 1387, and by 1539 Apocrypha, books excluded from the Bible because they were not considered genuine in the Old Testament. Borrowed from Medieval Latin, from Late Latin apocrypha, neuter plural of apocryphus secret, not approved for public reading in the church, from Greek apókryphos hidden, as of hidden or unknown authorship (apo- away + kryptein to hide). Apocrypha replaced the earlier form apocrif about 1445, which had been borrowed from Old French apocriefe. —apocryphal adj. of doubtful authenticity. 1590, formed in English from apocrypha + -al.

apogee n. 1594, point in the orbit of a planet, comet, etc., at its greatest distance from the earth or from any other celestial body about which it orbits; later meaning figuratively “furthest point; highest point” (1600). Probably borrowed from French apogée, from Greek apógeion sēmeton point far from the earth, neuter of apógeios far from the earth, from apò gēs (apò off, away and gēs, genitive of gē earth).

apology n. 1533, defense, justification; borrowing of Late Latin apologia, from Greek apologíā a speech in defense, from apologesthai defend oneself, from apólogos an account or story, from apologeín to tell fully (apo- from, off + légein to tell, speak; see LEGEND).

Whether the term also came into English by way of French or was modeled after the French is questionable, but apologie has been recorded in French since 1488. —apologetic adj. 1649, defensive; borrowed through French apologétique, from Late Latin apologēticus, from Greek apologētikós, from apologesthai defend oneself. —apologize v. 1596, formed from English apology + -ize.

apoplexy n. About 1390, borrowed through Old French apoplexie, or directly from Late Latin apoplēxia, from Greek apoplēxía, from apoplēssein disable by a stroke (apo- off, from + plēssein to strike).

apostasy n. Perhaps about 1348, borrowed from Late Latin apostasia, from Greek apostasíā defection, desertion of one's faith, from apostēnai to defect, stand off (apo- away from + stēnai STAND); for suffix see -Y³. The word may have been borrowed also from French apostasie (about 1250) which also existed in Anglo-French apostasye. —apostate n. 1340, borrowed through Old French apostate, or directly from Late Latin apostata, from Greek apostátēs defector, deserter, rebel, from apostēnai to defect.

apostle n. The term as we know it today comes from two sources in Middle English. Apostle is a fusion of: 1) Old English apostol disciple of Christ (before 899); borrowed from Late Latin apostolus; and 2) Middle English apostle disciple of Christ (probably before 1200); borrowing of Anglo-French apostle, from Old French apostle, learned borrowing from Late Latin apostolus, from Greek apóstolos messenger, from apostéllein send away (apo- away + stéllein to send).

apostrophe n. the sign ('), for omission of a letter or a sound in a word, or showing possessive forms (as don't, John's book), or form some plurals (as in 2 o's). 1530, borrowed from Middle French apostrophe, learned borrowing from Late Latin apostrophi-, from Greek apóstrophos prosōidīā omission mark, related to apostrophēin avert, turn away (apo- away + strophēin to turn).

In possessives, the apostrophe shows dropping of -e in -es, which was the possessive ending in English.

apothecary n. About 1387–95, borrowed probably through Old French apothicaire, apotecaire, or directly from Late Latin apothēcarius shopkeeper, from Latin apothēca storehouse, from Greek apothēkē, related to apothēnai put away (apo- away + tiēnai to put); for suffix see -ARY.

apotheosis n. 1573–80, a raising to the status of a god; borrowed from Late Latin apotheōsis, from Greek apotheōsis, from apotheōn deify (apo- special use of prefix indicating change + theōs god).

appall v. Before 1333 appallen, apallen to fade, become feeble; borrowed from Old French apallir become or make pale (a- to, from Latin ad- + pale, from Latin pallidus PALE¹ wan). The meaning “to dismay, shock” appeared in 1532.

apparatus n. Before 1628, borrowed from Latin apparātus (genitive apparātus) equipment, preparation, from apparāre prepare (ap- to + parāre make ready).

apparel n. Probably before 1300 appareil, apareil; borrowed through Anglo-French apareil, apparraille, from Old French apareil, from apareiller to clothe, fit out, possible from Vulgar Latin appariculāre*, built on a noun appariculum* preparation, formed from Latin apparāre prepare, make ready; or from Vulgar Latin adpariculāre* make equal, fit (ad- to + pariculus*, a diminutive of Latin pār equal).

apparent adj. Before 1393, borrowed from Old French aparant, also later apparent, learned borrowing from Latin appārentem (nominative appārēns), present participle of appārēre APPEAR; for suffix see -ENT.

apparition n. Probably before 1425, apparicion appearance, especially of something strange borrowed through Anglo-French aparicion, from Old French apparition, referring to Epiphany (the revealing of the Christ child to the Wise men), and probably by extension to any appearance, from Late Latin appāritiōnem (nominative appāritiō), meaning “an appearance,” and “attendants.” In Classical Latin the meaning was restricted to “service, servants, attendants,” from appāri-, stem of Latin appārēre APPEAR, serve; for suffix see -TION.

In English, the sense of a specter, phantom, or ghost first appears in 1601.

appeal v. Before 1338 apelen, appelen to call to a higher court borrowed through Anglo-French and Old French apeler to call upon, accuse, from Latin appellāre accost, address, call upon, appeal to. The Latin is related to another form appellere drive to, direct toward (ap- up to + pellere to drive). —n. About 1300, Middle English apel, appel an appealing to a higher court; borrowed from Old French apel, from apeler, v.

The form -eal was a spelling reform in the 1500's.

appear v. About 1275, aperen, apperen; borrowed from Old French aper-, a stem of apareir, aparoir, from Latin appārēre (ap- to + pārēre come in sight, come forth). —appearance n. About 1380, apparence; borrowed through Anglo-French aparaunce and Old French aparence, from Late Latin appārentia, from Latin appārentem (nominative appārēns), present participle of appārēre APPEAR; for suffix see -ANCE.

The form -ear was a spelling reform in the 1500's.

appease v. About 1300 apesen, appesen; borrowed through Anglo-French apeser, apeiser, from Old French apeiser, apaisier bring to peace, pacify (a- to, from Latin ad- + pais peace; see peace). The form appease was a spelling reform during the 1500's. —appeasement n. 1439, borrowed from Middle French apeisement, apaisement, from Old French apaisement, from apeiser, apaisier pacify; for suffix see -MENT.

appellate adj. 1726, appealed against; borrowed from Latin appellātus, past participle of appellāre APPEAL; for suffix see *-ATE*¹.

append v. 1646, borrowed from Latin appendere (ap- on + pendere to cause to hang, weigh). —appendage n. 1649, formed from English append + -age.

appendix n. 1542 appendex something added; borrowed from Latin appendix (genitive appendicis) something attached, from appendere attach; see APPEND.

The meaning of organ, especially the intestinal appendix, appeared in 1615 and was perhaps borrowed from, or at least influenced by the French, in which the term was known by 1541. —appendectomy n. 1894–95, formed in American English from appendix + -ectomy. —appendicitis n. 1886, formed in American English from New Latin appendic-, stem of appendix + -itis.

apperception n. 1753, adperception, later apperception; borrowed as a learned reconstruction of French aperception, for New Latin apperceptionem (nominative apperceptio), used by Leibnitz to describe the mind as conscious of its own perception.

appertain v. About 1380, borrowed through Anglo-French apartenir, appurtenir, from Old French apertenir, apartenir, from Vulgar Latin appartenēre*, an alteration (influenced by Latin pars, genitive partis part) of Late Latin appertinēre belong to, pertain to (Latin ap- to + pertinēre belong to). Related to APPURTENANCE.

appetite n. About 1303, borrowed through Anglo-French apetit, appetit, from Old French apetit, learned borrowing from Latin appētītus desire, appetite, from appetere to long for (ap- to + petere seek, ask).

applaud v. About 1475, borrowed from Latin applaudere approve by clapping hands (ap- upon + plaudere clap, applaud, approve). — applause n. About 1425, borrowed from Latin applausus (genitive applausūs), from applaudere applaud.

apple n. Old English æppel (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian appel, Old High German apful (modern German Apfel), Old Icelandic æpli, Old Swedish æpl, Crimean Gothic apel, from Proto-Germanic apl-*.

appliance n. 1561, application; later, an apparatus or device (1597); formed in English from apply + -ance.

application n. Before 1398, borrowed from Old French applicacion, from Latin applicatiōnem (nominative applicatiō) a joining to, from applicare APPLY; for suffix see -TION.

applicant n. About 1485, borrowed from Latin applicantem (nominative applicans), present participle of applicare; for suffix see -ANT.

apply v. About 1380 aplien, applien join to; borrowed from Old French aplier, from Latin applicare (ap- on + plicare to fold, lay).

appoint v. About 1385 apointen, appointen come to a point about a matter, agree; borrowed through Anglo-French apointier, from Old French apointer (a- to + point, POINT). — appointment n. 1417 apointment, borrowed from Middle and Old French apointment, from Old French apointer appoint; for suffix see -MENT.

apportion v. 1574, borrowed through Middle French, from Old French apportionner (a- to + portionner to portion). — apportionment n. 1628, probably formed in English from apportion + -ment; but influenced by French apportionnement.

apposite adj. 1621, borrowed from Latin appositus, past participle of appōnere apply to, put near (ap- near + pōnere to place; see POSITION). — apposition n. 1440, grammatical parallelism; borrowed from Latin appositionem (nominative appositio), from appōnere; for suffix see -TION.

appraise v. Before 1420 apreisen, apraisen, probably borrowed from Middle French apreis-*, stem of apriser, aprisier, from Late Latin appretiare value, estimate, appraise (Latin ap- to + pretium price).

It has been suggested that there was influence of praise v. to praise, value, prize, in English formation of appraise; the extent of this is unknown. English apprize, also meaning "appraise," did not serve as a pattern, but may have caused confusion of the forms, because apprize (Middle English aprisen appraise) and appraise are simultaneous borrowings. — appraisal n. 1817, formed from English appraise + -al.

appreciate v. 1655, borrowed from Late Latin appretiare value, estimate, appraise (Latin ap- to + pretium price); for suffix see -ATE. — appreciation n. Probably about 1400, borrowed through Anglo-French appréciation, or directly from Late Latin appretiationem (nominative appretiatio), from appretiare appraise; for suffix see -TION.

apprehend v. Before 1398, grasp mentally, comprehend; borrowed perhaps through Old French apprehender, or directly from Latin apprehendere take hold of, grasp (ap- upon + prehendere seize). — apprehension n. Before 1398, borrowed perhaps through Old French apprehension, or directly from Latin apprehensionem (nominative apprehensio), from apprehendere; for suffix see -SION. The meaning of dread appeared in 1648.

apprentice n. 1307, borrowed through Anglo-French aprentiz, from Old French aprentiz, aprentis, from Gallo-Romance apprenticius* learner of a trade, from Latin apprendere grasp mentally, learn, a contraction of apprehendere APPREHEND. — v. 1631, from the noun.

apprise v. 1694, borrowed from French appris, past participle of apprendre learn, grasp, from Latin apprendere, contraction of apprehendere APPREHEND.

approach v. About 1300, borrowed through Anglo-French aprocher from Old French aprochier, from Late Latin appropiare come near to (Latin ap- to + Late Latin propiare come nearer, from Latin propius nearer, comparative of prope near). — n. Before 1460, noun use of approach, v.

approbation n. Before 1393, borrowed through Old French aprobacion, or directly from Latin approbationem (nominative approbatio) from approbare APPROVE; for suffix see -TION.

appropriate adj. Probably before 1425, belonging to as an attribute, quality, etc.; borrowed from Late Latin appropriatus, past participle of appropriare (Latin ap- to + propriare take as one's own, from proprius one's own); for suffix see -ATE. — v. set apart (as one's own). Probably before 1425, to attribute as belonging to; borrowed from Late Latin appropriatus, past participle of appropriare; for suffix see -ATE.

By the 1600's a Latinate form appropriate, v. had established itself in English and superseded the older approprie from Old French apropriier.

approve v. About 1380, to confirm, commend; earlier, about 1300, to show to be true, prove; borrowed from Old French aprover, from Latin approbare (ap- to + probare OVE). — approval n. 1690, formed from English approve + -al.

In Middle English the spelling apreven was common. It developed from a stem form of the Old French verb, but later died out.

approximate adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Latin approximatus, past participle of approximare (ap- to + proximare come near, from proximus nearest, superlative of prope near); for suffix see -ATE. — v. Before 1425, borrowed from Latin approximatus, past participle of approximare; for suffix see -ATE. — approximation n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Middle French approximation or directly from Latin approximationem (nominative approximatio), from approximare; for suffix see -TION.

appurtenance n. Probably before 1300, a minor right or privilege; borrowing of Anglo-French apurtenance, variant of Old French apertenance, from apertenir APPERTAIN; for suffix see -ANCE.

apricot n. 1551 abreckock; borrowed probably from Catalan

abercoc (related to Spanish albaricoque and Portuguese albricoque), from Arabic al-barqūq (al- the + barqūq apricot).

The Arabic barqūq is believed to have come ultimately from Latin praecoquis, (variant of praecox early-ripe) through the variant praecoquum to Greek praikókion. The Greek had a variant plural berikókia, and either by trade or by Ptolemaic influence in Arabic culture, it came into Arabic as barqūq. Subsequently the Arabic word was carried into southwestern Europe in the time of the Muslim domination of Spain.

Latin praecoquis early-ripe, can probably be attributed to the fact that the fruit was considered a variety of peach that ripened sooner than other peaches; the Latin word was formed from prae before, pre- + coquere to ripen, COOK.

The change in spelling from abreckock to apricot (1580 and through the 1600's) was probably influenced by French abricot apricot, itself from Catalan abercoc. Influence traditionally offered from Latin apricus sunny, is not established.

April n. About 1375 April, Aperill, etc.; reborrowed, possibly through Anglo-French Aprille, from Latin Aprīlis the second month in the ancient Roman calendar, dedicated to the goddess Venus (Aphrodite).

The forms cited were borrowed again from Latin, and replaced earlier Averil (probably before 1200); borrowed from Old French avril, from Gallo-Romance Aprilius*, an alteration of Latin Aprīlis.

apron n. 1307 napron, naperon; borrowed from Old French napron, diminutive of nape, nappe cloth, from Latin mappa napkin, MAP. Between about 1450 and 1485, the initial n was lost, by misdivision of a napron as an apron. Compare ADDER, NICKNAME, and UMPIRE for misdivisions. The shift from m in Latin mappa to n in French nappe and naperon is seen in several Old French words and is a matter of continuous change in Medieval Latin.

apropos adv. 1668, borrowed from French à propos to the purpose (Old French a to + propos purpose, verbal noun of proposer offer, PROPOSE).

apse n. arched recess in a church. 1846, borrowed from Medieval Latin apsis, from Latin apsis arch, vault, from Greek apsís, dialectal variation of hapsís loop, arch, from háptein fasten, of uncertain origin.

apt adj. Probably about 1350 borrowed perhaps through Old French apte, or directly from Latin aptus joined, fitted, originally past participle of apere connect, and later used as the past participle of apiscor, apisci to reach, attain.

aptitude n. Probably before 1425, borrowed through Middle French aptitude, or directly from Late Latin aptitūdō (genitive aptitūdinis) fitness, from Latin aptus joined, fitted, see APT; for suffix see -TUDE.

aqualung n. 1950, formed in English from Latin aqua water + English lung. The original device was developed by Jacques Cousteau and Emile Gagnan in 1943, but the elements of this term were long in the air. As early as 1881 W.D. Hay's 300 Years Hence was writing about 'the aquanaut's lungs'.

aquamarine n. 1727, perhaps influenced by earlier French aigue-marine, borrowed through Provençal from Latin aqua marina sea water (for its color).

aquarium n. 1854, borrowed from Latin aquārium watering place for cattle, neuter of aquārius of water, from aqua water; see AQUATIC.

The sense of a fish tank may have been stimulated by earlier attempts to combine vivarium with Latin words suggesting "water," such as aquatic vivarium and marine vivarium.

aquatic adj. 1490, borrowed from Middle French and Old French aquatique, learned borrowing from Latin aquaticus watery, inhabiting water, from aqua water.

Latin aqua is related to Gothic ahwa river, Old High German aha, Old Icelandic ā, Old Frisian ā, and Old English ēa river, flowing water, from Proto-Germanic ahwō*.

aqueduct n. 1538, borrowed from Latin aquaeductus (aquae, genitive of aqua water + ductus, genitive ductus, from stem duc- of dūcere to lead, convey).

aqueous adj. 1643, in reference to the aqueous humor inside the eye; borrowed from Medieval Latin aqueus, from Latin aqua water; for suffix see -OUS. The Medieval Latin term aqueus was probably formed by analogy of Latin terreus earthy, from terra earth.

aquiline adj. 1646, curved like an eagle's beak; borrowed from Latin aquilinus of or like an eagle, from aquila EAGLE; for suffix see -INE¹.

ar- a form of the prefix ad-, meaning to, toward, before r in words of Latin or French origin, as in arrogant. Formed in Latin by assimilation of d to the following consonant (r). In words formed in Old French with the prefix a- (from Latin ad-) and borrowed in that form, the spelling before r was changed to ar- (as in arrange, arrive) in or about the 1600's on the model of Latin.

-ar a suffix forming adjectives from nouns and meaning: 1 of or having to do with, as in molecular = having to do with molecules. 2 like, as in oracular = like an oracle. 3 of the nature of, as in spectacular = of the nature of a spectacle. The suffix was borrowed from Latin -āris, altered by dissimilation from original -ālīs -al¹ in words that contain an l, as seen from the Latin originals of words such as angular, familiar, jocular, peculiar, popular, stellar, and polar. The adjectives formed in English, especially from Latin nouns, follow the same pattern, such as curricular, granular.

Arab n. Before 1398, a native of Arabia; borrowed from Old French Arabe, a learned borrowing from Latin Arabs, from Greek Áraps (genitive Árabos), from Arabic paarab, the indigenous name of the people. The 100 years between the earlier date of Arabian and later Arab is probably a defect in the record.

—Arabian n., adj. Probably before 1300, borrowed from Old French Arabien and Latin Arabius; for suffix see -IAN.

—Arabic n. About 1325, in the phrase "gum arabic"; borrowed from Old French Arabic, from Latin Arabicus, adj., from Arabs (genitive Arabīs) Arab; for suffix see -IC.

arabesque n. 1611, Arabian ornamental design; borrowed from French arabesque, from Italian arabesco (known in the Renaissance to such as Raphael), from Arabo Arab, ultimately borrowed from Latin Arabus Arabian, from Arabs Arab; for suffix see -ESQUE.

arable adj. About 1410, borrowed through Anglo-French arable, variant of Old French arable, from Latin arābilis, from arāre to plow; for suffix see -ABLE. Arable may have been introduced to "correct" the equivalent, earlier English term erale, earable (derived from Old English erian to plow) by replacing it with a Latinate spelling.

arachnid n. 1869, borrowed (perhaps through influence of earlier French arachnide, 1806) from New Latin Arachnida the class of arachnids (a name introduced by Lamarck). The New Latin term is from Greek aráchnē spider, web, (earlier ar-ákēsna*).

arbitrer n. Probably before 1387 arbitour, borrowed perhaps through Old French arbitre, or directly from Latin arbitrator, originally, one who approaches (two disputants), from ar- to + baetere to go.

arbitrary adj. Before 1400 borrowed perhaps through Old French arbitraire, or directly from Latin arbitrārius of arbitration, from arbitrator; for suffix see -ARY.

arbitrate v. 1590, replacing earlier arbitren (1425); borrowed perhaps through influence of Old French arbitrer, from Latin arbitrātus, past participle of arbitrāri act as arbiter, from arbitrator ARBITER; for suffix see -ATE; or possibly a back formation in English from earlier arbitration. —arbitration n. About 1390, borrowed from Old French arbitracion, from Latin arbitratiōnem (nominative arbitratiō), from arbitrāri; for suffix see -TION.

arbitrator n. About 1426 arbitratour, borrowed from Old French arbitrateur, arbitratour, from Latin arbitrātōrem, accusative of arbitrator from arbitrāri act as arbiter; for suffix see -OR².

arbor¹ n. shady place. Probably before 1300 erber, herber a garden area, garden of herbs; borrowed through Anglo-French erber, herber from Old French erbier, herbier, from Late Latin herbārium, from Latin herba herb, grass.

The sense development separated "the garden of herbs" from "the shady place formed by trees" about the middle of the 1500's, furthered by connection to Latin arbor "tree."

The change of initial er, as in erber, to ar- before consonants took place in many Middle English words, affecting the pronunciation, as well as the spelling. For example, carve was earlier kerven, farm earlier ferme. Sometimes there was a shift in pronunciation, as in sergeant, while the older -er- spelling was retained.

The shift of final -er, -or follows a practice of interchanging spellings in the 1500's.

arbor² n. axle of a machine. 1659, borrowed from French arbre tree, axis, from Latin arbor tree, of unknown origin.

arbor³ n. tree 1646, borrowing of Latin arbor tree, beam, of unknown origin. —arboreal adj. Before 1667, formed in English from Latin arboreus, from arbor tree; for suffix see -AL¹.

arc n. About 1390 ark, arc part of a circle which the sun appears to pass through; borrowed through Anglo-French arc, ark, arche from Old French arc, from Latin arcus arch, bow; see ARROW.

arcade n. 1731, borrowed from French arcade an arch, half circle, from Italian arcata arch of a bridge, from Medieval Latin arcata an arch, from Latin arcus arch, bow; for suffix see -ADE.

arcane adj. 1547, borrowed from Latin arcānus closed, hidden, from arca chest.

arch¹ n. About 1300, borrowed from Old French arche arch of a bridge, from Northern Gallo-Romance arca* arch, feminine (earlier neuter plural) form corresponding to Latin arcus arch, bow. —v. About 1400, from the noun.

arch² adj. 1 chief, leading, as in arch rebel. 1547, formed in English by abstraction from the prefix arch-. 2 mischievous in a playful way, saucy, waggish, as in an arch look. 1662, developed in English from def. 1.

arch- a prefix meaning: 1 chief, principal, as in archenemy = chief enemy. 2 extreme, ultra-, especially in a derogatory sense, as in archconservative = extreme conservative. 3 early, primal, primitive, as in archencephalon = primitive encephalon (part of the brain).

The prefix developed from Middle English arche-, erche- (influenced in form by Old French arche- and earlier arce-), forms of Old English arce-, erce-, cerce-; borrowed from Latin archi-, from Greek arche-, archi-, related to archós ruler, arché a beginning.

archaeology n. 1607, ancient history, study of antiquities; borrowed, perhaps by influence of French archéologie (1599), from Greek archaiología, from archaios ancient, from arché a beginning; for suffix see -LOGY.

The meaning of scientific study of ancient people, customs, and life appeared in 1837.

archaic adj. 1832, perhaps developed in English from earlier archaical (before 1804), and by influence of French archaïque (1776), ultimately borrowed from Greek archaîkós old-fashioned, from archaios ancient; for suffix see -IC. —archaism n. 1643, borrowed from New Latin archaismus, from Greek archaîsmós, from archaízein to give an archaic flavor to, from archaios ancient; for suffix see -ISM.

archangel n. Probably before 1200, gradually replacing Old English hēah-engel high angel. Middle English archangel was borrowed through Old French archangel (1155), or directly from Latin archangelus, from Greek archángelos (arch- chief + ángelos ANGEL).

archbishop n. Before 1121, archebishop, erchebishop, were influenced by Old French archevesque and Late Latin archiepiscopeus. Earlier arce biscop, erce biscop, developed from Old English cerce biscop, erce biscop (about 850); borrowed from Late Latin archiepiscopeus, from Late Greek archiepískopos (from Greek archi- chief + epískopos overseer).

Old English cerce biscop was probably a replacement for earlier hēah biscop (or bisceop) high bishop.

archer n. About 1300, borrowed through Anglo-French archer, from Old French archier, from Late Latin arcarius archer, alteration of arcarius maker of bows, from Latin arcus bow; for suffix see -ER². — archery n. Probably before 1400 borrowed through Anglo-French archerie, from Old French archerie, from archier archer; for suffix see -Y³.

archetype n. 1545, borrowed possibly through Middle French archétype from Old French architipe, or directly from Latin archetypum, from Greek archétypon pattern, model, the neuter form of archétypos original (arche- first + týpos stamp, mold, TYPE).

archi- a form of the prefix arch-, borrowed from Greek archi-, and occurring in words borrowed from Greek (or through Latin), such as architect = Greek archi- chief + téktōn builder, as well as in modern scientific coinages patterned on Greek, such as archibenthos = Greek archi- primal + benthos depth (of the sea). Archi- also occurs in a few adjectives based on nouns that occur in Greek, as in English archbishop (about 850) which acquired the adjective form archiepiscopal (about 1600), a borrowing from the Greek original through Latin; both ultimately from Greek archi- chief + episkopos overseer.

In Greek the variant form arche-, survives in English archetype = arche- first, primal + týpos stamp.

archipelago n. 1502 archipelago the Aegean sea, borrowed from Italian arcipelago (arci- chief, from Greek archi- + Italian pelago sea, from Latin, from Greek pélagos). The meaning, any sea with many islands (such as the Aegean sea) developed in the 1600's.

The spelling with -ch- is a learned restoration of the Greek after archi-.

architect n. 1555, borrowed from Middle French architecte, possibly influenced by Italian architetto, from Latin architectus, from Greek architéktōn chief builder (archi- chief + téktōn builder). — architecture n. 1563, borrowed from Middle French architecture, possibly influenced by Italian architettura, from Latin architectūra, from architectus architect; for suffix see -URE.

archives n. pl. 1603 archive; 1638 archives, borrowed from French archives, a learned borrowing from Latin singular archivum, variant of archium, from Greek archeion governmental building, public office, from archē government.

arctic adj. 1556 arctike, alteration (influenced by Latin arcticus) gradually replacing earlier artic, (about 1400); borrowed through Old French artique, from Medieval Latin articus, alteration of original Latin arcticus, from Greek arktikós of the north.

-ard a suffix forming nouns and meaning one who does (something) excessively or conspicuously, as in drunkard and laggard. Borrowed from Old French -ard, -art, of Germanic origin, as in Old High German -hart, -hard hardy, and cognate with Old English heard HARD.

The suffix appeared originally in Middle English in words from Old French, such as coward, mallard, and placard, where it functioned as an intensive, augmentative, and often pejorative form. It later became a living suffix in English, forming such words as dastard, sluggard, and wizard.

ardent adj. Probably before 1425, fiery, glowing, alteration of earlier ardaunt, ardant (before 1333). The later form ardent was influenced by Latin ardentem (nominative ardēns), present participle of ardēre to burn, and gradually replaced the earlier ardaunt, ardant, borrowed through Anglo-French ardante, from Old French ardant, present participle of ardoir to burn, from Latin ardēre to burn, related to ardus ARID.

ardor n. About 1390 ardour, ardure, borrowed through Anglo-French ardour, ardure from Old French ardour, from Latin ardōrem (nominative ardor), from ardēre to burn, related to ardus ARID. The later spelling ardor was influenced by the Latin and gradually replaced the earlier ardour, ardure in the 1500's.

arduous adj. 1538, borrowed from Latin arduus steep, difficult; for suffix see -OUS.

are¹ v. form of the verb be. Old English (before 950), in the Mercian dialect (before 830) earun, in Northumbrian aron (about 1100), together with (thū) eart (thou) art. These are ancient perfect active (preterite present) forms from Proto-Germanic ar-*.

In Old English am had two forms in the plural: sind, sindon and earon, aron. Of these sind, sindon gradually fell out of use in the first half of the 1200's, and was replaced by forms of be (beth, ben, be) which remained through Middle English. At the same time aron and its forms (aren, am, are) continued in use and spread until early in the 1500's, are became a part of standard English, replacing forms of be, though be, which was first used as a substitute form in the 1200's, is still found in expressions such as "the powers that be." See AM and BE, parts of the verb am-was-be.

are² n. metric measure equal to 100 square meters. 1819, borrowed from French are, coined in 1795 from Latin area open space, piece of level ground, AREA.

area n. 1538, borrowed from Latin area open space, piece of level ground; ultimate origin uncertain. An attempt to derive Latin area from ārēre be dry is not generally accepted.

arena n. 1600, a variant of Latin harēna sand, sandy place (in reference to the floor of Roman arenas that were strewn with sand).

argent n. Archaic or Poetic. silver. Probably before 1425, quick-silver or mercury; borrowed through Middle French argent, from Old French, from Latin argentum.

argon n. 1894, New Latin argon, borrowed from Greek ārgón, neuter of ārgós idle (a- without + érgon WORK); so called by its discoverers, Baron Rayleigh and Sir William Ramsay, from its inert qualities.

argot n. 1860, borrowed from French, from Middle French argot group of beggars, of unknown origin. Originally applied to slang or jargon of thieves.

argue v. About 1303, borrowed through Anglo-French arguer, from Old French, from Latin argūtāre chatter shrilly, prattle, frequentative of arguere assert, make clear.—argument n. About 1330, reasoning, disputation; borrowed from Old French argument proof, from Latin argūmentum, from arguere assert, make clear; for suffix see -MENT.

arid adj. 1652, borrowed probably through French aride, or directly from Latin āridus, from ārere be dry; related to ārere to burn, āra altar, earlier āsa. Related to ASH¹.—aridity n. 1599, borrowed probably through Middle French aridité, from Latin ariditatem (nominative ariditās), from āridus; for suffix see -ITY.

aristocracy n. 1561, borrowed from Middle French aristocratie, or directly from Late Latin aristocratia, from Greek aristokratia rule of the best-born (aristos best + kratos rule, power, strength).—aristocrat n. 1789, borrowed from French aristocrate, from Greek aristokratēs aristocrat.

The word aristocrate came into French in the mid-1500's, apparently then dropped out of use, and was reintroduced in French in 1778, becoming popularized during the French Revolution. Its introduction to English in 1789 shows how closely events in France at that time were discussed in England.

arise v. Probably before 1200 arisen stand up, rise; developed from Old English ārisan (before 830); cognate with Old Saxon ārīsan, Old High German ur-, ar-, irrisan, Gothic urrisan, from Proto-Germanic uz-riśanan*; see A-⁵, RISE.

arithmetic n. About 1250 arsmetike, borrowed from Old French arsmetique, arismetique, a learned borrowing from Latin arithmētica, from Greek arithmētikē tēchnē art of reckoning, from arithmeîn to count, from arithmós number.

About 1300 the form arsmetrike appeared from Medieval Latin arsmetrica art of measure, arithmetic, which resembles the earlier, but independently formed, arsmetike. Intermediate variants arithmetikē (before 1410), and arithmetricke were standardized to arithmetike, (1543), probably to imitate Greek arithmētikē.

ark n. Old English erc before 830; elsewhere in Old English ærc, earc, arc; an early borrowing (like Old High German arahha ark, Old Icelandic örk (genitive arkar), and Gothic arka), from Latin arca chest, box, coffer.

arm¹ n. limb. Old English earm, about 725, in Beowulf, cognate with Old Frisian arm, erm arm, Old High German arm, aram, Old Icelandic armr, Gothic arms, from Proto-Germanic armaz*.

arm² n. weapon (in the singular side arm, short arm, and firearm), more usual as arms, n. pl. Before 1250 armes, borrowed through Anglo-French and Old French armes, from Latin arma tools, weapons; related to ars (accusative artem) skill.—v. Probably before 1200, borrowed perhaps through Anglo-French and Old French armer, from Latin armāre, from arma weapons.—armament n. 1699, borrowed from French armement, from Late Latin armamentum arms, from Latin arma tools, weapons; for suffix see -MENT.

armada n. 1533 armado, a misspelling, but gradually corrected in the 1600's to armada; borrowed from Spanish armada, from Medieval Latin armata armed force.

armadillo n. 1577, borrowed from Spanish armadillo, diminutive of armado armed (with reference to its bony armorlike shell), from Latin armātus, past participle of armāre to arm.

Armageddon n. 1811, figurative use of the name from the Bible (Revelation 16:16) meaning the place of the great and final conflict (1611); borrowed from Late Latin Armageddōn, from Greek Armageddōn, probably from Hebrew Har Megiddōn Mount of Megiddo, a city in central Palestine, site of important battles of the Israelites.

armature n. a coil of wire that rotates in a magnetic field causing an electric motor to move (1835), developed from the iron bar placed between poles of a horseshoe magnet to protect its magnetic field (1752), an extension of a protective covering of a plant or animal (1662), from protection provided by God (1542). Before 1450, an armed force, borrowed from Middle French armature, learned borrowing from Latin armātūra armor, from armāre to arm; for suffix see -URE.

armistice n. 1707, borrowed after the pattern of French armistice (1688), from New Latin armistitium (recorded in English as early as 1664), from Latin arma arms + -stitium, from sistere to stop, stand.

armor n. Probably before 1300 armure, armour, armeur; borrowed from Old French armeüre, from Latin armātūra, from armāre to arm, from arma arms, gear.

arms n. pl. See ARM².

army n. About 1387–95 armee, borrowed through Anglo-French armee from Old French armée, from Medieval Latin armata armed force, developed from Latin armāta, feminine of armātus, past participle of armāre to arm, from arma weapons; for suffix see -Y⁴.

aroma n. 1814, fragrance, influenced by or reborrowed directly from Latin arōma sweet odor. The new meaning in English extended or replaced earlier aroma (aromat, aromaz) fragrant substance (recorded probably before 1200); borrowed through Anglo-French and Old French aromat, a learned borrowing from Medieval Latin aromatum, alteration of Latin arōma sweet odor, spice, from Greek arōma (genitive arōmatos) spice, of unknown origin.—aromatic adj. About 1400, probably borrowed through Old French aromatique, from Late Latin arōmaticus, from Greek arōmatikós, from arōma spice; for suffix see -IC.

around prep., adv. Probably before 1300, developed from the phrase on round.

arraign v. Probably about 1380 araynen, areinen, arreinen, borrowed through Anglo-French arainer, areiner from Old French araisnier (a- to, from Latin ad-) + (raisnier speak, reason, from Vulgar Latin ratiōnāre* reason, from Latin ratiōnem, accusative of ratiō, argumentation, REASON).

Introduction of the g in arraign (late 1400's and early 1500's) probably to restore a spelling of Latin origin, such as in reign or in feign, was an overcorrection. Middle English araynen, areinen, ultimately from Latin ad- + ratiōnem had no g.

arrange v. 1375 araingen draw up in ranks; borrowed from Old French arangier (a- to, from Latin ad-) + (rangier, ranger place in ranks, assemble, from rang RANK¹, earlier renc, from Frankish hring*. —arrangement n. 1727–51, borrowed from French arrangement, from arranger arrange, from Old French arangier; for suffix see -MENT.

arrant adj. 1550, at first a variant of erraunt roving, vagabond, as a special use of ERRANT as in knight-errant.

For 150 years from about 1390, in phrases such as thief erraunt and arrant thief, a roving robber, the term was derogatory, until about 1570 when it began to take on the meaning of thoroughgoing, downright.

array v. Probably before 1325, araien, arraien arrange in order; borrowed through Anglo-French arraier, arayer, from Old French arēer, from Vulgar Latin ar-rēdāre* (from Latin ad- to + Frankish rēd-*, the source of Old English (ge)rēde ready). —n. Before 1338 arai, arrai order, arrangement; borrowed through Anglo-French arraie, arai, from Old French arei, from arēer to array.

arrears n. About 1300, arere behind; 1340, arriers in time past; borrowed through Anglo-French arere, from Old French ariere behind, backward, from Vulgar Latin ad retrō* backward (Latin ad to + retrō back, behind). The meaning of balance due appeared in 1432; the phrase in arrears behind in payments, appeared in 1620.

arrest v. Before 1375, stay, stop; 1375 aresten seize, restrain legally; borrowed through Anglo-French arester, from Old French arester to stay, stop, from Vulgar Latin arrestāre* (Latin ad- to + restāre stay back, remain, from re- back + stāre to stand). —n. 1375, a staying, stopping; borrowed through Anglo-French arest, areste, from Old French areste, from arester to stay, stop.

arrive v. Probably before 1200 ariven come to land on the shore; borrowed through Anglo-French ariver, from Old French ariver, arriver to come to land, from Vulgar Latin ar-rīpāre*, from Latin ad rīpam to the shore. —arrival n. About 1380 arivaile landing; borrowed through Anglo-French arivail, aryvaille, from Old French arivaille, arrivaille, from ariver, arriver to come to land.

arrogance n. 1340, borrowed through Old French arrogance, from Latin arrogantia arrogance, from arrogantem (nominative arrogāns) assuming, overbearing, present participle of arrogāre claim for oneself, assume (ar- to + rogāre ask, propose); for suffix see -ANCE. —arrogant adj. About 1390, borrowed from Latin arrogantem assuming, overbearing, insolent; for suffix see -ANT.

arrow n. Old English, before 800 earh, especially in earh-faru flight of arrows, and before 835 arwan, singular and plural; these forms developed into Middle English aro and arow before 1325. The word is cognate with Old Icelandic or arrow (genitive orvar), from Proto-Germanic arHwō*.

arsenal n. 1506, a dock with naval stores; borrowed from Italian arsenale, earlier arsena, Medieval Latin arsana, from Arabic dār aš-šinā 'a house of manufacturing (šinā 'a art, craft, skill, from šana 'a make, fabricate).

French also had the form arsenal (1250); Spanish is later (1610), but the original English borrowing was from Italian, because the earliest sources were in reference to the Arsenal at Venice, and the earliest forms in English were Italianate arsenale, arsenale.

arsenic n. Before 1393, borrowed from Latin arsenicon, from Greek arsenikón yellow arsenic; literally, masculine, the neuter form of arsenikós, arrhenikós masculine, from ársēn, árrhēn (genitive ársenos, árrhenos) male, strong (the word supposedly referring to the powerful qualities of arsenic). But the Greek arsenikón is actually a folk etymology for Middle Persian word zarnik* golden, probably by Semitic transmission (Syriac zarniqā arsenic). Arsenic may have been borrowed into Old French from earlier Middle English.

arson n. Before 1680, borrowed through French arsoun, arson, from Old French arson, arsion, from Late Latin ársionem a burning, from Latin ārsūm, past participle of ārdere to burn. —arsonist n. 1864, formed from English arson + -ist.

art n. About 1250, cunning, trickery; borrowed through Anglo-French art, from Old French art, from Latin artem, accusative of ars skill. The early use of the word in English centered upon the meaning of skill, scholarship, and learning. The application of "skill" to the arts, such as music, dancing, drama, and literary composition does not appear before 1600. The specific meaning of painting, sculpture, etc., does not appear before the latter 1600's or early 1700's. —artful adj. 1613, formed from English art + -ful.

artery n. Before 1398, borrowed through Anglo-French arterie, from Old French artaire (1213), and directly from Latin artēria artery, windpipe, from Greek ártēría (earlier aetēría*) an artery, as distinct from a vein; originally windpipe (regarded by the ancients as air ducts; since the arteries do not contain blood after death); perhaps related to aortē AORTA. —arterial adj. Probably before 1425, possibly formed in English from Latin artēria + English suffix -al.

artesian adj. 1830, borrowing of French artésien of Artois (in Old French Arteis), region in northern France where artesian wells were first drilled in the 1700's, though artésien is not recorded as being applied in French to such wells before 1803.

arthritis n. 1543, borrowing of Latin arthrit̄is, abstracted from Greek nósos arthrit̄is disease of the joints, from árrhron joint, from arariskein to fit; for suffix see -ITIS. —arthritic adj. Before 1398, as a noun arthetica; by 1400 as an adjective artetik, artetica; borrowed through Old French goute arthetique arthritic gout and Medieval Latin gutta arctica, from Latin arthriticus, from Greek arthritikós of the joints, gouty, from arthrit̄is.

For almost 150 years the adjective (artetik, arthretik, etc.) was also used as a noun. This accounts for the adjective form of today (arthritic) coming into English before the modern noun arthritis.

arthropod n. 1877, earlier (1870) Arthropoda the name given in biological classification to the invertebrate animals with jointed bodies and legs which constitute a phylum. Arthropoda is New Latin, formed from Greek árthron joint + podós (genitive podós) foot.

artichoke n. 1530 archicokke, borrowed from northern dialect forms of Italian such as articiocco, arciocco, arciocoffo, etc., from Old Provençal arquichaut, from older Spanish alcarchofa, from Spanish-Arabic al-ḥarshōfa, variant of Arabic al-ḥarshūf the artichoke.

The word was introduced into Europe during the 1500's, but the plant was known in Italy by the 1450's.

article n. Probably before 1200, a clause or section, as in a set of rules or a creed; borrowed through Anglo-French from Old French article, a learned borrowing from Latin articulus small section or joint, diminutive of artus (genitive artūs) joint.

articulation n. Probably before 1425 meaning (1) a joint (2) setting of bones; borrowed through Old French articulation (1363), from Medieval Latin articulationem (nominative articulatio), from Latin articulāre to divide (meat, etc.) into single joints; for suffix see -TION. —articulate v. 1563–83, to draw up articles of charges, and an alternate form for earlier articlen (1448) articulen (1454); to draw up articles of a claim later, to connect by joints, (1616) and to speak distinctly (1691). Earlier articlen, articulen was borrowed perhaps through Old French articuler (1265) and Italian articolare to move parts of the body (before 1321), from Latin articulāre; modern English articulate may have been borrowed directly from Latin articulātus, past participle of articulāre to divide (meat, etc.) into joints, from articulus, diminutive of artus joint; for suffix see -ATE¹. It is also possible that articulate, developing almost 140 years after articulation, is a back formation in English. —adj. 1586, uttered in distinct syllables; borrowed from Latin articulātus jointed, past participle of articulāre to divide into joints; for suffix see -ATE¹.

artifact n. 1821 artefact, formed probably by influence of Italian artefatto, from Latin arte, ablative of ars art + factus made, past participle of facere to make. The form artifect (1884) is an alteration of artefact, probably influenced by Latin arti-, stem of ars art.

artifice n. 1534, the making of anything by craft or skill; earlier (probably before 1425) artificie technical skill, art; borrowed through Anglo-French artefice, artifice, from Middle French artifice skill, cunning, learned borrowing from Latin artificium craft, employment, art, cunning, from artifex (genitive artificis) craftsman (arti-, stem of ars art + facere to make).

The sense of clever stratagem, trick first appeared in 1656.

artificial adj. About 1390, in the phrase artificial day the part of the day from sunrise to sunset; later (probably about 1425) made by man, not natural; borrowed through Old French artificial, artificiel, from Latin artificiālis of or belong to art, from artificium art, skill, craft; for suffix see -AL¹.

artillery n. About 1390 artelrie, artyllerye, borrowed through Anglo-French artillerie and Medieval Latin artillaria, both forms from Old French artillerie implements of war, ballistic machines, from artillier equip (with implements of war); for suffix see -ERY.

Old French artillier, a spelling influenced by artskill, may derive from atillier, an alteration of atirier arrange (a- to, from Latin ad- + Old French tire order, rank); alternatively some sources refer the word to Medieval Latin artacula, articulum art, skill, a diminutive form of Latin ars (genitive artis) art. This connection is not accepted by all authorities, however.

artisan n. 1538, borrowed probably from Italian artefano (arte art, from Latin artem (nominative ars) + suffix -esano, from Latin -ēnsiānus); also compare Spanish artesano (about 1440); for suffix see -AN. Compare COURTESAN, PARTISAN. Though Middle French artisan is often cited as the source for English, the word is not recorded in French before 1546 and was probably itself borrowed from Italian.

artist n. 1581, borrowed from Middle French artiste, from Italian artista, from Medieval Latin artista, from Latin ars (genitive artis) ART skill; for suffix see -IST. —artistic adj. 1753, formed from English artist + -ic.

The French source artistique traditionally cited is not recorded before 1808. —artistry n. 1868, formed from English artist + -ry.

-ary 1 a suffix forming nouns meaning: a a place for, as in infirmary = a place for the infirm. b a collection of, as in statuary = a collection of statues. c a person or thing that, as in boundary = a thing that bounds or limits. 2 suffix forming adjectives meaning: a of or having to do with, as in legendary = of legend. b being, having the nature of, as in secondary = being second. c characterized by, as in customary = characterized by custom.

Borrowed from Latin -ārius (feminine -āria, neuter -ārium), and in part influenced by Old French -arie, -aire, from Latin -ārius, the suffix -ary was also reinforced in English by direct borrowings from Latin, such as infirmary (from Medieval Latin infirmaria) and statuary (from Latin statuāria). On the other hand, words such as cautionary and inflationary are purely English formations.

Some loan words from French retain the French -aire, such as concessionnaire from French concessionnaire and millionaire from French millionnaire.

Aryan adj. 1847, earlier Arian (1839): referring to a national name 'comprising the worshippers of the gods of the Brahmans' (1861, by Max Müller), and also applied (1858, by Whitney; 1847, by Pritchard) to the Indo-European languages as a group, including Sanskrit which was associated with the Brahmans and Hindu literature. The word was borrowed through Latin Ariānus belonging to Ariāna or Aria and Greek Areiā, Ariā the eastern part of ancient Persia, from Sanskrit Arya- (earlier Aria-) noble, the name the Sanskrit-speaking immigrants to India called themselves. The ancient Persians gave themselves the same title, Old Persian Ariya-, and it appears in Pahlavi and modern Persian Iran. Sanskrit ārya-s honorable, respectable; originally, belonging to the hospitable, is a derivative of aryā-s lord, hospitable lord; originally, protecting the stranger, from ari-s stranger.

The spelling Aryan, used by scholars in the 1850's and following, was gradually replaced by Indo-European (first attested for this group of languages in 1814).—n. 1550 Arien; 1601 Arian.

as adv., prep., conj., pron. Probably before 1200 ase and earlier als, alse; developed as weakened phonetic forms of Old English ealswā, allswā (before 950) meaning all so, wholly so, quite so, in which swā meaning “so” was a demonstrative adverb qualified by the intensive adverb all. Historically as is equivalent to so and has all the relational uses of so, the differences being largely idiomatic. With many adjectives and adverbs, as was written in combination (asmuch, aswell, asoon) and survives in forasmuch, inasmuch, whereas.

as- a form of the prefix ad-, meaning to, toward, before s, as in assign. Formed in Latin by assimilation of d to the following consonant (s).

asbestos n. 1607 asbest, 1658 asbestos mineral that does not burn; borrowed from Latin asbestos, and replacing earlier albeston applied to quicklime (before 1387), still earlier abestus (before 1100); borrowed from Old French abeste, abeston, albeston and Medieval Latin albeston, from Latin asbestos, from Greek ásbestos unquenchable (a- not + sbestos, verbal adjective of sbennýnai to quench). The Latin word was mistakenly applied by Pliny to quicklime (the “unquenchable” stone).

ascend n. Before 1382, borrowed from Anglo-French ascendre and from Latin ascendere (a- to, up + scandere to climb). —ascendant n., adj. About 1380 ascendent; 1548 ascendant, borrowed from Middle French ascendant and from Latin ascendentem (nominative ascendēns), present participle of ascendere; for suffix see -ANT. —ascension n. Before 1333, borrowed from Anglo-French ascensium and from Latin ascēnsiōnem (nominative ascēnsiō), from ascēn-sus, past participle of ascendere; for suffix see -SION. —ascent n. 1600, formed in English from ascend, on the analogy of earlier descend, descent.

ascertain v. 1417 assertenyng a giving assurance; later ascerten to inform, give assurance (1425); borrowed through Anglo-French acerteiner from Old French acertener (a- to, from Latin ad-) + (certener, from certain CERTAIN). The modern meaning of ascertain is not attested until the 1700's.

ascetic adj. 1646, borrowed from Greek askētikós laborious, from askētēs hermit, monk; earlier, one who practices a spiritual exercise to attain perfection and virtue, developed from one who practices any art or trade, from askēn to exercise; for suffix see -IC. —n. 1660, noun use of ascetic, adj. —asceticism n. 1646, formed from English ascetic + -ism.

ascribe v. Probably before 1425 ascriben, developed by influence of Latin ascribere as a replacement of earlier ascriven, first recorded about 1340, borrowed from Old French ascrivre to attribute, inscribe, from Latin ascribere, adscribere to write in; later, to attribute (ad- to + scribere write; see SCRIBE). —ascription n. 1597, borrowed from Latin ascripitiōnem (nominative ascripitiō), from ascribere ascribe; for suffix see -TION.

-ase a suffix used to name enzymes, such as maltase = an enzyme that decomposes malt. -Ase is abstracted from diastase, adopted in French from Greek diástasis separation.

ash¹ n. remains after burning. Middle English asshe, esse, usually in the plural asshen, esken; developed from Old English (before 800) æsce, asce, esce; cognate with Old High German asca ash (modern German Asche), Old Icelandic aska, earlier Dutch asch (now as), Danish aske, Swedish aska, from Proto-Germanic askōn*.

ash² n. a tree mentioned widely in older literature, especially as a shaft for a spear. Middle English asshe, assh, ash, developed from Old English æsc spear made of ash wood (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old High German ask ash tree (modern German Esche, earlier Asche), Old Icelandic askr ash, spear, boat, Swedish, Danish, Norwegian ask ash, box or container, Middle Dutch esce (modern Dutch es, earlier esch), all of these forms implying Proto-Germanic askaz* or askiz*.

ashamed adj. Old English (before 1000) āsceamod, past participle of āsceamian, feel shame (ā- a-^s + sceamu SHAME).

asinine adj. About 1610, borrowed from Latin asininus of or like an ass, from asinus ASS, also dolt, blockhead; for suffix see -INE¹.

The meaning “of or having to do with an ass or asses” is recorded in English later than the meaning “characteristic of an ass or asses, stupid, silly,” but note that the meaning “stupid” is also in Latin.

ask v. Old English āhsian (before 725), ācsian (before 800), ācsian (about 885); cognate with Old Frisian āskia to request, demand, ask, Old Saxon ēscōn, Old High German eiscōn, heiscōn, from Proto-Germanic aiskōjanan*.

The Old English variant, ācsian or āxian, became axen in Middle English and later ax, an accepted literary form of the verb until about 1600, which survives in dialectal speech. Forms of asken are frequent in Middle English beside axen, and ask occurs in the late 1500's, especially in Shakespeare.

askance adv. 1530, sideways, askew; developed from ascaunce as if, pretending that (about 1395), alteration of earlier ase quances in such a way that, even as (before 1333), ase as, and Old French quances as though, from Latin quamsī, variant of quasi as if, as it were.

asp¹ n. poisonous snake. 1526, borrowed through Middle and Old French aspe, aspis, or directly from Latin aspis, from Greek aspis. The Latin and Old French aspis was used in English from the 1300's until the early 1500's.

asp² n. Poetic. aspen, poplar tree. Old English (about 700) æspe, æpse, a word cognate with Old High German aspa aspen (modern German Espe), Old Icelandic ǫsp, Swedish, Danish, Norwegian asp, Dutch esp, from Proto-Germanic aspō*.

asparagus n. Before 1398 asperages, aspergy; borrowed from Old French asperge, asparge and Medieval Latin asperagi*, from Latin asparagus, from Greek aspáragos, aspháragos, probably borrowed from some foreign source.

The current form is a reborrowing about 1597 of Latin asparagus and replaced the earlier sparage, sperge (probably before 1300), borrowed through Anglo-Latin spargus (before 1250), from Medieval Latin sparagus, sparagi (alterations of Latin asparagus).

In the mid 1500's when the asparagus plant became familiar, a shortened form sparagus displaced sperage, sparage, altered by folk etymology (before 1650) to sparagrass, sparrow-grass. The spelling asparagus, by the late 1800's, was the popular form.

aspect n. About 1385, relative position in planets as they appear; borrowed from Latin aspectus (genitive aspectūs) seeing, look, appearance, from aspec-, stem of aspicere, adspicere look at (ad- at + specere to look).

aspen n. Used as an adjective about 1385, especially in aspen leaf, the -en being an old adjective ending found in German espen and Old Frisian espen; or perhaps a survival of the old English genitive æspan of the ASP² (from about 1000).

asperity n. Before 1535, alteration (influenced by Latin asperitās) of earlier asperete, in use probably before 1200; borrowed from Old French aspereté, learned borrowing from Latin asperitātem (nominative asperitās), from asper rough; for suffix see -ITY.

aspersion n. 1448, shedding (of Christ's blood); borrowed from Latin aspersiōnem (nominative aspersiō), from aspers-, stem of aspergere, adspargere to sprinkle (ad- on + spergere to scatter); for suffix see -SION.

A later meaning the act of sprinkling with water, dust, etc. was extended by 1596 to a damaging or false statement and by 1633 the action of casting such statements.

asphalt n. Before 1398, borrowed from Late Latin asphaltum, from Greek ásphalton, variant of ásphaltos (a- not + sphaltós* able to be thrown down, so called from its use as a binding material assuring the solidity of walls; sphaltós* is taken to be a verbal adjective of sphálllein to throw down).

There was also asphaltoun (probably about 1380), from the Greek ásphalton.

asphyxia n. 1706, stoppage of the pulse, New Latin asphyxia, borrowed from Greek asphyxiā a stopping of the pulse (a- without + sphýxis pulse, from sphýzein to throb). The current sense appeared in 1778 and was regarded as a misnomer, because in victims of suffocation the pulse continues long after the outward signs of respiratory action have ceased. —asphyxiate v. 1836, formed from English asphyxia + *-ate*¹. —asphyxiation n. 1866, formed from English asphyxia + -tion.

aspic n. 1789, borrowed from French aspic jelly, literally meaning asp, an expansion of Old French aspe, influenced by basilic basilisk. The meaning in French may come from froid comme un aspic cold, like an asp (serpent), or from the various colors in the gelatin or the shape of the mold. See ASP¹.

aspirate v. Before 1700, borrowed possibly through influence of earlier French aspirer (1529) to aspire in pronunciation, from Latin aspirātus, past participle of aspirāre, adspirāre breathe upon; for suffix see -ATE¹. It is also possible that aspirate is a back formation from aspiration.

aspire v. Before 1400, borrowed from Old French aspirer aspire to, inspire, from Latin aspirāre, adspirāre breathe upon, seek to reach (ad- to, upon + spirāre breathe). —aspiration n. Probably before 1398, act of aspiring; later, inspiration (probably about 1425); borrowed from Old French aspiration divine inspiration, from Latin aspiratiōnem (nominative aspiratiō), from aspirāre aspire; for suffix see -TION. The meaning of earnest desire appeared in 1606.

aspirin n. Probably before 1922, borrowed (1899) as a trademark in German Aspirin, from A(cetylrilte) Spir(säure) acetylated spiraeic acid + *-in*². Spiraeic acid is an old name of salicylic acid, originally obtained from the leaves of Spiraea ulmaria.

ass n. Old English assa, masculine (before 830); perhaps developed from the source of Middle Welsh asen, or from Middle Irish assan. Old English assa is ultimately borrowed from Latin asinus, asina (feminine), from a language of Asia Minor (compare Greek ónos, Armenian ēš, Sumerian anšu ass).

assail v. Probably before 1200, borrowed from Old French assaillir, asaillir, from Vulgar Latin assalire*, alteration of Latin assilire to leap at (as- at + salire to leap). —assailant n. About 1532, borrowed from Middle French assaillant, present participle of assaillir, from Old French assaillier. English assaillant gradually replaced earlier assailer, assailour (recorded before 1400); borrowed from Old French assailleux, from assaillier ASSAIL.

assassin n. 1531, murderer, borrowed through Middle French assassin (Old French assassis hashish eaters who committed murder) and through Italian assassino murderer; earlier, hashish eater, from Arabic hashshāshīn, literally, hashish eaters, in reference to a religious and military order (in the mountains of Lebanon) remarkable for their secret murders, because the members selected to commit a murder, especially of a public figure, were first intoxicated with hashish. Current use still refers chiefly to a murderer of a public figure. —assassinate v. 1618, perhaps borrowed by influence of French assassiner to murder, from Medieval Latin assassinatus, past participle of assassinare to assassinate. Assassinate could also be a back formation of earlier assassination. —assassination n. 1605, formed in English, probably from French assassinat assassination + English -ion.

assault n. 1375, alteration of earlier asaut (probably before 1200); borrowed from Old French asaut, assaut, from Vulgar Latin assaltus* assault, attack, alteration of Latin assultus (genitive assultūs), from stem assul- of assilire, adilire leap at, assail (as- at + salire to leap).

The original English form asaut was altered to saulte (1530, in Palsgrave's Lesclarcissement) after the Latin form, as in fault, vault. However, Palsgrave reads: make a saulte. The a could be the article a but could just as well be part of assaulte, incorrectly divided by the printer. —v. About 1410, asauten to attack, assault; borrowed from Middle French asauter, assauter, from Vulgar Latin assaltāre* (Latin as- at + saltāre to leap).

assay n. Before 1338, a trying, trial, ordeal; borrowed through Anglo-French assai, alteration (influenced by the prefix a- to) of Old French essai trial; see ESSAY. The sense of analysis appeared about 1386. —v. Probably before 1300, assaien to try, borrowed from Anglo-French assaer, assaiier, from assai, n.

assemble v. Before 1325 (but used as a gerund assemblinge a coming together, gathering or meeting, about 1300); borrowed through Anglo-French from Old French assembler, from Vulgar Latin assimulāre* bring together (Latin as- to + simul together, at the same time). —assembly n. Probably before 1300, borrowed through Anglo-French assemblé, from Old French assemblée, feminine past participle of assembler assemble; for suffix see -Y³. —assembly line (1914, American English).

assent v. About 1300, borrowed through Anglo-French assentir, from Old French assentir, assenter, from Latin assentāri, serving as a frequentative form to assentire (as- to + sentire feel, think; see SENSE). —n. Probably before 1300, borrowed from Old French assent, from assentir, v.

assert v. Before 1604, formed in English either as (1) a word modeled on Latin, as if borrowed from Latin assertus, past participle of asserere claim rights over something, state (as- to, + serere join, put); or (2) a word created by back formation from earlier assertion. —assertion n. 1424, borrowed through Middle French assertion, or directly from Late Latin assertiōnem (nominative assertiō), from Latin asserere claim rights over something, state; for suffix see -TION. —assertive adj. 1562, formed in English as if from Medieval Latin assertivus*, from Latin past participle assertus; for suffix see -IVE.

assess v. 1423, borrowed through Anglo-French assesser, from Medieval Latin assessare fix a tax upon, originally a frequentative form of Latin assidere sit, especially as assistant judge or assessor, literally meaning to sit beside another (as- to, by + sedere sit). —assessment n. 1548, formed from English assess + -ment. —assessor n. 1427, borrowed through Anglo-French from Old French assessour, and directly from Latin assessorēm (nominative assessor) a tax assessor, earlier meaning an assistant judge, from assess-, stem of assidere sit, especially as assessor.

assets n. pl. 1531, sufficient estate; borrowed through Anglo-French assez, assetz, from Old French assez, asez enough, from Vulgar Latin phrase ad satis* to sufficiency (Latin ad to + satis enough).

The English use originated in the Anglo-French legal phrase aver assetz to have enough (to meet a claim), from which assets later passed into general use. It was originally singular but because of the final -s in imitation of the pronunciation (asets) in French and its collective sense, assets came to be treated as a plural, with the singular asset appearing in the 1800's.

assiduity n. Probably before 1425, persistence, continual recurrence; borrowed through Old French assiduité, from Latin assiduitātem (nominative assiduitās); and borrowed from Latin assiduitās, from assiduus sitting down to, constantly occupied, unremitting, from assidere sit at or near (as- at + sedere sit); for suffix see -ITY. —assiduous adj. 1538, borrowed from Latin assiduus, from assidere sit at; for suffix see -OUS.

assign v. About 1300, borrowed through Anglo-French from Old French assigner, learned borrowing from Latin assignāre mark out (as- to, for + signāre make a sign, from signum mark). —assignment n. 1389, borrowed from Old French assignement, from assigner assign; for suffix see -MENT; or formed in Middle English from earlier assign + -ment.

assimilate v. Probably before 1425, borrowed through influence of Old French assimiler, from Latin assimilātus, past participle of assimilāre, variant of assimulāre compare (as- to + simulāre make similar, from similis like); for suffix see -ATE¹. —assimilation n. Probably before 1425, borrowed through Old French assimilation, from Latin assimilatiōnem (nominative assimilatiō), variant of assimulatiōnem, from assimulāre compare; for suffix see -TION.

assist v. 1426, borrowed through Middle French assister, learned borrowing from Latin assistere to assist (as- to, by + sistere take a stand, from stāre to stand). —n. 1597, from the verb. —assistance n. 1424, borrowed from Middle French assistance, from assister to assist, and from Medieval Latin assistentia assistance, from Latin assistere to assist; for suffix see -ANCE. —assistant n., adj. 1433, borrowed from Middle French assistant, present participle of assister to assist, and from Latin assistentem (nominative assistent) assisting, present participle of assistere to assist; for suffix see -ANT.

assize n. About 1300 assise session of a law court, a legal suit, regulation, standard of quality or measure, custom or practice; borrowed through Anglo-French from Old French assise court session; also, a setting (of taxes, etc.), from the feminine past participle of Anglo-French aseoir, later Old French aseoir to sit at, settle, assess, from Medieval Latin assedere sit at, alteration of Latin assidere; see ASSESS.

associate adj. Probably before 1425, developed from past participle associat associated; borrowed from Latin associātus, past participle of associāre join with (as- to + sociāre join with, from socius companion); for suffix see -ATE¹. —v. About 1450, gradually replacing earlier associen (about 1383). Associate is a verb use of the Middle English past participle associat, borrowed from Latin associātus, past participle of associāre join with. The earlier Middle English associen was borrowed through Old French associer, associier, from Latin associāre. —n. 1533, developed from associate, adj. used absolutely. —association n. 1535, borrowed perhaps through Middle French association, and directly from Medieval Latin associationem (nominative associatio), from Latin associāre join with; for suffix see -TION. —associative adj. 1812, formed from English associate + -ive.

assonance n. 1727, borrowed from French assonance, from Latin assonāre respond to, sound in answer (as- to + sonāre to sound); for suffix see -ANCE.

assort v. 1490, borrowed from Middle French assortir, from Old French assorter (a- to, from Latin ad-) + (sorte kind, SORT). —assortment n. 1611, formed from English assort + -ment, probably influenced in its formation by earlier French assortiment (1532).

assuage v. About 1300 aswagen, asswagen; borrowed through Anglo-French asuager, assuager, asswager, from Old French as- souagier, from Northern Gallo-Romance assuāviāre* (from Latin as- to + suāvis agreeable, SWEET).

Development of the sound represented by vi in assuāviāre to /dʒ/ represented by g in Old French cage is parallel to the development in Old French of déluge from Latin diluvium.

assume v. Before 1420, borrowed from Latin assumere take up, receive, assume (as- to, up + sūmere to take, formed from sus-, from earlier subs-, variant of sub -up, + emere to take). — assumption n. About 1300, Assumpcion, borrowed from Old French assumpcion, assomption and from Latin assumptiōnem (nominative assumptiō) a taking up, adoption, from assumere take up; for suffix see -TION.

assure v. About 1375, borrowed from Old French aseürer, from Vulgar Latin assēcūrāre* (from Latin as- to + sēcūrus safe, SECURE). — assurance n. About 1385, borrowed from Old French aseürance, from aseürer assure; for suffix see -ANCE.

aster n. 1706, New Latin aster, from Latin astēr star, aster, from Greek astēr star; see STAR. The original meaning in English was “star,” borrowed from Latin (1603), but now obsolete.

asterisk n. Before 1382 asterich, before 1387 asterisc; borrowed from Late Latin asteriscus, from Greek asterískos, little star, diminutive of astēr (genitive astēros) star.

asteroid n. 1802, borrowed from Greek asteroeidēs starlike (astēr, genitive astēros, star + eidos form).

asthma n. Before 1398 asma, borrowed, perhaps by influence of Old French asmat, from Latin asthma (genitive asthmatis), from Greek ásthma panting, probably related to Greek áemi I breathe hard, blow, and ánemos wind.

The th in English was introduced in the 1500's to restore a Latinate form. — asthmatic adj. 1542, formed in English on the pattern of Latin asthmaticus, from Greek asthmatikós, from ásthma (genitive ásthmatos); for suffix see -IC. astigmatism n. 1849, formed from English a- without + Greek stigmat- (stem of stigma mark, spot) + English suffix -ism; coined by the English scientist and philosopher William Whewell, 1794–1866. — astigmatic adj. 1849, formed from English a- without + Greek stigmat- + English suffix -ic.

astonish v. 1530, alteration of astonen, astonen, astounen, astunen (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French estoner, estuner to stun, astonish, from Vulgar Latin extonāre* (Latin ex- out + tonāre to thunder); corresponding to Latin attonāre to strike with a thunderbolt, stupefy (at- to + tonāre to THUNDER).

The alteration of Middle English astonen to astonish may have been influenced by a pattern of verbs already existing in -ish, e.g. admonish, distinguish, famish; no form is known to have existed for Old French estoner to supply the stem in the -iss- that traditionally evolved into English verbs in -ish.

astound v. 1600, developed from Middle English astounded, astoned, (probably before 1300), past participle of astounen, astonen to stun, ASTONISH.

astral adj. 1605, borrowed from Late Latin astrālis, from Latin astrum star, from Greek ástron, see STAR; for suffix see -AL¹.

astray adv., adj. Before 1325 astrai, o stray; earlier astraié, past participle (about 1300); borrowed from Old French estraié strayed, past participle of estrai, estray; see STRAY.

The loss of the initial e in borrowing from Old French estraié gave rise to a belief that the word was formed in English from a- + stray, n., but no earlier English noun form stray has been found.

astrigent adj. 1541, borrowed from Latin astrigentem (nominative astringēns), present participle of astringere bind fast (a- to + stringere to tie, bind).

astro-, a combining form meaning: 1 star or other celestial body or bodies, as in astrophysics = the study of the physics (temperature, size, density) of celestial bodies. 2 outer space, space travel, as in astronautics = science of space travel. Appearing by 1740 as a combining form in English abstracted from a host of earlier words, such as astronomy (before 1200), astrology (1375), and ultimately borrowed from Greek astro-, from ástron star.

astrobleme n. 1961, formed in English from astro- celestial body + Greek blēma throw of a missile, or the resulting wound, from ballein to throw, hit.

astrolabe n. About 1390 astrelabie; borrowed through Anglo-French from Old French astrelabe, a learned borrowing of Medieval Latin astrolabium, from Greek astrolābos celestial sphere, originally meaning “taking (position of) stars” (astro- star + lambánein to take).

astrology n. 1375 astrologie, borrowed from Old French astrologie, and from Latin astrologia astronomy, from Greek astrologiā, from astrológos astronomer (astro- star + -lógos treating of, from légein speak of); see note at ASTRONOMY. — astrologer n. About 1385, in the phrase commune astrologer in reference to the cock as announcer of sunrise; formed in English after Latin astrologus astrologer + English suffix -er.

astronaut n. 1929, but widely popularized in 1961, formed in English from astro- outer space + -naut, from Greek naútēs sailor. Earlier, Astronaut (1880) was the name of a fictional spaceship, the ending -naut was patterned on aeronaut (1784) and aquonaut (1881). — astronautics n. 1929, borrowed from French astronautique, coined by French writer J.H. Rosny in 1927, on the pattern of aéronautique aeronautics.

astronomy n. Probably before 1200 astronomie, borrowing of Old French astronomie, from Latin astronomía, from Greek astronomiā, from astrónōmos one who arranges or classifies the stars (astro- star + -nōmos arranging, regulating, from némein administer, manage).

Originally astronomy included observation of the stars and planets and their influence upon natural phenomena, together with their supposed influence on human affairs. In Medieval Latin, Old French, and Middle English of the 1300's and 1400's the terms astronomy and astrology were interchangeable. During the late 1400's, a distinction developed between scientific study of astronomy (natural astronomy) and the philosophical study of human destiny (judicial astronomy or astrology). — astronomer n. Before 1398, formed in Middle English after Medieval Latin astronomus astronomer (from Greek astrónomos) + English suffix -er.¹ An earlier word astronomien (before 1300) was borrowed from Old French astronomien.

astute adj. 1611, borrowed perhaps through influence of Middle French astu, astut, from Latin astūtus crafty, from astus (genitive astūs) guile, of uncertain origin.

asylum n. Probably before 1439, asilum place of refuge, sanctuary; borrowed from Latin asylum sanctuary, from Greek ásylon refuge, from the neuter of ásylos safe from violence (a- without + sylē right of seizure). Middle English asilum was a Latinate replacement of earlier (about 1384) asile, borrowed from Old French. The meaning of an institute for special care, as of the insane or orphans, appeared in 1776.

at prep. Old English (before 725) æt, from which Middle English at developed by about 1200. Old English æt is cognate with Old Saxon at, æt, Old High German az, Old Icelandic and Gothic at, and Old Frisian et.

at- a form of the prefix ad-, meaning to, toward, before t, as in attend, attest, attribute. Formed in Latin by assimilation of d to the following consonant (t).

atavism n. 1833, borrowed from Latin atavus ancestor, great-grandfather's grandfather (at- an element of undetermined origin + avus grandfather); for suffix see -ISM. Said to have been a borrowing of French atavisme; but the word is not recorded in French before 1838.

ataxia n. 1878, borrowed possibly through French ataxie, or adopted directly as New Latin ataxia, especially in the phrase locomotor ataxia, from Greek ataxiā (a- without + taxis order, from a stem of tássein arrange).

-ate¹ suffix forming: 1 adjectives meaning: a of or having to do with, as in collegiate = having to do with college. b having, containing, as in compassionate = having compassion. c having the form of, like, as in stellate = having the form of a star. 2 verbs meaning: a become, as in maturate = become mature. b cause to be, as in alienate = cause to be alien. c produce, as in ulcerate = produce ulcers. d supply or treat with, as in aerate = treat with air. e combine with, as in oxygenate = combine with oxygen. 3 nouns derived from adjectives or participial forms often already found in English with -ate, as in delegate, prelate, advocate.

The suffix -ate was borrowed into Middle English largely by translation of Latin texts containing verbs with the past ending -ātus and infinitives ending in -āre producing many adjectives and later verbs in English. For example attenuate v. (1530) developed from attenuate adj. (before 1425); borrowed from Latin attenuātus, past participle of attenuāre make thin, weaken.

Other adjectives with -ate are formed in English from Latin participial adjective ending in -ātus, where no verb exists in Latin, such as foliato, from Latin foliātus.

Some nouns are furnished in English from the participial forms in -ate. For instance, associate n., developed from the Middle English participial form associat, earlier borrowed from Latin associātus. Others were originally adjectives; while many more were borrowed from nouns in Latin or were created after the pattern of fourth-declension nouns in Latin.

Another path of borrowing was from Latin, by way of Old French forms ending in -ē, as in senē senate, refashioned in Old French to -at as in senat in the 1200's and 1300's, but after 1400 an -e was added to show a long vowel sound in the suffix -at.

The same process is evident in later forms taken from modern French where the infinitive ends in -er and the past participle in -ē, as in French affectionné, English affectionate.

-ate² a suffix in chemical terms, such as nitrate from nitric acid, and as a specialized use of *-ate*¹, taking the place of older chemical terminology, as in acetatum, now acetate.

-ate³ a suffix forming nouns naming an occupation, position, condition or the like, or the persons serving or being in it, such as consulate = office of a consul, professorate = position of a professor.

Borrowed from Latin -ātus, ending of fourth-declension nouns that have genitive ending -ātus, but are separate from noun formations under *-ate*¹.

atheism n. 1587, borrowed from Middle French athéisme, from Greek átheos denying the gods (a- without + theós a god + Middle French -isme -ism). —atheist n. 1571, borrowed from Middle French athéiste, from Greek átheos + Middle French -iste -ist. —atheistic adj. 1634, formed from English atheist + suffix -ic.

athlete n. Probably before 1425 athletez, borrowed probably from Greek áthlētes. 1528 athelete, borrowed from Latin áthlēta, from Greek áthlētes contestant, combatant, from áthlēin contend, compete for a prize, from áthlos (earlier áethlos) contest, and áthlon (earlier áethlon) prize, contest. —athletic adj. 1636, borrowed perhaps by influence of French athlétique (1534) from Latin áthlēticus, from Greek áthlētikós, from áthlētes athlete; for suffix see -IC. —athletics n. 1727–51, formed from English athletic + -s on analogy with gymnastics (1652); for suffix see -ICS.

-athon or -thon a combining form abstracted from marathon meaning any prolonged or extended activity, event, etc., usually involving endurance, as in walkathon (1932), talkathon (1948), and telethon (1952).

-ation a suffix forming nouns, and meaning act or state of —ing, as in admiration; condition or state of being —ed, as in agitation; result of —ing, as in civilization. English -ation was borrowed from Latin -ātiōnem (nominative -ātiō) which is formed of -ā- (stem of verbs ending in -āre, such as Latin orāre, English orate) + -tiōnem (accusative of noun suffix -tiō -TION).

Often -ation is a replacement of Middle English -acion, -acioun, borrowed from Old French -aciun, from Latin -ātiōnem, and forms words from Latin and French (create, creation and moderate, moderation), but for some there is no underlying verb form (constellation). Another source is from Greek verbs ending in -ize (organize, organization). There is also a large group of words derived through French (modify, modification; form, formation) though usually incorrectly considered to be formed in English. Nevertheless -ation is an active suffix in English producing such words as flirtation, starvation, and both-eration and generally taking on the meaning of verbs in -ing, from which back formations of new verbs occur where there is no underlying verb form: administrate (1651) from administration (1333), evaluate (1842) from evaluation (1755), hibernate (before 1802) from hibernation (1664), medicate (1623) from medication (before 1425), and syllabicate (1775) from syllabication (1631). A Latin past participial stem exists for a few of these verbs, but evidence points to the noun in -ation as the source in English for these verbs.

-ative a suffix forming adjectives, and meaning: 1 tending to, as in talkative = tending to talk. 2 having to do with, as in qualitative = having to do with quality. English -ative was borrowed directly from Latin -ātivus (-āt-, past participial stem in -ātus, -ātum of verbs ending in -āre, such as dēmōnstrāre, English demonstrate) + -ivus (the adjective suffix, see -IVE). Many English words were also borrowed through French and Old French -atif (masculine), -ative (feminine) from Latin -ātivus, such examples include affirmative and representative. Still others are formed in English directly from nouns in -ty but based on the Latin noun stem, such as authoritative from Latin stem auctōritāt-, and qualitative from qualitāt-.

Atlantic adj. Probably before 1425 Atlantik, from earlier noun use Atlant 1387, both uses referring to the sea on the west coast of Africa, named after Mount Atlas in Mauritania, which, according to Classical mythology, supported the heavens (an extension of the Classical idea of the heavens resting on the shoulder of the Titan Atlas); later extended to the entire ocean.

English Atlantic was borrowed from Latin Atlanticus, from Greek Atlantikós having to do with Atlas (Atlant-, stem of Átlās ATLAS + -ikós English suffix -IC).

Atlas or atlas n. 1 chief supporter; mainstay. 1589, adopted in English from the name Atlas, a Titan in Greek mythology who bore the heavens or world on his shoulders, from Latin Atlās, from Greek Átlās. 2 Usually atlas, book of maps. 1636, adopted in English from New Latin Atlas, said to have been used originally by Gerhardus Mercator, the Flemish map-maker of the 1500's, from the practice of placing a picture of Atlas on the front page of collections of maps. Atlas may also have been borrowed from the earlier French use, recorded in 1595.

atmosphere n. 1677, perhaps influenced by French atmosphère (1665), but probably suggested by Bishop John Wilkins' use of New Latin atmosphæra (1638); formed from Greek atmós vapor + sphaîra sphere.

The figurative sense of surrounding influence appeared sometime between 1797 and 1803. —atmospheric adj. 1783, formed from English atmosphere + suffix -ic.

atoll n. 1625 atollon, borrowed from atolu, a word of the Maldivian Islands in the Indian Ocean (apparently applied in the Maldives to the islands themselves), perhaps from Malayalam aḍal uniting, closing.

French had an earlier form attollon (1611), borrowed from Portuguese attollon, and Sinhalese ātull meaning "interior"; but no relationship to English atoll has been formally established, especially with the modern French word, which was apparently reborrowed from English as atoll in 1848.

atom n. About 1477 attome, the smallest part of a substance; borrowed from Middle French atome, and as a learned borrowing from Latin atomus (used especially by Lucretius, about 96–55 B.C., in describing an atomic theory of materialism), from Greek átomos (used in reference to an atomic philosophy of all matter by Leucippus, about 500 B.C., later enhanced by Democritus, about 460–357 B.C.), noun use of átomos indivisible (a- without + tómos a cutting, from témnein to cut; see TOME). Atom in the sense of the smallest particle of an element in a chemical reaction was used by the British chemist John Dalton in 1805, and atomic in this sense may have appeared at the same time, though the form was known in English as early as 1678.

atone v. Probably about 1300 atonen to reconcile; developed in English from the adverbial phrase at on in agreement (probably about 1225). —atonement n. 1513, reconciliation, possibly developed in English from the phrase at onement a being at one, i.e., in accord; but more likely formed in English from earlier atone + -ment.

atrium n. 1 hall or court. 1577, borrowed from Latin ātrium, of uncertain origin. 2 either of the two upper cavities of the heart. 1870, an extension of definition 1.

atrocitiy n. 1534, borrowed, through influence of Middle French atrocité, from Latin atrōcītās, from atrōx gloomy, cruel, fierce (stem atr-, related to āter, black, dark + a lost noun ōqus* eye, face); for suffix see -ITY. —atrocious adj. 1669, formed in English from Latin atrōci- (stem of atrōx gloomy, cruel) + English suffix -ous.

atrophy n. 1620, borrowed probably through French atrophie, from Late Latin atrophia, from Greek atrophía (a- without + trophé nourishment, from tréphēin, fatten, nourish); for suffix see -Y³. —v. 1865, from the noun.

attach v. Before 1338, take or seize by law; borrowed perhaps through an Anglo-Latinized form attachiare (1258) of Old French atachier (1080) hold fast, fasten; earlier estachier fasten, from estache post, door jamb; ultimately from a Germanic source (compare Old English staca STAKE¹ post). The general sense of to fasten came into English in the 1400's. —attachment n. (1) the act of attaching or seizing by law. Before 1400, borrowed through an Anglo-Latinized form attachimentis (1258), from Old French atachier; for suffix see -MENT. (2) something that is attached (before 1797).

attack v. 1600, borrowed from French attaquer, from Italian attaccare (from the same source as Old French atachier; see ATTACH, which was used occasionally from the 1400's to the 1600's to mean to attack). —n. 1667, from the verb (perhaps influenced by French attaque). Attack is a re-formation in English taking the place of attach, n., a seizure or attack of fever, a use lost sometime in the 1400's.

attain v. Probably before 1300, borrowed from Old French ataign-, stem of ataindre to touch upon, seize, affect, from Vulgar Latin attangere*, alteration of Latin attingere (at- to + tangere to touch). —attainment n. 1384, formed from

English attain + -ment, probably by influence of Old French ataignement. — attainable adj. 1647, formed from English attain + -able.

attainder n. 1444, borrowed through noun use of Anglo-French ateindre, Old French ataindre to touch upon, seize; see ATTAIN. English attainder is related to earlier attaint, v. condemn to loss of property and civil rights (about 1390) and ateynt (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French ataint, past participle of ataindre.

attempt v. Before 1393, borrowed from Old French attemper, attenter, and directly from Latin attemptāre (at- to, upon + temptāre to try; see TEMPT). — n. About 1534, noun use of attempt v.

attend v. Before 1325 attenden, atenden observe, consider, pay attention; borrowed through Old French atendre pay attention, and directly from Latin attendere pay attention to, listen to; literally, stretch to (at- to, variant of ad- before t + tendere to stretch). — attendance n. About 1380, attendaunce duty, service; borrowed from Old French atendance, from atendre pay attention, and Anglo-Latin attendencia, from Latin attendentem (nomitive attendēns), present participle of attendere; for suffix see -ANCE. — attendant n. Before 1422, from earlier adjective use; borrowed from Middle French attendant, present participle of attendre attend (Old French atendre); for suffix see -ANT.

attention n. About 1380, borrowed from Latin attentiōnem (nominative attentiō), from attendere ATTEND; for suffix see -ION. The word disappeared from the record after the late 1400's, and subsequent use in English, in Shakespeare's Richard II (1593), was probably a reborrowing. — attentive adj. Before 1382 (implied in attentively); borrowed from Middle French attentif attentive, probably from Latin attentus, past participle; for suffix see -IVE.

attenuate v. Probably before 1425 attenuen, borrowed from Old French attenuē; replaced by attenuate (1530), verb use of Middle English attenuate, adj., emaciated, thin (probably existing before 1425); borrowed from Latin attenuātus, past participle of attenuāre (at- to + tenuāre make thin, from tenuis thin; see THIN). — attenuation n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Latin attenuātiōnem (nominative attenuātiō), from attenuāre attenuate; for suffix see -TION.

attest v. 1596, borrowed through Middle French attester, Old French atester, from Latin attestārī confirm, bear witness (at- to + testārī bear witness, from testis witness). Also perhaps a back formation from attestation. — attestation n. 1451, borrowed, perhaps through Middle French attestation, and directly from Latin attestātiōnem (nominative attestātiō), from attestārī bear witness; for suffix see -TION.

attic n. 1696, a low decorative story above the main facade of a building, later referred to as the attic storey (1724), shortened to attic by 1855; borrowed from French attique, learned borrowing from Latin Atticus, from Greek Attikós of Attica, a region in ancient Greece whose style of architecture was represented by this structure.

attire v. Probably before 1300 atiren to dress (meat), also to dress, adorn, or equip for war; borrowed from Old French atirer, atirier arrange, equip, dress (a- to + tire order, rank). — n. Probably before 1300, noun use of attire, v.

attitude n. 1695, posture of a figure in a statue or painting; borrowing of French attitude, from Italian attitudine fitness, disposition, from Late Latin aptitudinem, accusative of aptitūdō fitness, from Latin aptus joined, fitted; see APT; for suffix see -TUDE.

Originally a technical term in the fine arts, the term was extended to mean posture of the body implying a mental state (1725) and manner of acting representative of a mental state (1837), introducing the phrase attitude of mind (1862).

atto- a combining form meaning one quintillionth (10¹⁸), as in attosecond. 1962, borrowed from Danish atten eighteen (related to Old Icelandic átján; cognate with Old English eahtatēne eighteen) + connective -o-, as in quadro-, sexto-.

attorney n. About 1303 aturne, later atournei (about 1440); borrowed through Anglo-French aturné, aturné, from Old French aturné, aturné, past participle of aturner, aturner to decree, assign, appoint, prepare (a- to + turner, turner to turn).

The doubling of the t, about 1440, was an attempt to establish what was thought to be its original Latin form. — attorney general, 1533, legal officer of the State, from earlier meaning of a legal representative acting under power of attorney (1292).

attract v. Probably before 1425, to draw out (diseased matter) as a means of treatment; borrowed from Latin attrahere, past participle of attrahere draw to (at- to + trahere to draw). The sense of draw near appears in 1568. — attraction n. Before 1400, the action of drawing out diseased matter, extraction; borrowed probably through Anglo-French attraction, Old French attraction, from Latin attractionem (nominative attractiō), from attrahere, past participle of attrahere; for suffix see -TION. — attractive adj. Before 1398, having the ability to draw off and ingest nutriment; borrowed perhaps through Middle French attractif, attractive, from Medieval Latin attractivus, from Latin attractus; for suffix see -IVE.

attribute n. 1373, borrowed from Latin attribūtus, past participle of tribuere assign to (at- to + tribuere assign, give, bestow). — v. 1523, developed in English from earlier participial adjective attribut (probably before 1425); borrowed from Latin attribūtus, past participle of tribuere. — attribution n. 1467, borrowed from Middle French attribution, from Latin attributiōnem (nominative attributiō), from tribuere; for suffix see -TION. — attributive adj. 1606, borrowed from French attributif, attributive, from Latin attribūtus, past participle of tribuere; for suffix see -IVE. — n. 1750, noun use of attributive, adj.

attrition n. Probably before 1425, a rubbing away by friction; earlier, meaning regret, a form of contrition; borrowed from Latin attritiōnem (nominative attritiō), from attritus, past participle of atterere rub against (at- to, against + terere to rub; see THROW); for suffix see -TION.

The sense of wearing down the enemy's strength, especially in war of attrition, appeared in 1914.

auburn adj. Before 1420, yellowish or whitish, blond; borrowed through Anglo-French auburn, Old French auborne, from Medieval Latin alburnus whitish, from Latin albus white. In the 1400's to the 1600's often spelled abron, abrone, abrown, which probably gave rise to auburn as a kind of brown.

auction n. 1595, borrowed from Latin auctiōnem (nominative auctiō) sale by increase of bids, literally an increase, from aug-, stem of augere to increase; for suffix see -ION. —v. 1807, from the noun. —auctioneer n. 1708, developed from English auction n. + -eer.

audacity n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Medieval Latin audacitas boldness, from Latin audāx (genitive audācis) bold, from audēre be bold; for suffix see -ITY. —audacious adj. 1550, borrowed from Middle French audacieux, from audace boldness, learned borrowing from Latin audācia; for suffix see -OUS.

audible adj. 1529, borrowed through Middle French audible (1488), and directly from Late Latin audibilis, from Latin audire to hear; for suffix see -IBLE.

audience n. Probably before 1387, an opportunity to be heard; later, group of listeners; borrowed through Anglo-French audience, from Old French, learned borrowing from Latin audientia a hearing, from audientem (nominative audientiēs), present participle of audire hear; for suffix see -ENCE.

audio n. 1940, abstracted from English AUDIO-; was influenced by earlier video (1935).

audio- a combining form meaning sound or hearing, as in audiophile (1951), audiovisual (1937). Modern coinage (1913) from the stem of Latin audire hear + connective -o-.

audit n. 1431, probably formed in English by influence of earlier auditor (before 1333), on the basis of a borrowing from Latin auditus (genitive auditiūs) a hearing, from audire to hear. —v. 1457, verb use of Middle English audit, n. —auditor n. Before 1333, an official who examines accounts, and before 1382, listener; borrowed through Anglo-French auditeur, from Old French auditeur, and directly from Latin auditor a hearer, listener, from audire to hear; for suffix see -OR².

audition n. 1599, power or faculty of hearing; borrowed through Middle French audicion, from Latin auditiōnem (nominative auditiō), from audire hear; for suffix see -TION. The sense of a trial hearing of a performer appeared in 1881. —v. 1935, from the noun.

auditorium n. 1727–51, replacing auditory, developed from Middle English auditorie (about 1384); borrowed from Latin auditorium lecture room, audience, neuter of the adjective auditorius of or for hearing, from auditor a hearer, listener, from audire to hear. —auditory adj. 1578, borrowed from Latin auditorius of or for hearing; for suffix see -ORY.

auger n. Middle English nauger, nawger, navger, developed from Old English (about 700) nafoġār, nabogār nave or hub borer; from a Germanic compound of the words for nave, hub (Old English nafu) and spear, borer (Old English gār), with cognate descendants in Old Icelandic nafarr, Old High German nabugēr, nabagēr, and Old Saxon nabugēr, from Proto-Germanic naβōzaizaz*.

In Middle English, the initial n was dropped by misdivision of a nauger as an auger.

ought n. Before 1300 ought, auht, awiht, developed from Old English (before 1000) āht, contraction of āwiht (ā ever + wiht anything; literally, anything whatever).

augment v. Before 1400, borrowed through Anglo-French, from Old French augmenter, learned borrowing from Late Latin augmentāre, from Latin augmentum an increase, from augere to increase.

augur n. Before 1393, borrowed from Latin augur, a religious official in ancient Rome who foretold events by omens, probably originally meaning an increase in growth (as of crops) enacted in ritual, from augere to increase. —v. 1601, from the noun, and borrowed from Latin augurāri to predict from signs or omens, from augur, n. —augury n. About 1385, borrowed from Old French augurē, augurie, or directly from Latin augurium divination, omen, from augur, n.

august adj. 1664, borrowed from Latin augustus venerable, worthy of honor (assumed as a title by the Roman emperors), and probably originally meaning consecrated by the augurs or consecrated with favorable auguries. Latin augustus developed from augus* (genitive augoris*) increase, power (Latin form which later produced augur), from augere to magnify, increase.

August n. Old English (1097) borrowed from Latin Augustus the sixth month in the Roman calendar, named after Augustus Caesar, from augustus majestic, AUGUST. The earlier Old English name was Wēodmōnath Month of Weeds.

auk n. 1674, borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Norwegian akle, Old Icelandic álka).

aunt n. About 1300, borrowed through Anglo-French aunte, from Old French ante, from Latin amita father's sister.

aura n. 1859, subtle emanation or atmosphere, in a figurative sense. 1732, subtle emanation from any substance, earlier gentle breeze (before 1398); borrowed from Latin aura breeze, breath of air, from Greek aúra breeze, breath.

aural adj. 1847, formed in English from Latin auris ear + English suffix *-al*¹.

aureomycin n. 1948, formed in English from Latin aureus golden (abstracted from Streptomyces aureofaciens fungus from which the drug is produced) + English -mycin (from Greek mýkēs fungus + English *-in*²).

auricle n. 1 chamber of the heart. Probably before 1425, borrowed through Old French auricule, from Latin auricula ear, for the shape of the auricles of the heart, said to resemble the ear of a dog or bear. 2 outer part of the ear, 1653; borrowed separately from Latin auricula ear, diminutive of auris ear.

aurochs n. 1835, by misinterpretation of earlier use (1766) referring to an extinct species of wild ox; borrowed from German Aurochs, obsolete form of Auerchs, from Old High aurora n. About 1386, borrowed through Old French aurore, and directly from Latin aurōra dawn, Aurōra the goddess of dawn. —aurora borealis 1621, as originally described by the French physicist and astronomer Pierre Gassendi, northern dawn, later (1727–51) northern light.

German ūrohso (ūro aurochs + ohso ox). Old High German ūro is cognate with Old English ūr and Old Icelandic urr, both meaning aurochs.

auspices n. 1533, sign or omen given by birds; later favor, influence (before 1637); borrowed from Middle and Old French auspice, auspices, learned borrowing from Latin auspiciū divination by observing the flight of birds, from auspex (genitive auspiciis) one who takes signs from the flight of birds (avi-, stem of avis bird + -spex observer, from specere look, observe) —auspicious adj. 1601, formed in English from Latin auspiciū + English suffix -ous.

austere adj. Before 1338, borrowed through Old French austere, and directly from Latin austērus, from Greek austērós making the tongue dry; hence, harsh, severe, related to hailos dry. —austerity n. About 1380, borrowed through Old French austerité, and directly from Latin austēritātem (nominative austēritās), from austērus austere; for suffix see -ITY.

austral adj. 1541, borrowed from Latin austrālis, from auster the south wind, known in Old French (1372) but the English word appears to be a separate borrowing from Latin.

authentic adj. 1369 autentyk authoritative; borrowed through Anglo-French autentic, from Old French authentique and from Medieval Latin and Late Latin authenticus, from Greek authētikós, from authēntēs one acting on one's own authority, master, perpetrator (aut- stem of autós self + -hēntēs doer); for suffix see -IC.

Greek and Latin -th- was restored in the 1600's. —authenticity n. 1657, formed from English authentic + -ity, perhaps by influence of Middle French authenticité (1557). —authenticate v. 1653, borrowed, perhaps by influence of Old French authentifier (1265), from Medieval Latin authenticatus, past participle of authenticare, from authenticus authentic; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —authentication n. 1788, formed from English authenticate + -ion.

author n. 1529, alteration by influence of Middle French variant author of Middle English autour, auctour (about 1350); borrowed through Anglo-French autour, autour, autor, from Old French autor, autor, learned borrowings from Latin auctōrem (nominative auctor), literally one who causes to grow; hence, founder, author, from augēre to increase; for suffix see *-OR*².

The spelling author was a scribal variant of autor in Middle French, during the Renaissance by analogy with words in th thought to come ultimately from Greek. —v. 1596, to originate, verb use of author, n. The verb disappeared after the 1630's but was revived, chiefly in the U.S., in the 1940's.

authority n. Before 1535, alteration by influence of Middle French autorité of Middle English autorite, auctorite book or quotation that settles a question (probably before 1200); borrowed through Anglo-French auctorité, autorité, from Old French auctorité, autorité, learned borrowings from Latin auctōritātem (nominative auctōritās), from auctor AUTHOR; for suffix see -ITY. See author for note on -th- spelling. —authoritative adj. 1605, formed from English authority + -ative. —authorize v. 1579, alteration of Middle English autorisen, autorisen (about 1383); borrowed from Old French autoriser, autoriser, from Medieval Latin autorizare, from Latin auctor AUTHOR; for suffix see -IZE. —authorization n. 1610, reformed in English from authorize + -ation; earlier auctorisation (1472–73), quickly dropped out of English.

autism n. 1912, borrowed from German Autismus (coined by Paul Bleuler, 1857–1939, Swiss psychiatrist), from New Latin autismus (aut-, from Greek autós self + -ismus -ism). —autistic adj. 1912, formed from English aut- (from autism + -istic, as in characteristic, the ending -istic being imitative of Greek -istikós). —n. 1968, noun use of autistic, adj.

auto n. 1899, shortened from AUTOMOBILE.

auto⁻¹ a combining form meaning self, one's own, by oneself, as in autobiography, autograph, autointoxication. Sometimes spelled aut- before vowels and h, as in autopsy, authentic. Borrowed from Greek auto-, aut-, combining form of autós self.

auto⁻² a combining form meaning automobile or vehicle, as in autodrome, automaker; a clipped form of English automobile.

autobiography n. 1809, formed from English auto⁻¹ + biography.

autocrat n. 1803, borrowed from French autocrate, from Greek autokratēs ruling by oneself (autós self + krátos strength, power). —autocratic adj. 1823, borrowed from French autocratique; for suffix see -IC.

autograph n. 1791, a person's signature; earlier, an author's own manuscript (1640–44); borrowed by influence of earlier French autographe (1580), from Latin autographum, autographus, from Greek autógraphos written with one's own hand (autós self + gráphein write). —v. 1837, verb use of autograph, n.

automatic adj. 1748, mechanical; formed in English from Greek automátos self-acting + English suffix -ic; see AUTOMATON. —n. automatic pistol. 1902.

automation n. 1948, American English, from autom(atic) operation, coined by Delmar S. Harder, who organized in 1947 a group of specialists he named "automation engineers." —automate v. 1954, American English, back formation from automation.

automaton n. Before 1625, borrowed from Latin automaton, from Greek automátōn, neuter of automátos self-acting, spontaneous (autós self + -matos thinking, animated).

automobile n. 1895, probably developed from the adjective use as in auto-mobile car (1883); borrowed from French automobile, adj. (1861), and influenced by French automobile, n. (1890); a compound of French auto- self + mobile moving. —automotive adj. 1898, formed from English auto⁻¹ + motive.

As a noun automotive appeared in 1865, referring to a kind of flying machine.

autonomy n. 1623, borrowed, perhaps by influence of earlier French autonomie (1596), from Greek autonomiā, from autónomos independent (auto- self + nómos custom, law); for suffix see -Y³. —autonomic adj. 1832, autonomic nervous system (1896), formed from English autonomy + -ic. —autonomous adj. 1800; borrowed, perhaps by influence of earlier French autonome (1751), from Greek autónomos independent; for suffix see -OUS.

autopsy n. 1651, eyewitnessed observation; borrowed from New Latin autopsia, from Greek autopsiā a seeing with one's own eyes, from autóptēs eyewitness (autós + op- root meaning "to see"; see OPTIC). "Dissection of a body" appeared in 1678, probably by influence of earlier Middle French autopsie (1573).

autumn n. 1596 autumne, and 1526, mistakenly as authum both forms alterations of earlier autumpne (about 1380); borrowed from Old French autompne, learned borrowing from Latin autumnus, of uncertain origin. —autumnal adj. 1574, maturing or blooming in autumn; borrowed from Latin autumnālis, from autumnus.

auxiliary adj. 1603, borrowed from Latin auxiliārius, auxiliāris, from auxilium help, probably from a lost adjective auxilis* serving to strengthen, from augēre to increase; for suffix see -ARY. Earlier Middle French auxiliaire (1512) may also have been borrowed by English.

avail v. About 1300 avaien, apparently formed from a- to (from Latin ad-) + vailen to avail (borrowed from Old French vaill-, stem of valoir be worth, from Latin valēre; see VALUE). —n. About 1400, either (1) noun use of avail, v. or (2) a possible mistaking Old French de vaille of value, as d'availle. —available adj. 1417, valid, effective; 1444, beneficial, serviceable; hence, 1827, capable of being made use of, at one's disposal; formed from English avail + -able.

avalanche n. 1771, borrowing of French avalanche, from Swiss French avalantse descent, possibly an alteration by transposition of l resulting from lavanche, from a pre-Latin Alpine language.

The formation of this word was further influenced by Old French avaler go down, from à val down, from Latin ad vallem to the valley; and is felt by some to be ultimately from Vulgar Latin lābīna*, from Latin lābī to slide.

Earlier forms appear in English as valancas (1765), borrowed from Italian valanca; or valanche (1766), borrowed from dialectal French valanche or by misdivision of standard French l'avalanche.

avant-garde 1910, borrowed from French, literally, advance guard, used in English between the 1400's and 1700's.

avarice n. Probably about 1300, borrowing of Old French avarice, learned borrowing from Latin avaritia, from avārus greedy, related to avēre crave, long for. —avaricious adj. About 1390, borrowed from Old French avaricieux, avaricieuse, from avarice.

avenge v. Probably before 1387, borrowed through Anglo-French avenger, from Old French avengier (a- to + vengier take revenge).

avenue n. 1600, an approach, passage, pass; borrowed from Middle French avenue way of access or approach, Old French act of approaching, arrival, from feminine of avenu, past participle of avenir arrive, from Latin advenire. The extended meaning of broad, tree-lined roadway appeared in 1654, the current sense of a wide main street, probably before 1858.

aver v. Before 1400 averen, oueren; borrowed through Anglo-French averer, from Old French, verify, from Vulgar Latin advērare* make true, prove to be true (from Latin ad- to + vērū true).

average n. 1540, average extra charge or expense of shipment, alteration (influenced by the ending -age in words like damage, cartage) of earlier averag tax on goods, loss arising from damage at sea (1491) developed between 1250 and 1490 as an Anglicized borrowing from Old French avarie, and from Italian avaria, ultimately from Arabic 'arwārīya damaged goods, from 'awār damage, defect, from 'āra to spoil.

The current sense developed from "an equal distribution of expense or loss in proportion to their interests" (1598); any similar distribution based on a median estimate (1735); the arithmetic mean so obtained; (1755), extended to "any mean." —adj. 1770, adjective use of average, n. —v. 1769, verb use of average, n.

averse adj. Before 1450, borrowed through Old French avers, and directly from Latin āversus, past participle of āvertere AVERT. —aversion n. 1596, borrowed from Middle and Old French aversion, from Latin āversīōnem (nominative āversīō), from āversus, past participle; for suffix see -ION.

avert v. Probably before 1439, borrowed from Old French avertir, from Latin āvertere turn aside (ā- from + vertere to turn).

aviary n. 1577, borrowed from Latin aviārium, neuter of aviārius of birds, from avis bird; for suffix see -ARY.

aviation n. 1866, borrowing of French aviation (1863), from Latin avis bird + French -ation. —aviator n. 1887, borrowed from French aviateur, from aviation.

avid adj. 1769, borrowed, through influence of earlier French and Middle French avide (1470), from Latin avidus, from avēre desire eagerly; and probably as a back formation in English from avidity, or from the now obsolete avidous (formed in English about 1542 from Latin avid(us) + English suffix -ous). —avidity n. 1449, borrowed from Middle French avidité, from Latin aviditatem (nominative aviditās), from avidus greedy, eager; for suffix see -ITY.

avocado n. 1763, avocado, avocado, earlier avogato (1697); borrowed from Spanish avocado, alteration of an earlier form similar to aguacate, from Nahuatl ahuacatl testicle.

avocation n. Before 1617, a calling away from one's occupation, diversion; borrowed from Latin āvocatīōnem (nominative āvōcātīō), from āvōcāre (ā- away + vōcāre to call); for suffix see -TION.

avoid v. Before 1325, clear out, withdraw (oneself); borrowed probably from Anglo-French avoider, variant of Old French esvuidier to empty, quit (es- out + vuidier to empty, void, from Vulgar Latin vōcītāre*, from vōcītus* VOID). —avoidance n. Before 1398, formed from English avoid + suffix -ance.

avoirdupois n. 1656, alteration of earlier avoir-de-peise (probably before 1325), borrowed from Old French avoir de pois, avoir de peis goods of weight (avoir property, goods, a noun use of avoir have + de of + peis weight).

avouch v. 1494, borrowed from Middle French avochier call upon as an authority, from Old French, from Latin advocāre call to (as a witness); see ADVOCATE.

avow v. Probably before 1300, borrowed through Anglo-French avoer, avouer, from Old French avōer, avouer acknowledge, accept, especially as a protector (a- to + vouer to affirm, vow, from vou VOW). —avowal n. 1727–31, formed from English avow, v. + suffix *-al*².

avuncular adj. 1831; formed in English, perhaps through influence of earlier French avunculaire (1801), from Latin avunculus mother's brother + English suffix -ar; see UNCLE.

awake v. Probably before 1200 awaken wake up; developed from Old English āwacan (ā- a-⁵ + -wacan, cognate with Gothic wakan stay awake from Proto-Germanic wak-*; see WAKE¹). —adj. Before 1300, short for awaken, original past participle of awaken.

award v. About 1390, decide after careful consideration; borrowed from Anglo-French awarder, variant of Old French esguarder decide, examine, watch out (es- out + garder to watch). The sense of to confer, grant appeared (in judicial use) in 1523. —n. About 1390, decision after careful consideration; borrowed from Anglo-French award, variant of Old French esguard, from esguarder decide, examine. The sense of something awarded appeared in 1596.

aware adj. Probably before 1325 a ware watchful, conscious; developed from earlier iwar (about 1175), found in Old English (about 950) gewær (ge- an intensive prefix + wær wary; see WARY); cognate with Old Saxon giwar, Middle Dutch gheware, Old High German giwar (modern German gewahr), all meaning aware, from Proto-Germanic ja-waraz*; see WARY.

away adv. Probably before 1300 away, away; developed from earlier aweī, a-wei (about 1150), found in Old English aweg and (about 725, in Beowulf) on weg (on on + weg way). The sense of the original compound is to another place, and can be compared with Old High German in wëg on the way, Middle High German enwëc away (modern German weg away).

awe n. Probably before 1300, developed from earlier age (about 1250) and aghe (probably about 1200); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic agi fear) from Proto-Germanic ag-*.

Old Icelandic agi is also cognate with Old English ege fear, awe, which yielded eie and aye meaning fear, terror in early Middle English, before being replaced finally in the 1400's by the form awe. —awful adj. Before 1425, developed from agheful (probably about 1200) (aghe awe + -ful). In the 1400's awful, agheful replaced Old English egfull (recorded before 899). —awesome adj. 1598, formed from English awe, n. + *-some*¹.

awkward adj. Before 1400, in the wrong direction; formed from awk untoward, backhanded + -ward. The old word awk, obsolete by the 1600's, was borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic ofugr turned the wrong way, and Swedish and Norwegian avig). The sense of "clumsy" appeared in 1530.

awl n. Old English awel (about 700), æł (about 885), awul (about 1000).

Though the Old English forms awel and awul have not been explained, the inherited Old English form appears to be æł, cognate with Old High German āla awl (modern German Ahle), Middle Dutch āl, from Proto-Germanic ælō*. Possibly Old English awel, awul represent a borrowing from a Scandinavian word, as evidenced by the Old Icelandic alr and modern Icelandic alur, from Proto-Germanic alás*.

awning n. 1624, cover above ship's deck; of unknown origin. The extended meaning of a canvas cover in front of a tent first appeared in American English in 1806, and that of a cover over a window or porch, in 1852.

ax or axe n. Old English æces (before 830); æcs, æx (before 899); acas (about 950, in Northumbrian dialect); cognate with Old Frisian axa ax, Old Saxon akus, Old High German achus (modern German Axt), Old Icelandic œx, Gothic aqizi, from Proto-Germanic forms akwiz-* and akus-*. —v. 1677, from the noun.

axil n. 1794, borrowed from New Latin axilla, from Latin axilla armpit, related to axis axle.

axiom n. 1485, borrowed from Middle French axiome, from Latin axiōma, from Greek axiōma something thought worthy or fit, from axiōn think worthy or fit, from axios worthy, built on a lost noun ak-tis* weight, from áein weigh, pull. —axiomatic adj. 1797, borrowed from French axiomatique, from Greek axiōmatikós, from axiōmatos (genitive of axiōma); for suffix see -IC.

axis n. Before 1398, borrowed from Latin axis axle (of a wheel), axis (of the earth, heavens, etc.); cognates with Old English eax, æx axle, axis, Old High German ahsa, from Proto-Germanic aHsō*, and with Greek áxōn axis, axle.

axle n. 1367–68, earlier in the compound axeltre axletree (1290). The form eaxl is found in Old English, but axle and axel are thought to come by way of the earlier compound axeltre, borrowed from Old Icelandic axultre (axull axis, axle + trē tree). Old Icelandic axull is from Proto-Germanic aHsulaz*.

axon n. 1899, New Latin axon, from Greek áxōn AXIS.

ay¹ or aye¹ adv. always, ever. Probably about 1200 ai, borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic ei). The word is cognate with Old English ā, ō always, ever.

aye² or ay² adv., interj. yes. 1576, spelled I, 1714 ay; developed perhaps by alteration of Middle English yai (existing before 1225), variant of ye, ya yea, yes; see YEA. —n. affirmative answer or vote. 1589, spelled I, 1669 aye; from the adverb.

azalea n. 1753, New Latin azalea, borrowed from Greek azalēā, feminine of azalēos dry, from ázein parch. The plant was so named from the dry soil in which it grows, or, possibly, from its dry, brittle wood.

B

babble v. prattle. Before 1250, babelen, bablen; probably of imitative origin. Similar forms are found in many languages: compare Middle Low German babbelen to babble, Icelandic babbla, Latin babulus babbler, balbus stammering, and Sanskrit balbalā-kr- to stammer; all probably formed on the repeated syllables ba, ba, or bar, bar, sounds typically made by infants and used to express childish prattle.

babe n. Before 1393, apparently from baban (probably before 1200); perhaps ultimately from a child's word.

baboon n. About 1400 babewyn; earlier babeweis grotesque figures (probably about 1320); borrowed from Old French babouin baboon, fool; perhaps related to Old French babine lip, and babiller to babble, probably ultimately imitative of the chatter of these apes; for ending see -OON.

baby n. About 1378, baby, babi, abee, a diminutive form of BABE.

baccalaureate n. 1625–49, borrowed from Medieval Latin baccalaureatus, from baccalaureus student with the first or bachelor's degree; for suffix see -ATE³. The form baccalaureus was altered by a play on words from baccalarius (see BACHELOR) as if connected with bacca lauri laurel berry.

bacchanal n. 1536, borrowed from Latin bacchānālis having to do with Bacchus (Dionysus), the god of wine, from Greek Bákchos, a name of unknown origin.

bachelor n. Probably before 1300 bachelor: a young man, a squire, a young unmarried man; later a young knight (before 1376), a university graduate or a junior member of a guild (1418). The word is borrowed from Old French bachelor, bachelier, from Medieval Latin baccalaris*, probably a variant of azimuth n. Before 1388 azimut arc of the heavens from the zenith to the horizon which it cuts at right angles; borrowed from Arabic as-sumūt the ways, plural of as-samt the way, direction (as-, variant of al- the + samt way). Compare ZENITH. The -th- spelling arose in the 1500's.

azure n., adj. Probably before 1300, borrowed from Old French azur, from Arabic lāzuward, from Persian lāzward lapis lazuli (or its blue color). The word passed from Arabic into the Romance languages (Spanish and Portuguese azul, French and Romanian azur, etc.) without the initial l-, apparently because it was mistakenly thought to be the definite article l' or la or some variant of it.

baccalarius helper or tenant on a baccalaria, section of land; later in Medieval Latin baccalarius also had the meaning "junior member of a guild, university student," the latter meaning seen in the pun on baccalaureus under BACCALAUREATE.

bacillus n. 1883, New Latin bacillus, prompted by French bacille (1842), from Late Latin bacillus little rod, variant of Latin bacillum, diminutive form of baculum rod, staff. Latin baculum is cognate with Greek bakēterion small staff.

back n. Old English (about 885) bæc; cognate with Old Frisian bek, Old Saxon and Middle Dutch and Old Icelandic bak, Old High German bah back, from Proto-Germanic bakana*, probably related to Old High German bahho side of BACON. —adj. Probably before 1200. —adv. Before 1390. Both the adverb and the adjective developed from abak, Old English on bæc. —v. Before 1376.

Various compounds include: backache (1601); backbiting (probably before 1200); backbone (before 1325); background (1672); backlog (1684, American English, figurative sense 1883); backyard (1659, American English).

backgammon n. 1645, probably developed from back, adj. + Middle English gamen to GAME, GAMBLE. Originally called tables (1297, but known before 700) because the pieces, when taken up, had to go back and reenter at the table (i.e. the board).

backward or backwards adj., adv. Before 1325 bakward; developed from abakward, modeled on hindeward, foreward, using Old English adjective and adverbial suffix -weard expressing direction toward. The word is cognate with Old Frisian bekward, bekwardich backward.

bacon n. About 1330 bacoun, borrowed from Old French bacon, bacun (perhaps through Medieval Latin baconem), from a Germanic source (compare Old High German bahho side of bacon, Middle High German bache ham, bacon, modern German -backe, as in Hinterbacke buttock, and Middle Dutch baken side of bacon, from Proto-Germanic bakōn-*).

bacteria n., plural of bacterium, single-celled organisms. 1847–49, New Latin bacteria, plural of bacterium, prompted by French bactérie (1842), from Greek baktērion small staff, diminutive of báktron stick, rod.

bacteriology n. 1884, formed probably through influence of earlier German Bakteriologie, from English bacteri(um) + connective form -o- + -logy.

bad adj. 1203 badde, in the surname Baddecheese; origin uncertain; possibly developed from a shortened form of Old English bædling an effeminate man, pederast, from Proto-Germanic baidlingaz*. The meaning “pederast” in Old English may account for the small number of written examples up to the early 1400’s, the word evil being more popular in use until the 1700’s. The forms badder, baddest occurred from the 1300’s to the 1700’s, though Shakespeare used worse, worrest.

badge n. Probably before 1400 bage, bagge; borrowed perhaps from Anglo-French bage (1334), or Anglo-Latin bagis, plural of bagia (about 1370), both meaning emblem; of unknown origin.

badger n. 1523, perhaps related to badge (because of the white blaze on its forehead), but it is blaze rather than badge that exists in this meaning; so the origin of badger is unknown. The Middle English brok and Old English broc were the terms for this animal, as in Tommy Brock, in Beatrix Potter’s The Tale of Mr. Tod. —v. 1794, to bait like a badger, pester, tease; from the noun.

badminton n. 1874, after Badminton, the country seat of the Duke of Beaufort, where the game may have been first played, after British officials stationed in India introduced the game, which in India is often called poona.

baffle v. confound. 1548, originally Scottish, meaning to disgrace publicly. In the later sense of confound, bewilder (about 1590), probably related to French bafouer to abuse, hoodwink, baffle. —n. a device for changing the flow of air, water, etc. 1913, developed from earlier meaning of baffle, v. (1885) to control by changing the flow of air, water, etc.

bag n. Probably before 1200 bagge; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic baggi pack, bundle). Medieval Latin bagia and Old French bague sack, chest, are probably from a word of Germanic source. —v. About 1412 baggen to put into a bag, developed from Middle English bagge, n. —bagman n. This word, known today primarily as a slang term for “a person who collects graft or protection money,” was also known in Middle English, one of its senses being “tax collector (1377).”

bagatelle n. trifle. 1637, borrowed from French bagatelle, from Italian bagatella, probably a diminutive of bagata a trifle, Italian dialect bagia berry, from Latin bāca berry, pearl.

bagel n. ring-shaped roll of bread. 1919 beigel, 1932 bagel, borrowed from Yiddish beygl, from Middle High German boug- ring, bracelet, from Old High German boug, related to bïogan to bend.

baggage n. Probably about 1440, borrowed from Old French bagage, from bague pack, bundle, from Medieval Latin bagia, perhaps from a Germanic source (compare Old Icelandic baggi pack, bundle); for suffix see -AGE.

bail¹ n. bond money. 1485, developed from an earlier meaning temporary release from jail or custody (1423), a sense that developed from a still earlier meaning captivity, custody, stewardship (before 1338); borrowed through Anglo-French bail, from Old French baillier hand over, control, guard, from Latin bajulāre bear (a burden for pay), from bajulus porter.

bail² n. curved handle of a pail or kettle. 1447 beyl, borrowed probably from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic beygla bending, hoop, ring, and beyla hump, swelling, and beyglast to bend; Danish bøjle bar, strap, Swedish bögel hoop, ring). The Old Icelandic beyglast is probably cognate with Old English būgan to BOW¹ bend.

bail³ v. throw out (water). 1613, verb use developed from baille (1353), balie (1336) bucket; borrowed from Old French baille bucket, from Vulgar Latin bajula*, from Latin bajulus porter.

bailiff n. About 1242, as a surname, later an administrator of a district (about 1300); borrowed from Old French baillif, accusative of baillis administrative official, deputy, from Vulgar Latin bajulivus*, from Latin bajulus porter. Compare BAIL¹.

bailiwick n. district of a bailiff. 1444 Baillywyke, apparently by alteration of earlier baillywyke (1431), formed from bailiff + wick village. Wick is found in Old English wīc, a word surviving mainly in place names, as in Hardwick and Wickham, ultimately a borrowing of Latin vīcus village. The extended sense “one’s field of knowledge, authority, etc.” first appears in American English (1843).

bairn n. child. Middle English barn (probably about 1150), developed from Old English bearn (about 725, in Beowulf), probably related to beran BEAR² carry, give birth. Though the word resides now chiefly in Scottish, it was once of widespread use in older forms of English.

bait n. About 1300, food used to entice prey; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic beita food, especially to entice prey, beit pasture, related to bīta to bite). —v. About 1300, to attack or torment with a dog; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic beita to cause to bite, hunt, a causative of bīta to bite, cognate with Old English bætan to cause to bite, related to bītan to bite, and with Old and Middle High German beizen and Gothic baitjan* to bait, from Proto-Germanic baitjanan*; see BITE).

bake v. Old English bacan, bōc, bacen (before 893); cognate with Old High German bahhan to bake, Middle High German bachen, Old Icelandic baka (Norwegian bake, Danish bage, Swedish baka) from Proto-Germanic bakanan*, and with Old High German backan (modern German backen) and Middle balance n. Probably about 1200 balauce instrument for weighing, scale; borrowed through Anglo-French balance, variant of Old French balance, from Medieval Latin bilancia, from Late Latin bilānx (accusative bilancem) referring to a scale having two plates (possibly Latin bi- two + lānx, accusative lancem, shallow pan; or perhaps a borrowing in Latin from some unknown source). —v. 1583, either: borrowed from Old French balancer, or formed from English balance, n.

Dutch backen (modern Dutch bakken), from Proto-Germanic bakkanan*. Compare BATCH. —baker n. 1177 bakere in a surname; developed from Old English bæcere, bæcestre. —bakery n. 1545, work of a baker, from English baker + -y, and 1826, shop where baked goods are sold, from English bake + -ery, both formed independently of earlier bakern (before 1000), from Old English bæcern.

balcony n. 1618, borrowed from Italian balcone, derived from balco scaffold + -one, augmentative suffix indicating large and often awkward. Italian balco was probably from a Germanic source (compare Old High German balcho, balko beam, scaffold; related to Old English balca beam, ridge); see BALK.

bald adj. 1 wholly or partly without hair on the head. Before 1292 bal- in a surname; about 1300 balled. 2 having a white spot or blaze on the head, as some animals are marked (before 1325).

It is unclear just how one sense developed from the other; Middle English balled probably developed from Celtic bal a white mark + -ed adjectival suffix (compare Middle Irish, modern Irish, and Gaelic ball a spot, mark; Middle Irish ballach spotted; Breton bal a white mark on an animal's face; Welsh bal having a white spot on the forehead, used of horses. The word is also possibly related to Danish bældet bald).

There is speculation that bald may be related to English ball a round protuberance, but examples are wanting, though this path leads to Gothic bala- pale (horse), Old High German belihha coot, Old Icelandic bāl fire, flame, Old English bæl fire, flame, Old Slavic bělŭ white, and Sanskrit bhāla-m luster, forehead.

bale n. About 1380, borrowed from Old French bale and Medieval Latin bala ball, from a Germanic source (compare Old High German balla ball); see BALL¹.

baleen n. About 1312 balayn whalebone (about 1300 bleine, 1333 balayn whale); borrowed from Old French baleine, balaine whale, whalebone, from Latin balēna, dialectal variant of balæna whale.

baleful adj. Old English (before 1000) bealufol, bealofol (bealu, bealo evil + ful full). The now archaic bale evil, is found in Old English (about 725, in Beowulf) bealu, bealo, balu evil, misfortune, and is cognate with Old High German balo destruction, Old Icelandic böl misfortune, damage.

balk n. Old English balca ridge (before 900); cognate with Old Frisian balka beam, Old Saxon balko, Old High German balco, balko (modern German Balken), Middle Dutch balc (modern Dutch balk), and Old Icelandic bjalki (compare also Old Icelandic bälkr partition), from Proto-Germanic balkan-, belkan-.

The meaning "hindrance" is first recorded about 1405, and developed as a figurative sense from "ridge, mound" (about 1380); earlier "strip of unplowed land," (1202). —v. Before 1393, Middle English balken make ridges in plowing; from verb use of Middle English balke, n., developed from Old English balca ridge.

ball¹ n. round object, ball. Probably before 1200 bal; perhaps developed from Old English beal*, beall*, borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic boltr ball), from Proto-Germanic balluz* (earlier balnus*), and related to Old High German ballo, balla ball, from Proto-Germanic ballōn* (earlier balnōn*), and Old English bealluc testicle.

ball² n. dancing party. 1632, borrowed from French bal a dance, from baller to dance, Old French baler to dance, from Late Latin ballāre to dance, from Greek ballízein to jump, throw the legs about, dance.

ballad n. Before 1393 balade a poem or song in a form of strict or varied stanzas; borrowed from Old French ballade, from Old Provençal balada song for dancing, dance, from balar to dance, from Late Latin ballāre to dance. —ballade n. About 1386, perhaps a separate borrowing of Old French ballade. The meaning of a musical composition was first used by Frédéric Chopin (d. 1849).

ballast n. 1530, borrowed from Low German ballast, probably from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Danish and Old Swedish and Norwegian barlast, before 1400, possibly a compound of bar bare + last load; that is, a bare or mere load, for the sake of weight only).

ballerina n. 1792, borrowing of Italian ballerina, feminine of ballerino a dancer, from ballare to dance, from Late Latin ballāre to dance.

ballet n. 1667, borrowed from French ballet, from Italian balletto, diminutive of ballo ball (dance), from ballare to dance, from Late Latin ballāre to dance.

ballistics n. 1753, probably formed in English from Latin ballista machine for hurling stones or other missiles (from Greek ballistēs, from ballízein, in the sense of balléin to throw) + English suffix -ics, as in physics, athletics, etc.; see BALL² dance. —ballistic adj. 1775, adjective use of ballistics, n. with loss of s; or perhaps borrowed from earlier French balistique (1647), from Latin ballista + French adjective suffix -ique. Alternatively, formed in English from Latin ballista + English suffix -ic. —ballistic missile, 1954, earlier ballistic rocket (1949).

balloon n. 1579, ballone game played with a large leather ball; borrowed perhaps partly from earlier French ballon (1549), and from Italian dialect ballone; from Italian balla ball, from a Germanic source (compare Old High German balla ball) + Italian -one augmentative suffix indicating something large; for ending see -oon. The sense of a large gas-filled bag; as one for carrying a basket with a passenger first appeared in 1783 after the flights of the Montgolfier brothers.

ballot n. 1549, small ball for secret voting; borrowed from Italian dialect ballotta, diminutive form of balla ball; see BALLOON. — ballot box (before 1680) balm n. 1373 balme; before 1300 baum; probably before 1200 basme; borrowed from Old French basme or baume, from Latin balsamum, from Greek bálsamon.

The English spelling with l was influenced by the Latin balsamum.

baloney n., interj. Slang. nonsense. 1928 boloney, American English, probably related in meaning to earlier use as a term of contempt for an inferior prizefighter (1920), alteration of bologna (1850) type of sausage traditionally stuffed with odds and ends from slaughter, from Bologna, Italy, where these sausages were made. Baloney and bologna are pronounced bəló'nē, and the spelling baloney is used both for the sausage and to mean nonsense. Why "nonsense" is a matter of conjecture, but it follows a long history of applying names of food to human attributes and conditions: ham, chicken, goose, puddinghead, molasses, vinegar, hot dog.

balsa n. 1593, a raft of the South American Indians; 1917, a very light wood; both terms apparently borrowed from Spanish balsa.

balsam n. The form balsam is found in Old English (about 1000), but was superseded by basme BALM, until late in the 1300's and by the Latin form balsamum. The modern form balsam was reintroduced after 1579.

baluster n. supporting post of a railing on a balcony, staircase, etc. 1602 (also ballister), borrowed from Italian balaustro, from balaustro wild pomegranate flower, from Latin balaustium, from Greek balaústion; so called from the resemblance of a baluster to the double-curving calyx tube of the wild flower.

The word was probably later reinforced by French balustre (not recorded in French as an architectural term before 1633).

balustrade n. banister. 1644, borrowed from French balustrade, from Italian balastrata balustrade, from balaustro BALUSTER.

bamboo n. woody grass. 1598, borrowed from Dutch bamboe, bamboes, from Portuguese bambu, from Malay bambu, perhaps introduced from Kanarese, a Dravidian language of southern India.

bamboozle v. cheat, deceive. 1703, origin uncertain (but compare Scottish bumbaze, bombaze to confuse, probably from bombaze stuff with cotton, pad, borrowed from Old French bombace, n.; see BOMBAST).

ban¹ v. forbid, prohibit. Formed in Middle English about 1378, perhaps from fusion of a word of Scandinavian origin (compare Old Icelandic banna curse, prohibit) + Old English bannan summon, proclaim (before 800). Old English bannan is cognate with Old Frisian banna, bonna command, proclaim; Old Dutch bannen prohibit (modern Dutch, banish, exile); Old High German bannan, Middle High German (modern German) bannen banish, expel; Gothic bannan* proclaim, command, forbid.

Also the meaning "forbid, prohibit" could have developed from a fusion of meanings in Middle English: (1) curse, condemn (probably about 1150), and (2) summon (probably before 1200).

ban² n. edict, proclamation. About 1300; earlier meaning "a troop of warriors summoned by proclamation" (about 1250); and still earlier in the phrase bane cruces crosses marking a boundary (1228). Formed in Middle English by fusion of Old English (1051–52) ban, earlier geban, gebann a summons, proclamation (before 800) + Old North French ban a summoning for military service, proclamation, from Frankish ban* (compare Old High German ban proclamation commanding or forbidding, from bannan proclaim, command); see BAN¹ in which the cognates listed for the verb occur for the noun, except for the Gothic form. Related to ABANDON.

banal adj. 1840, borrowed from French banal common, ordinary, from an earlier sense "owned in common," from Middle French banal of or belonging to compulsory feudal service, from Old French ban a summoning for military service, see BAN²; for suffix see -AL. — banality n. 1861, borrowed from French banalité, from banal; for suffix see -ITY.

banana n. 1597, borrowed through Portuguese or Spanish banana, from a West African word (compare Mandingo and Wolof banāna, barānda plantain).

band¹ n. group acting together. 1490, borrowed from Middle French bande, from Old French bande, from a Germanic source (compare Gothic bandwa sign, signal). The meaning probably derived from the use of a band of cloth as a mark of identification by members of a group of soldiers (before 1470, *band*², variant of bond), or from a banner as a sign of the group as a whole (banere, probably before 1200); see BANNER. The meaning "a group of musicians" first appeared about 1660. — v. to unite, join together in a group. 1530, borrowed from Middle French bander to join, from bande a group.

band² n. strip of material. 1552 band a strip; developed from Middle English band (1126), dialect variant of bond; fusion of a borrowing from a Scandinavian word (compare Old Icelandic band, from Proto-Germanic bandan*), and from Old French bande strip, Old North French bende flat strip, from a Germanic source (compare Old High German binta band, Old English bindan to bind); see BIND. — v. to bind or fasten with a band or bands. 1530, borrowed from Middle French bander to band, from Old French bande, n.

bandage n. 1599, borrowed from Middle French bandage, from Old French bander to bind, from bande a strip, see BAND²; for suffix see -AGE. — v. 1774, from the noun.

bandana n. 1752, borrowed from Hindi bāndhnū way of tying cloth to produce designs when dyed, tie-dyeing, from bādhna to tie, bind, from Sanskrit bādhnāti binds.

bandit n. 1591 bandito; 1593 bandetto; borrowing of Italian bandito outlaw; literally, proscribed, from the past participle of bandire proscribe, banish, from Medieval Latin bannire proclaim; see BANISH.

bandy v. 1577, to throw or hit (a ball) back and forth; borrowed perhaps from Middle French bandé, past participle of bander return a ball from one's side, to side with, from Old French bander, from bande side, group; see BAND¹ a group.

bane n. Old English bana slayer, cause of death, (less often) murderer (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon bano death, murder, Old Frisian bana, bona, Old High German bano, Middle High German bane, ban, Old Icelandic bani, from Proto-Germanic banōn*.

bang¹ v. to make a loud noise. Probably about 1550, to strike violently often with a resounding blow; perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic banga to strike, hammer, Old Swedish banga to strike, cognate with Low German bangen, bangeln to strike, beat). — n. Probably about 1550, probably borrowed from a noun of a Scandinavian source.

bang² n. Usually, bangs, pl. fringe of hair cut squarely across the forehead. 1878, American English, perhaps influenced by adverb use of *bang*¹ (1828), in the meaning of abruptly, as in hair cut bang off; some sources offer a relation to earlier bang-tailed (1861) of a horse's tail that has been cut horizontally across.

bangle n. 1787, borrowed from Hindi bangrī wrist- or ankle-ring (originally made of colored glass).

banish v. About 1385 banyssen, banysshen to condemn, exile; earlier, forbanishen (about 1300); borrowed from Old French baniss-, stem of banir proclaim, from Medieval Latin bannire proclaim, from bannum proclamation, from a Germanic source (compare Old High German ban proclamation commanding or forbidding, see BAN² edict); for ending see -ISH².

banister n. 1851, the handrail and its balusters on a staircase; earlier bannister (1667), an unexplained alteration of BALUSTER; possibly influenced in formation by the earlier form barrister (1662) of the same meaning.

banjo n. 1774, earlier banshaw (1764), American English; perhaps of African origin, from a Bantu language of West Africa (compare Kimbundu mbanza and Tshiluba mbanzi stringed musical instruments). The earliest citations for this word associate it with the music of American Black slaves. Whether the word developed from a mispronunciation of bandore (an old lutelike instrument) is difficult to establish, but certainly many observers, such as Jefferson, probably equated the bandore, which he wrote bajor, with the banjo.

bank¹ n. pile, heap, ridge. Probably about 1200. The development of this word is uncertain. It does not appear in Old English except in a compound Old English hō-banca, literally, heel-bench, couch, or footstool. If banca*, banc existed as a variant of benc bench, its connection would be through the sense of the turf-covered mounds used for seats in a garden (about 1385).

The word is probably of Scandinavian origin (compare Danish banke, Swedish bank sandbank), but it has other Germanic cognates, from Germanic banki-*; see BENCH. Its early appearance in northern English dialect, suggest the possibility of a Scandinavian source. — v. 1590, earlier banked provided with an embankment (before 1400); from the noun.

bank² n. place for keeping money. 1474, borrowed through Middle French banque, from Italian banca; and 1475, (in a phrase the banke de Medicys); borrowed directly from Italian banca, perhaps by influence of Middle French banque; see BENCH. — v. 1727–51, in Chambers Cyclopaedia, from the noun. — banking n. 1735, from earlier banking, participial adjective (1641).

bank³ n. row of things. Probably before 1200, bench; borrowed from Old French banc, from a Germanic source (compare Old High German bank bench); see BENCH.

bankrupt n. 1533 bank roughte; later bankrupt (1543); borrowed through Middle French banqueroute, and directly from Italian banca rotta bankruptcy, (literally, bank broken; rotta, feminine past participle of rompere to break, from Latin rumper break; the modern form -rupt is an alteration of Medieval Latin ruptus broken). The original meaning in Italian was the ruin or breaking up of a trader's business because of failure to pay creditors, or the abandonment of business to avoid paying debts. — bankruptcy n. 1700, formed from English bankrupt + suffix -cy, as in insolvency.

banner n. Probably before 1200 banere, baner (before 1300); borrowed from Old French banere, baniere, alteration of a Germanic word corresponding to Gothic bandwa, bandwō sign, signal. The formation of the Old French from the Germanic was influenced by another Old French word ban a summoning for military service; see BAN².

banns n. pl. 549 bannes, plural of banne, alteration (influenced by Medieval Latin bannum ban) of earlier bane (about 1440), variant of ban proclamation; see BAN². A proclamation of intent to marry was made a part of ecclesiastical legislation in 1215.

banquet n. Probably before 1475 banquet, borrowed from Middle French banquet, from Italian banchetto, diminutive of banco bench, (in reference to benches placed at a table around which people are eating), variant of banca; see BANK².

bantam n. small domestic fowl. 1749, named after Bantam, a town in Java, from which these small fowl were supposed to have first been imported. The sense of a small, cocky person first appeared in 1837.

banter v. 1676, origin unknown. — n. 1690, possibly from the verb.

baptize v. About 1280 baptyzen, later baptisen (about 1300); borrowed from Old French baptizier, baptisier, batizier, learned borrowings from Latin baptizāre, from Greek baptizein to dip, bathe, from báptein to dip; for suffix see -IZE. — baptism n. About 1303 bapteme, later baptisme (1357); borrowed from Old French baptisme, batesme, learned borrowings from Late Latin baptisma, from Greek báptisma, from baptizein to dip; for suffix see -ISM. — baptist n. Probably before 1200, borrowed from Old French baptiste, learned borrowing from Latin baptista, from Greek baptistēs, from baptizein to dip; for suffix see -IST. Until the 1600's baptist was used only in reference to St. John the Baptist. The name of the sect Baptist is first recorded in 1654.

bar n. Probably before 1200 barre barrier, later a bolt for a door or gate (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French barre, from Vulgar Latin barra*, of uncertain origin. —v. fasten with a bar. About 1280 barren, borrowed from Old French barrer, from barre bar.

barb n. About 1390 barbe; earlier, piece of pleated cloth (1305); borrowed from Old French barbe beard, beardlike appendage, from Latin barba BEARD. —v. 1483, from the noun.

barbarian n. Before 1338 barbaryn an infidel, especially a Muslim; later, a foreigner (1384); borrowed through Old French barbarin, or directly from Medieval Latin barbarinus, probably from Latin barbaria foreign country, from barbarus foreign, from Greek bárbaros foreign, rude; originally, stammering. Ultimately the Greek may be of imitative origin like Sanskrit barbara-s stammering (applied to non-Aryans) and balbalā-kr- to stammer, see BABBLE; for suffix see -IAN.

A related form existed about the same time in Middle English barbariene, both as an adjective (probably before 1350) and later, as a noun (1422); borrowed through Anglo-French barbarie Barbary Coast or directly from Latin barbaria foreign country. —barbaric adj. About 1395 barbarik, borrowed through Old French barbarique like a foreigner, or directly from Latin barbaricus, from Greek barbarikós, from bárbaros foreign, rude; for suffix see -IC. —barbarism n. Before 1447, borrowed through Old French barbarisme, or directly from Latin barbarismus, from Greek barbarismós foreign mode of speech. —barbarity n. 1570, formed from English barbarous + -ity. —barbarous adj. 1405 barbarus uncultured, ignorant, gradually replacing barbar heathen, non-Christian (about 1390), borrowing of Latin barbarus.

barbecue n. 1657 barbycu, borrowed from Spanish barbacoa framework for roasting meat or fish, from Arawak (Haiti) barbakoa tree-house, probably in relation to the framework of poles or sticks supporting such a structure. The current sense of an outdoor meal of roasted meat or fish appeared in 1733. —v. 1661, to dry or cure on a barbecue; later, to roast or broil meat or fish over an open fire (1690), from the noun.

barber n. Probably before 1300 barbour, borrowed through Anglo-French barbour, from Old French barbeor and barbier, from barbe beard, from Latin barba BEARD; so called from the barber's business of shaving. The modern spelling with -er is an Anglicization influenced by barberie occupation of a barber (about 1400); for suffix see -ER¹.

barberry n. Before 1400 barbaryn, barbare, berber, borrowed through Middle French berbere, berberis; also before 1400 berberie fruit of the common barberry; influenced by Middle English berie berry; both forms borrowed from Medieval Latin barbaris and berberis, probably from Arabic barbārīs (confirmed by the Spanish scholar Corominas).

barbiturate n. 1928, formed from barbituric acid + *-ate*² forming nouns and meaning "salt made from a specific acid." Barbituric acid (1866) is a loan translation (barbit- + uric acid) of French barbiturique acide, from German Barbitursäure barbituric acid, coined in 1863 by the German chemist Adolf von Baeyer.

bard n. 1449, Scottish baird, probably developed from Gaelic bàrd, from an earlier Celtic form (compare Irish bàrd, Cornish bardh, Welsh bardd, Breton barz, Middle Irish bard, Gaulish bardos). Latin bardus and Greek bárdos, both meaning bard, are borrowings from Gaulish, but as imports from a respected Classical source the Latin and Greek words influenced the use of the word in English literature as a poetic term, where once bard had become a term of contempt chiefly by way of the Scots, who considered bards itinerant troublemakers for the most part. Among the Welsh, on the other hand, bardd was an exalted title of outstanding achievement.

bare adj. Old English (probably about 725) bær; cognate with Old and Middle High German bar bare (modern German bar, as in barfuss barefoot), Old Saxon bar, Old Frisian ber, Middle Dutch baer, Old Icelandic berr, from Proto-Germanic bazás*. —v. Old English barian*, found in the compound ābarian (about 725, in Beowulf), possibly verb use of Old English bær, adj.; cognate with Old High German barōn, Old Icelandic bera. —barely adv. About 950.

bargain n. Before 1338 bergayn, bargayne; borrowed through Anglo-French bargayne, bergain, from Old French bargaine, bargaigne, from bargainier, bargaignier to bargain. —v. About 1380 bargeyne, bargayne; borrowed from Old French bargainier, bargaignier, to haggle, bargain; perhaps from Frankish borgan-jan* borrow and lend (compare Old High German borgen to take care, modern German borgen to borrow, lend, from Proto-Germanic burg-*).

barge n. Probably before 1300, borrowed from Old French barge, from Vulgar Latin bārica*, from Greek bāris; see BARK³.

bargello n. zigzag stitches in needlework. 1972, named after Bargello, a museum in Florence, Italy, containing decorative design that inspired stitches used in this needlework. The museum's name comes from Italian bargello chief constable, temporary prison in a police station (originally the museum was the residence of a bargello, then a prison).

baritone n. 1609, borrowed from Italian baritono, learned borrowing from Greek barýtonos deep-sounding (barýs heavy, deep + tónos pitch, sound).

barium n. 1808, New Latin, formed from bar(ytes) sulfate of barium + suffix -ium, as in sodium. Sulfate of barium was named barytes in 1791, from Greek barýtēs weight, from barýs heavy. Barium was coined by the English chemist Sir Humphry Davy, 1778–1829, on the pattern of aluminum, (at first aluminium).

bark¹ n. outer covering of trees. Before 1325, borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic borrk, genitive barkar bark, and Swedish, Danish, Norwegian bark). The word is cognate with Middle High German and Low German borke and Middle Dutch bart, all meaning tree bark.

bark² v. make the short, sharp sound of a dog. Probably before 1200 berken, earlier borken (about 1150); developed from Old English beorcan (before 899), cognate with Old Icelandic berkja to boast, from Proto-Germanic berkanan*. —n. About 1250 berke, developed from Old English beorc, noun use of beorcan, v.

bark³ n. three-masted ship. About 1420 barke a boat, an early synonym for barge; borrowed perhaps from Old French barque, from Old Provençal barca, from Latin barca small boat, developed through Vulgar Latin bārica* from Latin bāris flat-bottomed Egyptian boat, from Greek bāris, from Egyptian (compare Coptic barī small pleasure boat).

barley n. 1184–85 barli (in compound barli-bred bread made of barley flour), form of Old English bærlic (966), originally an adjective meaning “of barley” (bar- root form of bere barley + -lic -ly, adjective suffix) and later as a noun in Middle English, appearing as late as 1459 as barleche. Old English bere (from Proto-Germanic bariz*) has cognates in Old Icelandic barr barley (from Proto-Germanic baraz*) and Gothic barizeins of barley.

barn n. Middle English bern (probably about 1200), developed from Old English (about 950) berern, literally, barley house (bere barley + ærn house, building, storeroom).

barnacle n. Before 1581, developed from earlier bernacle (about 1353) and barnakylle (1440) referring to a wild goose, now called barnacle goose, because it was believed to be produced by the shellfish whose feathery stalks suggested the plumage of the geese.

The earliest forms included bernek, bernake (before 1217); borrowed through Anglo-Latin bernaca, berneca and probably Old French bernaque, ultimately perhaps from a Gallo-Romance source, or the origin of the word may be Celtic (perhaps in Gaulish bernos*). However, Scottish bairneach and Irish báirneac limpet, Welsh brennig limpets, and even Breton bernic, bernique, brenique barnacle, are apparently late borrowings from English.

barometer n. 1665, formed in English from Greek báros weight + métron MEASURE.

The term barometer was probably coined by the English scientist Robert Boyle (1627–1691); it was certainly popularized by him. —barometric adj. 1802, formed in English, perhaps through influence of earlier French barométrique (1752), or by clipping of earlier barometrical (1665, in writings of Robert Boyle).

baron n. Probably before 1200 baron, baroun, barun; borrowed probably through Anglo-French, from Old French baron; also probably overlapping with Middle English bern nobleman, lord (1190), found in Old English beorn.

The Old French baron is a noun in the accusative case of ber military leader, borrowed from Frankish baro* king's man (compare Old High German baro man, freeborn warrior; cognate with English BAIRN). —baronet n. Probably before baroque adj. 1765, borrowing of French baroque, a term used to describe a style of architecture and to refer to something irregular and grotesque, from Middle French baroque irregular, in reference to the surface of a pearl, from Portuguese barroco pearl of irregular shape, of unknown origin.

1400, formed in English from baron + -et (diminutive suffix), perhaps by influence of Medieval Latin baronetus.

barracks n. pl. or sing. 1686, originally a temporary hut, as for soldiers during a siege; borrowed from French baraque, originally, wooden hut or a shed, from Italian baracca hut, or Spanish barraza a tent or hut for soldiers, of unknown origin.

barracuda n. 1678, borrowing of American Spanish barra-cuda, perhaps from a Carib word.

barrage n. 1916, borrowed from French tir de barrage, literally, barrier fire; earlier, 1859, the action of barring; borrowed from French barrage act of barring, barrier, from barrer to bar, block, from barre bar, from Old French barre BAR, n.

barrel n. Probably before 1300, borrowed from Old French baril, of uncertain origin.

barren adj. Before 1200, sterile, said especially of women; borrowed through Anglo-French barain, baraine, Old French baraigne, brahaine, feminine forms of baraign, brahain not fertile (applied especially to barren land), of uncertain origin (perhaps derived from a Germanic source).

barricade n. 1642, noun use of earlier English barricade, v. (1592); or borrowed from Middle French barricade (1570), possibly with influence of earlier English barricado, n. (1590), probably borrowed from Spanish barricada. Both French barricade and Spanish barricada derive either from French barrique or Spanish barrica cask (from the root of Old French baril barrel), in reference to the first barricades put up in the streets of Paris and composed chiefly of casks filled with earth, cobblestones, and other debris. —v. 1592, borrowed from Middle French barricader (1558), possibly with influence of verb use of earlier English barricado, n. (1590). The use of barricado, v. does not appear in English before 1598; so, unless there is a defect in the record of English, barricado, v. could not be a source for the verb use of barricade in English.

barrier n. About 1380 barer, later barrer (before 1420); borrowed through Anglo-French barrer, Old French barriere, from barre obstacle, BAR. The influence of the French spelling with i was introduced gradually during the late 1400's and through the 1500's.

barrio n. Before 1909, American English, borrowed from Spanish barrio, from Arabic barī exterior (feminine barriya open country), from barr outside (of a city).

barrow¹ n. handcart, wheelbarrow. About 1300 barewe handbarrow, but note earlier barwer, barewer one who makes barrows (1264); developed from Old English beanwe basket; compare meoxbeanwe basket for carrying dung (before 1100), bænwan baskets (before 1000, perhaps an altered spelling). The Old English is cognate with East Frisian barwe barrow (from Proto-Germanic barwōn*), Old Icelandic barar handcart, bier, and Old High German beran to bear; see BEAR² carry.

barrow² n. mound of earth. Before 1425 berwe hill, mound; earlier bergh (probably before 1387); in place names, Berweham (1313) and Bergham enclosure on a hill (1277); developed from Old English (about 725 in Beowulf) beorg, beork (West Saxon) and berg (Anglian) hill, mound. The Old English is cognate with Old Saxon and Old High German berg mountain (modern German Berg), Middle Dutch berch (modern Dutch berg), Old Icelandic bjarg, berg mountain, rock (from Proto-Germanic berga-*), and Gothic baīrgahei mountain region.

barter v. About 1440 bartren, borrowed from Middle French barater, bareter cheat, exchange, barter, do business; of uncertain origin. —n. 1465, from the verb.

baryon n. 1953, formed in English from Greek barys heavy + -on (suffix for elementary particle, as in electron).

basal adj. 1610, in the phrase basal area, formed from English *base*¹ + *-al*¹. The word was probably re-formed in 1828, the next appearance in print.

basalt n. 1601 basaltes, borrowed from Late Latin basaltēs, a manuscript alteration of Latin basanītēs a very hard stone, touchstone, from Greek basanītēs, from básanos touchstone, test, from Egyptian bauhan slate.

bascule n. 1678, device that operates on the principle of a seesaw, by levering heavy moving parts with weights, later applied specifically to lift-bridges or drawbridges called bascule bridge (1884). Borrowed from French bascule seesaw, from bas low + cul the buttocks (from Latin cūlus).

base¹ n. foundation. Before 1300 bas, borrowed (perhaps through confusion with Old French bas, basse low), from Old French bas, basse pedestal, foundation, learned borrowing from Latin basis foundation. —adj. 1605, from the noun. —v. 1587, from the noun.

base² adj. low. About 1390 bace in imitation of Old French; later, as a separate formation, before 1393 bass; borrowed from Old French bas, basse, from Medieval Latin bassus low, Late Latin bassus thick, fat, stumpy.

baseball n. 1845, American English, formed from *base*¹, n. + *ball*¹. According to Mathews in A Dictionary of Americanisms, "the first mention so far found of 'baseball' is in A Little Pretty Book brought out in London in 1744." But this word, like that cited from Jane Austen's Northanger Abbey (1803–1815), refers to the game rounders, played by New England colonists in the 1700's. The theory that baseball was originated by Abner Doubleday at Cooperstown, N.Y., in 1839 is now generally part of American folk legend.

basement n. 1730, probably formed from English *base*¹, n. + -ment, and perhaps influenced by French soubassement subfoundation. A parallel form also exists in Middle Low German basement base, pedestal, and probably Italian bassamento abasement.

bash v. smash. 1641, of uncertain origin; possibly from a Scandinavian source (compare Swedish basa whip, beat, Danish baske beat, strike) or of imitative origin, with the b of beat, bang, etc. + the ending of lash, smash, etc. Similar words, including dash, flash, lash; compare with words in Scandinavian languages. —n. 1805, in Scottish as noun use of bash, v.

bashful adj. 1548, developed from baishen abash (before 1338; borrowed from Old French baissier bring down, humiliate) + English suffix -ful.

basic adj. 1842, formed from English *base*¹, n. + -ic. —n. About 1927, American English, from the adjective.

basil n. About 1450, borrowed from Middle French basile, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin basilicum; also influenced by Middle English basilicon (1373), borrowed through Anglo-French basilicon, from Medieval Latin basilicum, basilicon, from Greek basilikōn phytōn royal plant, neuter of basilikós royal, from basileús king.

basilica n. 1541, borrowed from Latin basilica building of a court of justice, from Greek stoā basilikē stoa or portico of the archon basileus (the official who dispensed justice in Athens), feminine of basilikós royal, from basileús king.

basin n. Probably about 1200 basin, borrowed from Old French basin, from Late Latin bachinus, bacchinus, apparently also spelled bacchinon wooden vessel used by the Gauls. Sometimes traced to Latin baccinus*, baccinum*, possibly from bacca vessel, originally for wine (compare Late Latin baccarium wine vessel; perhaps of Gaulish origin).

basis n. 1571, borrowed from Latin basis foundation, from Greek básis a step or stand, from baínein go, step.

bask v. Before 1393 basken to wallow in warm water or blood; perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic badhask bathe oneself, reflexive form of badha BATHE). The meaning of revel or take great delight in is first recorded in 1647.

basket n. 1229, in the compound basketwricte basket maker; borrowed from Anglo-French bascat, of uncertain origin; compare Old French baschoe, baschoe wooden or wicker container, and dialectal French (Gascon) bascojo, (Béarnais) bascoyes kind of basket, all possibly from Latin bascauda a kind of basin, thought to be of British, maybe Celtic, origin; the Roman writer Martial refers to Britain as the source of the bascauda.

basketball n. 1892, American English, after the invention of the game (1891) by J.A. Naismith, physical education instructor in Springfield, Massachusetts.

bas-relief n. 1667 basse relieve, borrowed first perhaps through influence of French basse, from Italian basso-rilievo low relief or raised work, and later modified to bas-relief (1762) by influence of French bas-relief or borrowed from the French as a second source of the word.

bass¹ (bās) adj. low. About 1390 bace low; applied to music before 1450, and later altered in spelling to bass (1596) by influence of Italian basso bass, from Medieval Latin bassus low, short; see BASE². —n. Before 1500, noun use of *base*², adj., later altered in spelling (1674) after the Italian influence of basso on the adjective in English.

bass² n. a fish. 1602 basse, earlier bace (about 1410), a variant form of dialectal barse perch, found in Old English (about 700) bærs, bears; cognate with Middle High German bars; related to Old English byrst BRISTLE.

basset n. commonly basset hound (since 1883). 1616, borrowed from French basset a dog developed from the French bloodhound and short-legged white hounds; in Old French, formed from bas low and suffix -et.

bassoon n. 1727 basson, bassoon; borrowed from French basson, from Italian bassone, augmentative form of basso BASS¹; for ending see -oon.

bastard n. About 1300, earlier as an epithet in names Peter Bastard (1250); borrowed through Anglo-French, as in William le Bastard (1223), from Old French bastard child of a nobleman and a woman other than his wife, synonym of filz de bast child born in a barn, or more usually child of the packsaddle. Old French bastard was probably derived from bast pack-saddle (often used as a bed while traveling) and perhaps also meaning "barn" + -ard hard, bold, hardy (having the disparaging sense "one who does what is discreditable"). Old French bast may ultimately be derived from Proto-Germanic banstiz*, source of Gothic bansts barn, and would emphasize born in a barn or of low origin on the mother's side.

The figurative senses are now largely of adjective use meaning: not genuine, inferior (1530); irregular, unusual (1418); resembling but not identical (1558). —bastardize v. 1587, formed from English bastard + -ize, or perhaps from obsolete abastardize (1580); borrowed from Middle French abastardir to bastardize; for suffix see -ize.

baste¹ v. drip melted fat on. Probably before 1475, of uncertain origin (compare Old French basser to soak).

baste² v. sew with loose stitches. Probably before 1400 basten; borrowed from Old French bastir to baste (sew), from Frankish (compare Old High German bestan patch, Middle High German besten to lace, tie, sew with bast, from bast tough fiber of the inner bark of certain trees), from Proto-Germanic basta-*.

baste³ v. beat soundly. 1533, of uncertain origin; occurring first as basit, baist, possibly a past tense or past participle of a form such as bas or baste; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Swedish basa beat; or if baste was the original form, compare Icelandic beysta, Swedish bösta, Danish baste beat).

The other possibility may be that baste³ is a figurative use of baste¹, v., perhaps by influence of some Scandinavian word cited above.

bastion n. 1562, borrowed from Middle French bastion (perhaps influenced by Italian bastione), variant of bastillon, a diminutive form of bastille fortress, from Old French bastille fortress, tower, alteration of Old Provençal bastida (which as Bastide was used in the 1400's to refer to the famous Bastille) from bastir to build.

bat¹ n. club. Probably before 1200 batte mace, cudgel, found in Old English batt; probably borrowed from Late Latin battere, Latin battuere to beat. —v. About 1200, from the noun bat¹, and also as a borrowing from Old French battre to beat, from Late Latin battere, Latin battuere.

bat² n. flying mammal. About 1575 bat, replacing earlier bakee (before 1325); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Swedish -backa in natt-backa, Old Danish -bakke in nath-bakke night bat). The change from k to t may have been influenced by confusion with another meaning of bakee a kind of nocturnal insect, that derives from Latin blatta moth.

bat³ wink. 1838, developed from earlier meaning of flutter (1615), variant of baten to flutter, beat the wings (before 1333); borrowed from Old French batre, battre to beat; see BAT¹ stick.

batch n. Probably before 1475 bach quantity of bread in a baking; developed from Old English baecce* (represented in Old English gebaec baking), from bacon to bake. The spelling batch developed in the 1500's as a reflection of the pronunciation.

bate v. hold back, lessen (in phrases bate one's breath or with bated breath). Probably before 1300 baten, apparently shortened form of abaten ABATE.

bateau n. 1711, American English batteau, borrowed through Canadian French bateau, from French bateau boat, from Old French batel, generally considered to be derived from Old English bāt BOAT.

bath n. Old English baeth (about 725); cognates include Old High German bad bath (modern German Bad), Old Icelandic badh, and Dutch, Swedish, and Danish bad, from Proto-Germanic bathan*. —bathroom n. (1363) —bathroom n. (1780) bathe v. Old English bathian (before 899); cognate with Old High German badōn bathe (modern German baden), Old Icelandic badha, and Dutch baden, Swedish bada, Danish bade, from Proto-Germanic bathōn*. The difference in pronunciation of bath (bath) and bathe (bāth) developed from the additional syllable of the early verbal ending. —bathing suit (1873).

bathos n. 1727, borrowed, with satirical awareness of the parallel to English pathos, from Greek báthos depth, of unknown origin. —bathetic adj. Before 1834, formed in English on analogy of the pattern pathos, pathetic.

batik n. 1880, borrowed probably through Dutch batik (because of the Dutch colonial control of Indonesia), from Javanese mbatik writing, drawing. The art of batik was introduced to Europe by way of the Dutch, but whether it came into English solely from Dutch, or also by way of the French batik (1845) is not known.

batiste n. 1697, borrowed from French batiste, from Middle French baptiste, reputedly from the name of Baptiste of Cambrai (in Flanders), a textile maker of the 1200's who is said to have made this cloth.

baton n. 1548, gradually replacing earlier baston (recorded before 1325), and batoon; borrowed ultimately from Old French baston, cognate with Spanish bastón, Portuguese bastão, Italian bastone, suggesting a Vulgar Latin bastōnem* a stick, though others cite Late Latin bastum stout staff, from bastāre* beat or drive with a stick. The sense of a conductor's stick to indicate musical time was first recorded in 1785.

battalion n. 1589 (perhaps influenced by, and replacing, earlier bataille a company of troops; recorded probably about 1225); borrowed from Middle French bataillon, battaillon a company of troops, from Italian battaglione battle squadron.

batten n. 1658, an Anglicized variant of baton. —v. 1775, furnish with battens; 1823 batten down fasten with battens; from the noun.

batter¹ v. strike repeatedly. About 1330 bateren beat repeatedly; borrowed from Old French batre, battre to beat, strike, from Late Latin battere, Latin battuere strike. —battered child (1962) batter² n. flour and milk mixture. 1381 batour, bater, bature, either borrowed from Old French batēure, n. a beating, from batre to beat, strike; or developed from English *batter*¹, v. to strike; for suffix see -ER⁴.

batter³ n. player who bats in baseball, cricket, etc. 1773, formed from English *bat*¹, n. + -er¹.

battery n. 1531 batrye, bateri, batterie act of beating or battering; borrowed from Middle French batterie a beating, battering, group of cannon, from Old French baterie a beating, from batre to beat, Late Latin battere, Latin battuere beat, strike; for suffix see -ERY. The meaning of set of electrical cells appeared in 1748, in letters of Benjamin Franklin, and the sense of container holding one or more cells that produce electricity in 1801.

batting n. cotton fiber. 1875 batting, specific use of gerund (1611), or formed from earlier batt (1830), obsolete variant of *bat*¹, n. felted mass of fur, wool, etc. + -ing, from *bat*¹.

battle n. Before 1250 bataille, bataile single combat, especially for settling an issue; borrowed from Old French bataille battle, arrayed troops, from Late Latin battālia battle, variant of battūlia, neuter plural, fencing exercises, from Latin battuere to strike, beat. —v. Probably before 1300 bataillen to fight; borrowed from Old French bataillier to fight, from bataille battle.

battlement n. Probably about 1380 batilment, batelment; borrowed from Old French batillement, earlier bastillement fortification, derived from bataille battlement, from bateiller, earlier bastillier fortify, from bastille fortress, tower; for suffix see -MENT.

bauble n. About 1330 babel, borrowed from Old French babel, baubel child's toy, trinket, of uncertain origin.

baud n. unit of speed in telegraphy and data processing. 1932, borrowed from French baud (1929), from J.M.E. Baudot (1845–1903), a French engineer.

bauxite n. 1868, borrowing of French bauxite (1847), after Les Baux, France where the mineral was first found in 1821; for suffix see -ITE¹.

bawdy adj. 1513, formed from English bawd procurer, pander + adjective suffix -y¹, but probably influenced by an earlier and separate form bawdy, Middle English baudy dirty, filthy (1378).

Modern English bawd, developed from Middle English baude a procurer or prostitute (before 1376), probably by shortening of earlier baude-strote procurer (about 1300); borrowed from Old French baudetrot, baudrestote (baud, merry, licentious + -trot one who runs errands).

bawl v. About 1440 bawlynge barking (of dogs), a bark; later baull cry out, yell (1570); borrowed perhaps from a Scandinavian source (compare Icelandic baula, Swedish böla to low like a cow, Old Icelandic baula cow); all forms apparently of imitative origin. —n. 1792, from the verb.

bay¹ n. inlet of a sea. Probably before 1400 bay, baye; borrowed from Old French baie, of uncertain origin.

bay² n. long, deep bark. Before 1400 bay barking of dogs, earlier bay cornering of a hunted animal (before 1375), and abay, abai at bay with barking dogs (probably about 1300); borrowed from Old French abai barking, from abaier, baier to bark, probably imitative. —v. Probably about 1390 bayen, baien to bark, earlier abayen, abaien bark at someone, speak rudely (probably before 1300), borrowed from Old French abaier to bark.

bay³ n. space in a wall, barn, warehouse, etc.; compartment. Probably about 1380, borrowed from Old French baée, beée opening, cave, from baée, past participle of baër, beër, baïr stand open, gape, yawn, from Medieval Latin batare gape. —bay window (1405)

bay⁴ adj. reddish-brown. 1341, borrowed through Anglo-Latin and Anglo-French bai, from Old French bai, from Latin badius reddish-brown.

bay⁵ n. shrub. 1373, the fruit of various plants; later, bayberry (before 1400) and bay leaf (about 1450); the shrub itself (probably about 1425); borrowed from Old French baie berry, seed, from Latin bāca berry.

bayonet n. 1672, earlier bayonnette a short dagger (1611); borrowed from French baïonnette, probably derived from Bayonne, France where the weapon was first made; for suffix see -ETTE.

bayou n. 1766, American English Bayoue, later bayou (1803), borrowed through American French Bayoue, from Choctaw bayuk small stream.

bazaar n. 1588 bazar, perhaps influenced by earlier French Bathzar (1432), but borrowed through obsolete Italian bazarra, from Persian bāzār market.

bazooka n. 1942, American English, special use of earlier bazooka a trombone-like instrument popularized (about 1935) by the American comedian Bob Burns (1896–1956), and invented and named possibly in the early 1900's; probably formed by alteration of older bazoo a voice or mouth trumpet (1877), from Dutch bazuin trumpet, trombone.

BB n. 1874, American English, designation of a size of shot. —BB gun air rifle that shoots BB shot. 1932, American English, in oral use since about 1928.

be v. irregular verb (serving as a linking verb and the chief auxiliary verb of English). One of three distinct verbs of Germanic origin (be, am, was) gradually combined under be, because be later supplied the infinitive form. Middle English been (about 1200), developed from Old English bēon, bēom, bīon be, exist, come to be, become (before 830).

In Old English bēon, bēom was a distinct verb, with no past tense, though through its meaning "come to be," it often served as the future tense of the separate verb am-was. Later, in the 1200's, be, been gradually took the place of the infinitive, participial, and imperative forms of am-was; see AM and WAS.

Later, the plural forms of be (we beth, ye ben, they be after 1250), became standard forms in Middle English, and also for a time made inroads on the singular (that is, I be, thou or you beest, he, she, it beth). However, forms of are (aron, aren, arn, are) in the 1500's began to take over in standard English, and finally replaced be in the plural (we, you, they are); see ARE¹.

In Old English the substantive verb, showing existence (I am before 950, he is about 885), was derived from a Germanic stem es-, whose form existed only in the present tense in Old English; all other parts of that verb were supplied by the form wes- meaning "to remain." The two verbs, already coalesced in Old English, supplemented each other and constituted the verb es-wes-* (am-was), showing existence. The form art (thou or you art) was the singular, second-person present tense for this verb until it became an archaic form in the 1800's. For other parts of this verb see IS and WAS.

English be (Old English bēon, bēom) is cognate with Old Saxon bium, Old High German bim, Middle High German and modern German bin I am, all derived from a Germanic form beu-*.

be- prefix meaning: 1 thoroughly, completely, all around or all over, as in bespatter = to spatter all over; becalmed = thoroughly or completely calmed. 2 to make, cause to seem, as in belittle = cause to seem little or unimportant. 3 to provide with, adorn, as in bejewel = to adorn with jewels. 4 at, on, to, for, about, against, as in bewail = to wail about. 5 (in words from Middle and Old English) because Middle English bi cause = by cause; beneath Old English beneoþan = be- be, in the sense by, about + neothan below. Other forms, such as before and behind are perhaps borrowings from some indeterminate source, as they appear in Old Saxon, Old High German, and other languages contemporary with or antedating Old English.

The prefix be- developed from the Old English prefix bi-, be- an unstressed form of the preposition and adverb bī by, and is represented in other Germanic languages (compare Old High German bi-, Middle High German and modern German be-, Gothic bi-).

beach n. About 1535, loose, water-worn pebbles of the sea shore; 1596, the sea shore; possibly a transferred sense of beacon n. 1338, beken signal fire; developed from Old English bēacen sign, signal (about 725, in Beowulf), cognate with Old Frisian bāken sign, Old Saxon bōcan, and Old High German bouhhan, from Proto-Germanic baukanan*.

Middle English bech, beche stream, brook, developed from Old English bece brook, stream, cognate with Old Saxon beki, from Proto-Germanic bakiz*; related to Middle English bek, bec brook, stream, borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic bekkr); it is also related to Middle English bach, bache, developed from Old English bæc brook, cognate with Old High German bah brook.

bead n. About 1175 bede prayer, developed from Old English bed prayer, (before 900), from Proto-Germanic bedan*; and earlier gebed (about 725), cognate with Old Saxon gibed prayer, Old High German gibet (modern German Gebet), Gothic bida prayer, bidjan to ask; see BID.

The meaning of a bead used in a necklace, bracelet, etc., appeared in the 1300's, when perforated balls, threaded on a string, formed the rosary for keeping count of the number of prayers.

beadle n. About 1300 bedel minor official of a lord, manor, town, or court of law, constable; borrowed from Old French bedel, from Frankish (compare Old High German butil bailiff, beadle, Middle High German bütel; modern German Büttel).

Middle English bedel, borrowed from Old French, replaced earlier Middle English bidel herald, messenger (recorded about 1200) and dialect variants, such as budel, which had developed from Old English hydel (recorded about 1000), related to bē-odan to announce, offer, BID.

beagle n. Probably about 1475 begle, of uncertain origin; possibly borrowed from Old French beegueille noisy shouting person (beër open wide + gueulle, goule throat) in allusion to the noise made by a person shouting.

beak n. Before 1250 bec, later bek (about 1380); borrowed from Old French bec, from Gaulish beccus (possibly related to the Celtic stem bacc-, meaning hook).

beaker n. Probably about 1380 bekyr, borrowed perhaps from Middle Dutch bēker goblet, corresponding to Old High German behhāri (modern German Becher); replacing earlier biker (1348), borrowed from Medieval Latin bicarium, probably from Greek bikos earthen vessel. Compare PITCHER.

beam n. Old English bēam tree, piece of timber, ray (about 725); cognate with Old Frisian bām, Old High German boum (modern German Baum), Middle Dutch boom, and perhaps Old Icelandic badhm, and Gothic bagms, all meaning tree.

The sense "ray of light" apparently developed as a literal translation of Latin columna lucis column or pillar of light, found in Bede's writing in Old English. —v. Before 1425, from the noun.

bean n. Old English bēan (about 1000); cognate with Old High German bōna bean (modern German Bohne), and Old Icelandic baun, implying Proto-Germanic baunō*.

bear¹ n. mammal. About 1150 bere (genitive beran), developed from Old English bera (before 893). Cognates appear in Old High German bero (modern German Bär), Middle Dutch bere (modern Dutch beer), from Proto-Germanic beron-*, and Old Icelandic björn, all meaning bear, literally, brown (animal), a designation shared with beaver. Bear in the sense of a speculator (from which we derived bearish, 1881), was first recorded in 1709, as a shortening of bearskin jobber, supposed to be from the phrase “to sell the bearskin,” in allusion to the proverb “sell the bear’s skin before one has caught the bear” (recorded since the 1500’s); see also BULL¹.

bear² v. carry. Before 1123 beren, developed from Old English beran (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon beran, Old Frisian bera, Old High German beran to carry, from Proto-Germanic beranan*, and giberan bring forth, give birth to (modern German gebären), Old Icelandic bera to carry, and Gothic baíran. —bearable adj. About 1454, formed from English bear + *-able*². —bearer n. 1255, developed from Old English, in phrases such as wæter-berere. —bearing n. About 1250 bering behavior, conduct, formed from Middle English beren, v. + *-ing*¹. —bearings n. pl. 1711, formed from English bearing + *-s*¹.

beard n. Old English beard (before 830). The correspondence in spelling between Old English and modern English is accidental, as the modern form developed from Middle English, first recorded as the surname Berd (1165). The word is cognate with Old Frisian berd, Old High German bart (modern German Bart), Middle Dutch baert (modern Dutch baard), late Old Icelandic bardh, from Proto-Germanic bardaz*. —v. About 1303, berden to grow or have a beard, reach the age of puberty; later, to face boldly, defy (1525), a meaning already known in the Middle English phrase rennen in berd oppose openly, and in the berd to one’s face, directly.

beast n. Probably before 1200 beste (compare English bestial, which retained the Middle English spelling); borrowed from Old French beste, from Vulgar Latin besta*, from Latin bēstia wild animal, of uncertain origin. Middle English beste an animal as distinct from man, was used to translate the Latin word animal and took the place of Old English dēor deer (which became specialized), just as beast was replaced in the 1500’s by animal. —beasty adj. Probably about 1200. Compare BESTIAL.

beat v. Probably before 1200 beten, developed from Old English bēatan (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old High German bōzan to beat, kick, and Old Icelandic bauta, from Proto-Germanic bautanan*. The past tense beat developed in the 1500’s as a shortened form from Middle English beted. The old past participle beat is still found in dead-beat all tired out. —n. About 1300, from the verb. —beater n. (1200) —beat- ing n. (probably about 1200).

beatific adj. 1639, borrowed from French béatifique, or directly from Late Latin beatificus, from Latin beātus happy, blessed; see BEATITUDE; for suffix see -FIC. —beatification n. 1502, borrowed from Middle French beatification, from Late Latin beatificāre; for suffix see -ATION. —beatify v. 1535, borrowed from beatitude n. Probably before 1425, borrowed through Middle French beatitude, and directly from Latin beatitūdō state of blessedness, from beātus happy, blessed, past participle of beāre make happy; for suffix see -TUDE.

Middle French beatifier, learned borrowing from Late Latin beatificāre, from beatificus beatific; for suffix see -FY.

beau n. 1684, borrowed from French beau, noun use of earlier adjective meaning fine, handsome, from Old French bel, from Latin bellus handsome, fine, originally a diminutive form of bonus good; see BONUS. The meaning lover, sweetheart is not recorded in English before 1720. Middle English beau became obsolete in the early 1500’s, so that the current use is a reborrowing of modern French.

beauty n. Before 1325 bealte, beute, borrowed from Old French biauté, beauté, belité (earlier beltet), from Vulgar Latin bellitātem* state of being handsome, from Latin bellus fine, handsome, see BEAU; for suffix see -TY. —beautiful adj. About 1443, formed from English beauty + -ful. —beautify v. 1526, formed from English beauty + -fy.

beaver n. Old English beofor (about 1000), earlier bebr (about 720); cognates with Old High German bibar beaver (modern German Biber), Old Saxon bibar, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch bever, Old Icelandic björ; from Proto-Germanic be-brūs*.

bebop n. 1944 (but said to go back to the 1920’s), originally imitative of the continually shifting accents in the music of a group of jazz players.

because conj. About 1375, by cause for the reason (that); later bycause (1380), because (1425). —adv. Probably about 1380, bi cause on account (of), for the sake (of); later because (about 1385); see BY and CAUSE.

beck n. as in at one’s beck and call. Before 1382 bek, noun use of Middle English bekken, v. beckon to; see BECKON.

It is possible that formation of beck (Middle English bek) was influenced by Middle English bekenen beckon, which would account for the appearance of beck, n. before bekken, v.

beckon v. Old English bēcnian (before 830), West Saxon bēacnian, developed from bēacen, bēcen a sign, BEACON. As alluded to at beck, n. Middle English had two forms that meant beckon: 1) bekken (about 1385) derived from 2) bekenen (before 1200), developed from Old English; both related to beken a signal fire, beacon.

become v. Old English becuman happen, come about (about 725, in Beowulf), formed from be-, bi- + cuman come; cognate with Old Frisian bikuma come about, Old High German biqueman obtain, Gothic biqiman come upon suddenly. —becoming adj. About 1475, developed from English become, v.

bed n. Old English (about 700) bed, cognates with Old Frisian and Old Saxon bed, Old High German beti bed, Middle High German bette, bet (modern German Bett), Old Icelandic bedhr, and Gothic badi bed, from Proto-Germanic bađja-*.

bedlam n. 1667, confusion, figurative use of a lunatic asylum, madhouse (1663, earlier in bedlamite 1589), in allusion to Bedlam, popular name of St. Mary of Bethlehem, insane asylum in London (founded 1247). Bethlehem appeared as Betelem (town of Bethlehem in Judea) before 971, and, in reference to the hospital as Bedlem, in 1418.

Bedouin n. About 1400 Bedoyn, borrowed from Old French beduīn, from colloquial Arabic badāwīn, plural of badāwī desert dweller. Later reborrowed (1603) from French bedouin.

bee n. Old English bēo (before 900), earlier bīo-wyr̥t bee wort, a plant (about 700) and Bēo-wulf Bee-wolf, a personal name (about 725, in Beowulf). The word is cognate with Old High German bīa, bini bee (modern German Biene), Old Icelandic bī (usually in compounds), Middle Dutch bīe (modern Dutch bij).

beech n. tree. 1296 beche, developed from Old English (about 700) bēce, later bēce (from Proto-Germanic bōkjōn*), a derivative form of older bōc beech (from Proto-Germanic bōkō*).

The fruit of the tree is an ancient food source for agricultural animals so that the tree was widely known in ancient Europe, and the word is therefore cognate with many of the older Germanic languages, including Old Icelandic bōk beech, Old High German buohha, Middle High German buoche (modern German Buche), Middle Dutch boeke; see also BOOK.

beef n. Probably before 1300 bef, borrowed from Old French buf, boef beef, ox, from Latin bovem, accusative of bōs ox. The Latin bōs (actually an Umbrian dialect form) is cognate with Greek boús ox and Sanskrit gāu-s (go-) cow, which in turn is cognate with Old English cū cow; thus cow is ultimately related to beef.

beep n. 1929, formed in English in imitation of the sound of a horn, especially of an automobile; later extended to the sound emitted in radar tracking and other signals. —v. 1936, from the noun. —beeper n. 1946, formed from English beep, n. + -er.

beer n. Probably about 1225 ber, developed from Old English bēor (about 725, in Beowulf); cognates with Old Frisian biar, bier beer, Old High German bior, Middle High German bier and modern German Bier, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch bier, and Old Icelandic bjōrr (from West Germanic). The native Scandinavian word, as seen in Old Icelandic pl, is cognate with English ale.

beet n. Old English (about 1000) bēte, borrowed from Latin bēta, a name adopted into other Germanic languages such as Old Frisian bete, Old High German bieza, Low German bete (modern German Beete) and Middle Dutch bēte.

Possibility of Celtic origin of Latin bēta is remote, because the Irish is borrowed from Latin and the Welsh from Middle English, and there is no Gaulish or other word that is the source of the Latin.

beetle¹ n. insect. About 1440 bytylle, later betylle (before 1500); developed from Old English (about 700) bitula, later bitela, from bītan to bite, and bīta a bite, morsel; see BITE.

beetle² v. project, overhang. 1602, back formation from earlier beetyl-browde beetle-browed, having prominent brows (1562), from bitelbrouwed, betilbrowed (before 1376), Middle English bitel sharp-edged, sharp, probably Old English bitol* sharp, biting + browed.

befall v. About 1225 bifallen to fall out, happen; developed from Old English befeallan to fall (probably about 875), formed from be- by, about + feallan to FALL; cognate with Old Saxon and Old High German bifallan (modern German befallen), and Old Frisian bifalla.

before prep., adv., conj. About 1175 beforen, developed from Old English beforan (about 725, in Beowulf) and biforan (about 750), both meaning in front, ahead (be-, bi- by, about + foran before, from fora FORE); cognate with Old Frisian bifara, Old Saxon biforan, Old High German bifora, Middle High German bevor (modern German bevor, conj.).

beg v. Probably before 1200 beggen ask as charity; probably related to or formed from BEGGAR. Anglo-French begger to beg, is first recorded somewhat later than the Middle English verb, but we cannot exclude the possibility that Middle English beggen was from Anglo-French.

beget v. About 1250 begeten, alteration of earlier biyeten (before 1121) through influence of geten to GET. Middle English biyeten developed from Old English begietan, bigeotan to get (by effort), acquire.

beggar n. Probably before 1200, borrowed perhaps from Old French begart, begard, originally, a member of the Beghards, lay brotherhoods of mendicants that arose in the Low Countries in the early 1200's, from Middle Dutch beggaert mendicant; for the suffix -aert see -ARD.

begin v. Old English (about 1000) beginnan (be- by, about + -ginnan to begin), recorded only in compounds, such as Old English onginnan and āginnan to begin; cognate with Old Frisian biginna to begin, Old Saxon and Old High German biginnan (modern German beginnen), and Gothic duginnan.

begonia n. 1751, borrowed through French (1706), and from New Latin, formed on Michel Bégon, 1638–1710, French governor of Haiti and patron of botany + -ia, New Latin suffix used in taxonomy.

behalf n. on (or in) behalf of. About 1303 behalve; later, behalf, literally meaning beside (about 1386); fusion of Old English (him) be healfe by (his) side, and on (his) healfe on (his) side, from healfe side, HALF.

behave v. About 1410, formed from be- thoroughly + have to have or bear oneself (in a specified way). —behavior n. Probably before 1425 behavior, later behaviour (probably before 1475), influenced by synonymous haver, havour (about 1450); developed from behave + -our or *-or*¹. The spelling behavior with i appeared in 1538, influenced by synonymous havior (1478), earlier havour, haver (about 1450), an alteration (by association with Middle English haven to have) of Middle French and Old French avoir, aveir, noun use of verb meaning to have, from behemoth n. Before 1382 bemoth an animal mentioned in Job, later behemot (1388); borrowed from Latin behēmōth, from Hebrew bəhēmōth beasts.

Latin habere). —behaviorism n. 1913, coined by John B. Watson, 1878–1958, American psychologist.

behest n. Probably before 1200 biheste promise, command, request, alteration of Old English behæc promise, from behātan to promise (be- by, about + hātan to call, command). Old English hātan is cognate with Old High German heizan and Gothic haitan to order, command, from Proto-Germanic Haitanan*.

The addition of -t to Old English behæc was influenced by the -t of synonymous behight, on a pattern also seen in amongst.

behind prep., adv., adj. Old English (about 725) behindan (be-, bi- by + hindan in back, behind; see HIND¹ back). The word is identical with Old Saxon bihindan, and cognate with Old High German hintana (modern German hinten), and Gothic hindana back of, behind of, from the root hind- in hinder and hindmost.

behold v. Before 1200 biholden, developed from Old English bihaldan (before 830), corresponding to West Saxon behealdan give regard to, hold in view, watch (be-, bi- by + haldan, healdan HOLD). The word is identical with Old Saxon bihaldan hold, keep, Old Frisian bihalda, Old High German bihaltan (modern German behalten). The meaning “indebted” as in beholden to is first recorded in Middle English probably about 1390.

behoove v. Probably before 1200; developed from Old English behōfian have use for (about 725, in Beowulf), from behōf* advantage, use, (only recorded in derivatives such as behōflic useful); cognate with Old Frisian behōf advantage, and Middle High German behuof useful thing, beheben take, hold.

beige adj., n. 1858, borrowing of French beige, earlier baige, from Old French bege of the natural color (of cotton and wool), of uncertain origin. Suggestion of a borrowing of Old French from Italian bambagia cotton, from Medieval Latin bambax (genitive bambacis) raises the problem of the disappearance of the first syllable bam-.

being n. 1380, from earlier use meaning existence (1340), developed from verbal noun of be, v.

belay v. 1549, developed from Middle English beleggen encircle, surround (before 1250); developed from Old English beleggan to lay over (about 725), from be-, bi- by, over, against + legan to LAY¹ put down.

belch v. An altered form belchen (1483) of earlier belken (about 1350), both variants of Middle English bolken to belch, vomit, overflow; developed from Old English bilketan (about 950), later bealcan, balcettan, bylcettan to belch, vomit, utter vehemently (about 1025); cognate with Middle Dutch belken belch, roar, cry out, and possibly related to Old English bellan to roar (see BELLOW), and almost certainly imitative in origin. The phonetic alteration of belken to modern English belch came about by palatalization. —n. 1513, from the verb.

beleaguer v. 1589, probably from Low German belegeren (be- around + leger camp); cognate with Swedish belägra to besiege, German Belagerung siege, and belagern beleaguer, and Dutch belegeren besiege.

belfry n. bell tower. 1272 belfrey bell tower; probably before 1300, berefrey movable tower for besieging fortifications; borrowed through Anglo-French berefrey, berfrei, Old North French berfrei, belfroy, belefrei, probably from Middle High German berfrit portable shelter, originally used to protect a besieging force, from Proto-Germanic berzanan* protect, and frithuz* peace, shelter, meaning a protective shelter.

The often cited Frankish source is probably not relevant, for according to the scholars Bloch and Wartburg, “The loan cannot go back to the period of the Frankish invasion of France because at that time siege warfare was hardly practiced.”

belief n. Before 1400 belyefe, earlier bileve (before 1225) and bileave (probably before 1200); all forms replacing Old English gelēafa by influence of later Old English belȳfan (about 1000), belēfan believe. The Old English gelēafa is cognate with Old Saxon gilōbo belief, Old High German giloubo (modern German Glaube), and Gothic galaubeins belief, galaubjan to believe; see BELIEVE. Old High German giloubo is from Proto-Germanic ga-laubon*.

By the 1400's the distinction in the final consonant was developing to differentiate belief and believe, as seen in the pattern proof — prove and grief — grieve.

believe v. Before 1393 believen, earlier beleven (about 1386) and bileven (1225). The Middle English forms developed from Old English belȳfan (about 1000) and belēfan believe, which replaced a variety of Old English dialectal forms including Mercian gelēfan, Northumbrian gelēfa, and West Saxon gelȳfan believe. These Old English words are cognate with Old Saxon gilōbian believe, Old High German gilouben (modern German glauben), and Gothic galaubjan to believe, literally, to make palatable to oneself, accept, approve, from Proto-Germanic ga-laubjanan*.

belittle v. 1781, American English, in writings of Thomas Jefferson, formed from be- + little.

bell n. Old English belle (before 900); cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch belle bell; perhaps related to Old English bellan to roar, BELLOW.

belladonna n. 1597, as an Italian term introduced into an English work on plants, literally, fair lady. According to one source (1757), the plant got its name because women made a cosmetic from its juice.

bellicose adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed perhaps through influence of Italian bellicoso (1363), from Latin bellicōsus, from bellicus of war, from bellum war; see DUEL; for suffix see *-OSE*¹.

belligerent adj. 1577 belligerant, borrowed perhaps through influence of Italian belligerante (1480) from Latin belligerantem (nominative belligerāns), from belligerāre wage war, from belliger waging war (bellum war + gerere to conduct). —belligerence n. 1814, formed from English belliger(ent) + -ence.

bellow v. About 1300 belewen be enraged, roar; developed from Old English (about 750) belgan become angry; cognate with Old Icelandic belgja to swell up, Old High German belgan swell up, be angry, Old Saxon belgan become angry; related to Anglian bælg (compare blæstbælg a bellows, bēanbælg bean pod) and West Saxon bylg bag; see BELLOWS, BELLY.

bellows n. sing. or pl. 1372–74 belowes, earlier beliges (about 1125), plural of beli (about 1200) and bali (about 1250), both meaning “stomach, abdomen, BELLY.” The Old English word for bellows was blæstbælg, literally, blowing bag.

belly n. About 1200 beli abdomen, bowels; developed from Old English (about 700) bælg (with dialect variants belg, bylg) bag; cognate with Old High German balg bag, skin, Old Icelandic belgr, Gothic balgs wineskin, from Proto-Germanic balgiz*. Related to BILLOW, BELLOW.

belong v. 1340 belongen, formed from bi- thoroughly + longen go along with, be appropriate to, from long, adj., dependent (on), belonging (to). Middle English belongen was formed after Old English gelang, gelong (about 725, in Beowulf), from ge- (prefix expressing completion of action) + lang* of uncertain meaning. Old English gelang is cognate with Old High German and Old Saxon gilang nearby, at hand. —belongings, n.pl. 1603, formed from English belonging, verbal noun, + plural suffix -s.

below adv. About 1325, Middle English bilooghe (bi-, variant of be- by, about + looghe, variant of low, lowe LOW¹, adj.). Below was very rare in Middle English and began apparently as a variant of the earlier a-low, the parallel form to an-high (now on high); the synonymous forms a-low, be-low were analogous to a-fore, be-fore. Below gained currency in the 1500's, and is frequent in Shakespeare. —prep. 1575, from the adverb.

belt n. Old English (about 1000) belt, found also in Old High German balz and Old Icelandic belti, all borrowed ultimately from Latin balteus girdle, belt, perhaps of Etruscan origin.

bench n. Before 1200, developed from Old English benc (about 725, in Beowulf), and cognate with Old Frisian bank, benk bench, Old High German bank, and Old Icelandic bekkr, in which -kk- is the North Germanic correspondence of -nk-.

bend v. Probably before 1300, developed from Old English (probably about 1000) bendan tighten (a bow); originally, constrain; causative of Old English bindan to BIND. Old English bendan developed from Proto-Germanic bandjanan*. —n. About 1434, from the verb.

beneath adv., prep. 1125 benethan, developed from Old English (854) beneoþan (be-, bi- by, + neothan below; cognate with Old Saxon nithana below, Old High German nidana, and Old Icelandic nethan; related to Old English nithera, niothera lower, NETHER).

benediction n. Probably before 1400 benediccioun, borrowed, perhaps by influence of rare Old French benediccion, from Latin benedictiōnem (nominative benedictiō), from benedicere to bless; literally, speak well of (bene well + dicere to say); for suffix see -TION.

benefactor n. 1451, borrowed, probably by influence of Middle French bienfacteur, from Late Latin benefactor, from the Latin phrase bene facere do well + -tor the agent suffix. —benefaction n. Before 1662, from Late Latin benefactionem (nominative benefactiō), from benefacere, in Latin written as two words; for suffix see -TION.

benefice n. About 1300, borrowed through Old French benefice, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin beneficium kindness, promotion, from beneficus obliging, kind, from bene well + the root of facere do. —beneficence n. About 1454, from Latin beneficentia, from a variant stem of beneficus kind; for suffix see -ENCE. —beneficent adj. 1616, probably formed in English from beneficence, on the pattern of earlier English benevolent, magnificent; for suffix see -ENT.

benefit n. Before 1376 benfet good deed, borrowed through Anglo-French benfet, benfait, from Old French bienfait, and directly from Latin benefactum good deed (bene well + factum, neuter past participle of facere to do). —v. 1472, from the noun. —beneficial adj. 1464, borrowed through Middle French bénéficial and directly from Latin beneficialis, from beneficium a benefit, kindness; for suffix see *-AL*¹. —beneficiary n. 1611, borrowed probably from French bénéficiaire, from Latin beneficiarius, from beneficium; for suffix see -ARY.

benevolent adj. About 1443, borrowed from Middle French benivolent, and directly from Latin benevolentem (bene well + volentem (nominative volens), present participle of velle to wish); for suffix see -ENT. —benevolence n. Probably about 1400, borrowed from Old French benivolence, and directly from Latin benevolentia well-wishing, from benevolentem.

benign adj. Probably before 1325, borrowed from Old French benigne, a learned borrowing from Latin benignus good-natured (bene good, well + -gnus, from gignere to bear, beget; see KIN). —benignant adj. Before 1782, formed in English from Latin benignus, on the pattern of earlier malignant.

bent¹ adj. not straight. Probably before 1300 ibent; later bent (about 1370), developed from bent, past participle of BEND. —n. 1586, developed from earlier bent, adj., being turned or inclined in some direction (1534), probably as a translation of Latin inclinātiō inclination.

bent² n. stiff grass. 1364; earlier, “grassy place” 1327 an earlier form Benet- (1136 and after, in place names); developed from Old English Beonet- (851), as in Beonet-lēah Bentley; cognate with Old Saxon binet and Old High German binuz (early modern German Bintze, German Binse) rush, marshy grass, from Proto-Germanic binut-*.

benzene or benzine n. 1835 benzine, borrowed from German Benzin, from Benz(oesäure) benzoic acid + -in *-ine*², chemical suffix.

benzoin n. 1562 benzoin, earlier bengewine (1558), which probably gave rise to the alteration benjamin (variant, late 1500's to the 1800's); also English benjoin (1601); borrowed from Middle French benjoin and Italian benzoi, from which English assimilated the z. The source of the word in European languages is Arabic lubān jāwī incense of Jāwā (Java); lu being mistaken as the definite article in Arabic, was omitted in the borrowing.

bequeath v. Probably before 1200 biquethen, developed from Old English becwethan give by will (800–885); earlier, to say, speak (probably about 750), a compound of be-, bi- by, about + cwethan say, from Proto-Germanic kwethanan*.

bequest n. Before 1338 biqueste; later occasionally biquyst, as in 1378 (be-, bi- be- + quiste, about 1300; later quest, between 1330 and 1350, developed from Old English cwis*, cwiss* something said, utterance (compare Old English andcwis an answer, uncwisse speechless). The t in Middle English is probably due to analogy between biquethen-biquiste, quiste and pairs such as give-gift, freeze-frost, etc.

berate v. 1548, formed from English prefix be- thoroughly + rate to scold (about 1390).

bereave v. About 1175 bireaven, developed from Old English berēafian, about 725 (be-, bi- thoroughly + rēafian rob, about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian birāva despoil, Old Saxon biroban, Old High German biroubōn (modern German berauben), and Gothic biraubōn, from Proto-Germanic raubōjanan*. —bereavement n. 1731, formed from English be-reave + -ment. —bereft adj. About 1375, developed from bereaved, bireved, later bereft, past participle of Middle English bireaven.

The forms bereaved and bereft have existed side by side since the latter 1300's; however, now bereaved is applied to loss of a beloved one, bereft is applied to circumstances, as in bereft of hope.

beret n. 1827, borrowed from French béret, Old Gascon berret, from Medieval Latin birretum (diminutive of Late Latin birrus cape with a hood), perhaps of Gaulish origin.

berkelium n. 1950, New Latin berkelium, formed from the University of California at Berkeley, where first produced, + New Latin -ium (suffix of chemical elements).

berm n. 1729, borrowed from French berme, from Dutch berm and German Berme; see BRIM.

berry n. Old English berie (about 1000 found in various forms in all Germanic languages, and cognate with Old Saxon -beri in wīnberi grape, and Old High German beri berry (modern German Beere), Middle High German and Middle Dutch bere, Old Icelandic ber, Danish bær, Swedish bär, and Gothic -basi in weinabasi grape. —v. berrying vbl. n. 1845, American English, in writings of James Fenimore Cooper.

berserk adj. 1851, developed in English either as a shortening of earlier berserker (1822) or a back formation of berserker, from Scandinavian berserker where the -r is a case ending of the masculine singular, rather than an agent noun suffix for one who goes berserk. Berserker is borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic berserker wild warrior, literally, bear shirt).

berth n. 1622, safe room or space for ships; of uncertain origin; perhaps related to BEAR² in the sense of bearing, made to keep a safe distance from shore. The extended sense of a sleeping place is first recorded for a ship's passenger (1796) —v. 1667, from the noun.

beryl n. Before 1300, borrowed from Old French beril, and from Latin beryllus, from Greek berýllos, possibly a back formation from berýllion.

beryllium n. 1863, New Latin beryllium (from Latin berýllus BERYL + New Latin -ium, suffix of chemical elements).

beseech v. Probably before 1200 bisechen, formed from Middle English be-, bi- about + sechen seek, developed from Old English sēcan (about 725, in Beowulf); earlier sōhte (about 700). Beseech is cognate with Old Frisian bisēka and modern German besuchen to seek out, visit; see SEEK.

beset v. Old English besettan surround, about 725, in Beowulf (be-, bi- about + settan SET); cognate with Old Frisian bisetta surround, Old Saxon bisetjan, Old High German bisezzan, Middle High German besetzen (modern German besetzen occupy, settle), and Gothic bisatjan, from Proto-Germanic bisatjanan*. The meaning of assail, attack appeared in Middle English before 1200.

beside prep., adv. Probably before 1200 bisiden, biside; formed of Old English bī sidan by the side; earlier, bisidan, about 725 (be, bi by + sīdan, dative of sīde SIDE).

besides adv., prep. Probably before 1200 bisides, but generally of later use about 1390 and after, formed of Middle English bisiden beside + -s, variant form of the adverbial genitive ending -es.

besom n. Old English (about 800) besma, later besema bundle of twigs (used as a broom or flail); cognate with Old Frisian besma, Old Saxon besmo, and Old High German besmo, besamo (modern German Besen), from Proto-Germanic besmōn*.

best adj., adv. Probably before 1200 beste or best, earlier betste (before 1121); found in Old English betst, betsta (about 725, in Beowulf); cognates with Old Frisian, Old Saxon, and Middle Dutch best, Old High German bezzist best (modern German best), Old Icelandic beztr, and Gothic batists, from the Germanic base bat-* (see BETTER) + superlative suffix in Old English -st -est. Old English betst was reduced to best by assimilation of the t to the following s.

The relationship of best and better with good and well developed outside of Old English. —n. Probably before 1200 best, earlier beste, betste (before 1175); from best, adj. —v. 1863, from best, n.

bestial adj. Before 1393, borrowed from Old French bestial and from Latin bēstialis like a beast, from bēstia BEAST; for suffix see *-AL*¹.

bestow v. Before 1375 bestowen, bistowen give (alms, etc.), mete out (be-, bi- be- + stowen to place, STOW). —bestowal n. 1773, from English bestow + -al.

bet v. The origin of this word is uncertain. The verb is first recorded in 1597, possibly derived from beet, v., to make good, developed from Middle English beten to mend, make better, replenish (a fire), arouse; stimulate, in Old English bætan; cognate with Old Saxon bētan, Old High German beizen and Old Icelandic beita, from Proto-Germanic baitjanan*.

The shortened e of bet is due to the presence of short e forms in Middle English beten, as signaled by rimes and by tt-spellings. Betting (1599) may have been thought of as “improving a game or contest, stimulating action, etc.” —n. 1592, probably from the verb. The later date for the verb (1597) may be a defect in the record of English. With similarity of form, it is tempting to draw a connection between modern English bet and Middle English bet advantage (noun use of bet, adv., the earlier form of BETTER). However, no accepted connection has been established.

beta n. Before 1325, borrowed from Latin bēta, from Greek bēta, from Semitic; compare Hebrew bēth the second letter of the Hebrew alphabet, literally meaning a house, originally formed from the hieroglyph of a house.

betray v. About 1280 bitrayen mislead, deceive, betray (bi- be-, thoroughly + trayen betray, borrowed from Old French traïr, from Latin trādere hand over). —betrayal n. 1816, formed from English betray + -al.

betroth v. About 1303 betrouthen, variant of bitreuthen (be-, bi- by + treuth a pledge, TROTH). —betrothal n. 1844, formed from English betroth + -al.

better adj., adv. Probably before 1300 better, earlier bettre (about 1250) and betre (1131); developed from Old English bettra (before 900), earlier betra (about 750) and betera (about 725, in Beowulf). The word was used as the comparative of good in older Germanic languages and is cognate with Old Frisian betera, Old Saxon betiro, Old High German bezziro better (modern German besser), Old Icelandic betri, and Gothic batiza, from Proto-Germanic batizōn*. —n. About 1175, developed in Old English from the adjective in such a phrase as the better. —v. Before 1400, from the adjective, and analogous to Old English beterian, gebeterian be or make better.

between prep., adv. 1225 bitwene, earlier bitwenen (probably before 1200) and betwene (about 1200); developed from Old English betwēonum (about 750); formed from bi-, be- by + twēonum two each (about 725, in Beowulf).

betwixt prep., adv. Before 1333 bytwiſte, earlier betwix (1127); developed from Old English betweox (before 899), formed from bi-, be- by + twox for two.

The final t in betwixt developed in Old English but was infrequently used until after 1500 when it gradually became the regular spelling.

bevel n. 1677 bevil, earlier beville, adj. (1562), possibly preserved as a technical term, borrowed from Old French bevel*, a form implied by biveau, béveau (in which Middle and modern French -eau come from Old French -el). The Old French bevel* may have developed from baif gaping.

The problem here lies in the dates of borrowing. Since the word is first recorded in English (1562), there appears to be a gap of about 150 years between the assumed borrowing from Old French (a period ending in 1400) and the appearance of beville in English. —v. 1677, probably from the noun.

beverage n. About 1300, earlier as a surname (1237); borrowed from Old French bevrage, from bevre to drink, variant of boivre, from Latin bibere, see IMBIBE; for suffix see -AGE.

bevy n. About 1425, applied to quails; before 1450, applied to a group of ladies; borrowed from Anglo-French bevé, of unknown origin.

beware v. Developed from the imperative phrase be ware (probably about 1200, in the plural beth warre), from be, v., and ware, adj., careful; see AWARE.

Old English had the compound bewarian to defend, not found in Middle English, and the verb warian to guard, keep clear of, which survived only in certain phrases; such as ware holes, in the sense of keep clear of the holes, mistaken as a contraction of beware. Middle English war, ware appeared regularly in the phrase to be ware to be on one's guard. From such constructions be ware soon began to be treated as a single word.

bewilder v. 1684, first occurring in the past participial form bewildered (be- thoroughly + now archaic wilder lead astray or into the wilds, probably back formation from wilderness, on the analogy of wander).

beyond prep., adv. Before 1325 biyond, earlier beionde (1154); developed from Old English begeondan (probably about 885), from bi-, be- by + geond yonder, prep. + -an from or at (a place); see YONDER.

bi-, prefix meaning: 1a twice, as in bimonthly = twice each month. b once every two, as in bimonthly = once every two months. 2 having two, or doubly, as in bipolar = having two poles, biconvex = doubly convex. 3 two, as in bisect = section or divide in two. About 1250, borrowed through Old French bi-, and directly from Latin bi-, from Old Latin dvi- (dui-).

bias n. 1530, borrowed from Middle French biais slant, from Old Provençal biais, of uncertain origin. —v. 1622, from the noun. —biased adj. 1649, prejudiced, earlier (1611) as a participial of bias, v., suggesting that the earlier use of biased was influenced by the French verb biaisier (1402).

bib n. 1580, developed from earlier verb bibben to drink (probably about 1380), perhaps borrowed from Latin bibere; see IMBIBE.

Bible n. Before 1325, borrowed in part through Anglo-Latin biblia (replacing Old English bibliotheca the Scriptures) from Medieval Latin Biblia, and in part from Old French bible, a learned borrowing from Medieval Latin Biblia, neuter plural, interpreted as feminine singular of Late Latin biblia (usually biblia sacra holy books).

Late Latin biblia was borrowed from Greek biblia, plural of biblōn (often byblōn) originally, little book, but later “book,” and so diminutive of býblos book, writing, scroll (literally meaning "paper," býblos Egyptian papyrus; compare similar formation in Latin liber book, from liber the inner bark of a tree, and English book, from Old English bōc, related to bōc beech tree).

The general meaning of book or treatise, especially a lengthy one is recorded 1387. —biblical adj. 1790, replacing earlier Biblic (1684), from which it was formed + *-al*¹.

biblio- combining form meaning: 1 book or books, as in bibliophile = lover of books. 2 the Bible, as in bibliolatry = excessive reverence for the Bible. Biblio- has been an element of a few English words since about 1000. As a naturalized combining form in English it began to appear with some frequency in the 1800's, in imitation of the Greek element biblio- from biblōn book.

bibliography n. 1678, borrowed perhaps through influence of French bibliographie (1633), from Greek bibliographiā the writing of books (biblōn book + -graphiā record, account, from gráphein write). —bibliographer n. 1656, formed in English from Greek bibliographiā + English suffix *-er*¹. —bibliographical adj. 1679, formed possibly from English bibliography + -ical.

The form biblio- was already known in English through bibliothēke library (1549), and bibliothēca the Scriptures (about 1000) so that it is quite possible biblio- was a natural formation from Greek elements in the literary flowering of England after the mid-1500's, and became a naturalized combining form in English by the early 1800's when most words in biblio- are first recorded in English.

bicameral adj. Before 1832, formed in English from bi- two + Late Latin camera chamber + English suffix *-al*¹; see CAMERA.

biceps n. 1634, borrowed probably from French biceps (1562), and from Latin biceps (genitive bicipitis) two-headed (bi- two + -ceps, -cipit-, caput HEAD).

bicker v. Probably before 1300 bikeren (bikering) to attack; formed in English perhaps from Middle Dutch bicken to slash, stab, attack + English suffix *-er*¹ again and again. The suggested Middle Dutch bicken is supported by Middle English biker, n.; see noun below. —n. Probably before 1300 biker battle, attack; later, quarrel (1350), probably developed from bikeren, v.

bicycle n. 1868 (perhaps 1866, in U.S. Patents), probably formed in English from bi- two + -cycle wheel, on the pattern of earlier tricycle carriage, (1828). According to most, bicycle is borrowed from French; however, it is not recorded in French until 1869 and is held by French scholars to be a borrowing from English (see Petit Robert, 1978). The confusion apparently comes from the fact that it was a workman, Lallemand, in a French carriage works who, in 1865, made the improvements in Macmillan's version (1839) of the pedal velocipede and went to America with his invention. —v. 1869, from the noun.

bid v. Before 1121 bidden beg, request, influenced by and often confused in meaning with beden offer, announce, command, but developed from Old English biddan ask for, demand (about 725, in Beowulf). Of the two forms, Middle English bidden (Old English biddan) is cognate with Old Frisian bidda, Old High German bitten ask for, beseech (modern German bitten), Old Icelandic bidhja, and Old Saxon and Gothic bidjan, from Proto-Germanic bidjanan*. Middle English beden (Old English bēoðan) is cognate with Old Frisian biada, Old High German biotan to offer (modern German bieten), Old Icelandic bjōðha, Old Saxon biodan, and Gothic anabiudan to command, from Proto-Germanic biuðanan*. —n. 1788, from the verb.

bide v. Old English bīdan stay, wait (about 725); cognate with Old Saxon bīdan, Middle Dutch bīden, Old High German bītan to wait, Old Frisian bīda, Old Icelandic bidha, and Gothic beidan to wait. Except in such use as bide one's time, the word has been largely displaced by abide.

biennial adj. 1621, borrowed perhaps from French biennal (1550), and formed in English from Latin biennium two-year period + English suffix *-al*¹.

bier n. Probably before 1200 bere, developed from Old English (before 900) West Saxon bær stretcher; earlier, Anglian bēr, formed from the stem of beran to bear; see BEAR² carry.

Since about 1600 the spelling bier developed, influenced by French bière* coffin, from Old French biere litter, bier, ultimately from Frankish bēra* (compare Old High German bāra bier), from Proto-Germanic bārō*.

bifocal adj. 1888, formed from English bi- + focal. —bifocals n. pl. 1888 or 1889, from noun use of bifocal, adj. + -s. Though bifocals were conceived by Benjamin Franklin, he used the term double spectacles (1784), the name bifocals appearing over 100 years later.

big adj. About 1300, strong or sturdy; of obscure origin, perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Norwegian dialect bugge strong man).

Its use much before 1400 is rare, the general sense "of great size, large" appearing about 1380. —adv. 1563, from the adjective.

bigamy n. About 1250, borrowed from Old French bigamie and from Medieval Latin bigamia, from Late Latin bigamus twice married (a hybrid of Latin bi- two, twice + Greek gámos marriage). —bigamous adj. 1864, formed from English bigamy + -ous, after Medieval Latin bigamus.

bight n. 1278, in a place name (Syde biht in Lancashire); developed from Old English (825) byht a bend, related to būgan to bend, bow; see BOW¹ bend. Old English byht is cognate with Middle Low German bucht (modern German Bucht), Middle Dutch and modern Dutch bocht bend, bight; from Proto-Germanic buhtis*.

bigot n. 1598, hypocrite, borrowed from Middle French bigot hypocrite, of uncertain origin. —bigoted adj. 1645, formed from English bigot + *-ed*². —bigotry n. Before 1674, borrowed from French bigoterie, from bigot; for suffix see -RY.

bijou n. 1668, borrowing of French bijou, from Breton bizou, earlier besou finger ring, from biz finger.

bike n. 1882, American English, shortened and altered form of bicycle.

bikini n. 1948, borrowed from French bikini, after Bikini atoll in the Marshall Islands of the Pacific.

The name of the bathing suit has been attributed to various analogies, but no concrete evidence is available.

bile n. 1665, borrowed from French bile, a learned borrowing from Latin bilis bile, anger. —bilious adj. 1541, of or having to do with bile; later, ill-tempered (1561); borrowed from Middle French bilieux, a learned borrowing of Latin biliōsus full of bile, from bilis bile; for suffix see -OUS.

bilge n. 1513, probably variant of earlier bulge a ship's hull, a leather bag (about 1200); borrowed from Old North French boulge, originally meaning leather sack, from Late Latin bulga leather sack, apparently from Gaulish bulga.

bilk v. 1672, developed as an extended sense of the earlier meaning to balk or spoil one's score in the game of cribbage (1651), perhaps as a verb use of bilk, n. (1633), either the verb or the noun possibly being an alteration in the pronunciation of the verb BALK.

bill¹ n. written statement. About 1370 bille a formal plea or charge in law, and about 1378, a petition or legislative measure; borrowed from Anglo-French bille list, schedule, account (blend of Old French bille stick of wood, with bulle a decree) and Anglo-Latin billa (similar blend of Medieval Latin billia tree trunk, with bulle seal, document); both bille and billa ultimately derive from Gaulish; see BILLET¹,² and BULL² decree.

The meaning "account or invoice" is first recorded in 1404; paper money, note from paper bill (1670).

bill² n. beak. Probably before 1200, developed from Old English (about 1000) bile beak; possibly related to another form, bill spear with a hooked blade, developed from Old English bil a kind of sword (about 725, in Beowulf) and earlier in the compound wudu-bil pruning hook (about 700).

billet¹ n. 1644, written order for soldier's food and lodging; earlier, an official record or register (probably before 1425); borrowed from Anglo-French billette list, schedule (a diminutive form of bille; see BIL¹), perhaps influenced by Middle French billette, variant of Old French bullette certificate (a diminutive form of bulle document; see BIL¹ and BULL² decree).

billet² n. 1437, thick stick of wood; borrowed from Middle French billette, a diminutive form of bille stick of wood, from Medieval Latin billia tree trunk, possibly of Gaulish origin; see BLADE.

billiards n. 1591, earlier used as an adjective in billiard stick (1588); borrowed from Middle French billard cue stick (a diminutive form of bille stick of wood). The -s added to the English word parallels use in the names of checkers, skittles, and bowls.

billion n. 1690, (in Great Britain) second power of a million; borrowed from French billion, formed from bi- two + (m)il lion, from Old French million MILLION. —billionaire n. 1860, American English, patterned on millionaire.

billow n. 1552, probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic bylgja billow, Danish bølge, and Swedish bölja); cognate with Old Dutch bolghe, bulghe, Middle Dutch bulge bubble, blister, Middle High German bulge billow, probably related to Old High German bulga (modern German Bulge leather bag), from Proto-Germanic bulg-*. —v. 1597, from the noun. —billowy adj. About 1615, formed from English billow + -y¹.

billy n. 1848, American English (burglar's slang), a crowbar; 1856, a policeman's club; probably from Billy nickname of William; like Jack and Jenny, used to name implements and machines as early as 1795, and recorded as a common appellation about 1500.

bin n. Old English binne manger (about 750), probably of Celtic origin (compare Medieval Latin benna basket and Late Latin benna cart with a basket top, the latter form said to be a Gaulish word for a kind of vehicle, perhaps a wicker or basket cart, and Welsh ben wagon, cart).

binary adj. Before 1464, borrowed through Anglo-Latin binarius, from Late Latin binārius (from Latin binī two at a time; related to bis twice; for suffix see -ARY). —binary number (before 1796) —binary system (1835, of biological classification; 1802, of a binary star).

bind v. Old English bindan (about 725); cognate with Old Saxon bindan to bind, Old Frisian and Old Icelandic binda, Old High German bintan (modern German binden), and Gothic bindan; ultimately related to BAND² fasten. —n. 1295, developed from Old English binde band (about 1000), probably from the verb. Band and bind were probably confused; until Middle English band (1126) supplanted bind except in specialized usages and in the popular usage to be in a bind (1950's and later). —binder n. 1218, in surnames, earlier bindere (before 1000), formed from Old English bindan, v. + -ere -er¹. —bindery n. 1810, American English, formed from bind + -ery.

binge n. 1854, English dialect, apparently a special use of dialectal binge to soak (a wooden vessel); and so by extension "to drink heavily" in allusion to soaking up alcohol, perhaps reminiscent of a popular and long-established connection between alcoholic drink and soak in such phrases as an old soak for a drunk.

binnacle n. 1762, alteration of earlier bittacle (1622); borrowed from French bitacle binnacle, from Old French binnacle, earlier habitable dwelling, from Latin habitaculum dwelling place, from habitare dwell. Contrary to traditional sources the Spanish term bitácula (now bitácora) is derived from French.

binocular adj. 1738, perhaps developed from the earlier meaning having two eyes (1713); borrowed from French binoculaire, ultimately from Latin binī two at a time + oculī eyes; for suffix see -AR. —binoculars n. pl. 1877, from earlier singular binocular (1871), noun use of binocular, adj.

binomial n. 1557, borrowed from New Latin binomialis, from Medieval Latin binomius having two names, alteration of Latin binōminis (bi- two + nōmen, genitive nōminis NAME); for suffix see -AL¹. —adj. 1570, from the noun.

bio- a combining form meaning: 1 life, living things, as in biology = science of life or living things. 2 biological, as in biochemistry = biological chemistry. The combining form probably entered English through New Latin bio- as a borrowing of Greek bio-, combining form of bios life, way of living; cognate with Latin vīvus living, and with Old English cwīc, cwicu quick, in the archaic sense “living,” and Gothic gius.

biography n. 1683, borrowed perhaps through New Latin biographia, from Late Greek biographiā (from Greek bio- life + -graphiā record, account, from gráphein write). —biographer n. 1715, probably formed from English biography + *-er*¹, perhaps by influence of Medieval Greek biográphos writer of lives. —biographical adj. 1738, formed from English biography + -ical.

biology n. 1819, borrowed from German Biologie, from bio- (from Greek bios life, way of living) + -logie study of (from Greek -logiā, from -lógos one who treats of). The word appears earlier in English with the now obsolete meaning “study of human life and character” (1813), perhaps as an independent borrowing of Greek elements cited above. —biological adj. 1859, formed from English biology + -ical. —biologist n. 1874, formed from English biology + -ist, perhaps by influence of earlier French biologiste (1836), and earlier English biologist (1813) but in reference to the study of human life and character.

bionics n. 1959, formed from English bio- living, life, biological + -onics, as in electronics. —bionic adj. (1970) biopsy n. 1895, borrowed from French biopsie (bio- living, life + Greek ópsis a viewing). —v. 1964, from the noun.

biped n. 1646, borrowed, perhaps through French bipède, or directly from Latin bipedem two-footed (bi- two + pedem, nominative pēs FOOT).

birch n. About 1385, developed from Old English (about 700) birce; cognate with Old Saxon birka, berka, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch berke (modern Dutch berk), Old High German biricha, birca (modern German Birke), from Proto-Germanic berkjōn*, Old Icelandic björk, from Proto-Germanic berkō*, all meaning “birch.” —birchbark n. (1643, American English).

bird n. 1353 bird, variant of brid (before 1200, the form predominating until the later 1400's); found in Old English brid young fowl (probably about 750); of uncertain origin, with no corresponding form in any other Germanic language.

birth n. About 1250 birthe; earlier burthe, burde (probably before 1200) and birde (probably about 1200), influenced by, and perhaps borrowed from, a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic burthr, Old Swedish byrth birth), that affected the previously Old English gebyrd birth (cognate with Old High German giburt, modern German Geburt, and Gothic ga- baúrths), from Proto-Germanic (ga)burðs*. —v. About 1250, from the noun. —birthday n. About 1384, replacing earlier Old English byrddæg.

biscuit n. A spelling reborrowed from French in the 1800's to replace English bisket, developed in the 1500's from besquite (before 1338); borrowed from Old French bescuit, literally meaning “twice-cooked” in reference to how it was prepared (bes- twice, from Latin bis + Old French cuit, past participle of cuire to cook, from Vulgar Latin cocere*, from Latin coquere; see COOK). The American use “a soft bun” is first recorded in 1818.

bisect v. 1646, formed in English from bi- two + Latin sectus, past participle of secāre to cut; see SECTION.

bishop n. Old English biscop (before 830) and bi-sceop (before 900); cognate with Old Saxon biscop and Old High German bischof; all borrowed from Late Latin episcopus bishop, overseer, from Greek episkopos overseer (epi- over + skopós watcher, related to sképtesthai look at). —bishopric n. Old English (about 890) bisceoprice (bisceop bishop + rice realm, province, dominion, power).

bismuth n. 1668, borrowed from earlier German Bismuth, from Wismuth, Wismut (the forms to which the modern German has reverted).

bison n. 1611 (although the Latinized plural form bysontes appeared before 1398), borrowed through French bison, or more likely directly from Latin bisōn (accusative bisontem), from a Germanic source (compare Old High German wisunt aurochs, a species of wild ox, modern German Wisent, Old English wesend, and Old Icelandic visundr).

bisque¹ n. soup. 1647 bisk, later bisque (1731), borrowed from French bisque a soup; said to be an altered form of Biscaye Biscay.

bisque² n. pottery. 1664, alteration of English biscuit.

bissextile adj., n. (containing or designating) the extra day of leap year. 1581 n., 1594 adj.; borrowed from Late Latin bissextilis, bisextilis, adj., from Latin bisextus diēs intercalary day (bi- two + sextus sixth).

The Julian calendar added an extra day after the sixth day (thereby doubling it) before the calends of March, or the 24th of February.

bistro n. 1922 bistrot, 1924 bistro, borrowed from French bistrot, bistro (1884), originally Parisian slang for “little wineshop or restaurant”; origin uncertain.

bit¹ n. small piece. Probably about 1200 bite, developed from Old English bita piece bitten off, morsel, mouthful (before 1050), from bitan to bite; see BITE. Old English bita is cognate with Old Frisian bita, Old Icelandic biti bit, and Old High German bizzo biting (modern German Bissen a bite), from Proto-Germanic bitōn*.

bit² n. drill; part of a bridle. About 1150, a bite, biting, found in Old English bite a bite (about 725, in Beowulf), (compare modern German Gebiss horse's bit, from beissen to BITE).

Old English bite is cognate with Old Frisian bit, bite, biti, Old Saxon biti, Old High German biz piece bitten off (modern German Biss a bite), Old Icelandic bit bite, biting, from Proto-Germanic bitiz*.

bit³ n. binary digit. 1948 (a word coined by J.W. Tukey), short for bi(nary) (digi)t. Compare BYTE.

bitch n. Probably about 1150 bicche, developed from Old English (about 1000) bicce, cognate with and, perhaps borrowed from, a Scandinavian word such as Old Icelandic bikkja female dog or Old Danish bikke.

The oath bikkeju-sonn in Old Icelandic and biche sone in Middle English (probably before 1300) further establish a close connection between the English word and a possible borrowing from Scandinavian. —v. Before 1930, probably by extension from an earlier verb meaning, such as to bungle, spoil (1823).

bite v. Probably about 1150 biten, developed from Old English bītan (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon bītan to bite, Old Frisian bīta, Middle Dutch bīten (modern Dutch bijten), Old High German bīzan (modern German beissen), Old Icelandic bīta, (Swedish bita, Danish bide), and Gothic beitan, from Proto-Germanic bītanan*. —n. Probably before 1200; see BIT¹.

bitter adj. About 1175, developed from Old English biter (about 725, in Beowulf) and bitre, bittreste (before 830); cognate with Old Saxon and Old High German bittar bitter (modern German, Dutch, Swedish, and Danish bitter), Old Icelandic bitr (from Proto-Germanic bitrás*). —bittersweet adj. 1611, adjective use of bittersweet, n. a kind of tree, its fruit, or a drink made from it (before 1393).

bittern n. 1515, alteration of bitore (about 1395); earlier butur (about 1353) and botor (probably before 1300); borrowed probably from Anglo-Latin butorius, bitorius, and Old French butor, both apparently from Gallo-Romance būtitauros*, from Latin būtītō bittern + taurus bull, so called from its booming voice (compare the popular English name for this bird, bull of the bog, 1815; also Pliny's use of taurus to designate the bittern of southern France).

bitumen n. Before 1464 bitumen mineral pitch used as mortar; borrowed from Latin bitūmen asphalt, probably from a Celtic source (compare Gaulish betulla birch, a name used by Pliny for the tree that was supposedly the source of bitumen). —bituminous adj. 1620, borrowed through French bitumineux, or directly from Latin bitūminōsus, from bitūmen; for suffix see -OUS.

bivouac n. 1702, a night watch by an army; borrowed from French bivouac, probably from Low German bīwake (bi- by + wake watch; related to English WAKE). Some suggest the French word came from Swiss German Biwacht extra night patrol. The sense of an outdoor camp in 1853. —v. 1809, to post troops or remain in the open during the night; verb use of bivouac, n. The meaning "camp outdoors" first appeared in 1814.

bizarre adj. Before 1648, borrowed from French bizarre odd, fantastic; formerly, brave, from Italian bizzarro angry, wrathful and Spanish bizarro brave.

black adj. About 1150 blac, developed from Old English (about 700) blæc, blec; cognate with Old High German blah, blach and Old Icelandic blakkr black, dun-colored, from Proto-Germanic blak-*. —n. Probably before 1200; Old English blæc, n. —v. Also, blacken. Probably about 1200; from the adjective; for suffix of blacken see -EN¹. —blackberry n. Probably about 1125. —blackbird n. 1279 (in a surname). —black eye n. 1327 (in a surname). —blackguard n. (1535, kitchen help; 1736, scoundrel) —blackmail n. 1552, money paid outlaws for protection (black, adj. + mail tax, tribute, Old English māl); payment extorted by threats (before 1826). —blacksmith n. 1248 (in a surname).

bladder n. About 1200 bladdre, earlier bladre (about 1150); developed from Old English blædre (West Saxon) and blēdre (Anglian, about 700); cognate with Old Saxon blādara, Old High German blātara bladder, and Old Icelandic blādhra bladder, blister, from the same base as Old English blāwan to BLOW² puff.

blade n. About 1380 blad, earlier in compound shuldre blade shoulder blade (about 1300), found in Old English blæd leaf, (but usually) any leaflike part (about 725).

The Old English is cognate with Old Frisian bled, Old Saxon blad, Old and Middle High German blat leaf (modern German Blatt), Old Icelandic bladh, from Proto-Germanic bladān*.

blame v. Probably before 1200, borrowed from Old French blamer, earlier blasmer, from Vulgar Latin blastēmāre*, alteration of Late Latin blasphemāre revile, reproach. According to the OED the word was introduced into Latin in language of the New Testament which used Greek blasphēmēn. —n. Probably about 1200, borrowed from Old French blame, earlier blasme, from blamer, v.

blanch v. Before 1398 blanchen to remove the hull of (almonds, etc.) after soaking; borrowed from Old French blanchir, from blanche, blanc white BLANK.

The Anglo-French blanche, feminine of blaunk, and the earlier Middle English blauncher cosmetic powder for whitening (about 1303), suggest the possibility of earlier use of the verb blanchen.

bland adj. 1667, soft, mild, gentle; perhaps borrowed from Italian blando delicate; 1661, smooth in manner, suave, an extension of earlier English "flattering," now seen in blandish, also in French as far back as Old French bland flattering. All forms are ultimately borrowings from Latin blandus smooth-tongued, flattering, soothing, pleasant; of uncertain origin.

blandish v. About 1340, earlier blaundishing, verbal noun (about 1300); borrowed from Old French blandiss-, stem of blandir, from Latin blandīrī flatter, from blandus smooth-tongued, flattering, BLAND; for suffixal ending see -ISH². —blandishment n. 1591; probably formed from English blandish + -ment, or borrowed from Middle French blandissement.

blank adj. 1230 Blanc-heved (a surname), white, pale, colorless; borrowed from Old French blanc white, shining, of West Germanic origin (compare Old High German blanch bright, shining, Old English blanca white horse), from Proto-Germanic blank-* shining, pale. The meaning having empty spaces to be filled in is first recorded in 1399. —n. Before 1392, in the obsolete sense referring to a small French coin; later, a blank space (about 1570).

blanket n. About 1300 blaunket white woolen stuff used for clothing, also bed covering (1303); borrowed from Old French blanchet, blanquet, from blanc white, BLANK; for suffix see -ET.

blare v. About 1400 blaren to cry, bellow, wail; earlier bleren (1390). Though probably developed from Old English blæren*, it is also possible that bleren was borrowed from Middle Dutch blēren to bleat, cry, bawl, shout, roar; or from Middle Low German blarren (Low German blarren) and is cognate with Middle High German blēren to shout, yell, scream (modern German plärren cry, whine, bellow). Whatever the immediate source, the word is probably of imitative origin. —n. 1809, from the verb.

blarney n. 1766, Lady Blarney (for Blarney), a smooth-talking flatterer in Goldsmith's The Vicar of Wakefield, her name being a literary contrivance in allusion to Blarney Stone, in a castle near Cork, Ireland.

blasé adj. 1819, borrowed from French blasé, past participle of blaser exhaust with pleasure, satiate.

blaspheme v. 1340 blasfemen, in Ayenbite of Inwyt, borrowed from Old French blasfemer, learned borrowing from Late Latin blasphemāre, from Greek blasphēmēin to speak profanely (blas- probably with the meaning "false" + phēmē speech, related to phānai speak). —blasphemy n. Probably before 1200, borrowed from Old French blasfemie, blasphemie, learned borrowing from Late Latin blasphēmia, from Greek blasphēmīa profane speech, slander, formed beside the verb phēmēin; for suffix see -Y³. —blasphemous adj. Before 1415 blasfemouse, borrowed from Medieval Latin blasphemus, from Late Latin blasphēmus, or perhaps immediately through Middle French blasphemeus from Medieval Latin; for suffix see -OUS.

blast n. Probably before 1200, the call of a trumpet; developed from Old English blæst strong gust of wind (about 725); cognate with Old High German blāst blast, gust of wind, blāsan to blow (modern German blasen), Old Icelandic blāstr blast, blāsa to blow, and Gothic -blēsan blow (in compounds). —v. to blow. Probably before 1300, developed from Old English blæstan, perhaps from the noun. —blastoff n., blast off v. (1951).

blatant adj. 1596 blatant, blattant, used in the phrase "blatant beast" or "blattant beast" in Spenser's Faerie Queene, apparently his invention to describe a monster representing slander with a thousand tongues.

Some suggest a connection with Latin blatire to babble, or compare English blatter to chatter (recorded before 1555), borrowed from Latin blaterare to babble.

blather v. 1524 blether (in Scottish use); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic bladhra to chatter, babble). —n. foolish talk. 1787 blether, noun use of blether, v.

blaze¹ n. bright flame. Probably before 1200 blase, developed from Old English blæse torch (before 893), from Proto-Germanic blasōn*. The word is cognate with Middle High German blas torch, candle, fire. —v. Probably before 1200 blasen, from the noun.

blaze² n. white mark on face of an animal. 1639; later, mark made on a tree by cutting off bark (1662, American English); of uncertain origin. The word may have been borrowed in a north English dialect from Old Icelandic blest white mark on the forehead of an animal, and later came into general use. Another possibility is that *blaze*² was borrowed from Middle High German blasse white spot on the forehead of an animal, related to Middle Low German blesse, bles (modern German Blässe, Blesse) and cognate with Old Icelandic blesi, Gothic bala- pale (horse), and Middle High German blas BALD. —v. 1750, American English, to mark a tree or trail; from the noun.

blaze³ v. About 1380, to blow (as a musical instrument); borrowed probably from Middle Dutch blāsen to blow; cognate with Old Icelandic blāsa to blow, Old High German blāsan (modern German blasen), related to Old English blāwan to BLOW², and blāst BLAST. The current sense of proclaim is also associated with *blaze*¹, v. and blazon, v. as if to expose to the blaze of publicity.

blazer n. 1880, formed from English *blaze*¹, v. (from the red color of the original jackets worn by a boating club of Cambridge University) + -ER.

blazon n. 1278 blazoun shield (especially with a crest); borrowed from Old French blason shield, of uncertain origin. —v. Before 1420, enscribe with a crest, from the noun, probably influenced by English *blaze*³ in obsolete sense of describe heraldically. The meaning of proclaim, boast appeared between 1513 and 1577.

bleach v. Probably before 1200 blechen, developed from Old English blæcan to bleach (before 899), from blāc pale, shining; cognate with Old High German bleih pale, shining (modern German bleich pale), and Old Icelandic bleikr pale. Old English blæcan is cognate with Old High German blīhhan (modern German bleichen) and Old Icelandic bleikja to bleach. For an explanation of the spelling see CH. —n. Before 1425, probably as a noun use of earlier and now obsolete adjective. —bleachers n.pl. 1889, American English; so called from the bleaching of the benches (called bleaching boards, 1888) by the sun.

bleak adj. About 1300 bleike pale; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic bleikr pale); see BLEACH. The extended sense of bare, windswept appeared in 1538, and the figurative sense of cheerless, dreary appeared before 1719.

blear v. Probably before 1325 bleren have watery eyes, of uncertain origin (but compare Middle High German blerre having blurred vision). The Middle English compound bleareighed blear-eyed (about 1378) corresponds in form and meaning to Low German bleer-oged. The adjective blear arose probably before 1387, and bleary in 1495. The word blear is perhaps related to BLUR.

bleat v. Before 1300 bleten, developed from Old English (before 800) blætan; cognate with Old High German blāzan to bleat and modern Dutch blaten. —n. 1590, from the verb. The earlier noun use blet (1382) refers to a ewe.

bleed v. Old English (about 900) blēdan; cognate with Old Frisian blēda, Old High German bluotēn (modern German bluten), and Old Icelandic blēdha, from Proto-Germanic blōðjanan*; related to Old English blōd BLOOD. The sense of feel pity or sympathy for is first recorded in 1377.

blemish v. About 1380 blemishen; earlier blemis (probably before 1350); borrowed from Old French blemiss-, stem of blemir, from earlier blesmir make pale, harm, probably from Frankish; for suffixal see -ISH². —n. 1526, from the verb.

blench v. Probably before 1200 blenchen move suddenly, wince, dodge; developed from Old English (before 1000) blencan deceive; cognate with Old Icelandic blekka to cheat, from Proto-Germanic blankjanan*. For an explanation of the spelling see CH.

blend v. Before 1325 blenden, developed from Old English blondan to mix (a form in Mercian corresponding to West Saxon blandan*) and a Scandinavian form (compare Old Icelandic blanda to mix); cognate with Old High German blantan to mix and Gothic blandan. —n. 1883, from the verb.

bless v. Probably about 1225 blesen, developed from Old English blēdsian (an early form, preserved in Northumbrian about 950), and also found in various other forms, such as blēdsian (before 830 from Proto-Germanic blōdisōjanan*), blētsian (about 725), blesian (about 1000); all meaning to make holy or sacred by some sacrificial rite, originally, to mark with blood and hence related to blōd BLOOD.

The sense development was probably influenced by the use of this verb in versions of the English language Bible to translate Latin benedicere to bless, literally, speak well of, resulting in such meanings as to praise or extol, as in bless God and to speak well of or wish well to, as in bless them for their kindness. —blessed adj. Probably before 1200, adjective use of blessed, past tense of bless, v. —blessing n. 1123, developed from Old English blēdsung (before 830), later blētsunge and bletsunga (1070).

blight n. 1611, plant disease; a word of uncertain origin, apparently first used by farmers and gardeners; perhaps ultimately related to Old English blāc pale, shining (from the appearance of blighted plants). The sense of anything that withers, destroys, or mars, is first recorded before 1661. —v. 1695, from the noun.

blimp n. 1916, of uncertain origin; possibly from (British) Type B-limp, limp dirigible, without a rigid internal structure, as opposed to the Type A-rigid with a rigid framework.

blind adj. Old English blind (about 725); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon blind, Old High German and Middle Dutch blind blind (modern German and Dutch blind), Old Icelandic blindr (modern Swedish, Danish, and Norwegian blind), Gothic blinds blind, from Proto-Germanic blindaz*. —n. About 1200, from the adjective. —v. Middle English blinden (about 1225); gradually, probably by influence of blind, adj., replacing earlier blenden (before 1200, developed from Old English blendan). Middle English blinden is cognate with Old Frisian blindia, modern Dutch verblinden, Danish forblinde, Gothic gabljindjan.

blindfold v. 1526, alteration (influenced by *fold*¹ wrap) of earlier blindfeld, blindfelled (1483), past participle of blindfellen to strike blind, to blindfold (probably before 1200), developed from Old English (about 1000) geblindfellan (blind + gefeollan to strike down, *FELL*¹; an Anglian form corresponding to West Saxon gefyllan). —n. 1880, from the verb.

blink v. 1590, borrowed from Middle Dutch blinken to glitter, of uncertain origin. —n. 1594, from the verb.

blip n. 1945, perhaps from earlier meaning a quick popping sound, sudden blow (1894, in writings of Mark Twain). —v. 1924. Both the noun and verb are of uncertain origin, perhaps imitative of a sound.

bliss n. Old English blis (about 725), alteration of blīths (a form not recorded earlier but associated with blithe; compare archaisms bliths (900's), and blithsian, v. (before 899)). The Old English is cognate with Old Saxon blīdsea, blīzza bliss; derived from the root of BLITHE.

blister n. Before 1325 blester, blister, borrowed from Old French blestre a boil, lump, from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic blāstr a blowing, dative blāstri swelling, from blāsa to blow); or possibly the Old French is derived from a West Germanic source (compare Old High German blāst blowing, from blāsan to blow BLAST). —v. Probably before 1425, from the noun, influenced by Middle French verb.

blithe adj. About 1175, joyful, gentle, and by 1200, bright, beautiful, found in Old English blithe joyous, kind (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old High German blīdi joyous, bright, Old Saxon blīdhi, Middle Dutch blide (modern Dutch blijde), Old Icelandic blīdhr cheerful, bright, and Gothic bleiths kind, merciful, from Proto-Germanic blīthiz*.

blitz n., v. Probably before 1940 (noun), 1939 (verb); borrowing of German Blitz lightning, and originally short for German Blitzkrieg (before 1939) rapid warfare (Blitz lightning + Krieg war).

blizzard n. 1859, American English, possibly from dialectal blizz violent rainstorm (1770) + -ard. The origin of blizz is uncertain. In the sense of a violent blow blizzard is recorded in American English in 1829.

bloat v. Probably a fusion of two words: 1) bloat (1611) to half-cure herring (leaving them soft), from earlier blote, adj. (as in blote herring, before 1586), developed from Middle English blot, blout soft, pliable (about 1300); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic blautr soft, Old Swedish blöter); and 2) bloat (1677) to inflate, from earlier blowt, adj. puffed up (1603), also developed from Middle English blot, blout in form, but with meaning developed from Middle English blouen to blow (probably about 1175) and later to inflate (about 1380), developed from Old English blāwan BLOW² puff.

blob n. 1725, a drop or globule; earlier, pimple or spot (1597), and bubble (1536); from the verb. —v. 1429, make or mark with blobs. Some relation may exist between blob and bubble in the meaning “blister,” through such forms as Middle English blober a bubble (about 1438), bubbling (1296).

bloc n. 1903, borrowed from French bloc group, block, from Old French bloc piece of wood; see BLOCK.

block n. 1 solid piece. 1390; earlier, in the compound block-bord (1323) and in the derivative form Blocker as an Anglo-French surname (1212); borrowed from Old French bloc piece of wood, from Middle Dutch blok. Alternatively, it may be that Old French bloc is borrowed from Old High German bloh block, cognate with Middle Dutch blok, both cognate with Middle Low German block (sometimes cited as the source of English block), Swedish block, and Danish blok. The meaning of group of buildings, as in a city block, is first recorded in 1796. 2 an obstruction. 1649, earlier in the literal sense of a lump of wood, stone, etc. that obstructs the way (before 1500); developed from noun use of English block, v. —v. 1 form into blocks. 1585, developed from verb use of block, n. (def. 1). 2 to obstruct. 1580, borrowed from French bloquer block, stop up, from Old French bloc block, barrier. —blockade n. 1693 (but probably used before 1680, when the verb appeared), from block, v. + -ade; perhaps formed by influence of French blocus blockade, from Middle Dutch blochhus blockhouse.

blond or blonde adj. 1481, borrowed from Old French blonde, blont, adj., from Medieval Latin blindus, probably from Frankish (compare Middle High German blunde, blunt). —n. 1822, noun use of blonde, adj.; earlier, blond, referring to a type of silk lace (about 1755).

blood n. About 1150 blod, developed from Old English blōd (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon blōd, Dutch bloed, Old High German bluot (modern German Blut), Old Icelandic blōðh, and Gothic blōth, from Proto-Germanic blōðan*.

Old English blōd would normally change in Middle English to a pronunciation that rhymes with food, but in the early 1500's the vowel was shortened to rhyme with good and later with flood. —bloody adj. Probably before 1200 blōdi, developed from Old English blōdig (about 725), from blōd blood; for suffix see -Y¹.

bloom n. Probably about 1200 blom, blome; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic blóm blossom, blómi prosperity).

The word does not appear in Old English, which had blōstma, blōstm flower, blossom, but has cognates in other Germanic languages including late Old Frisian blōem, blam, Middle Dutch bloeme (modern Dutch bloem), Old Saxon blōmo, Old High German bluomo, bluoma flower, blossom (modern German Blume), and Gothic blōma, from Proto-Germanic blōmōn*. The word is further related to the technical sense blow to blossom or flower, found in Old English blōwan to flower, from which we retain such common collocations as full blown meaning fully developed. —v. Probably about 1200 blomen to flower, blossom, from blome, n., influenced by and perhaps in part borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic blōmandi blooming).

bloomers n. pl. 1895, earlier bloomer (1889), American English, from Bloomer (1851) a woman's garment of loose trousers gathered at the ankles and worn under a short skirt (after Amelia J. Bloomer, 1818–1894, who promoted this garment as an equivalent to male attire; but introduced earlier by E.S. Miller).

blooper n. 1937, American English, a fly ball not caught by a fielder and considered a fielding error; 1926, radio receiver that emits a signal interfering with nearby sets. Either use providing for the extended sense of a blunder or howler (1940's).

blossom n. Probably before 1200 blosme, blostm, developed from Old English (probably about 725) blōstm, blōstma; cognate with Middle Dutch and modern Dutch bloesem blossom, Middle Low German blōsem, blossem, and Old High German bluomo, bluoma blossom, bluoen to bloom; all apparently derived from the same base as English BLOOM. —v. About 1378 blosmen, developed from Old English (about 900) blōstmian, from blōstm, blōstma, n., blossom.

blot n. 1373 blot spot; 1375, disgrace, blemish, of uncertain origin (compare Old Icelandic bletr blot, stain, spot of ground, though phonetic relationship is wanting; also compare Old French blotre, blostre a boil, lump, variant of blestre a boil; see BLISTER). —v. Before 1420 blotten, from the noun. —blotter n. 1591. The meaning in American English of an arrest record in a police blotter (1887) is derived from the meaning of a day book (1678).

blotch v. 1604 blotched marked with spots, of uncertain origin, perhaps a blend of blot and botch (1530, to spoil). —n. 1669, probably from the verb. —blotchy adj. 1824, formed from English blotch + *-y*¹.

blouse n. 1828, a workman's short tunic or smock; borrowing of French blouse (1788), of uncertain origin; compare Provençal (lano) blouso short (wool).

blow¹ n. stroke. Before 1500: 1) blow a blow with the fist, in East Midland dialect, and 2) blaw a blast of wind, in Northern dialect (before 1460). The word is in part developed from Middle English blouen to blow a current of air, and in part borrowed from Middle Dutch blouwen, blauwen to beat; cognate with Old High German bluiwan (modern German bleuen) beat.

blow² v. puff. Before 1250 blouwen, earlier blawen (1127); developed from Old English (probably about 725) blāwan to produce a current of air, sound a wind instrument. The word is cognate with Old High German blāen to blow, (from Proto-Germanic blā-anan*), and Middle High German bloewen (modern German blähen) to blow, swell. —n. 1660, from the verb. —blower n. Before 1131, a horn blower; later, a blowing device (before 1398).

blubber n. Probably about 1380 bluber bubble, foam, and perhaps earlier in Blobermere, a surname (1296), with some reference to bubbling water or foaming waves, from which a derivation of imitative origin is perhaps justified. The sense of whale fat or fish oil is first recorded in 1467. —v. Probably about 1380 blubren to bubble, probably from the noun. The figurative meaning of to weep copiously is first recorded about 1400.

bludgeon n. 1730; of unknown origin. —v. 1868, verb use of bludgeon, n. The sense of to bully or threaten is first recorded in 1888.

blue adj., n. Probably before 1300 bleu, taking the place of Old English blāw. Middle English bleu was borrowed from Old French blo, bleu, from Frankish (compare Old High Germanic blāo blue, modern German blau; cognate with Old Frisian blaw blue, Middle Dutch blaeww, and Old Icelandic blā livid, where the meaning survives in English black and blue, and blår blue; all developing from Proto-Germanic blāwaz*). The spelling blue developed largely by influence of French in the 1700's, though it is occasionally seen as early as 1220 in the form blu and 1366 in the form blue. —blues n. 1905 (but known in jazz circles about 1895, perhaps by influence of earlier blue-devil to make despondent, 1817), from earlier blues low spirits, despondency (1741), from the adjective blue low-spirited, depressed, dejected (about 1385), as in the phrase to look blue, originally, to look livid or leaden-colored from anxiety, depression, etc. (about 1600).

bluegrass n. 1958, traditional country music, in allusion to the Bluegrass Boys, a country-music band of 1940's and 1950's, after the Bluegrass State (Kentucky, where bluegrass, a kind of grass with a bluish-green stem, is widely grown, though it did not originate there).

blue jeans or bluejeans n. pl. 1901, American English; from earlier a twilled cotton cloth dyed blue (1843); see JEANS.

bluff¹ n. cliff. 1687, American English, from the adjective. —adj. 1627; origin uncertain (but compare obsolete Dutch blaf broad, flat, a connection with English favored by the nautical use in Captain John Smith's Seaman's Glossary).

The figurative meaning of good-naturedly blunt is first recorded in 1808.

bluff² v. deceive. 1839, American English, perhaps developed from earlier English bluff to blindfold (1674); probably borrowed from Dutch bluffen to make a trick at cards; but possibly borrowed from Low German bluffen, bluffen to frighten by menacing conduct. —n. 1873, from the phrase the game of bluff (1859) in figurative reference to bluff the game of poker (1845).

blunder v. Before 1378 blondren act blindly or irrationally; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic blunda to shut the eyes, Norwegian and Swedish blundra act blindly; related to Old English blind BLIND); for suffix see —ER⁴. The meaning of to make a stupid mistake is first found in 1711. —n. Probably about 1390, confusion, bewilderment, trouble; from the verb. The meaning of stupid mistake is first recorded in 1706.

blunt adj. Probably about 1200, dull, obtuse, later meaning dull-edged, not sharp, in the surname Blundspure (about 1285); probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic blunda shut the eyes, doze, blundr dozing, related to blindr BLIND). —v. Before 1398, from the adjective.

blur n. 1548, a smear, stain; origin uncertain; commonly considered to be a possible variant of BLEAR. —v. 1581, in the phrase blur out erase or darken by a smear, from the noun. The meaning of to make dim or indistinct appeared in 1611.

blurb n. 1914, American English, possibly coined in 1907 by Gelett Burgess, 1866–1951, American humorist, to satirize excessive praise found on book jackets.

blurt v. 1573, apparently imitative of a discharge of breath with the bl- element of blow or blast combined with another element of spurt, squirt, and the like.

blush v. Probably about 1350 blissen, blishen to glance, look, stare; later, blussen, (about 1405), and blisshen (before 1450). These Middle English forms apparently developed from: 1) Old English blyscan* (found in compound āblyscan blush); cognate with Middle Dutch blōzen (modern Dutch blozen) blush, and Middle Low German blosen, bloschen; and from: 2) Old English blyscan (earlier bluskejan*) become red, glow, also cognate with Middle Low German blōsen blush. —n. 1593, a reddening of the face; earlier, a rosy color or glow (1590), and a glance, glimpse (probably about 1350, now obsolete except in the phrase at first blush); from the verb. —blusher n. 1665, one who blushes; later, a cosmetic to give the cheeks a rosy color (1965).

bluster v. 1463, to blow violently; earlier, to speak or shout noisily or threateningly (about 1400), and to stray blindly, wander blunderingly (before 1376); borrowed probably from Middle Low German blüstern blow violently; related to Old Icelandic blāsa to blow; see BLAST. —n. 1583, noisy blowing; from the verb. —blusterer n. 1597, formed from English bluster + *-er*¹.

boa n. Before 1398, borrowed from Latin boa type of serpent (mentioned in Pliny's Natural History); of unknown origin.

boar n. About 1209 Bor as a surname, and before 1250 bor; earlier bar (1150); developed from Old English (about 700) bār; cognate with Old Saxon and Old High German bēr boar (modern dialectal German Bär), Middle Dutch and Dutch beer male pig, and Langobardic (the West Germanic language of the Lombards) -pair boar, from Proto-Germanic bairaz*.

board n. 1228 bord board, plank; earlier, table, shield, side of a ship (probably before 1200); found in Old English bord board, plank (about 1000); earlier bord table, shield, side of a ship (about 725); cognate with Old Saxon bord table, shield, Old High German bort side of a ship, rim, border, Middle High German bort board, plank, table, Old Icelandic bordh board, plank, table, side of a ship, rim, and Gothic baúrd (in compound fōtubaúrd footstool), from Proto-Germanic burdan*. The development of bord was reinforced in Middle English by the presence of Anglo-French bord; Old French bort border, side of a ship, table, from Germanic. The shift in spelling to modern board came about in the 1500's. —v. Before 1475 borden to come up alongside a ship, and borden board up (probably 1440); verb use of bord, n.; also evidenced by the past participle bordid a bedstead (1387). —boarder n. 1201, in a surname Border signifying a feudal tenant, earlier bordario (1130); borrowed from Old French bordier.

boast n. 1265 bost arrogance, bragging, ostentation; possibly borrowed through Anglo-French bost boasting, ostentation, from a Scandinavian source (compare Norwegian baus proud; cognate with Old High German bōsi wicked, bad, modern German böse). —v. About 1350 bosten to show off, brag; probably from the noun. —boaster n. About 1280, probably formed from bost, v. (though as of 1280 unrecorded) + *-er*¹.

boat n. About 1200 bote; earlier bat (probably before 1200); developed from Old English bāt (about 725, in Beowulf). The West Germanic languages have no corresponding form, but it is supposed that a Proto-Germanic form baita-* is probably preserved in Old Icelandic beit and Old English bāt and was adopted in Middle Low German bōt (modern German Boot) and Middle Dutch and modern Dutch boot.

Some form of bot, bote must have existed before the first recorded date, because the word is seen in the surname Botere (boater, boatman) by 1168. —v. 1613, developed from the noun.

boatswain n. 1304 botswayn, found in late Old English bātsweigen (bāt boat + swegen*, probably borrowed from Old Icelandic sveinn boy; see SWAIN).

bob¹ v. move up and down. About 1390 bobben; perhaps the same word as earlier Middle English bobben to strike or beat (probably before 1325), in expressing short jerking or rebounding motion of striking. —n. About 1550, from the verb.

bob² n. short hair. 1688, a knot of hair; earlier bobbe cluster, as of leaves or flowers (probably about 1390); of uncertain origin; perhaps from Celtic (compare Irish babán bobbin, Gaelic bab tassel, cluster). —v. 1822, American English, verb use of *bob*², n.

bobbin n. 1530, borrowed from Middle French bobine, babine small instrument used in sewing or tapestry making, from Old French balbiner, probably an alteration of baubier, balbeier, baboier to stutter, stammer (the name of the instrument being due, perhaps, to the rattling noise it made), from baube, adj. stuttering, stammering, from Latin balbus; see BABBLE.

bobby n. 1844, as a nickname Bobby in allusion to Sir Robert Peel, who as Home Secretary in 1829 organized the Metropolitan Police Force of London (originally called peelers, after Peel, replacing the earlier Charlies or watchmen).

bobolink n. Before 1801, American English, alteration of earlier bob-o-Lincoln (1774), probably a fanciful rendering of the call of the bird.

bode v. Before 1200 boden to be an omen; developed from Old English bodian announce, foretell (about 725), from boda messenger; cognate with Old Frisian boda, Old Saxon bodo, Old High German boto (modern German Bote), and Old Icelandic bodhi, all meaning a messenger, from Proto-Germanic budōn*.

bodice n. 1566 bodies, plural of body tight-fitting part of a garment covering the trunk of the body (originally in a pair of bodies analogous to a pair of stays). The spelling changed to bodice in the late 1600's, though the word was treated as a plural (like pence and dice) until the late 1800's; meanwhile the spelling pronunciation (bod' is) became established.

body n. Before 1200 bodi, developed from Old English bodig, with substitution of -ig for -ag, -æg in earlier bodæi, bodeg (about 700); cognate with Old High German botah, potach, botch body, Middle High German botech, botich.

Some sources observe an apparent discrepancy between the final consonants of Old English bodig and Old High German botah, but for the High German development of the final consonant, compare Old High German balg, palc, balch bag, cognate with Old English belg, bylg bag. —bodily adj., adv. About 1300, formed from Middle English bodi + *-ly*¹².

Boer n. 1824 Boor, 1834 Boer South African of Dutch descent; earlier, Boor Dutch and German peasant (1581) and countryman, peasant (1551). Both forms are related to Middle Dutch boer farmer, but the South African use is derived from modern Dutch boer farmer, from Middle Dutch boer, earlier geboer, cognate with Old English gebūr dweller, farmer, peasant, and būr dwelling; see BOWER.

bog n. Before 1450 bog, earlier Bogge (1327, as a surname); borrowed from Irish and Gaelic bog- (in bogach marsh), from bog soft, from Old Irish bog, boc. —v. 1603, especially in the passive to be bogged to be mired; from the noun. —boggy adj. 1586, formed from English bog, n. + *-y*¹.

bogey n. 1 goblin. 1836 Bogey the Devil, as in old Bogey the Devil; see BOGY goblin. 2a a system of scoring in golf equal to par. About 1892, said to be a description of the system, thought of as an imaginary adversary, that is as a "real bogey man," from a popular song of the day entitled "The Bogey Man." b in American golf (after 1918), bogie one stroke over par, probably from the idea of losing holes to Bogey (par) in playing.

boggle v. 1598, to startle, scare, alarm, probably related to BOGY as a variant of Scottish bogill goblin, bugbear; or perhaps a variant of bogle a ghost, specter (at which horses were reputed to shy). The meaning of overwhelm (as in boggle the mind) is an extended use of the original sense.

bogus adj. 1838, American English, adjective use of earlier Bogus a machine for making counterfeit money (1827), and probably of bogus counterfeit money made on a Bogus (first recorded 1839, but probably used earlier). The origin of bogus as a noun has been traced to tantrabobus and tantarabobus a name for the devil or bogie, and to a variant trantrabogus.

bogy n. 1857, goblin, bugbear; earlier, 1836, Bogey, as in old Bogey the Devil. The word is of uncertain origin, though connections have been proposed with bogle a phantom, goblin common in Scottish (first recorded about 1505) as bogill, perhaps ultimately from bogge, variant of bugge terror, BUGBEAR; and possibly related to Welsh bug (obsolete) ghost, goblin, bugwl fear.

bohemian n. 1848 possibly influenced by or even a borrowing of the same meaning that existed in French bohémien (1559). The name of the country (Middle English Beeme, Boeme 1449) is a borrowing from Middle French Boheme; the sense of a native of Bohemia was recorded in English before 1398 as a gloss of Latin Boiohaemum, from Boii a people of ancient Gaul who settled in Bohemia.

boil¹ v. bubble up. About 1300 boillen, borrowed from Old French boillir, bolir, boullir, buillir, from Latin bullire to bubble, seethe, from bullā a bubble. —n. Probably about 1425, from the verb. —boiler n. 1305 Boylltur surname of a cook; borrowed from Old French boillir. The meaning of a container in which to boil is recorded in 1725.

boil² n. swelling. 1529, alteration (perhaps influenced by *boil*¹ in the sense “inflammation” found in Middle English boillinge) of earlier bile a festering sore (about 1300); developed from Old English byl, byle (about 1000); cognate with Old High German bulla lump, swelling (modern German Beule), Middle Low German and Middle Dutch bule (modern Dutch buil), Icelandic beyla hump, Swedish bula, Danish bule, bugle swelling, from Proto-Germanic būlja-*.

boisterous adj. About 1400 boistreous rough in manner, variant of earlier boistous crude, awkward, rough, brutal (probably before 1300); of uncertain origin; possibly borrowed from Old French boistos, boisteus limping, rough, clumsy; alternatively from Anglo-French boistous rough boistousement roughly, noisily, either related to Old French boitous noisy, or to Old French boiteaux curved. Connections with boast are generally rejected by modern sources.

bold adj. About 1250, developed from Old English bald (about 725, Anglian), and beald (before 893, West Saxon); cognate with Old Saxon and Old High German bald bold, swift (modern German bald quickly, soon), Old Dutch baldo confidently, Old Icelandic ballr terrible, dangerous, and Gothic balþaba boldly, from Proto-Germanic balþaz*.

bole n. Probably about 1300, borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic bolr bole); cognate with Middle Dutch bolle bole, Middle Low German bolle plank, from Proto-Germanic bulás*.

boll n. Probably before 1450, earlier a round vessel, such as a bowl or cup (probably before 1200); developed from Old English bolla bowl (about 700); cognate with Old Saxon bollo, Old Icelandic bolli, and probably influenced in meaning by Latin bullā bubble, ball; see BOWL¹ dish. —boll weevil 1895, American English.

bologna n. 1850, variant of Bologna sausage (1750); from earlier Bolognian sausage (1596).

Bolshevik or bolshevik n. 1917, borrowed from Russian bol'shevik (ból'she greater, a comparative form of bol'shói great, as in Bolshoi Ballet + -evik one that is). The name is in allusion to the radical group within the Russian Socialist Democratic Party which held a temporary majority in 1903, in contrast to the Mensheviks, the members of the more moderate wing. The meaning “Communist” developed in 1918 when the Bolsheviks became the Communist Party and the extended meaning “extreme radical” appears in the works of William Inge in 1926.

bolster n. Old English bolster (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old High German bolstar, polstar bolster (modern German Polster), Middle Dutch bolster, bulster, Old Icelandic bolstr (Swedish bolster bed, Danish bolster bed ticking), from Proto-Germanic bulHstran*. —v. 1508, from the noun, but implied in earlier verbal use in bolstering (1451) and bolstered (about 1460).

bolt¹ n. rod for fastening. 1425; earlier, part of a door lock (1396); a length of cloth (1310); a bundle (1266), and the blunt-headed arrow for a crossbow, found in Old English bolt, about 950; cognate with Old High German bolz (modern German Bolzen) short arrow, bolt, Dutch bout, Danish bolt, Swedish bult, from Proto-Germanic bultás*. The idiom shoot one's bolt echoes the saying A fool's bolt is soon shot, referring to the arrow of a cross-bow (probably about 1150). —v. About 1425, in Scottish use; later, to fasten with a bolt (1580). The earliest meaning of restrain, fetter (1378) is from the noun.

bolt² v. sift. Probably about 1200 bulten, borrowed from Old French bulter, earlier buleter, probably from a Germanic source (compare Middle High German biuteln to sift, from Old High German būtil sack, modern German Beutel).

bomb n. 1684, explosive projectile filled with gunpowder (earlier bome, 1588, as a translation of Spanish bomba in a history of China); the current use is borrowed from French bombe, from Italian bomba, from Latin bombus a booming sound, from Greek bómbos a deep hollow sound. The meaning “atomic bomb” in the bomb is first recorded in 1945. —v. to attack with bombs. 1688, from the noun. —bomber n. 1915, formed from English bomb, v. + -er. —bombshell n. (1708) bombard v. 1598, to fire a cannon; probably verb use of earlier bombard, n. 1436, a catapult; borrowed from Old French bombarde (1363) a siege weapon, catapult, probably from Latin bombus booming sound; see BOMB. A parallel French verb bombarder to attack with cannon or catapult, is recorded from 1515. —bombardment n. 1702, formed from English bombard, v. + -ment.

bombast n. 1589, inflated language, either noun use of earlier archaic bombast, v. to inflate with grandiose language (1573); or figurative use of earlier obsolete noun meaning cotton wadding (1547), a variant of bombace (1553); borrowed from Middle and Old French bombace cotton, cotton wadding, from Medieval Latin bambacem, accusative of bambax cotton. The first syllable of French bombace was influenced by Latin bombŷx silk.

The t may have been supplied to earlier bombace, n. by influence of a past participial bombast of obsolete bombace, v. to stuff with cotton (1558). —bombastic adj. 1704, earlier bombastical (1649), formed from English bombast, n. + -ic, -ical.

bona fide 1542–43, in good faith, and later in adjective use (1788, as in bona fide purchaser); borrowed from Latin bonā fidē, the ablative form of the noun phrase bona fidēs good faith. This Latin noun phrase later came into English as bona fides in the original Latin sense of good faith (1845), but was mistakenly analyzed as a plural, because of the s in fides, and has come to mean guarantees of good faith.

bonanza n. 1844, American English, borrowing of American Spanish bonanza a rich lode, from Spanish bonanza fair weather at sea, prosperity, from Vulgar Latin bonacia* (from Latin bonus good + -acia in malacia calm at sea, mistakenly believed to derive from malus bad, but actually from Greek malakia calm at sea).

bond n. Probably about 1200; earlier variant of band (1126), presumably also influenced by bond, n. serf, tenant farmer developed from Old English bōnda householder, farmer; see BONDAGE. The meaning of binding agreement appeared as early as 1303. —v. Before 1460; from the noun. —bonded adj. 1597. —bondsman n. 1713, one who gives a bond for another.

bondage n. 1303, borrowed from Anglo-French bondage and from Anglo-Latin bondagium. The Anglo-Latin word appeared before 1221, possibly a Latinized form of Old French bondage* or based on Middle English bond a serf, tenant farmer, developed from Old English bōnda householder, farmer (about 1025); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic bōnda*, bōndi free-born farmer, householder, landowner; earlier būandi, noun use of present participle of būa dwell, live).

bone n. Probably before 1200 bone, and bon (also before 1200) from earlier ban (about 1150), developed from Old English (about 700) bān; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon bēn bone, Old High German bein (modern German Bein leg; but “bone” in compounds using -bein), Old Icelandic bein bone, from Proto-Germanic bainan*. —v. 1494, from the noun (compare boned, adj. 1297). —boneless adj. Probably about 1200.

bonfire n. 1556, open-air fire; earlier, a fire to burn corpses (1552), and banefire a fire to burn bones (before 1415), a compound of bone (or its northern dialectal form bane) + fire. The spelling bonfire became more common and the etymological sense was forgotten, as evidenced by Johnson’s derivation from French bon good + English fire.

bongo n. 1920, borrowed from American Spanish of the West Indies bongó, a word of West African (Bantu) origin (compare Lokele, a Bantu language in Zaire, boungu, bongungu).

bonnet n. 1375 (Scottish) bonat brimless hat for men; later, bonet brimless hat for men and women (before 1425); borrowed from Old French bonet hat, fabric for hats, in the phrase chapel de bonet hat or cap of “bonet,” from Medieval Latin boneta, bonetus material for hats, perhaps from Germanic (compare Middle High German bonit bonnet).

bonus n. 1773, borrowed from Latin bonus, adj., good, from Old Latin dvonos, earlier dvenos and related to Latin bene well, bellus fine.

The use of Latin bonus, adj. in place of bonum, n., a good thing (intending to refer to a boon or gratuity) was perhaps an ignorant or humorous application coined in traders’ parlance of the London Exchange.

boob n. 1909, American English, probably a shortening of booby, n. —booby n. 1599–1603; of uncertain origin; possibly borrowed from Spanish bobo fool, seabird.

boogie-woogie n. 1928 (as a song title), but current among black jazzmen since about 1920; of uncertain origin, perhaps a reduplication of a word from a West African language (compare Hausa buga, as an attributive, bugi and Mandingo bugu, both meaning to beat drums).

book n. Before 1121 boke, bok, developed from Old English bōc writing tablet, written document; collectively, writings, a written work (about 725); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon bōk, Old High German buoh, Middle High German buoch written work, book (modern German Buch), Old Icelandic bōk (Swedish bok), and Gothic bōka letter of the alphabet, bōkōs (plural) books; Proto-Germanic bōks*. Traditionally related to Old English bēc, bēce beech, on the supposition that early inscriptions were made on tablets of beech wood; see BEECH. The modern spelling book appeared as early as 1375 for the noun about 1390 for the verb. —v. Probably before 1200 boken, bocken to record; developed from Old English (966) bōcian assign land, etc. by charter, from Old English bōc, n.

boom¹ v. make a loud, deep sound. About 1430; earlier bommen drink with a gurgling sound (before 1376), of imitative origin (compare German bummen, Dutch bommen, etc.); see BOMB. —n. Before 1500, from the verb.

boom² n. long pole. 1543 (Scottish) boun, borrowed from Dutch boom tree, pole, beam, from Middle Dutch. The analogous form in Old English was bēam and in modern English is also beam, the sense of boom in English being borrowed from Dutch to supply meanings for which English beam was not used; see BEAM.

boom³ n. a sudden increase. 1879, American English; noun use of earlier *boom*³, v. 1873, to increase suddenly in value, activity, price, etc.; of uncertain origin but traditionally connected with *boom*¹ though more closely connected semantically to a meaning of *boom*², v. to rush with violence, as of a ship under full sail.

boomerang n. 1827, an adoption or modification of a name for this weapon in the language of the aborigines of New South Wales, Australia. The form wo-mur-rang was recorded in a glossary of aboriginal words (1798) by an official of the Port Jackson colony.

boon¹ n. Probably about 1350 bone benefit; earlier, prayer, request, grant, (probably before 1200); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic bōn petition; cognate with Old English bēn prayer), from Proto-Germanic bōniz*.

boon² adj. jolly, as in boon companion. Probably about 1380 bone, boon good; borrowed from Old French bon (feminine bone) good, from Latin bonus; see BONUS.

boondocks n. pl. 1944, American English, borrowed (through American soldiers' contact in the Philippines during World War II) from Tagalog bundók mountain. Since 1965 often altered to boonies.

boondoggle n. 1935, American English, origin uncertain; said to have been coined about 1925, for the braided lanyard made by boy scouts; however, the braiding of leather scraps was also known among cowboys.

boor n. Probably before 1410 boveer peasant, countryman; earlier, as a surname in Buver (1236) and Bover (1268); borrowed from Old French bovier herdsman (compare Old French buf ox; see BEEF), from Latin bovis, genitive of bōs cow, ox.

The later forms bour (1551) and boor (1581) were probably borrowed from Dutch boer farmer, peasant; see BOER. The current sense of a rude, ill-bred person appeared in 1598. —boorish adj. 1562, formed from English boor, n. + -ish.

boost n., v. 1815 verb, 1825 noun, American English, of unknown origin. —booster n. 1890, formed from English boost, v. + *-er*¹.

boot¹ n. large shoe. About 1300 bote, borrowed from Old French bote (modern French botte), corresponding to Provençal, Spanish, and Portuguese bota; of uncertain origin. —v. 1468, to put boots on; later, in American English, to kick or remove as if by kicking (1877) and to kick out, eject (1880).

boot² n. profit; use (an archaism that survives in the phrase to boot meaning in addition, besides, which appeared in Old English bōt before 1000); cognate with Old Frisian bōte compensation, atonement, Old High German buoz, buoza improvement, remedy, Old Icelandic bōt remedy, compensation, and Gothic bōta advantage, benefit, good, from Proto-Germanic bōtō*.

booth n. About 1145 in a proper name Bouthum; later Buthum (about 1150) and Bothon (about 1449). The word as a common noun is first recorded about 1200, with the spelling bothe; probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic būð dwelling, Old Swedish and Old Danish bōth booth, stall). Cognates exist in Middle High German buode hut, tent (modern German Bude booth, hut), Middle Dutch boede booth, from Proto-Germanic bōthō*, and the word is ultimately related to Old English būr dwelling.

bootleg n. Before 1889, American English, coined in reference to the practice of smuggling liquor as if in the tall legs of boots. —v. 1903, from the noun. —bootlegger n. (1889) booty n. 1474 botye; later buty (1491), perhaps developed from earlier boti, adj. profiting by plunder (probably about 1439) or from bottyne booty (about 1450); borrowed from Old French butin booty, and directly from Middle Low German būte, buite exchange, barter, booty; or borrowed from earlier Dutch buyt, buet booty.

booze v. 1768, probably a variant of earlier bouse (pronounced büz), with the same meaning (probably before 1325); borrowed from Middle Dutch būsen drink heavily, related to Middle Low German būsen to revel, carouse, drink heavily, both of uncertain origin. —n. 1732, from the verb.

borax n. 1543 borax, an alteration (influenced by Anglo-Latin borax) of earlier Middle English boras (about 1387); borrowed from Anglo-French boras, which itself is a learned borrowing from Anglo-Latin borax, Medieval Latin aurach, borac, borax, from Arabic būraq.

border n. Probably about 1400, variant spelling (by weakening of -ure to -er) of earlier bordure (about 1350); borrowed from Old French bordēur seam, edge, border, from bord, bort side, boundary, from Frankish (compare Old High German bort; cognate with Old English bord border, side; see BOARD). —v. About 1400, put a border on; from the noun.

bore¹ v. drill. Before 1200 boren, developed from Old English borian (about 1000); cognate with Old High German borōn to bore (modern German bohren), Old Icelandic bora, from Proto-Germanic burōjanan*. —n. a hole. Probably before 1300, partly developed from Old English bor (before 800); cognate with Old High German bora auger, gimlet (modern German Bohr), Old Icelandic borr (Swedish borr, Danish bor); probably in part derived from Middle English boren to bore, and partly a borrowing from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic bora a hole). —borer n. 1318, as a surname Boriere; later, a tool for making holes; formed from English *bore*¹, v. + *-er*¹.

bore² v. make weary by being dull or tiresome. 1768, of unknown origin. —n. 1766, a fit of boredom or ennui (suggested as a specifically French malady); later, a tiresome person or thing (1778). Suggestions that the word is a figurative use of BORE¹, cannot be established in fact. —boredom n. 1852, formed from English *bore*², n. + -dom.

boreal adj. 1450; borrowed perhaps through Italian boreale from Latin boreālis, from boreās the north wind, from Greek Borēās north wind; for suffix see *-AL*¹.

boric adj. 1869, perhaps borrowed from French borique (1818), or formed from bor(on), n. + -ic, as in boric acid, replacing earlier boracic acid (1801).

born adj. Old English boren (and geboren) brought forth (about 725), past participle of geberan, beran to carry, bring forth; see BEAR² carry.

boron n. Probably before 1812, formed from English bor(ax) + (carb)on. The element was first isolated from boracic acid.

borough n. 1100 burg; later burgh, in proper name Goldeburgh, and probably before 1350 borough town, city, dwelling, refuge, stronghold, castle. Old English burh, which carried over into Middle English for about 200 years, and burg, both meaning city, fortress (recorded about 725 in Beowulf) are cognate with Old High German burg fortress, citadel (modern German Burg castle), Old Saxon burg, burug, Old Frisian burch, burich, Old Icelandic borg wall, fortress, Gothic baúrgs city, from Proto-

Germanic burgs*; and are related to Old English beorg hill, mound; see *BARROW*² mound.

Of the early spellings, Old English burg is still evident, as in Gettysburg, while burgh is established in Scotland (accounting for the American and English pronunciation of Edinburgh as if it were "Edinborough," though natives say ed' ɔn brə), and the dative case of Old English burg (byrig) resulted in -buri, -bury, as in Canterbury.

borrow v. Probably before 1300 borowen, and borwen; earlier boruwen (before 1250); developed from Old English borgian (about 950), from borg pledge, surety. Old English borgian is cognate with Old High German borgēn take heed, give surety (German borgen borrow, lend), Old Frisian borga borrow, Old Icelandic borga guarantee, from Proto-Germanic burg-*. —borrower n. Before 1415, English borrow, v. + *-er*¹.

bosh n. nonsense. 1834, as the Turkish word bosh empty, worthless, introduced into English in the novel Ayesha by J.J. Morier (1780–1849), British novelist and diplomat who traveled in Asia Minor and wrote popular romances with settings there. —interj. 1852, in Dickens' Bleak House, from bosh, n.

bosom n. breast. Probably before 1200 bosum, developed from Old English bōsm (about 725); cognate with Old Frisian bōsm, Old Saxon bōsom, Old High German buosam breast (modern German Busen), from West Germanic bōsm-*. —adj. 1590, from the noun.

boss¹ n. employer. Before 1649 base, 1653 basse, American English, borrowed from Dutch baas master; further connections are doubtful (German Baas, Swedish, Danish, and Norwegian bas are all borrowed from Dutch). The modern spelling was thoroughly established in English by the beginning of the 1800's. —v. 1856, from the noun. —bossy adj. 1882, formed from English *boss*¹, n. + *-y*¹.

boss² n. raised ornament. Before 1325 boce swelling; later, a raised ornament (1382); borrowed through Anglo-Latin boci and Anglo-French bose, busse, from Old French boce, boche hump, either from Frankish botja* swelling caused by a blow, or from Vulgar Latin bottia*, represented by Old Provençal bossa swelling, ball, Italian bozza, boccia, and Romanian bot ball, but of uncertain origin. —v. Probably before 1400 bocen, bosen stand out, borrowed from Old French bocier, from boce hump.

botanical adj. 1658, variant of earlier botanic (1656); borrowed from French botanique, from Greek botanikós of herbs, from botanē plant; for suffix see -ICAL. —botanist n. Before 1682, borrowed from French botaniste; for suffix see -IST. —botany n. 1696, formed from botanic, botanical, on the analogy of history, historic, historical, etc.

botch v. Before 1382, to mend or patch; later, to spoil by unskillful work (1530); of uncertain origin. —n. 1605, a botched part; from the verb.

both adj., adv. 1124 bathe; later, about 1225 bothe; probably developed from Old English bā thā* both those (compare bā the, replacing bū tū or bā twā both two, in early manuscripts).

The word is cognate with Old Saxon bēthie, bēthe both, Old High German beide, bēde (modern German beide), Old Icelandic báðhir, and Gothic bai thai both those.

The Scandinavian word represented by Old Icelandic báðhir affected the native expression and helped to fix its form to the extent that Middle English bathe, bothe are a blend of the Old English and Scandinavian forms.

bother v. 1718, bewilder with noise, confuse; of uncertain origin. Earliest use is by Irish writers: Sheridan, Swift, Sterne, suggesting Irish origin (compare Irish bodar deaf, confused, annoyed, with d pronounced as th in withier, Gaelic bodhar deaf, bodhair to deafen, with dh pronounced like the Irish d, and Old Irish bodar deaf, cognate with Cornish bodhar, Welsh byddar, and Breton bouzar). The meaning pester, annoy appeared before 1745. —n. 1834; from the verb, earlier, possibly meaning nonsense, meaningless chatter (1803); from the verb. —bothersome adj. (1834) bottle n. About 1380 botel; earlier in compound botelmaker (1346), also related to boteler one who serves wine, and as early as 1171 butiller bottlemaker. Middle English botel was borrowed from Old French bouteille, bouteille wine vessel, from Medieval Latin butticula, diminutive of Late Latin buttis cask, *BUTT*⁴ barrel. —v. 1622, to store up as if in a bottle; later, to put in bottles (1641).

The spelling with two t's appears in the late 1400's.

bottom n. 1294–95 butme; earlier, in place names referring to a valley floor or land along a stream bothem, in Keldebothem (1153) and botme, in Botmeshil (1190); developed from Old English botm lowest part, bottom (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian bodem bottom, Old Saxon bodam, Old High German bodam (modern German Boden), Old Icelandic botn, from Proto-Germanic buthm-*, buthn-. The spelling with -tt- is found in bottom as early as 1399. —adj. 1561, developed from attributive use of noun, 1175. —v. 1544, from the noun (implied in the verbal noun bottoming, 1526).

botulism n. 1887, Anglicizing of earlier botulismus (1878), borrowed from German Botulismus, from Latin botulus sausage (because the disease was associated with eating tainted sausages); for suffix see -ISM.

The root form of botulism was already familiar in English language scientific circles in botuliform (1861).

boudoir n. 1777, as a French term introduced into English; the French, literally meaning a place to sulk in, derives from bouder to sulk, pout.

bouffant adj. puffed out, as a skirt (1880) or hairdo (1955). 1880, a French term introduced into writing about fashion, from the present participle of bouffer to puff or swell out, from Old French bouffer.

bough n. About 1385 bough; earlier bogh (1305) and bowe (before 1250); developed from Old English bōg bough, shoulder (probably about 875) and boog (about 700). The Old English is cognate with Old High German buog shoulder (modern German Bug shoulder joint, ship's bow), Old Icelandic bōgr shoulder, ship's bow, from Proto-Germanic bōgaz*.

bouillon n. clear, thin soup. 1725, borrowed from French bouillir to boil, from Old French boillir; see BOIL¹ bubble.

boulder n. 1421 bulder, shortened from earlier bulderston (about 1300); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Swedish buldersten large stone in a stream causing the water to make noise, a compound of bultra roar, rumble + sten stone).

boulevard n. 1769, a French term introduced into English in correspondence of Walpole; originally the French meant the passageway along a rampart, from Middle Low German bolwerk or Middle Dutch bolwerk BULWARK.

bounce v. Probably before 1225 buncin to beat, thump; later, bonchen (before 1376); extended to various actions producing a noise, especially to the action of moving with a sudden bound (1519, in which sense the use was probably influenced by *bound*² leap); perhaps ultimately of an imitative origin, like Dutch bonzen to thump, bons a thump. —n. 1523, a leap, from the verb.

bound¹ adj. fastened. Before 1449 bound, earlier bounde (probably before 1300), shortened from bounden, past participle of BIND.

bound² v. leap, spring. 1586, borrowed from Middle French bondir to rebound, spring, from Old French bondir make a resounding noise, from Vulgar Latin bombiūre*, from Late Latin bombitāre, a frequentative form of Latin bombire to buzz, from bombus a buzzing sound. —n. Before 1553, borrowed from Middle French bond leap, from bondir to leap.

bound³ n. Usually, bounds. boundary, limit. About 1380; earlier bounde boundary marker (probably before 1300); borrowed through Anglo-Latin bunda, probably from Old French (compare bonde, bodne, variant forms of Old French borne, bone), perhaps from Gaulish. The word is also related to Middle English bourne a boundary stone (probably before 1200), also borrowed from Old French (compare Old French bodne, bourne boundary stone). —v. 1391, from the noun, or perhaps borrowed from Old French (compare bodner to bound). —boundary n. 1626, formed from English *bound*³, n. + -ary.

bound⁴ adj. ready or intending to go. Before 1400 bounde; earlier bun (probably about 1200); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic búinn, past participle of búa dwell, live, get ready, and Old Danish bøen, Old Swedish boin).

bounden adj. Before 1325 bunden, past participle of bind; see BOUND¹.

bounteous adj. 1542, alteration, on analogy of bounty, of earlier bountevous (about 1385); borrowed from Middle French bonitif, bontive, from bonté goodness, gift; see BOUNTY; for suffix see -OUS.

bounty n. Before 1325 bounte; earlier bunte (about 1275), also meaning goodness; borrowed through Anglo-French bunté, Old French bonté goodness, bounty, gift, from Latin bonitatem bouquet n. 1716–18, as a French word introduced in correspondence of Lady Mary Montagu, from Middle French bouquet thicket, from Old French boschet, boschet, bosket, originally diminutives of Old French bois forest or Medieval Latin boscus, from Frankish (compare Old High German bosc, busc BUSH¹ shrub).

(nominative bonitās), from bonus good; see BONUS; for suffix see -TY². —bountiful adj. 1508, formed from English bounty + -ful.

bourgeois adj. 1564–65, borrowed from Middle French bourgeois, from Old French borjois, burgeois citizen of a town or village, from borc town, village, from Latin burgus fortress, castle, influenced by Germanic (compare Old High German burg fortress); see BOROUGH. —n. Before 1562, from the adjective. —bourgeoisie n. middle class. 1707, borrowed from French bourgeoisie the French middle class, from bourgeois.

bout n. 1575, a spell of any kind of work or other activity; probably a variant of obsolete bowt a bend or curve, loop (1468), bought (probably before 1400), developed perhaps from Old English buht*, (from Proto-Germanic buhta-*) variant of byht a bend; see BIGHT.

bovine adj. 1817, borrowed from French bovin, bovine, learned borrowing from Late Latin bovinus, from Latin bōs (genitive bovis) ox, COW¹.

bow¹ v. bend. Before 1325 bowen, earlier bowen (1300), buwen, buhen (1250); developed from Old English būgan to bend (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old High German biogan to bend (modern German biegen), Old Icelandic baginn bent, bjūgr bent, bowed, Gothic biugan to bend. —n. Before 1656, from the verb.

bow² n. weapon. Probably before 1200 bowe; developed from Old English boga bend (only in compounds, such as elmboga elbow, and rēnboga rainbow); also a weapon, bow (about 725, in flanboga arrow bow), and something curved, arch, vault (about 700). Old English boga is cognate with Old High German bogo and Old Icelandic bogi a bow, from Proto-Germanic buzōn*.

The sense of “a looped knot” is not found in English before 1671.

bow³ n. prow. 1342, in the name of a ship Swetebowe, later 1409–11 bowe; perhaps borrowed from a Low German or Scandinavian source (compare Middle Dutch boech, modern Dutch boeg, Low German būg, and Old Icelandic bōgr, all meaning bow of a ship and shoulder of an animal).

bowdlerize v. 1836, formed from Bowdler (English editor, 1754–1825, of an expurgated edition of Shakespeare published in 1818) + -ize.

bowel n. bowels. Probably before 1300, borrowed from Old French bōel, boueile, from Medieval Latin botellus intestine, from Latin botellus, diminutive form of botulus sausage (borrowed from Oscan-Umbrian).

bower n. Probably before 1400; earlier boure small room

(before 1325), bure dwelling, bedroom (probably before 1200), and bur- (1121, in compounds: burthenas chamberlain); all developed from Old English būr dwelling (about 725, in Beowulf) thereby related to neighbor, also related to Old English būan dwell. Old English būr is cognate with Old High German būr dwelling (modern German Bauer cage, also -beuren in place names: Benediktbeuren dwellings of the Benedictines), Old Icelandic būr chamber, storeroom, from Proto-Germanic būra-*. The spelling bower began to appear after 1350.

bowie knife 1836, American English, in allusion to Jim Bowie, American pioneer.

bowl¹ n. dish. 1471 bowle; earlier, about 1150 bolle; developed from Old English (about 700) bolla; cognate with Old Frisian bolla (in compounds), Old Icelandic bolli bowl (Danish bolle bowl), Old High German bolla blister, bowl, bud (modern German Bolle bulb, onion), from Proto-Germanic bullōn*.

Middle English bolle is still evident in modern English boll a round seed pod, but the shift in spelling of -owl for -oll, that reflects an early modern English change in pronunciation and the confusion with *bowl*² has created the modern spelling.

bowl² n. wooden ball. Probably before 1400 boule, borrowed from Middle French boule, from Gallo-Romance bulla ball, from Latin bulla bubble. The name of the game is bowls (1495). —v. 1440, either verb use of *bowl*², n., or borrowed from Middle French bouler to bowl, from boule bowl. —bowling n. About 1500, from gerund of *bowl*², v.

bowsprit n. 1296 bousprete, probably borrowed from Middle Low German böchsprēt (böch bow + sprēt pole).

box¹ n. container. About 1150, a jar; but found in Old English box (before 1000); probably borrowed from Late Latin buxis box, corresponding to Latin pyxis, from Greek pyxis box, as if of the wood of the box tree, from pyxos BOX³ tree. —v. About 1450, from the noun.

box² n. blow. Probably about 1300; of unknown origin (often compared with Middle Dutch bōke, Middle High German buc, and Danish bask all meaning blow; another supposition is based on possible figurative use of *box*¹, n.). —v. 1390 boxen to beat an animal; later, to strike with the fist, beat, thrash (1519); from the noun. The sense of fight with the fists appeared in 1567 but is implied earlier in boxer. —boxer n. 1472, a person who engages in the sport of boxing, formed from English *box*², v. + *-er*¹. —boxing n. 1711, the sport of fighting with the fists (popularized in the early 1700's by the English athlete James Figg).

box³ n. evergreen tree. Old English box (before 800), borrowed from Latin buxus, from Greek pyxos box tree, of unknown origin.

boy n. Probably before 1300 boye male child; earlier, servant (about 1225) and boi, boie (1154); of uncertain origin: 1) compare Frisian boi boy, young man, though not easily connected with Middle Low German bove boy, knave; cognate with Middle Dutch boef boy (modern Dutch "knave"), Middle High German buobe boy (modern dialectal German Bube). The relation of Old English Bōia, Bōfa, Bōba a masculine personal name, to any of these forms or to the Middle English forms is obscure. 2) the variety of vowels in the Middle English forms (boi, bey, beye, bay, bye) suggests by form and meaning (servant) that the word is possibly a borrowing of Old French buié (embuié), boié (emboié) fettered, shackled, past participial forms of embuiier, from buie shackle, from Latin boia leg iron, yoke.

boycott v. 1880, in allusion to Captain Charles Boycott, 1832–1897, English land agent over Irish tenant farmers, who refused to lower rents and was subjected to an organized campaign by local people who refused to have any dealings with him. Widely instituted towards others, the term was quickly adopted by newspapers in many European and non-European languages: French boycott, boycotter, German Boykott, boykotieren, Russian boikót, boikotirovat, Spanish boicoteo, boicotear, Polish bojkot, bojkotować, Croatian bojkotirati, Japanese boikotto. —n. 1880, from the verb.

boysenberry n. 1935, American English, in allusion to Rudolph Boysen (American horticulturist who developed it in California) + berry.

brace n. 1313–14, a fastening; later, armor covering the arms (1333); borrowed from Old French brace the two arms, from Latin brachia, brachia, plural forms of brachium arm, from Greek brachion upper arm, from brachys short (as being shorter than the forearm). The meaning of a support is first recorded in 1348. —v. Probably about 1350, borrowed from Old French bracier embrace, gird tightly, from brace the two arms. —bracing n. (1461); adj. (1750) bracelet n. 1437, borrowed from Middle French diminutive form of Old French bracel bracelet, from Latin brachiale, from brachium arm, see BRACE, n.; for suffix see -LET.

bracken n. Probably before 1300 brakan, apparently borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Swedish bräken fern, Danish bregne and, by alteration, Icelandic burkeni; also English *BRAKE*³ bracken).

bracket n. 1627, alteration of earlier bragget (1580); borrowed probably from Middle French braguet codpiece (because of the resemblance to the architectural bracket), diminutive form of brague breeches, from Provençal braga, from Latin brāca, from Gaulish, which had borrowed it from Germanic (compare Old English brōc garment for the legs and trunk); see BREECHES. Also possibly influenced by Spanish braguet meaning "codpiece" and "bracket," from Spanish bragas breeches.

The meaning of marks to set off written matter appeared in 1750. —v. 1823, implied in bracketing; later 1861, from verb use of bracket, n.

brackish adj. 1538, formed from earlier English brack (1513, probably borrowed from Dutch brak brackish, possibly the same as Middle Dutch brak worthless) + *-ish*¹.

bract n. 1770, borrowed from New Latin bractea, variant spelling of Latin brattea thin plate or leaf of metal, gold leaf; of uncertain origin.

brad n. 1455 (in bradsmyth maker of nails or goads), variant of brod (1295); earlier, a sprout or shoot (probably about 1200); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic broddr spike, shaft; cognate with Old English brōd spike, point, spire, Old High German brōt edge, margin, apparently from Proto-Germanic brozda-*).

brag n., v. 1387 (noun); 1378 (verb); both perhaps developed from brag, adj., adv., boastful, boastfully (about 1325), of unknown origin. — bragger n. Before 1376, probably formed from braggen, v. + *-er*¹.

braggadocio n. 1590 Braggadocchio, a name coined by Spenser for a character personifying boastfulness in The Faerie Queene (from brag + -occio the Italian suffix showing increased importance or size, probably reformed by Spenser as -ochio).

braggart n. Before 1577, borrowed from Middle French bragard, from braguer to brag, show off clothes, especially breeches, from brague breeches, see BRACKET; for suffix see -ARD (-art variant).

Though related to brag in meaning, braggart and its French sources bragard and braguer are not related as underlying forms of English brag because braguer appears in French almost 300 years after English brag.

Brahmin n. 1859, in allusion to Brahman (1481) the name for a member of the highest of priestly Hindu caste; borrowed from Sanskrit brāhmaṇa-s, from brahmān- sacrifice-priest.

braid v. Probably before 1200 breiden move quickly; later, to plait, braid (about 1200), the forms breide, present tense, and braide, past tense, being merged about 1300; both developed from a form breyden of Old English bregdan move quickly, draw (a sword, etc.), twist in and out, intertwine (about 725, in Beowulf). The Old English is cognate with Old Saxon bregdan, Old High German brettan draw (a sword etc.), Old Icelandic bregða move quickly, draw (a weapon), braid, from Proto-Germanic bregðanan*. — n. Probably before 1200 brede a deceptive act; later, breide (before 1250) and, a quick movement (about 1300). Some meanings developed from breiden, v.; others developed from Old English brægd craft, fraud, cognate with Old Icelandic bragd deed, trick.

Braille or braille n. 1853, in allusion to Louis Braille, 1809–1852, a blind French musician and teacher of the blind who developed this system of writing and printing for the blind and published it in 1829.

brain n. Probably before 1200; developed from Old English (about 1000) brægen; cognate with Old Frisian brein brain, Middle Low German bregen brain (dialectal German Brägen), from Proto-Germanic braznan*. — v. dash one's brains out. Before 1382, from the noun. — brainwashing n. 1950, American English, possibly a loan translation of Chinese xī wash + nao brain.

braise v. 1797, borrowed from French braiser, from braise hot charcoal, from Old French brese embers (source of Middle English brase embers, found in in brase, before 1399, in an early cookbook); of uncertain origin (but compare Swedish brasa stake, fire; ultimately perhaps from West Germanic brasa*). Compare BRAZE² solder.

brake¹ n. 1772–82, device to stop motion, possibly an extended sense of a bridle or curb (1552); borrowed probably from Middle Low German or Middle Dutch brake nose ring to control draft animals, and a toothed machine for breaking up flax into fibers (a meaning also known in Middle English about 1450); related to Middle Dutch breken to break, cognate with Old English brecan to BREAK. Alternatively, brake may be an application of earlier brake a lever or handle for working a device, such as a crossbow (about 1380), or a pump (1626); borrowed from Old French brac, a form of bras arm from Latin brachium; see BRACE. — v. 1868, from the noun.

brake² n. thicket. About 1440, in compound ferne-brake a fern thicket; later, a clump or thicket of ferns (probably about 1450); borrowed from Middle Low German brake, related to breken to break (cognate with Old English brecan to BREAK) and originally meaning tree stumps or broken branches.

brake³ n. bracken. Before 1325, probably a variant of bracken, which may have been taken (dialectally) as a plural, shortened to brake (as chick, from chicken plural).

bramble n. About 1390 brambel; earlier brembel (before 1325), and in place names Brambeley (about 1128); developed from Old English (about 1000) bræmbel, variant of brēmel, from brōm BROOM; for suffix see -LE¹.

The pattern of development follows that of thimble, mumble and dialectal chimby for chimney.

bran n. Before 1325; borrowed from Old French bran, bren, from a Gaulish word (probably surviving in Vulgar Latin brennus*; also compare Breton brenn, but not recorded in other Celtic languages).

branch n. About 1300 braunche, borrowed from Old French braunche, branche, from Late Latin branca paw of an animal, from a Gaulish word of unknown origin. — v. Before 1375, from the noun.

brand n. Before 1325, northern Middle English brand; earlier, brond (probably before 1200, not replaced by brand until the 1500's); found in Old English brond, brand piece of burning wood, firebrand, blade of a sword, in allusion to its glint (about 725, in Beowulf). The Old English is cognate with Old Frisian brand, Old High German brant brand, sword (modern German Brand), and Old Icelandic brandr (Swedish, Danish brand), from Proto-Germanic brandaz*, earlier brandás*, Gothic brinnan burn (bran in past tense).

The meaning of a sign or mark of ownership, made by burning with a hot iron (appeared in 1552), evolved into trademark (1827), and to a particular sort or class of goods, indicated by a trademark (1854). — v. 1422, to set on fire; from the noun. — brandy n. 1657, shortened from earlier brand-wine, brandy-wine (1622); borrowed from Dutch brandewijn burnt (i.e., distilled) wine.

brandish v. About 1340 braundishen, borrowed from Old French brandiss-, stem of brandir, from brand, brant sword, from Frankish (compare Old High German brant sword); see BRAND; for suffix see -ISH².

brand-new adj. About 1570, formed from English brand + new, apparently as if fresh from the fire.

brash adj. 1824, perhaps connected with the older brash fragile, brittle (used to describe timber as early as 1566), possibly in association with break and rash or crash; alternatively, the association may be with earlier brash an attack or assault (1573), a Scottish use (compare Gaelic bras hasty, impetuous).

brass n. Probably about 1200 brass, developed from Old English bræs, originally meaning an alloy of copper and tin, now called "bronze" (about 1000); of uncertain origin (probably cognate with Old Frisian bras, in compound bras-penning copper penny, and Middle Low German bras metal). —brassy adj. 1576, forward in manner; later, strident (1865); formed from English brass, n. + *-y*¹.

brat n. About 1505, also in dialects of northern, midlands, and western England meaning an apron, woman's or child's pinafore, a rag, perhaps a special use of Middle English brat coarse garment (about 1395); developed from Old English bratt cloak, covering (about 950); probably borrowed from a Celtic source (compare Old Irish bratt cloak, cloth, Welsh brethyn cloth, Breton broz petticoat).

bravado n. 1583, also bravade (1579); borrowed from French bravade bragging, boasting, though bravado is assumed to be borrowed from Spanish bravada, bravata; both were borrowed from Italian bravata bragging, boasting, from bravare brag, boast, be defiant, from bravo BRAVE.

brave adj. 1485, borrowed from Middle French brave splendid, valiant, from Italian bravo fine, splendid, bold, and from Spanish bravo wild, savage, possibly from Latin barbarus foreign; or possibly through Medieval Latin bravus cutthroat, daring villain, from Latin prāvus crooked, depraved (since derivation from Latin barbarus is phonetically unlikely). —v. 1546, borrowed from Middle French braver to brave, affront, defy, from brave. —bravery n. 1548, borrowed probably from Middle French braverie action of braving, from braver to brave.

brawl v. About 1378 (implied in brauling and brawler), of uncertain origin (compare Dutch brallen to brag, boast, German dialect brallen to shout, roar, perhaps from the same ultimate source). —n. Probably 1445 braule, from the verb.

brawn n. Before 1325, strong muscles, earlier, side of pork (1290); borrowed from Old French brāon, brāoun fleshy part for roasting, Old Provençal brazon fat on the arm, from Frankish brādo* ham (compare Old High German brātan to roast, modern German braten, and brāt, brāto meat without bones or fat, Old English brædan to roast, and Old Icelandic brædha to melt), from Proto-Germanic bræd-*. —brawny adj. Before 1400, formed from brawn + *-y*¹.

bray v. About 1303, borrowed from Old French braire cry out, from Gallo-Romance bragere* cry, perhaps from a Celtic source cognate with Latin frangere to break (compare Middle Irish braigid he breaks wind, Gaelic bragh explosion). —n. Probably before 1300, borrowed from Old French brait, from braire cry out.

brazel v. 1602, harden like brass; earlier, brasen to cover with brass or bronze (before 1400); developed from Old English brasian (about 1000), probably from bræs BRASS, on the analogy of grass and graze.

brazel v. solder with brass. 1581, probably borrowed from Middle French braser to solder, from Old French braser to burn, possibly from, or at least related to, brese embers; see BRAISE.

brazen adj. Probably before 1200 brasen made of brass; developed from Old English (about 1000) bræsen made of brass (bræs BRASS + *-en*²). The meaning shameless, bold is a figurative extension (about 1573) of hardened like brass. —v. brazen (out or through). Before 1555, from the adjective.

brazier n. metal container to hold burning coals. 1690, borrowed from French brasier a pan of hot coals, from Old French brasier, from brese embers; see BRAISE.

brazier n. person who works with brass. 1307 brasier, formed from bras + -ier (as in glazier, clothier).

breach n. 1237–38 breche, earlier in proper name (1208), formed from a fusion of: 1) Old English brēc a breaking, breach (about 750, in compound unbrēc unbroken, unblemished; cognate with Old High German brācha, Middle Low German brāke, from Proto-Germanic brāekō*; related to Old English bryce breaking and brecan BREAK); and 2) Old French breche breach, fracture, from Frankish (compare Old High German brecha, brehha, related to brehhan BREAK). —v. 1547, from the noun.

bread n. Old English brēad bit, piece, morsel (about 950); cognate with Old Frisian brād, Old Saxon brōd, Old High German brōt (modern German Brot), Middle Dutch broot (modern Dutch brood), and Old Icelandic braudh, all meaning bread, from Proto-Germanic braudan*; related to Old English brēowan to BREW, apparently by virtue of the fermenting action of yeast in leavening. In Old English this word was rare (though it is found to refer to food in the compound bēobrēad, modern beebread); the common word was hlāf, which survives in modern LOAF. But by about 1200 bread had displaced loaf as the name for a piece of the substance.

The pronunciation of Middle English bread (brēd) began to shift in Shakespeare's time until it was fully established as (bred) in the middle of the 1700's. —v. 1629, to cover with bread crumbs; from the noun.

breadth n. Probably before 1425 breadeth, alteration of earlier brede breadth (probably before 1300); developed from Old English brēd, brædu, from brād BROAD. Old English brēd, brædu derive from Proto-Germanic bradījōn*. The final -th was probably added on the analogy of earlier length.

break v. Before 1121 breken, developed from Old English brecan (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian breka, Old Saxon brekan, Old High German brehhan to break (modern German brechen), Gothic brikan. The relationship to BRAKE¹ device, comes probably by way of popular etymology with break in a variety of meanings, such as to tame an animal and to apply force suddenly, through the old past tense brak. The form broke began to appear in the 1500's as a replacement for the past tense brak by influence of the past participle broken.

The original short vowel of the present tense and past participle was lengthened in Middle English. —n. 1296–97 breck, from Middle English breken to break.

breakfast n. 1472 brekefaste; earlier variant breffast (1463), from the earlier verb phrase breken faste (before 1393), in reference to break and *fast*², in the sense of ending one's fast of the night before. —v. 1679, from the noun, and probably influenced by the earlier verb phrase.

breast n. 1380 breest, earlier brest (probably about 1200); developed from Old English brēost (about 725); cognate with Old Frisian briast breast, Old Saxon breost, briost, Old Icelandic brjóst (from Proto-Germanic breustan*), and Old High German brust (modern German Brust), Gothic brusts breasts.

In Old English the spelling represented by eo normally became ee in Middle English (with the sound of ee in feet); but in this word the sound was shortened in Middle English to e (brest). —v. Probably before 1200 bresten to overcome, conquer; developed from Old English berstan burst.

breath n. Probably before 1200 breth (pronounced brēth); developed from Old English bræth odor, exhalation as of something cooking or burning (before 900). Old English bræth (from Proto-Germanic bræthaz*) is cognate with Old High German brādam breath, steam (modern German Brodem steam). —v. breathe About 1300 brethen; earlier, breathen (probably before 1200), from breth breath. The verb retains the original Old English vowel (ē) while; the vowel of the noun was gradually shortened to (e) probably through the 1500's.

breeches n.pl. Probably before 1200, breches, a later plural formed from brech, breche breeches; developed from Old English (before 1000) brēc, plural of brōc garment for the legs and trunk (before 900); cognate with Old High German bruoh and Old Icelandic brök, both meaning breeches, from Proto-Germanic brōkiz, plural of brōks*.

breed v. Old English brēdan bring young to birth, carry (a child), hatch (before 1000) from earlier brōdan (before 850), from Proto-Germanic brōdjanan*; related to brōd BROOD. Breed and brood are related in the same way as feed, food, and bleed, blood. —n. 1465 (in compound breedgoose goose for breeding), from the verb. —breeder n. 1531, formed from English breed + *-er*¹. —breeder reactor (1948) breeze n. 1565 brise a northeast wind; later applied to the trade winds of the American tropics (1595), and a gentle wind (1626); apparently borrowed from Old Spanish and Portuguese briza (now brisa) northeast wind; but compare Italian brezza cold wind, French brize (now brise) a breeze, German Brise. The slang "something easy to do," appeared in American English about 1928. —v. 1907, to move quickly and casually; earlier, to blow gently (1682, implied in participial adjective breezing), from breeze, n. —breezy adj. 1718, exposed to breezes; later, having a carefree manner (1873); formed from English breeze, n. + *-y*¹.

brevity n. 1509 brevitie, borrowed from Middle French brieveté

(earlier, briété), or directly from Latin brevitatem, (nominative brevitās), from brevis short, see BRIEF; for suffix see -ity.

brew v. About 1250 brewen, developed from Old English brēowan (before 900); cognate with Old Frisian briūwa, Old Saxon breuwan, Middle Low German brüwen, Old High German briuwan to brew, modern German brauen, and Old Icelandic brugga to brew. See also BREAD, BROTH. —n. About 1510, from the verb. —brewer n. 1203–04, formed from brewen + *-er*¹. —brewery n. 1166, formed from brewen + -ery.

bribe n. About 1425, something given to a beggar; later, a gift given to influence corruptly (probably before 1439); borrowed from Old French bribe morsel of bread given to a beggar, of uncertain origin. —v. About 1390, to extort, steal; borrowed from Old French briber to go begging, from Old French bribe, n. The meaning of influence corruptly by giving a gift, is recorded in 1528. —bribery n. Before 1387, borrowed from Old French briberie mendicancy, or perhaps formed from Middle English briber a vagabond, strolling vagrant + *-y*³.

bric-a-brac n. 1840, borrowing of French bric-à-brac, perhaps related to the phrase à bric et à brac any old way.

brick n. 1416 bryke, borrowed from Middle Dutch bricke a tile, brick; cognate with Middle Low German bricke disk, plate, Old Danish bricke wooden plate.

The Middle French brigue a form of loaf, from Old French brique, briche is probably derived from Middle Low German bricke or a Frankish word. —v. 1648, from the noun. —bricklayer n. (1443) bridal n. About 1200 bridale, developed from late Old English brýdealo wedding feast (about 1075, a compound of brýd bride + ealo ale, because ale was drunk at such feasts).

In the 1500's the spelling adopted final -al or -all, reflecting the loss of the (ā) sound and the sense of "ale." The word then became thought of as bride + *-al*² (noun suffix), as in espousal, and later as bride + *-al*¹ (adjective suffix), as in nuptial, which gradually led to adjective use (1748, but earlier as an attributive 1596).

bride n. Probably before 1200 brid, brude, developed from Old English brýd (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian breid, Old Saxon brūd, Old High German brūt bride (modern German Braut), Old Icelandic brúðr bride, young woman, and Gothic brūths daughter-in-law, from Proto-Germanic brūdiz*. —bridegroom n. 1526 bridegrome, an alteration (influenced by grome groom, boy, lad) of earlier bridegome (before 1300), and bridegum (probably about 1200); developed from Old English brýdguma (about 750, a compound of brýd bride + guma man); see BRIDE, GROOM; cognate with Old Saxon brūdigumo bridegroom, Old Frisian breid-goma, Old High German brūtigomo (modern German Bräutigam), and Old Icelandic brúðgumi, from Proto-Germanic brūdigumōn*.

bridge¹ n. structure. Before 1114 brigge, developed from Old English brycg (about 1000); cognate with Old Frisian bregge, brigge, Old High German bruca bridge (modern German Brücke), Old Icelandic bryggja gangway (from Proto-Germanic

bruʒjō*. —v. 1375 (Scottish) briggen, developed from Old English brycgian (probably about 750), from brycg, n., bridge.

bridge² n. card game. Possibly 1843, as an alteration (influenced by *bridge*¹) of biritch, a word of unknown origin. The word biritch appeared in a pamphlet "Biritch, or Russian whist" (London, 1886), in which biritch was a call of "no trumps."

bridle n. About 1175, found in Old English brīdel (before 900), earlier brīdels (about 750), and brīdels, (probably about 700); related to bregdan move quickly; for suffix see -LE¹; also found in other West Germanic languages; compare Old Frisian brīdel, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch breidel, Old High German and Middle High German brittel, from Proto-Germanic bregdīlaz*. —v. Probably before 1200, developed from Old English (ge)brīdlian (before 900); probably from Old English brīdel bridle, n.

brief adj. Probably before 1300 bref, borrowed through Old French bref, brief, and directly from Latin brevis short. —n. Before 1338 bref a letter, borrowed through Old French bref, brief, and directly from Late Latin breve (genitive brevis) letter, summary, originally in breve scriptum short written note, from Latin breve (neuter of brevis short). This word passed from the official Latin used in European countries into all the Germanic languages, except perhaps Old English, where it entered only later into Middle English. —v. 1837, put (information) in the form of a lawyer's brief; later, to give information (1866); from the noun.

brier¹ or briar¹ n. thorny bush. Probably before 1200 brer, developed from Old English (about 1000) brær (West Saxon), brēr (Anglian), of unknown origin.

brier² or briar² n. heath used in making pipes. 1868, borrowed from French bruyère (dialectal brière) heath plant, from Old French bruyere, from Gallo-Romance brūcāria*, from brūcus* heather, from Gaulish (compare Breton brug heath, and Welsh brug a thicket).

brig n. 1720, short for brigantine; later, a ship with two masts. The sense of a place of detention (1852) is possibly from such ships originally used as prison ships.

brigade n. 1637, borrowing of French brigade (since 1300's), from Italian brigata company, crew, from brigare to brawl, fight, from briga strife; possibly of Germanic origin. —brigadier n. 1678, probably borrowing of French brigadier, from brigade.

brigand n. Probably before 1400 bregaund, earlier, brigant (probably before 1387); borrowed from Old French brigand (originally) foot-soldier, from Italian brigante trooper, skirmisher, from brigare.

brigantine n. 1553 (probably influenced by later French spelling brigantin), but earlier brigandyn (1525); borrowed from Middle French brigandin, from Italian brigantino perhaps meaning skirmishing vessel, a pirate ship, from brigante skirmisher, pirate, brigand, from brigare fight; BRIGADE; for suffix see -INE¹.

bright adj. Before 1325 bright; earlier briht (probably before 1200), developed from Old English bryht (about 1000), by metathesis of r in an altered form beorht (before 900) and berht (before 830); earlier in names Erconberht (before 800) and Erconberct (about 737). The Old English is cognate with Old Saxon berht, beraht, Old High German beraht bright, Middle High German berht (surviving in the altered form of modern German proper names Albrecht, etc.), Old Icelandic bjartr Gothic bairhts, from Proto-Germanic berhtaz*. —adv. Before 1385 bright; earlier brighte; developed from Old English beorhte (about 725, in Beowulf). —brighten v. Before 1450 bryghten; earlier brihten (probably before 1200); possibly developed from Old English gebrehntian to shine (about 950), and Anglian gebrihtan to make bright.

brilliant adj. 1681, borrowed from French brillant shining, present participle of briller to shine, from Italian brillare to glitter, probably from obsolete brillo brilliant, imitation diamond, from berillo beryl, from Latin beryllus BERYL. —brilliance n. 1755, formed from English brilliant + -ance.

brim n. Probably before 1200 brimme edge of the sea, coast; of uncertain origin, but related to Middle High German brēm and Old Icelandic brimr, both meaning edge (and the Old Icelandic being itself cognate with German Berge, Dutch berg, and English berg). The form was perhaps influenced by Old English brim sea, surf (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Icelandic brim sea, surf.

brimstone n. About 1250 brimeston; earlier, brynstan (1125), literally, burn-stone (brin-, stem of brinnen to BURN + stan, ston STONE); compare Old Icelandic brennusteinn, brennisteinn, German Bernstein, of similar formation, meaning "amber."

brindled adj. 1678, alteration of earlier brinded (1589), probably by influence of kindled, mingled, etc.; brinded was an alteration of earlier brended, found in Middle English brend brown color, horse of this color (about 1426, and in surname Brendeskyn, 1262) noun use of past participle of brennen to BURN. —brindle adj. 1676; n. 1696, apparently shortening of brindled, adj.

brine n. Before 1325, found in Old English brīne (before 1000); cognate with Middle Dutch brīne brine. —briny adj. 1608, formed from English brine + *-y*¹.

bring v. Old English bringan (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian bringa, brenga to bring, Old Saxon bringian, Old High German bringan (modern German bringen), Gothic bringan, from Proto-Germanic bringanan*.

brink n. Probably about 1225 brinke seashore, bank of a stream, borrowed probably from a Scandinavian source (compare Danish brink edge, and Old Icelandic brekka steep hill, with -kk- from -nk-, from Proto-Germanic brenkōn*); cognate with Middle Low German brink edge, and Middle Dutch brinc (modern Dutch brink).

brisk adj. 1560; of uncertain origin (perhaps a variant of BRUSQUE, the two words, according to the OED, appearing to have influenced each other in early use).

brisket n. 1338 brusket; cognate with Middle High German brüsche lump, swelling, and Old Icelandic brjōsk gristle, related to brjōst BREAST; for suffix see -ET.

The Old French bruschet, brichet is widely attested as early as 1385, and may have been borrowed from English, or more likely from Scandinavian.

bristle n. Probably before 1300 brustel, bristel; developed, with diminutive form -el, from Old English (about 700) byrst bristle, by metathesis of r. Old English byrst is cognate with Old High German burst bristle (modern German Borste), Old Icelandic burst bristle; for suffix see -LE¹. —v. 1480 brustelen, from the noun.

britches n.pl. 1905, originally an old variant of breeches, also briches (1727) and found in britch (1630).

British adj. Old English Brittisc, Brettisc, Bryttisc of or relating to the ancient Britons (before 855), developed from Brittas, Brettas, Bryttas natives of ancient Britain, BRITON.

Briton n. Before 1387 Briton; earlier Bretoun (probably before 1300) and Bruton (probably before 1200) one of the Celtic people who occupied Britain to the southern part of Scotland before the Anglo-Saxons; borrowed through Anglo-French Bretun, britun, bruton, and Anglo-Latin (plural) Brittonēs, from Latin Brittō (from the Celtic name of the people).

The forms in Middle English were generally reshaped through the influence of Old English Brittas and its variants; see BRITISH. The word acquired its current sense after the union of England and Scotland in 1707.

brittle adj. Before 1382 britil easily broken, feeble; earlier, brotil (probably before 1325); developed through Old English bryttian tear to pieces, shatter, from Proto-Germanic brutilo-*, also the source of Old English brēotan to break; cognate with Old High German brōdi fragile, and Old Icelandic brjōta to break, from Proto-Germanic breutanan*; for suffix see -LE². The vowel in Middle English brotil suggests development from Old English brēotan + suffix -le², and that it fused in later Middle English britil.

broach n. About 1310 broche skewer, spit; earlier, an ornament, clasp (probably before 1200, as an older variant of Middle English brooch); borrowed from Old French broche a spit, awl, from Vulgar Latin brocca* pointed tool, originally feminine of Latin broccus projecting, perhaps of Gaulish origin (compare Gaelic brog awl). —v. begin to talk about. 1579, figurative use of the earlier verb brochen to pierce (about 1380), as in broaching a cask and to spur into action (before 1338); probably from the noun, but influenced by Old French brochier to spur.

broad adj. Probably before 1200 brod, developed from Old English brād (about 725, in Beowulf); earlier, in compound brādlastæcus a broadax (about 700). The Old English is cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon brēd broad, Middle Dutch breet, breed (modern Dutch breed), Old High German and modern German breit, Old Icelandic breidhr, and Gothic braiths, from Proto-Germanic braidaz*. —broaden v. 1726, implied in past participle broadened, formed from English broad, adj. + -en¹. —broadcloth n. (about 1412) —broadcast v. 1813, formed from English broad wide across + cast, v., on the basis of earlier broadcast, adj. (of seeds) scattered (1767), itself formed from broad, adj. + cast, past participle. —n. 1796, developed from broadcast, adj. The meaning (noun and verb) relating to transmission of radio waves is first recorded in 1921.

brocade n. 1563–99, borrowed from Spanish brocado, from Catalan brocat, and possibly reinforced by Middle French brocat, corresponding to Italian broccato embossed cloth, originally past participle of broccare to stud, set with nails, from brocco small nail, protruding tooth, sprout, from Latin broccus projecting; for suffix see -ADE.

broccoli n. 1699, borrowing of Italian broccoli, plural of broccolo cabbage, sprout, diminutive form of brocco sprout, shoot, protruding tooth, from Latin broccus projecting.

brochure n. 1748, borrowed from French brochure a stitched work (because originally these were pages stitched together), from brocher to stitch, from Old French brocher to prick, from broche pointed tool, awl, see BROACH; for suffix see -URE.

brogue¹ n. accent. 1705, of uncertain origin. Most sources conjecture a special use of *brogue*² in the sense of speech characteristic of those who call their shoes brogues.

brogue² n. shoe. 1586, rough, stout shoe worn by the rural Irish and by Scottish highlanders; borrowed from Irish bróg or Gaelic bròg shoe, from Old Irish brōce shoe.

broil¹ v. grill. About 1387–95 broillen; earlier brulen (about 1350); borrowed from Old French bruller, earlier brusler to burn, alteration (by influence of Germanic br-, as in Old High German brant BRAND and brinnan to BURN), of Latin ustulāre to scorch, from ustus, past participle of ūrere to burn.

The vowel shift in Middle English from brulen to broillen is paralleled by fullen, foilen to foil, borrowed from Old French fouler to trample, and by reculen, recoilen to recoil, borrowed from Old French reculer.

broil² v. quarrel. 1402, mix up, borrowed through Anglo-French broiller mix up, confuse, Old French broïllier, from breu, bro broth, brew, from Frankish (compare Old High German brod broth); see BROTH. —n. 1525, from the verb.

broker n. About 1378 brokour commercial agent, middleman; earlier Brokur (1260 as surname); borrowed through Anglo-French abrokeur, brocours retailer of wine, tapster, from Old North French brokeor, variant of Old French brocheor, from brochier to tap, pierce (a keg), from broche pointed tool; see BROACH.

bromide n. 1836, formed from English brom(ine) + -ide. The pair bromine/bromide parallel chlorine/chloride (about 1816). The figurative sense of a dull, conventional person or a trite saying was popularized by American humorist Gelett Burgess (1866–1951) in his book Are You A Bromide? (1906).

bromine n. 1827, formed in English from French brome (from Greek brōmos stench) + English -ine².

bronchi n.pl. of bronchus. 1782, New Latin plural of bronchus, from Late Latin bronchus windpipe, from Greek brónchos windpipe, throat. Bronchi is parallel with older bronchia (1674), borrowed from Late Latin bronchia the bronchial tubes. —bronchial adj. Before 1735, probably formed from English or New Latin bronchia + -al, also found in New Latin bronchialis, from Late Latin bronchium branch of the bronchi in the lungs; or possibly borrowed from earlier French bronchial (1666). —bronchitis n. inflammation of bronchial tubes. Before 1814, New Latin, formed from bronchi, bronchia + -itis inflammation.

bronco n. Probably 1850, American English, borrowed from American Spanish bronco, from Spanish bronco rough (applied to wood), rude, and, as a noun meaning a knot in wood, from Vulgar Latin bruncus* knot, projection, apparently a blend of Latin brocus projecting, and truncus trunk of a tree.

bronze n. Before 1721, work of art done in bronze; borrowing of French bronze from Italian bronzo, bell metal, brass, of uncertain origin (possibly from Latin aes Brundisium copper of Brundisium, ancient seaport in southeastern Italy).

The concept of bronze as an alloy of copper and tin was not differentiated in Middle English from brass an alloy of copper and zinc, for both alloys were described by Middle English bras (1200). This is not surprising, as the ancient alloying was often achieved by mixing in tin, lead, zinc, etc., with copper without distinction. —v. make or become like bronze. 1645, borrowed from French bronzer, from French bronze, n.

brooch n. Before 1382 brooch; earlier brouche (before 1333) and broche (probably before 1200). This is the same word as broach (with specialized meaning).

brood n. Before 1387, earlier brod (before 1250); developed from Old English brōd (about 1000), from Proto-Germanic brōd-*; cognate with Middle Dutch broet (modern Dutch broed), Old High German bruot heat, warmth, brood (modern German Brut brood), appearing in English with formative -d from the Proto-Germanic base brō-* to warm, heat. —v. sit on to hatch. 1440, Middle English brodyn, from the noun. The figurative meaning of meditate moodily or closely from the idea of nursing (anger) appears in 1571.

brook¹ n. stream. Probably before 1200, brok, developed from Old English (about 847) brōc, originally, a flowing stream; is cognate with Middle Dutch and modern Dutch broek, Middle Low German brōk and Low German brook marsh, Old High German bruoh (modern German Bruch marsh), from Proto-Germanic brōka-*.

brook² v. tolerate. 1530, earlier bruken, broken to use, enjoy (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (about 950) bruccan; earlier brūcan (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon brūkan to use, Old Frisian brūka, Old Icelandic brūka (Swedish bruka use, be accustomed to), Middle Dutch brūken to use, Old High German brūhhan (modern German brauchen), Gothic brūkejan to use, enjoy, from Proto-Germanic brūk-* to make use of, enjoy.

broom n. 1346, brome implement for sweeping, originally made of twigs of a shrub abundant in Britain and also called broom, Middle English brom (probably about 1125); developed from Old English brōm the shrub (about 700). The word is cognate with Old High German brāmo, brāma bramble (modern German Brom-, in the compound Brombeere blackberry), Middle Dutch brāme (modern Dutch braam), and Old Saxon brāmal-, in the compound brāmalbusk blackberry bush, from Proto-Germanic brāma-z*. Related to BRAMBLE. —v. sweep with a broom. 1838, from the noun. —broomstick n. 1683, concurrent with, but eventually replacing, earlier broomstaff (1613).

broth n. Old English (before 1000); cognate with Old High German brod broth, Old Icelandic broðr, from Proto-Germanic bruthan*, related to Old English brēowan to BREW.

brothel n. Before 1593, house of prostitution; by confusion of Middle English bordel (also bordel house), house of prostitution (about 1300), and brothel's house wherein brothel had the meaning prostitute (1493), earlier, a worthless, abandoned person (1376), from brothen ruined, degenerate (probably before 1325); developed from Old English brothen, past participle of brēothan go to ruin, from Proto-Germanic breuthanan*, variant of breutanan* to break.

brother n. Before 1121, developed from Old English brōthor (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian brōther brother, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch broer, Old Saxon brōthar, Old High German bruoder and modern German Bruder, Old Icelandic brōðhir, and Gothic brōthar, from Proto-Germanic brōthar*.

The special plural brethren appeared in early Middle English, before 1200, and became standard until brothers replaced it in the 1600's. Brethren then acquired the specialized meaning of fellow members of a church, sect, etc. —brotherhood n. (probably about 1300) —brother-in-law n. (probably before 1300) —brotherly adj. (about 1325) brouhaha n. 1890, borrowed from French brouhaha (1552), of uncertain origin (compare Hebrew bārūkḥ habbā' blessed be the one who comes, used on public occasions; and in Italian dialect barruccaba confusion, disorder).

brow n. Before 1325 browes, brues brow, forehead, eyebrows; earlier brouwes (about 1300) and bruwen (probably before 1200), developed from Old English brū, probably originally "eyebrow," but extended at an early date to "eyelash" and then to "eyelid," by association of the hair of the eyebrow with the hair of the eyelid, the eyebrow then becoming Old English ofer-brūa over-brows.

The earliest recorded meanings in Middle English (probably before 1200) refer to the eyelid and to movement of the eyebrows or forehead that shows emotion or attitude; but the general word for "eyebrow" in Middle English was brew, browen (probably before 1200); developed from West Saxon brēw; cognate with Old Frisian brē in āg-brē eyebrow, Old Saxon brāwa, brāha, Middle Dutch brauwe, brouwe eyelid, Old High German brāwa eyebrow, and Old Icelandic brā eyebrow.

Old English brū, from the Proto-Germanic base brū-* is cognate with Old Icelandic brūn. —browbeat v. to bully. 1581, formed from English brow + beat.

brown adj. Probably before 1300 broun; earlier Brunloc brown-haired (before 1130, in surname); developed from Old English brūn (about 700); cognate with Old Frisian brūn brown, Middle Dutch bruun (modern Dutch bruin), Old High German brūn (modern German braun), Old Icelandic brūnn (Swedish brun, Danish brun), from Proto-Germanic brūnaz-*. —n. About 1300 browne, from the adjective. —v. Probably before 1300 brounen, from the adjective.

The Germanic word was adopted in Medieval Latin as brunus, by Italian, Spanish, and Portuguese as bruno, and by Provençal and French as brun. —brownstone n. (1836, American English)—brown sugar (1704) brownie n. 1513, formed as a diminutive (Scottish) of English brown; for suffix see -IE.

browse v. 1523, probably borrowed from Middle French brouster (modern French brouster), from Old French broster to sprout, bud, from brost sprout, shoot, probably from a Germanic source (compare Middle High German broz a bud, Old Saxon brustian to sprout).

Loss of final -t in English may be because broust was considered the past participle, so that brouse (which is recorded) was the infinitive, etc.

The figurative meaning of look through a book casually first appeared in American English in 1870.

bruin n. bear. 1481, borrowed from Middle Dutch Bruin, Bruun, the name of the bear in the fable Reynard the Fox, literally meaning "Brown," from bruun brown; cognate with Old English brūn BROWN.

bruise v. Probably before 1200 brisen; developed from Old English brýsan to crush (appearing before 900), from Proto-Germanic brūsjanan*. Also in surname Brusebarre, (1203), and bruse; borrowed through Anglo-French bruser, bruiser, briser to break, smash, from Old French bruiser, brisier. The two forms (brise from English, and bruse from French) existed side by side, till the form bruise was generally established by the mid-1600's. —n. 1541, injury, earlier, a breaking (1441); from the verb.

brunette or brunet n. 1669, borrowing of French brunette, brunet, from Old French brunet, feminine diminutive of brun brown, from Germanic (compare Old High German brūn BROWN); for suffix see -ET.

brunt n. Probably about 1380 brunt a sharp blow; later, main force or violence (probably about 1420); of uncertain origin.

brush¹ n. implement. About 1378, borrowed from Old French brousse, brouesse a brush, usually regarded as derived from Vulgar Latin bruscia* bunch of new shoots, used to sweep away dust, from Latin bruscum excrescence on a maple. —v. use a brush (on). Before 1475, from the noun.

brush² n. shrubs, etc. Before 1338, borrowed through Anglo-French bruce brushwood, bushes, Old North French broche, and Old French brosse, earlier broce, from Gallo-Romance brocia*, perhaps from brūcus* heather; see BRIER² heath.

The presence of many forms in English and French and the concurrent Anglo-French bruce and Anglo-Latin brusca, bruscia suggests a confusion of meaning among the various forms and perhaps points to an artificial separation of the words *brush*¹ and *brush*² in modern English.

brusque adj. 1651, borrowing of French brusque and abrupt; earlier, tart (1601), from Italian brusco coarse, rough, of uncertain origin, but also found in Spanish and Portuguese brusco rude, peevish.

brute adj. Probably before 1425, borrowing of Middle French brute, brut coarse, brutal, from Latin brūtus heavy, dull, stupid, from an Oscan word probably cognate with Latin gravis heavy. —n. 1611, lower animal, borrowed from Medieval Latin brutus, from Latin brūtus dull, stupid. —brutal adj. About 1450 (Scottish), borrowing of Middle French brutal, from Medieval Latin brutalis, from brutus brute; for suffix see -AL¹. —brutality n. 1549, formed from English brutal + -ity. —brutalize v. Before 1704, formed from English brutal + -ize.

bubble n., v. About 1325 bobel, n., borrowed from Middle Dutch bobbel; about 1440 bobelen, v., from the noun or borrowed from Middle Low German bubbeln to bubble.

bubonic adj. 1871, formed in English from Latin būbō swelling of the lymph glands in the groin, genitive būbōnis, (from Greek boubōn groin, swelling in the groin) + English -ic. The term bubo was borrowed in Middle English as early as 1398 but the adjective bubonic did not appear until almost 500 years later.

buccal adj. 1831, probably borrowing of French buccal, from Latin bucca cheek, mouth; for suffix see -AL¹. A noun use meaning "mouthpiece" is recorded in English in 1605, but probably did not influence the adjective.

buccaneer n. 1661, a French settler employed as a hunter of wild oxen on the Spanish coasts of America; borrowed from French boucanier one who dries and smokes meat on a boucan, a barbecue, after the manner of the Indians, from an Indian word of the Caribbean area (perhaps Tupi mocaém, transcribed as mukem in a Portuguese travel account, 1587); for suffix see -EER. By 1690 the word was applied to French and then to British piratical rovers who were driven from their business of hunting wild oxen by the Spanish authorities and turned to plundering goods. In the 1800's it was extended to any pirate or sea rover.

buck¹ n. male deer, goat, etc. Before 1375 bucke male deer; earlier bocke (about 1300), new application of meaning derived from bucke male goat (probably before 1200), also found in surname Buckeshorn (1184–85); developed from Old English bucca male goat (before 830). The often-cited Old English buc is a ghost word, or scribal error, and so it is Old English bucca (from Proto-Germanic bukkōn*) that is cognate with Old Saxon buck male goat, Middle Dutch boc, buc (modern Dutch bok), Old High German boc (modern German Bock), Old Icelandic bukkr. —buckskin n. 1306, also found in the surname Bucskin (1274–75), formed from bucke + skin.

buck² v. (of horses and mules) jump. 1848, verb use of BUCK¹, originally apparently in the sense of jump like a buck. In 1857 the sense of fight against, resist stubbornly arose as a figurative use, possibly influenced by the earlier meaning of butt, push or hit with the head (1750). The idiom buck up is probably also related; in 1844 it meant to cheer up, encourage.

buck³ n. dollar. 1856, American English, probably development of the sense of a deerskin used as a unit of exchange, especially among Indians and frontiersmen (1748); hence special use of BUCK¹ male deer.

buck⁴ n. pass the buck. 1912, American English, from an earlier meaning in the game of poker, buck article put in the jackpot and taken by the winner as a reminder to order another jackpot.

buck⁵ n. sawhorse. 1817, American English, apparently borrowed from Dutch bok trestle; see SAWBUCK. —bucksaw n. (1856) buckaroo n. 1889, American English, alteration (influenced by buck¹) of earlier bakhara (1827), borrowed from Spanish vaquero cowboy, from vaca cow, from Latin vacca. The end of the word (-aroo) is a modification of the Spanish -ero.

buckboard n. 1839, American English, formed from dialectal English buck body of a cart (1691) + board.

bucket n. 1248 buket, borrowed from Anglo-French buket bucket, pail, influenced by Middle English buc, buk belly, trunk, body (probably before 1200), developed from Old English būc vessel, pitcher, belly (about 700); cognate with Old High German būh belly (modern German Bauch), Old Icelandic būkr belly, body, from Proto-Germanic būkaz*.

buckle n. 1300 bukel, also later Middle English bokel; borrowed from Old French bucle, bocle, from Latin buccula cheek strap on a helmet, diminutive form of bucca cheek. —v. About 1386 bokelen, from the noun. The sense of bend out of shape appeared about 1525, and may be a separate borrowing from Middle French boucler to bulge.

buckler n. Probably before 1300 bokler, bokeler, borrowed from Old French bocler, bucler, from bocle, bucle boss of a shield, BUCKLE.

buckram n. 1222 bukeram fine linen or cotton, borrowed from Old French bouquerant, and Italian bucherame, probably from Bukhara (city in central Asia where it was imported from).

bucolic adj. 1613, earlier bucolical (1523); borrowed, perhaps by influence of earlier French bucolique (1265), from Latin būcolicus, from Greek boukolikós rustic, from boukólos herdsman, from bōs COW + -kólos tending; for suffix see -IC.

bud n. Before 1398 budde, and bodde (about 1450); of uncertain origin; but possible cognates exist in Middle Low German buddech thick, swollen, Old Saxon būdil, Old High German pūtil, Middle High German biutel bag, sack (modern German Beutel). —v. Probably about 1408 budden; verb use of budde, n.

buddy n. 1850, American English, possibly a variant of earlier butty companion (1802), itself a possible alteration of booty in booty fellow a confederate who shares plunder (1530). The short form bud appeared in 1851 in American English.

budge v. 1590, borrowed from Middle French bouger, bougier to stir, from Vulgar Latin bullicāre* to bubble, boil, from Latin bullire to bubble, seethe.

budget n. Probably before 1425 bougette small bag, wallet; borrowed from Middle French bougette, diminutive form of Old French bouge leather bag, from Latin bulga, probably from Gaulish (compare Old Irish bolc, bolg bag); related to BULGE and BELLY. The sense of estimate of money appeared in 1733. —v. 1618, from the noun.

buff¹ n. dull-yellow leather. 1580 buffe leather, earlier, buffalo (1552); apparently borrowed from Middle French buffle, from Italian bufalo, probably because this leather was originally obtained from the BUFFALO. The sense of bare skin, naked appeared in in or to the buff, about 1602. —adj. 1599, from the noun. —v. polish. 1885, from the noun.

buff² n. devotee. 1903, American English, an enthusiast about fighting fires, so called because the uniforms of the volunteer firemen (in New York City at the time) were buff-colored; see BUFF¹; by 1931 extended to any enthusiast. buffalo n. 1588, borrowed from Italian bufalo or possibly from Spanish búfalo, from Late Latin būfalus, variant of Latin būbalus wild ox, (earlier) African gazelle, from Greek boúbalos African gazelle, wild ox, of uncertain origin. The spelling buffalo gradually replaced the earlier buffel, buffle (about 1511–1808); borrowed from Middle French buffle; cognate with Dutch buffel, Middle High German buffel (modern German Büffel). —v. intimidate. 1903, American English, from the noun, paralleling the verb cow to frighten.

buffer¹ n. thing that softens. 1835, apparently formed from obsolete verb buff (before 1550) make a dull sound when struck + -er¹. The verb buff developed in Middle English from buff a blow (about 1420), borrowed from Middle French buffe a blow, from Old French.

buffer² n. a polisher. 1854, formed from English buff¹, v. + -er¹.

buffet¹ n. blow. Probably before 1200, borrowed from Old French buffet, diminutive of bufe a blow, of uncertain origin. —v. Probably before 1200, borrowed from Old French buffeter, from buffet¹, n.

buffet² n. furniture. 1718, borrowing of French buffet, possibly from Italian buffeto, of uncertain origin. The sense of a meal set out on buffets as in a buffet dinner or luncheon appeared in the late 1800's.

buffoon n. 1585, clown; earlier, 1549, a pantomime dance; borrowed from Middle French bouffon, from Italian buffone jester, from buffa a jest, from buffare blow out the cheeks (as a comic gesture), of imitative origin; for ending see -OON. Compare BOUFFANT. —buffoonery n. 1621, formed from buffoon + -ery.

bug n. 1622, in reference to the bedbug, though of uncertain origin, but probably influenced by Middle English bugge bug-bear, hobgoblin (1395); see BUGBEAR. It has been suggested that bug a crawling insect is a dialectal alteration of earlier budde beetle (1440), developed from Old English budda; cognate with Low German dialect budde louse, grub, and Middle Low German buddech thick, swollen; see BUD.

The slang sense of a defect or flaw in a machine, plan, etc., originated in American English in 1889, probably from the idea of a small insect getting inside machinery and interfering with its action. —v. 1 put a concealed microphone in. 1919, American English, verb use of bug, n. (from the resemblance of the microphone to a small insect). 2 annoy, irritate. 1949, American English, probably originally in allusion to insect pests.

bugaboo n. 1843, alteration of earlier buggybow (1740), possibly related to BUGBEAR.

bugbear n. 1580, a compound formed from obsolete English bug goblin, scarecrow (earlier bugge, about 1395) + bear BEAR¹. Middle English bugge is of uncertain origin, though Celtic origin has been suggested (compare Middle Irish bocánach supernatural being, perhaps a goatlike creature, apparently from bocán he-goat, Irish and Gaelic bocan hobgoblin); the often-cited Welsh bug goblin, ghost (1500's) is now generally assumed to be a borrowing from Middle English bugge.

buggy¹ n. light carriage. 1773 Buggies light one-horse vehicles; of unknown origin.

buggy² adj. infested with bugs. 1714, formed from English bug, n. + *-y*¹.

bugle n. Probably about 1350, shortened from earlier bugle horn (probably before 1300), from bugle wild ox, borrowed from Old French bugle wild ox, instrument made from the horn of the ox, learned borrowing from Latin būculus, diminutive form of bōs ox. —v. 1862, earlier bugling (1847), from the noun. —bugler n. 1840, formed from English bugle, n. + *-er*¹.

build v. About 1330 bilden; earlier bulden (probably before 1200); developed from late Old English byldan (1016), from bold dwelling (from Proto-Germanic buthlan*); cognate with Old Frisian bōdel dwelling, Old Saxon bodl, Old Icelandic bōl, and related to Old English būan to dwell; see BOWER. The modern spelling build (1550, and an earlier spelling buylden, 1395) are not accounted for, unless they represent a composite of the two earlier spellings bilden and bulden. —n. 1667, from the verb, replacing the now obsolete noun built (about 1615), also from the verb in the sense of something built (past participle). —builder n. (about 1280) —building n. (about 1300) bulb n. 1568, onion; borrowed perhaps through Middle French bulbe, from Latin bulbus bulb, onion, from Greek bolbós bulbous plants, possibly cognate with Latin bulla bubble. The sense of an object with a swollen end appeared about 1800, and electric bulb in 1856. —bulbous adj. 1578, borrowed from Latin bulbōsus, from bulbus bulb; for suffix see -OUS.

bulge n. Probably about 1200, pouch, borrowed from Old French bouge, boulge, from Latin bulga, probably from Gaulish (compare Old Irish bolc, bolg bag, Breton bolc'h); related to BUDGET. —v. 1677, from the noun.

bulk n. About 1454 bulk; earlier bolke a heap (1440) and the cargo of a ship (before 1350); probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic bulki cargo or hold of a ship). —v. 1540, swell out (bulk out); probably a confusion of bolken spill over (before 1352) and bulken of undetermined meaning (before 1325), but reinforced by bulked having bulk, big (probably 1440). —bulky adj. About 1450, plump, stout, formed from English bulk, n. + *-y*¹.

bull¹ n. male animal. Probably before 1200 bule, earlier Bule and Bulla (1130, 1166, in surnames); developed from Old English (972) bula (from Proto-Germanic bulōn*), related to bulluc young bull and cognate with Middle Low German bulle bull, Middle Dutch bul, bulle (modern Dutch bul), and Old Icelandic boli. The sense of a speculator on the stock exchange appeared in 1714, probably in contrast to bear; see BEAR¹ animal. —v. 1884, from the noun. —bullish adj. 1882, formed from English *bull*¹ + *-ish*¹.

bull² n. decree. About 1300, borrowed from Old French bulle and Medieval Latin bulła papal decree, document, seal, from Latin bulła amulet, bubble (in reference to the seal on the paper); of uncertain origin.

bulldoze v. 1876, American English, to intimidate by violence; of uncertain origin. The word bulldozer, meaning one who intimidates by violence, appeared also in 1876, a machine for clearing or leveling in 1930. The etymology usually suggested is a compound of bull (the animal) and an altered form of dose, i.e. a whipping to coerce voters was a dose suitable for a bull. The reference is a supposed practice during the Tilden campaign, especially among Blacks in the South.

bullet n. 1557, borrowed from Middle French boullette small ball, diminutive form of boule ball; see BOWL² ball. The idiom bite the bullet is first recorded in 1923 (earlier, 1891 bite on the bullet), perhaps in reference to giving a person something to bite down on while undergoing a painful operation.

bulletin n. 1651, official certificate; borrowed from French bulletin, from Old French bullette certificate, from bulle document, BULL². French bulletin was modeled after Italian bollettino, bullettino note or pass, diminutive form of bulletta, itself a diminutive form of bulła papal decree, from Medieval Latin; see BULL² decree. The earliest uses of bulletin are apparently borrowed directly from Italian and use the Italian spelling, but modern senses are an adoption of the French. The meaning of a short account of news appeared in English in 1791.

bullion n. 1429 billon a bar of precious metal, also, bullion a mint (1433); borrowed through Anglo-French bullion, billon a bar of precious metal, or a mint, and buillir to melt down, from Old French boillir to boil, in reference to the practice of melting down gold or silver and casting it into bars; see BOIL¹ to heat.

Pronunciation of modern English bullion and bouillon is often confused, which reflects the close historical connection of both words, ultimately from Old French boillir to boil (bouillon is boiled soup, bullion is "boiled" metal).

bullock n. Old English bulloc (901) young bull, from Proto-Germanic bull-, earlier buln-; see BULL¹.

bully¹ n. person who teases or hurts the weak. 1688, probably extracted from such earlier terms as bully-huff a boaster who bullies (1680), and bully-ruffian (1653), on the pattern of bully boy good friend, fine fellow (1609). Earlier (1538), bully was applied to both men and women as equivalent to “sweetheart, darling.” By popular etymology associated with bull, but originally probably a borrowing from Dutch boel lover, brother, from Middle High German buole, of uncertain origin. —v. 1710, from the noun, also influenced by *BULL*¹. —adj. 1681, worthy, admirable, developed from the noun sense “good fellow,” and abstracted from such phrases to mean worthy or admirable; popularized in part by Theodore Roosevelt’s phrase describing the presidency as a bully pulpit because of its prestige and power.

bully² n., or bully beef canned or pickled beef. 1753, perhaps borrowed from French boeuf bouilli boiled beef; bouilli, past participle of bouillir to boil, from Old French boillir; see *BOIL*¹ bubble up.

bulwark n. Probably about 1416 bulwerke rampart, fortification; borrowed from Middle Dutch bolwerc or Middle Low German bolwerk (bolle plank, tree trunk + werc, werk work). The figurative sense appeared in English in 1577.

bum n. 1864, in American English, possibly identical with earlier Scottish bum (1540) lazy, dirty person (a special use of bum rump, before 1387, perhaps borrowed from Middle Dutch bonne, modern Dutch bom bung) and fusing with a shortened form of earlier English bummer loafer, idle person (1855), apparently alteration of German Bummeler, from bummeln to loaf showing influence of German immigrants at the time. —v. 1863, American English, perhaps back formation from bummer loafer, or from the noun (reinforced by bumming, n., 1857). —adj. of poor quality. 1859, American English, apparently from the noun; also in bum steer bad advice (1920’s), and in bummer bad experience or situation (1969).

bumble v. 1532 bumble, bomble to blunder about, flounder, referring to the noise of booming or buzzing about, in a disparaging way. Middle English bumblen, bomblen to boom, as a bitter doer, and to buzz, are first recorded about 1395. For suffix see *-LE*³. —n. 1648, confusion, jumble; probably from the noun.

bumblebee n. 1530, formed from bumblen, bomblen to buzz, boom (about 1395) + bee. Bumblebee is a partial replacement of the earlier term humbulbe HUMBLEBEE (before 1475).

bump v., n. 1611 bumpe blow, strike or knock, both verb and noun, of imitative origin, and possibly related to obsolete bum to make a booming noise; to strike. —bumper n. 1676, a cup or glass of wine filled to the brim, formed from English bump (in the sense of a bumping or thumping large glass) + *-er*¹. By 1759 extended to anything unusually large or abundant, as in bumper crop. The sense of a bar of metal to protect an automobile appeared in 1926, from the earlier sense of a device on railroad cars (1839). —bumpy adj. 1865, formed from English bump, n. + *-y*¹.

bumpkin n. 1570 bunkin, of uncertain origin, possibly borrowed from Middle Dutch bommekeijn little barrel, used in a humorous sense.

bumptious adj. 1803, probably derived from bump + ending -tious from -ous, on the pattern of captious, fractious, etc., some humorous formations and others borrowings into English.

bun n. 1371 bunne, of uncertain origin; perhaps an altered borrowing from Old French buignet a fritter, originally a diminutive form of buigne swelling from a blow, bump on the head, probably of pre-Roman origin; also, compare Spanish buñelo a fritter, apparently of the same ultimate origin as the French.

bunch n. About 1350 bunche a little bundle; borrowed from Old French (Walloon) bonge bundle, from Flemish bondje little bundle. —v. Before 1398 bunchen form a bunch, developed from bunche, n.

bundle n. About 1331 bondell collection of things bound, probably borrowed from Middle Dutch bondel, or perhaps alteration (influenced by Middle Dutch) of Old English byndele a binding, (from Proto-Germanic bundilīn*); related to bindan BIND. —v. Before 1628, from the noun.

bung n. About 1440, borrowed (probably because of the wine trade) from Middle Dutch bonge; cognate with Middle High German bunge stopper. —v. 1589, to stop or stop up, later (by 1829) said of the eyes after a boxing match, and in modern times extended to a dilapidated or injured condition.

bungalow n. 1676 bungales, as a native word introduced into English from Hindi bangla one-story thatched cottage, literally, of Bengal.

bungle v. 1530, probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Swedish dialect bangla work ineffectually, related to Old Swedish bangla to strike). —n. 1656, from the verb. —bungler n. 1533, formed from English bungle, v. + *-er*¹.

union n. Before 1718 bunnian, apparently alteration of earlier bunnye lump, hump, swelling (1552); probably borrowed from Middle French buigne swelling from a blow, from Old French buigne; see BUN.

bunk¹ n. bed. 1758, probably shortened from BUNKER seat or bench. —v. 1840, from the noun. —bunkhouse n. (1876, American English) bunker n. Before 1758, Scottish, seat or bench, of uncertain origin; possibly a variant of banker bench (1677). The sandy hollow on a golf course appeared in 1824, and by 1939 (but probably as early as 1915–1918) was extended to a dug-out fortification.

bunk² n. nonsense. 1900, American English, shortened from BUNKUM.

bunkum or buncombe n. 1847, American English, originally (1828, 1841) in the phrase talk to or for Bunkum (or Buncombe) talk long-windedly about nothing, in allusion to a long and pointless speech given by Felix Walker, congressman bunny n. 1690, earlier a term of endearment for a woman or child (1606), perhaps formed from Scottish bun tail of a hare (about 1538) + *-y*².

(1817–23) from Buncombe County, who excused himself by explaining that he had to make it “for Buncombe.”

bunt v. 1889, American English, probably from earlier bunt (1825) strike, push; also, to strike with the head as a goat does, alteration of BUTT³ hit. —n. 1889, possibly from the verb, though the noun meaning “a push, butt” is recorded in American English in 1767.

bunting¹ n. thin cloth. 1742, perhaps derived from an earlier verb bonten (1340) to sift meal, because the cloth was used for sifting; of uncertain origin; for suffix see *-ING*¹.

bunting² n. bird. Probably before 1300, of uncertain origin; perhaps derived from buntin plump, as in baby bunting, or from an unrecorded word referring to speckled plumage (compare Middle High, Middle Low German, and modern German bunt speckled, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch bont).

buoy n. 1296 boye, borrowed either from Old French boie*, buie (compare later Old French boue, Middle French bouée buoy, dialectal bowie), or from Middle Dutch boye, boeye, both the French and Dutch forms probably derived from West Germanic bauken* (compare Dutch baken beacon, buoy, Old High German bouhhan signal, BEACON). —v. 1596, mark with a buoy, from the noun. The senses of rise up, uplift, sustain appear in the 1600's, perhaps influenced by Spanish boyar to float, from boya buoy, n., from Dutch boei, from Middle French bouée. —buoyant adj. 1578, floating, perhaps borrowed from Spanish boyante, from the present participle of boyar to float. The sense of light, cheerful, appears about 1748. —buoyancy n. 1713, formed from English buoyant + -cy.

bur n. Probably before 1300, borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic burst bristle, related to Dutch burre bur, Old English byrst BRISTLE).

burden¹ n. load. Probably before 1200 burthen, birden; later burden (about 1250); developed from Old English byrthen (before 830); derived from the root of beran to carry, BEAR², and cognate with Old Saxon burthinna burden (from Proto-Germanic burthinjō-*), Old High German burdi, Old Icelandic byrdhr, and Gothic baúrthei. —v. 1541, from the noun. —burdensome adj. 1578, English burden, n. + *-some*¹, and replacing burdenous (1529).

burden² n. idea. 1591, fusion of *burden*¹ and earlier burdoun (probably about 1300) low undersong or accompaniment, borrowed from Old French bourdon bumblebee, bagpipe, drone.

The figurative sense of chief theme, idea, appeared in 1649, in the burden of my song.

bureau n. 1699, desk with drawers; borrowed from French bureau office, desk, originally, covering cloth for a desk, from Old French burel woolen cloth (used as a covering), diminutive form of bure coarse woolen cloth, of uncertain origin; possibly from Vulgar Latin būra*, variant of Late Latin burra coarse wool; alternatively, Old French bure may be related to buire dark brown, from Vulgar Latin burreus*, burrius*, from Latin burnus red. The sense of an office or division of a government department appeared in 1720. —bureaucracy n. 1818; borrowed from French bureaucratie (from bureau + -cratie -cracy).

burg n. 1843, American English, a spelling alteration of Middle English burgh BOROUGH, but also abstracted from the names of numerous American cities ending in -burg, such as Plattsburg, Hartsburg.

burgeon v. About 1350 burjunen, either borrowed from Anglo-French burjuner, Old French borjonner to bud, sprout; or developed from the earlier noun burjoin a bud, sprout (probably before 1300), borrowed from Anglo-French burjun, Old French borjon, of uncertain origin.

burger n. 1939, American English, by shortening of hamburger and appearing in beefburger (1940) and cheeseburger (1938).

burgess n. Probably before 1200 burgeis inhabitant of a borough; borrowed from Old French borgeis, borjois citizen of a town or village, from borc town, village; see BOURGEOIS. The sense of a member of a legislature appeared in English in 1472.

burgh n. 1375, Scottish and obsolete English variant of BOROUGH. In Scotland the original pronunciation corresponding to borough is retained from burgh, accounting for the pronunciation of Edinburgh. —burgher n. 1590, inhabitant of a borough or town; borrowed from Middle Dutch burgher, from Middle High German burger, burgere (modern German Bürger), from Old High German burgari inhabitant of a fortress, from burg fortress, citadel; see BOROUGH.

burglar n. 1541, borrowed as Anglo-French burgler (1516), alteration of earlier burgessour, burgeysour burglar, by influence of Anglo-Latin burglator (before 1260), itself a contributing source of English burglar and an altered form of Medieval Latin burgator burglar from burgare to break open, commit burglary in, from Latin burgus fortress, castle. —burglarize v. 1871, American English, formed from burglar + -ize. —burglary n. 1532–33, borrowed as a legal term from Anglo-French burglarie, alteration of Anglo-Latin burgaria, burgeria (early 1200's); for suffix see *-ry*¹. —burgle v. 1872, back formation from burglar.

burial n. Probably before 1400 beryll, biriel burial place, tomb, formed as a singular from earlier buriles (about 1200), berieles (before 1225), these forms being taken as plurals, though developed from Old English (725) byrgels burial place (byrgan to bury + the suffix -els, as in hydels hiding place, fætels bag, etc; from Proto-Germanic burzisli-*); see BURY. The sense of interment, funeral, is not recorded before 1250.

burlap n. 1695–96 borelapp, of uncertain origin; possibly borrowed from Dutch boerenlap* (boeren coarse + lap piece of cloth).

burlesque n. 1667, from adjective meaning droll, jocular (1656); borrowed from French burlesque, from Italian burlesco, from burla a jest, ridicule, from Spanish burla, of uncertain origin (possibly an alteration of Late Latin burnae trifles, nonsense); for suffix see -ESQUE.

The modern sense of a variety show, frequently with striptease acts, appeared in 1870 in American English. —v. 1676, from the noun or adjective.

burly adj. Probably before 1400, Northern dialectal burli noble, stately, variant of earlier borlich (before 1250), developed from Old English adjective with corresponding adverb borlice excellently, verily, related to Old English beran to BEAR² carry.

burn v. Probably before 1200 burnen, representing two forms originally distinct: a strong intransitive verb bernen (probably about 1175) and brinnen (before 1325) found in Old English as beornan, biornan, byrnan to be on fire; and a weak transitive verb brennen (probably before 1160), found in Old English as bernan, baernan to set on fire, consume with fire. The distinction between the two verbs began to break down even in late Old English, and metathesis (reversal of the r) became frequent.

Both verb forms had cognates respectively in Old Saxon, Old High German, and Gothic brinnan to be on fire, from Proto-Germanic brenwanan*, and Old Saxon and Old High German brennian, Old Icelandic brenna, and Gothic -brannjan to set on fire. Compare RUN for a similar development. —n. 1523 brenne mark made by burning, noun use developed from Middle English brennen to set on fire, replacing the original noun bryne, brene a burn (probably before 1200); developed from Old English bryne, from the root of Old English byrnan to burn. —burner n. 1280, as a surname Brenner person who makes bricks, formed from Middle English brennen burn + *-er*¹.

burnish v. About 1330 burnishen, borrowed from Old French burniss-, stem of brunir, burnir make bright, polish, from brun brown, polished, from a Germanic source (compare Old High German brūn and Old Icelandic brúnn, both meaning either bright, polished or brown; see BROWN); for suffixal ending see -ISH².

burp n., v. Informal. 1932, American English, apparently imitative of the sound of belching.

burrl n. rough edge. 1611, variant of BUR. The sense of a tool shaped like a bur appeared in 1794.

burrl n. rough pronunciation. 1760, probably imitative.

burro n. 1800, borrowing of Spanish burro, back formation from borrico donkey, from Late Latin burricus little horse.

burrow n. About 1300 borewe, earlier borugh (probably before 1200); developed from Old English burg stronghold, fortress, town (about 725, in Beowulf), possibly related to Old English beorg hill, mound; see BARROW² mound, and BOROUGH. —v. 1614, from the noun.

bursar n. 1857, earlier, in Scottish schools, a student with a scholarship (1567), perhaps Middle English bouser treasurer (1450), earlier in Anglo-Latin burser treasurer (1234) and burser purse maker (in the surname Rob le Burser, 1208), borrowed from Medieval Latin bursarius, and Old French borsier, boursier, from bourse purse; both the Medieval Latin and the Old French forms ultimately derived from Medieval Latin bursa PURSE; see also BURSITIS.

bursitis n. 1857, formed from English bursa + -itis, also found in New Latin bursitis. The English bursa (1803) was apparently abstracted from the New Latin phrase bursa mucosa mucous pouch, from Medieval Latin bursa bag, purse, from Late Latin bursa, a variant of byrsa hide, from Greek býrsa.

burst v. About 1300 bursten; earlier bersten (about 1150); developed from Old English berstan (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon bersta to burst, Old High German brestan (modern German bersten), and Old Icelandic bresta, from Proto-Germanic brestanan*. —n. 1611, earlier berst (probably about 1300); from the verb.

bury v. Probably before 1200 burien; earlier, probably before 1160 birien; developed from Old English (before 1000) byrgan; cognate with Old High German bergan protect, shelter, conceal (modern German bergen), Old Icelandic bjarga, Gothic baigran protect, save; from Proto-Germanic burzjanan*.

bus n. 1832, short for OMNIBUS. —v. 1838, from the noun. —busing n. 1888, transportation by bus, verbal noun from bus, v.; later, transporting of students to integrate schools, is first recorded in 1964, though bussed appeared in 1961.

bush n. Before 1375 bussh, earlier busk (about 1250), in part developed from Old English busc (recorded only in Withibuscemære, before 1022); and, in part a borrowing from a Scandinavian source (compare Norwegian, Danish busk, Swedish buske bush); and in part probably borrowed from Old French busche firewood, apparently from Frankish (compare Old High German and Old Saxon busc bush, modern German Busch, and Middle Dutch busch, bosch, bush); also perhaps reflecting Anglo-Latin bosca, busca firewood, from Medieval Latin busca. The sense of woodland or open forest appeared in 1657 in American English. —v. 1870, American English bushed, perhaps figurative use of earlier (1856) bushed lost in the bush. —bushy adj. Before 1382, formed from English bush, n. + *-y*¹.

bushel n. About 1330 busshel a dry measure; borrowed from Old French boissel, probably a derivative of boisse a measure of grain (attested only in Middle French), from Gallo-Romance bostia* handful, from Gaulish (compare Middle Irish bas, boss palm of the hand, handful, and Breton boz).

bushing n. 1839, metal lining for a hole; earlier, the fitting of a metal lining in a hole (1794), gerund of bush, v. and busch provide with a bushing (1566), apparently from busch, n., borrowed from Middle Dutch busse box, from Late Latin buxis; see BOX¹ container.

bushwhack v. 1841 (implied in bushwhacking ambushing or marauding; earlier grasping, undergrowth to move a boat, 1826); back formation from bushwhacker. —bushwhacker n. 1809, formed in American English from bush + whacker, possibly after the Dutch bosch-wachter forest keeper.

business n. Before 1325 bisines state of being busy, eager, or anxious; developed from Old English (about 950) bisignisse care, anxiety, from bisig careful, anxious, busy, occupied (see BUSY); for suffix see -NESS. The sense of work, occupation, profession appeared before 1387, still closely related to busy and pronounced as (bu.si.ness); the present pronunciation in two syllables developed in the 1600's.

bust¹ n. sculpture. 1691, borrowed from French buste, from Italian busto, from Latin bustum funeral monument, tomb; originally, funeral pyre, probably shortened from ambustum, neuter of ambustus burned around, past participle of ambūre burn around, scorch (amb- around + ūre to burn; see COM-BUSTION).

The sense development from funeral pyre, in Latin to sculpture, in Italian busto resulted from the Etruscans' custom of keeping the ashes of the dead in an urn shaped like the person when alive. The sense of the bosom appeared in English in 1727–51.

bust² v., n. burst. 1764 noun, 1806 verb, American English, alteration of BURST. The sense of an arrest or raid (1938) and to arrest (about 1953, especially in the past participle busted), were perhaps influenced by an earlier sense to demote or dismiss (1918).

bustle¹ v. be noisily busy. About 1350 bustelen to act vigorously, thrash about, from earlier bisten to thrash, beat; developed, in part, from Middle English bresten to rush, break, from Old English bersten, and, in part, as a borrowing from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic beysta to beat); for suffix see -LE³. —n. stir, fuss. 1634; from the verb.

bustle² n. pad to puff out a skirt. 1788, perhaps a special use of bustle¹, n. as something that makes a stir or fuss.

busy adj. Before 1375 busy; earlier bisi (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (before 1000) bisig careful, anxious, busy, occupied; cognate with Middle Low German besich occupied, busy, and Middle Dutch bezig (modern Dutch bezig) busy.

The spelling with u, busy, became common in the 1500's perhaps by spelling convention. —v. Probably about 1380 busy (and variant bisien about 1390); developed from Old English (before 725) bisgian, derived from bisig, n., busy.

but conj., prep., adv. Old English būtan unless, without, on the outside, used as an adverb and preposition, about 725, in Beowulf (bī, be by + ūtan outside, from ūt out). —n. About 1390, from the conjunction.

butane n. 1875, formed from English but(yl) + -ane; butyl, a hydrocarbon from butyric (acid) a product of fermentation found in rancid butter, borrowed from Latin būtīrum BUTTER; for suffix see -ANE.

butcher n. Probably before 1300 bocher slaughterer of animals; borrowed from Old French bochier, bouchier slaughterer of he-goats, from bouc he-goat, buck, apparently a fusion of a Celtic and a Frankish word (compare Old Irish boc, bocc male goat, deer, and Old High German boc male goat, deer). The modern spelling begins to appear after the 1550's. —v. 1562, from the noun. —butchery n. About 1450, borrowed from Old French bochierie, bouchierie, from bochier, bouchier slaughterer.

butler n. About 1250 butuler chief servant in charge of the wine; earlier, butiller (1171); borrowed through Anglo-French butiller cupbearer, variant of Old French bouteillier, from bouteille wine vessel.

butt¹ n. thicker end. About 1400 botte thicker end of a spear opposite the head, later, 1422 butte, related to Old English butuc end, small piece of land, which may be cognate with Old Icelandic bútr short, and possibly bútr log of wood, stump, block, Middle Low German but and Middle Dutch bot blunt, short, stumpy.

butt² n. target of ridicule or scorn. 1345–46 but mark for target practice; a fusion of Old French bout, bot end (from Frankish; compare Old High German bōzan and Old Icelandic bauta to beat), and of Old French but aim, goal, end, also from Frankish (compare Old Icelandic bútr log of wood, stump, block).

butt³ v. strike with the head. Probably about 1200 butten, borrowed from Old French bouter, earlier boter to thrust, from Frankish (compare Old High German bōzan and Old Icelandic bauta to strike, beat). —butt in 1900, American English. —n. 1647, from the verb.

butt⁴ n. barrel. 1393 butt, earlier bote (1385); borrowed from Old French bot, bout, from Late Latin buttis cask, probably of Greek origin.

butte n. 1805 butte, as a French word introduced into Clark's Journals of the Lewis Expedition.

butter n. Old English (about 1000) butere, borrowed from Latin būtīrum, from Greek boútēron, apparently meaning originally cow's milk curds, formed from boús ox, cow¹ + týrós cheese. —v. Before 1475, from the noun.

butterfly n. Before 1325 buterfleie, earlier buterflige (about 1250); developed from Old English buturfligæ, buturfligo, buterflege (about 700), all forms being a compound of butere butter + flēoge fly; the origin of this name for the insect is obscure.

buttocks n.pl. About 1300 buttok, buttokes, earlier (in surname Briddebuttok, 1268), probably related to Old English butuc end, small piece of land; see BUTT¹.

button n. Before 1325 botoun a button; earlier, something insignificant or small (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French bouton, boton bud, knob, from bouter, boter to thrust; see BUTT³ strike. Note that botouner a maker or seller of buttons, is recorded as early as 1265, suggesting that "button" existed at least 50 years before the meaning "something small or insignificant." —v. About 1380, either borrowed from Old French boutonner to button, earlier meaning to bud, from bouton bud; or developed from Middle English botoun, n. —buttonhole n. (1561) butress n. About 1330 butras, 1344–45 boterace; borrowed from Old French bouterez, from bouter to thrust against; see BUTT³ strike. —v. About 1378, from the noun.

buxom adj. About 1250 buxum; earlier buhsum (probably before 1200) pliant, compliant, obedient, found in Proto-Germanic būHsamaz*, but refashioned in English from the native elements buh-, stem of Old English būgan to bend + -sum *-some*¹; see BOW¹ bend. The meaning of plump, comely which appeared in 1589, evolved from the obsolete sense (before 1375) "indulgent, obliging, gracious," later "jolly, lively, wholesome."

buy v. About 1300 beyen; earlier biggen get or redeem for a price, purchase (probably about 1200, past tense boghte); developed from Old English bycgan (past tense bohte); cognate with Old Saxon buggian buy, Old Icelandic byggja lend, buy, and Gothic bugjan buy, from Proto-Germanic buzjanan*.

The spelling buy, standard near the end of the 1500's, originated in a dialectal variant from southwestern England buggen (probably about 1175) and buyen (about 1300). Middle English -gg- and Old English -cg- in this word were pronounced -dg- (j) as in bridge. —n. 1879, American English, from the verb. —buyer n. 1303 byer; earlier biggere (probably before 1200), from the Middle English biggen, v.

buzz v. 1495 (implied in bussing), imitative of the sound made by bees and other insects. The sense of fly low and close (in an aircraft) appeared in 1941. —n. 1605, a fancy, whim; later, busy talk, hum (1627), and a humming sound (1645); all from the verb.

buzzard n. Probably before 1300 bosard, busard, borrowed from Old French buisart, busart, from buson, buison, from Latin buteōnem, accusative form of buteō a kind of hawk.

by prep., adv. Old English bī, unstressed be (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon and Old Frisian bī, be by, near, Old High German bī, bi (modern German bei), Gothic bi about, by, from Proto-Germanic bi*. —bygone adj. (1442) —bypath n. (probably before 1325) —byway n. (before 1338) bylaw n. 1370 bilawe, earlier bilage local ordinance (1280), alteration of still earlier birelage body of local ordinances (1257), probably influenced by bī dwelling, village, town, and lawe, lage law (late Old English bī, and Old English lagu), both forms borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic býr, genitive býar, dwelling, town, related to búa dwell, and Old Icelandic lög laws).

The current meaning of a secondary or subordinate law appeared in 1541, through confusion of the element by- with English by, adv., aside, near.

byte n. 1964, American English, irregular blend of bit binary digit, and bite morsel; and byte may be an acronym formed from b(inar)y (digi)t e(ight).

C

cab n. 1826, horse-drawn carriage, shortened from cabriolet (1763), borrowed as French cabriolet, from cabrioler to caper, leap; so called for its bouncing motion. French cabrioler was an alteration (influenced by cabri kid) of obsolete French caprioler to caper, leap, from Italian capriolare, from capriolo roebuck, from Latin capreolus wild goat, diminutive of caprea wild she-goat, from caper (genitive capri) he-goat. The word was first applied to motor-driven vehicles in 1899 and to a locomotive where the engineer sits in 1859. —cabby n. 1859, formed from English cab + *-y*².

cabal n. 1660, small group plotting in secret; earlier, an intrigue (1646–47), a secret tradition or private interpretation, as of the Old Testament (1616); borrowed from French cabale secret group, intrigue, or tradition, from Medieval Latin cabala, cabbala, from post-Biblical Hebrew qabbālāh received teachings, tradition.

The word cabala, cabbala is also recorded in English as early as 1521 meaning mystical interpretation of the Old Testament, with the extended sense of mystery, esoteric doctrine or art appearing in 1665.

cabaret n. 1655, tavern, borrowing of French cabaret, probably from Middle Dutch cabret, cabret, cameret, from Old Picard cabbage n. Before 1475 cabage, earlier caboge (before 1450), caboché head of cabbage (1391); borrowed from Middle French caboché, variant of Old French caboce, from Medieval Latin caputium head-cabbage, from Latin caput HEAD. Originally the plant may have been cabbage cole (compare Dutch kabuis-kool); cole was a general term for a variety of leafy vegetable greens including kale and mustard and is found in Old English cāl (modern English cole).

(dialect of Picardy) camberete, diminutive of cambre room, from Late Latin camera. The meaning was extended to entertainment (floor show) in the 1920's.

cabin n. 1346 caban, borrowed from Old French cabane, cabine hut, cabin, from Old Provençal cabana, from Late Latin capanna hut. The spelling cabin was established in the 1600's.

cabinet n. 1549, secret receptacle, case used especially for safekeeping; private chamber (1565); borrowed from Middle French cabinet, diminutive of Old Picard cabine a house or room for gambling, variant of Old French cabane cabin; but perhaps influenced by earlier Italian gabinetto closet, chest of drawers, suggesting the Middle French form cabinet; for suffix see -ET. The sense of a group of persons meeting in a private chamber appeared in 1607–12.

cable n. Probably before 1200, borrowed through Anglo-French and Old North French cable, from Medieval Latin capulum rope, line, bridle, from Latin capere to seize, take.

A cable conducting electricity is recorded in 1854; cable transmission of television on cable television or cable TV (1963) was shortened to cable (1972). —v. About 1500, tie up; from the noun. The sense of transmit (a message) by cable appeared as an Americanism in 1871.

caboodle n. Before 1848, American English, of unknown origin. English boodle was probably borrowed as boedel (1699) from Dutch boedel goods, property. Kit and boodle (before 1861) and the whole kit and caboodle (1888) are the only examples of use.

caboose n. 1747, American English, ship's cookhouse; probably borrowed from Early Modern Dutch kabuyse, from or related to Middle Low German kabüse wooden cabin on ship's deck (modern German Kabuse, Kombüse ship's mess).

The sense of rear car on a freight train, used by the crew appeared in 1861.

cacao n. 1555, borrowed from Spanish cacao, from Nahuatl cacāua, root form of cacāuatl cacao seed.

cache n. 1797, American English, borrowing of French cache hiding place, from Old French cacher to hide; see CACHET. The meaning "anything stored in a hiding place," is first recorded in the 1830's or perhaps earlier as a borrowing from French Canadian cache (about 1669). —v. 1805, American English, borrowed from French cacher to hide, from Old French.

cachet n. Before 1639, borrowed from French cachet seal, stamp (as in lettre de cachet letter under seal of the French king), from Old French cacher press on or crowd together (later, to hide), from Northern Gallo-Romance coāctīcāre*, a frequentative form of Latin coāctāre constrain, from coāctus, past participle of cōgere bring together, compel; see COGENT.

cachinnation n. 1623, borrowed from Latin cachinnātiōnem (nominative cachinnātiō), from cachinnāre laugh loudly; for suffix see -TION.

cackle v. Probably before 1200 cakelin to cackle like a hen, probably imitative, but compare possible earlier Middle Dutch cakelen. —n. 1676, probably developed from the verb. Earlier use of cakele (probably before 1200) is adjectival.

cacophony n. 1656, borrowed from Greek kakophōnía, from kakophōnos ill-sounding (kakós bad + phōnē sound); perhaps influenced by earlier French cacophonie (1587). —cacophonous adj. 1797, borrowed from Greek kakophōnos ill-sounding; for suffix see -OUS.

cactus n. 1607, Spanish artichoke or cardoon; borrowed from Latin cactus cardoon, from Greek kákτος a prickly plant. Later (1767) the current sense of a kind of succulent plant, often with sharp spines, appeared (as the genus name given by Linnaeus in his system of plant classification, using New Latin Cactus).

cad n. 1790, passenger on a coach who pays the driver privately; shortened from Scottish caddie errand boy, porter, an earlier variant (1730) of CADET. The modern meaning (1838) may have originated at Oxford University (1831) in referring to one of the townspeople.

cadaver n. About 1500, borrowed from Latin cadāver, from cadere to fall, fall dead, die. Earlier occurrence of cadaver (before 1398) is probably Latin. —cadaverous adj. Probably before 1425, from Latin cadāverōsus, from cadāver; for suffix see -OUS.

caddie or caddy¹ n. 1634–46, Scottish use of cadet a young gentleman who entered the military without a commission; borrowed from French cadet younger brother; see CADET. The meaning of golfer's porter (1857) is from earlier Scottish sense of messenger, errand boy (1730). —v. 1908, from the noun.

caddy² n. small box for tea. 1792, apparently from a transfer of the name for the measure of tea to the chest it was carried in; alteration of English catty (1598) the measure set by the East India Company (1770) for tea and other commodities in China and Malaysia, from Malay-Indonesian kati.

cadence n. About 1380, rhythm of prose or poetry, a rhetorical passage; borrowed from Old French cadence rhythm, from Italian cadenza conclusion of a movement in music; literally, a falling, from Vulgar Latin cadentia* a falling, from Latin cadere to fall.

cadet n. 1610, younger son or brother; borrowed from French cadet, from Gascon (a Gallo-Romance dialect) capdet chief, from Latin capitellum small head, diminutive form of caput (genitive capitis) head.

Gascon officers in the French army were usually younger sons or lesser heads of noble families; thus the meaning of young career officer in the army came into English in 1651 and led to the current sense of a student in a military academy (1775).

cadge v. 1812, a slang verb of uncertain origin; perhaps related to earlier cadge to carry, as a peddler does (1607), apparently a back formation from cadger (about 1450) itinerant peddler.

cadmium n. 1822, New Latin, from Latin cadmīa, earlier cadmēa zinc ore, from Greek Kadmēā gē, literally, Cadmean or Theban earth, from Kádmōs Cadmus, the legendary founder of Thebes.

cadre n. 1830, framework; later, group of people (1851); borrowing of French cadre frame (as of a picture), officers' group, from Italian quadro framework, from Latin quadrum a square, related to quattuor FOUR.

caduceus n. 1591, borrowed from Latin cādūceus, variant of cādūceum, alteration of Doric Greek kārykeion herald's staff, from kāryx (genitive kārykos) a herald.

caecum n. See CECUM.

Caesar n. Probably before 1200 kaisere, cæiser, keiser, kaiser, corresponding to Old English Cāsere, but probably reborrowed from Medieval Latin Caesar and Old French Cesar, the surname of the Roman general and statesman Caius Julius Caesar, 102?–44 B.C. — Caesarean or Caesarian adj. 1615 Caesarian section, surgical delivery of young through the abdominal wall; so called from the belief (often disputed) that Julius Caesar was born by means of this operation.

cafe or café n. 1802, borrowed as French café coffee house, coffee, from Italian caffè COFFEE.

cafeteria n. 1839, American English, coffee house; borrowed from Mexican Spanish cafetería coffee shop (café coffee, from Italian caffè COFFEE + Spanish -tería place where something is done usually as a business).

caffeine or cafein n. 1830, borrowed from French cafféine, from caffè COFFEE; for suffix see *-INE*².

cake n. Probably before 1200, borrowing of Old French cake, from Latin cavea coop, cage, from cavus hollow, CAVE. Related to JAIL. —v. 1577, from the noun.

cagey adj. 1893, American English, of uncertain origin.

cahoots n. Usually, in cahoots. partnership. 1829 cohort, American English, of uncertain origin; thought to be borrowed from French cahute cabin.

cairn n. 1535, Scottish carne, developed from Gaelic carn heap of stones, rocky hill, from Old Irish caran. Also found in Welsh caran heap, hoof and handle of a knife, the latter suggesting an earlier sense horn and therefore to Gaulish karnon horn, and top or horn of a mountain.

caisson n. 1704, borrowing of French caisson, from Middle French caisson large box, alteration of casson box, from Italian cassone large box, augmentative form of cassa, from Latin capsa box, CASE².

cajole v. 1645, borrowed from French cajoler persuade by flattery, possibly a blend of Middle French cajoler chatter like a jay, and Old French gaioler to cage, entice into a cage. The French word, if a blend, was probably influenced in spelling by enjôler coax, imprison. — cajoler n. 1677, formed from English cajole + *-er*¹. — cajolery n. 1649, borrowed from French cajolerie persuasion by flattery.

cake n. Probably about 1200 kake kind of flat cake or loaf, probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic kaka cake). The word is cognate with Old English cæcel small cake, Old High German kucho cake (modern German Kuchen), and Middle Dutch kōke. —v. 1607, from the noun.

cakewalk n. 1863, American English, probably originally in allusion to a cake given as a prize for the fanciest steps in a procession. The figurative meaning of something easy appears about 15 years before the literal meaning (1879). —v. Before 1909, from the noun.

calabash n. 1596, either the gourd or the tree it grows on; borrowed from French calebasse, from Middle French calabasse, from Spanish calabaza, and possibly from calapaccia*, of pre-Roman (Iberian) origin.

calaboose n. 1792, American English, borrowed from Louisiana French calabouse, from Spanish calabozo dungeon, probably from Vulgar Latin calafodium*, (pre-Roman cala* protected place, den + Latin fodere to dig, see BED).

calamine n. 1598, borrowed probably from French calamine, in Old French calemine, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin calamina, alteration of Latin cadmia zinc ore, from Greek kadmeia; see CADMIUM.

calamity n. About 1425 calamite, borrowed from Middle French calamité, from Latin calamitatem (nominative calamitās) damage, disaster, adversity; for suffix see -ITY. — calamitous adj. 1545, borrowed from Middle French calamiteus, from Latin calamitosus, contraction of calamitōsus*, adjective to calamitatem.

calcareous adj. 1677 calcarious, borrowed from Latin calcārius, from calx (genitive calcis) lime, see CHALK; for suffixes see -ARY and -OUS.

calci-, or (before vowels) calc-, a combining form meaning lime, limestone, calcium, or calcium salts, as in calci, calcify. Borrowed from Latin calx (genitive calcis) lime; see CHALK.

calcify v. 1836, to change into lime, formed in English from Latin calx (genitive calcis) lime + English -fy. — calcification n. 1849–52, formed from English calcify, on the analogy of petrify, petrification, etc.; for suffix see -ATION.

calcium n. 1808, New Latin calcium, from Latin calx (genitive calcis) lime, limestone, see CHALK + New Latin -ium (chemical suffix); so called because calcium is found in limestone.

calculate v. 1570, probably in part a back formation from calculation, and in part borrowed from Late Latin calculātus, past participle of calculāre, from Latin calculus reckoning or account, originally, small stone used in counting, diminutive of calx (genitive calcis) small stone, limestone; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. In the late 1500's and 1600's calculate replaced earlier calculen (before 1378); borrowed from Old French calculer and Late Latin calculāre. Another form calk, Middle English calken (probably before 1400) existed, originally, as a shortened form of calculen, and was in use at least into the 1650's. — calculation n. Before 1393, borrowed from Anglo-French calculation, from Late Latin calculātiōnem (nominative calculātiō), from calculāre calculate; for suffix see -TION. — calculator n. Before 1425 calcelatour mathematician; borrowed from Latin calculātor person versed in arithmetic; for suffix see *-OR*². The meaning of a calculating device appeared in English in 1784.

calculus n. 1666, borrowed from Latin calculus pebble, small stone used in counting, counting; see CALCULATE.

caldron or cauldron n. Before 1393, alteration (influenced by Latin caldus hot) of earlier caudron (about 1300); borrowed from Anglo-French caudron or Old North French caudron, diminutive form of caudiere cooking pot, from Late Latin caldāria cooking pot, (originally) calidāria, feminine of Latin calidārius for heating, from caldus, calidus hot, from calere be warm or hot.

calendar n. Probably before 1200 kalender system of divisions of the year, about 1350, table showing the divisions; borrowed from Anglo-French calender, corresponding to Old French kalendrier list, register, learned borrowing from Latin calendārium account book, from calendae calends, first day of the month (in English usage, day bills were due), signifying the day Romans proclaimed the order of the days to follow, Latin Calendae, ultimately derived from calāre call out, proclaim. The spelling -ar from Latin was introduced in the 1600's to differentiate the system of time from the pressing of cloth.

calender n. 1513, person who presses cloth, paper, etc., borrowed probably through Anglo-French kalender (1278), from Old French calandre, calendre, from Vulgar Latin colondra*, alteration (influenced by Latin columna column) of Latin cylindrus roller, CYLINDER. — v. 1513, borrowed from Middle French calander, from Old French calandre.

calf¹ n. young cow, etc. Old English cælf (before 800), cealf (before 830), plural calfur, Anglian forms corresponding to West Saxon cealf (about 1000), plural cealfu; cognate with Old Saxon and Middle Dutch calf (modern Dutch kalf), Old High German kalb calf (modern German Kalb), from Proto-Germanic kalban*.

calf² n. part of the leg. Before 1325, borrowed from Old Icelandic kálfi, related to kálfr calf¹.

caliber or calibre n. 1567, degree of merit or importance; later inside diameter of a gun barrel (1588) borrowed from Middle French calibre. Italian calibro (1606) and Spanish calibre (1594) appear too late to act as intermediate forms between Middle French and Arabic qālib mold for casting metal. — calibrate v. 1864, formed from English caliber + *-ate*¹. — calibration n. (1871) calico n. 1540 kalyko, 1541 Callicutt, from Calicut, port in southwestern India, from which various cotton cloths were imported by European merchants.

californium n. 1950, New Latin, formed from California (in reference to the University of California, where it was discovered) + -ium.

calipers or callipers n.pl. 1627, from earlier calliper compasses device used to measure caliber (1588); variant of CALIBER.

caliph n. Before 1393, borrowed from Old French calife and Medieval Latin califa, from Arabic khalīfa successor, vicar, from khalafa he succeeded. — caliphate n. 1614, formed from English caliph + *-ate*¹, perhaps by influence of French caliphat.

calisthenics or callisthenics n.pl. 1847, formed in English from Greek kalli- (combining form of kállos beauty) + sthénos strength (of unknown origin) + English -ics. The earliest use in English was calisthenic (1839) and the derivative callisthenical (1837). — calisthenic adj. 1847, from calisthenic, n., or possibly from calisthenics, on the analogy of gymnastics, gymnastic.

calk or caulk v. About 1378 cauken to tread, 1495 (implied in calker) to seal seams of a ship; borrowed from Old North French cauquer to tread, press in, from Latin calcāre to tread, stamp, press in, from calx (genitive calcis) heel.

call v. Old English (about 725) callian* (implied in hilde-calla war herald), variant of Old English (before 1000) ceallian. The Old English callian* is cognate with Old Icelandic kalla to call, Old High German kallōn talk much, chatter, from Proto-Germanic kallōjanan*. Middle English callen, kallen (probably about 1200) is thought to be a fresh borrowing from Scandinavian (compare Old Icelandic kalla to call). — n. Before 1325, developed from callen, v., to call. — caller n. 1435, from callen to call + *-er*¹. — calling n. occupation (1551) from earlier meaning summons to a way of life (probably before 1250), from callen to call + -ing.

calligraphy n. 1613, borrowed ultimately from Greek kalligraphiā, from kalligraphos good penman (kalli-, combining form of kállos beauty + gráphein write), but perhaps coming into English through French calligraphie or directly from New Latin calligraphia.

calliope n. 1858, in allusion to Calliope the ninth and chief Muse of eloquence and epic poetry, borrowed from Latin Calliopē, from Greek Kalliopē (kalli-, a combining form of kállos beauty + ōps*, genitive opós VOICE).

callous adj. Before 1400, borrowed through Middle French calieux, or directly from Latin callōsus, from callus, callum hardened skin; for suffix see -OUS.

The figurative sense unfeeling, not sensitive appeared in English in 1679.

callow adj. Before 1230 calewe bald; developed from Old English (before 1000) calu bald; cognate with Old High German kalo, kalwer, kalaue bald, bare (modern German kahl), and Middle Dutch calu bald, bare (modern Dutch kaal). In spite of the coincidence in form and meaning, the Germanic words are apparently not borrowed from Latin calvus bald.

The sense of young and inexperienced appeared in English in 1580 as a synonym of unfledged (being bald, without feathers, like a young bird).

callus n. 1563, borrowed as Latin callus; see CALLOUS.

calm adj. 1380. — v. Probably before 1400. — n. Probably before 1400. Traditionally said to be borrowed through Old French calme, from Italian calma, from Vulgar Latin calma* or directly from Medieval and Late Latin cauma (with substitution of al for au by possible influence of Latin calēre be warm or hot), from Greek kálma heat of the day; hence, time for rest, stillness, from kalein to burn.

calorie n. 1866, borrowing of French calorie, learned borrowing from Latin calor (genitive calōris) heat, from calēre be warm or hot, see CALDRON; for suffix see *-Y*³. — caloric adj. 1853, in caloric-engine heat or hot-air engine; borrowed from French calorique, n. (1791), from Latin calor (genitive calōris) heat + -ique -ic.

calque n. 1937, loan translation of a foreign word or phrase; borrowed from French calque, literally, a copy, from calquer to trace (a design, etc.) by rubbing a pencil on paper placed over an object (a meaning also found in English calke 1662), from Italian calcāre to press under, from Latin calcāre to tread; see CALK¹.

calumet n. 1665, Canadian English, borrowing of Canadian French calumet, special use of Norman French calumet pipe, related to calumo (corresponding to French chalumeau, Old French chalemel), from Late Latin calamellus, diminutive of Latin calamus reed.

calumny n. 1447 calumnye, borrowed from Middle French calomnie and from Latin calumnia trickery, artifice, false accusation, ultimately from calvi to trick, deceive. —calumniate v. 1554, borrowed from Latin calumniatus, past participle of calumniari to slander, from calumnia calumny; for suffix see -ATE¹. —calumnious adj. 1490, borrowed from Latin calumniōsus, from calumnia; for suffix see -OUS.

calve v. About 1395 calven, developed from Old English cealfian (about 1000), from cealf CALF¹.

calypso n. 1934, in Aldous Huxley's Beyond Mexique Bay, of uncertain origin. No connection has been found with the name Calypso, a nymph in Greek mythology who detained Odysseus.

calyx n. 1693, borrowed from Latin calyx, from Greek kályx seed pod, husk.

cam n. 1777, borrowed probably from Dutch kam cog, comb, from Middle Dutch cam comb, toothed wheel, cog (see COMB); and from French came cam or cog (itself from German Kamm); possibly influenced by or even a shortened form of, English camber (1618) having a slight arch, from the eccentric form of a cam that has an arch, as its outside surface projects from the circular form of a wheel.

camaraderie n. 1840, borrowed from French camaraderie, from camarade, from Middle French, from Spanish camarada COMRADE; for suffix see -ERY.

camber n. Before 1618 (camber-keeled in reference to ship construction); borrowed from Middle French (North) cambre bent, from Latin camurum, accusative of camur crooked, related to camera vault; see CAMERA. —v. 1627, borrowed from French cambrier arch slightly, from Middle French cambre.

cambium n. 1671, layer of tissue between the bark and wood, developed from earlier sense (1643), in reference to sap that exchanges form with vegetative cambium, New Latin cambium exchange, Medieval Latin cambium exchange, from Latin cambire to exchange; see CHANGE.

cambric n. 1385, borrowed from Flemish Kameryk, Kamerijk (French Cambrai), city in Flanders where the cloth was originally made. Compare CHAMBRAY.

camel n. Old English camel, camella (about 950); borrowed from Latin camēlus, from Greek kāmēlos, of Semitic origin (compare Hebrew gāmāl camel, Assyrian gammalu, Arabic jamal).

camellia n. 1753, borrowed from New Latin Camellia, Latinized after G.J. Kamel, 1661–1706, who described the flora on the island of Luzon.

cameo n. 1670, borrowing of Italian cameo, cammeo; earlier camfeo (1554, from Spanish camafeo) and cameu (1437, from Middle French camahieu, Old French cameu), all ultimately from an unidentified source.

The sense of a short literary or dramatic sketch appeared in English in 1851.

camera n. 1708, an arched roof or vaulted room, as in the Camera, a building at Oxford; later, a legislative or council chamber (1712), borrowed from Italian and Spanish; later still, in the Latin phrase camera obscura dark chamber (1727), applied to the Daguerreotype photographic process (1840); all borrowed from Late Latin camera chamber, from Latin camera vault, arch, from Greek kamārā thing with an arched cover.

camisole n. 1816, sleeved jacket, borrowed from French camisole, from Provençal camisola, diminutive of camisa shirt, from Late Latin camisia shirt, nightgown.

camomile n. Before 1398 camomil, borrowed through Anglo-French camemille, or directly from Late Latin camomilla, alteration of Latin chamaemēlon. Also found in Old English camemalon, borrowed from Latin chamaemēlon, from Greek chamaimēlon, literally, earth apple (chamai on the ground + mēlon apple; named from the apple-like scent of the blossoms).

camouflage n. 1917, borrowing of French camouflage, from camoufler to disguise, from Italian camuffare (with influence of French camouflet snub; earlier, smoke blown in someone's face), probably from Medieval Latin muffula manipulation; for suffix see -AGE. —v. 1917, from the noun.

camp¹ n. group of shelters. 1528, borrowed from Middle French camp, from Italian campo, from Latin campus plain, field of battle or other contest, from which probably came an earlier Old English word camp contest (about 725, in Beowulf) that existed in Middle English until about 1440, also found in Old Frisian camp, Middle Dutch camp (modern Dutch kamp), Middle Low German kamp, Old High German champf (modern German Kampf) combat, Old Icelandic kapp (pp from mp) contest, and West Germanic kampaz*. —v. 1543, borrowed from Middle French camp to encamp, from camp, n. —camper n. (1631) —campfire n. (1675) —campground n. (1805) camp² adj. artistically unsophisticated. 1909, actions or gestures of exaggerated emphasis (applied to homosexuals); of unknown origin, popularized in 1964 by the American writer Susan Sontag. —n. 1931, a homosexual; 1964, something artificially unsophisticated. —v. especially in camp it up 1931. —campy adj. 1959, formed from English *camp*² + -y¹.

campaign n. 1647, operations of an army in the field or open country; borrowed from French campagne open country, from Italian campagna, from Late Latin campānea, campānia level country, from Latin campus plain, field. Earliest use in English (1591, 1598) is campania from the Latin in reference to open country. By 1770 campaign was applied to actions to obtain an end, and in 1809, in American English, to activities to get someone elected. —v. 1701, participate in a military campaign, from the noun.

campanile n. 1640, borrowed through French campanile, and directly from Italian campanile, from campana bell, from Late Latin campāna bell, originally bronze ware of Campania (ancient territory around Naples).

camphor n. Probably about 1425 camphor, alteration of earlier spelling caumfre (1313), borrowed from Anglo-French camphor, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin camphora, from Arabic kāfir, from Malay kāpūr. —camphorated adj. 1641, formed in English as if from New Latin camphoratus, from Medieval Latin camphora camphor; for suffix see -ATE¹ and -ED².

campus n. 1774, American English, borrowed from Latin campus plain, field, first used at Princeton University in New Jersey.

can¹ v. be able. Old English (about 725, in Beowulf) can, con know, know how, can (infinitive cunnan). Can is an irregular verb that belongs to a group of Germanic verbs (chiefly auxiliary verbs, such as may and shall) which have a present tense that was originally a form of the past tense. This shift in use was accompanied by development of a new form for the past tense: for can (cunnan) the new form became in Old English cūthe, Middle English coud, coude (before 1325) and later could (about 1500), on analogy of earlier should, would.

The original past participle cūth known, remains today as couth, principally found in uncouth unmannerly, strange. Old English cūth developed from cunth* (from Proto-Germanic kunthaz*) parallels the loss of n in mūth mouth, iōth tooth.

The present participle and the gerund cunning (about 1300) survive in English meaning "clever or cleverness in deceiving," "skillful" and "expertness."

The meaning "know," from Old English, was current in Middle English and remained so into the 1600's; the meaning "be able to" evident throughout Middle English from at least 1123, is rare in Old English, that use being supplied by mæg may.

Old English can (infinitive cunnan) know, is cognate with Old Saxon can (cunnan) and Old Frisian kan (kunna), Old High German kan (kunnan) and modern German kann (können), Old Icelandic kan (kunna), Gothic kann (kunnan); also related to Old English cnāwan KNOW, perceive, get knowledge of.

can² n. container. Old English (before 1000) canne container, vessel; cognate with Old Saxon kanna container, vessel, Old High German channa (modern German Kanne), Middle Dutch kanne, and Old Icelandic kanna, all probably early borrowings from Late Latin canna container, vessel, from Latin canna reed, tube, CANE. —v. 1861, American English developed from the noun.

canal n. Probably before 1425, pipe for liquid; borrowed from Middle French canal, learned borrowing from Latin canālis trench, pipe, from canna CANE. The sense of a waterway is first recorded in 1673.

canard n. Before 1850, borrowing of French canard, false rumor literally, duck, from Old French quanart, from caner to cackle, quack, of imitative origin. The sense of a false or exaggerated story comes from the late 1500's, vendre un canard à moitié to half-sell a duck (i.e., not to sell it at all), hence to take in, deceive.

canary n. 1584, light wine of the Canary Islands; 1655, a songbird of the Canary Islands, earlier canary bird (1576); borrowed from French Canarie (the chief island of the group), from Spanish Canaria, from Latin Canāria Insula Isle of Dogs, because of the large dogs found there, from canis dog.

cancan n. 1848, borrowed from French cancan, of uncertain origin, possibly from the the dance imitating a duck's waddle.

cancel v. 1399, cross out or strike with lines; borrowed through Anglo-French canceler, Old French canceler cross out, or directly from Latin cellāre to strike out writing with crossed lines, from cellati crossbars, grating, diminutive form of cancri lattices, barriers, plural of cancer lattice or barrier, an alteration of carcer barrier, prison, (originally) network, grating. The figurative meaning "nullify an obligation" appeared shortly before 1443. —cancellation n. Probably before 1425, borrowing of Old French cancellation, from Medieval Latin cancellationem (nominative cancellatio), from Latin cellāre cancel; for suffix see -TION.

cancer n. 1 malignant tumor, carcinoma. 1601, found in Old English (about 1000) in the sense of spreading sore, either malignant or benign, and reinforced by Anglo-French cancre after 1100. 2 sign of the Zodiac representing the constellation of the Crab (about 1380). In both senses borrowed from Latin cancer crab, tumor, constellation Cancer, a form patterned after and cognate with Greek karkinos crab, tumor, constellation Cancer.

The meaning of a spreading sore developed, according to the Greek physician Galen, from a resemblance of swollen veins around a sore to the legs of a crab. —cancerous adj. 1563, borrowed from Middle French cancereux, and directly from Medieval Latin cancerosus, from Latin cancer; for suffix see -OUS. The form is also found as cancrose (probably before 1425); borrowed from Medieval Latin cancrosus, variant of cancerosus cancerous.

candelabrum n. 1811, reborrowed from Latin candelābrum candlestick; originally meaning candlestick (before 1400) with the spelling chaundelabre, borrowed from Old French chaundelabre from Latin candelābrum, from candēla CANDLE.

candescent adj. 1824, borrowed from Latin candēscens (nominative candēscens), present participle of candēscere begin to glow, from candēre to shine; glow.

candid adj. 1630, white, borrowed from Latin candidus white, clear; hence, pure, sincere, from candēre to shine, glow. The meaning of frank, sincere is first recorded in English in 1675.

candidate n. 1600, borrowed from Latin candidatus, (originally) clothed in white (in ancient Rome candidates for political office wore white togas), from candidus white, see CANDID; for suffix see -ATE¹.

In Middle English (before 1460), candidate was used in the special sense of a class of soldiers in the Roman army. —candidacy n. 1864, formed from English candidate + -acy.

candle n. Probably before 1160, developed from Old English candel (about 725, in Beowulf); earlier, in the compound candel- twist an instrument for snuffing candles (about 700); borrowed from Latin candēla, from candēre to shine, glow. Candle came into English probably with the adoption of Christianity. —candlelight n. (before 1000) —candlestick n. (about 970) candor n. 1610, purity, integrity; earlier candoure extreme whiteness (before 1500); borrowed, perhaps before 1398, from Latin candor sincerity, purity; originally, whiteness, from candēre to shine; for suffix see -OR¹. Middle French candeur (1488) may have influenced the use in English.

candy n. 1274, borrowed from Anglo-Latin and Old French candi, from Arabic qandī crystallized into sugar, from qand cane sugar. —v. 1533, from the noun, by influence of French candir to candy (candi was considered a past participle in sucre candi sugar candy). —candied adj. 1600, formed from English candy + -ED².

cane n. Before 1398 canne; borrowed through Anglo-French cane, Old French canne, cane, from Old Provençal cana, and directly from Latin canna reed, cane, from Greek kánna reed, from Babylonian-Assyrian qanū reed, from Sumerian gin (compare Hebrew qāneh and Arabic qanāh reed). The meaning of stick for walking or beating appeared in English in 1590. —v. Before 1667, from the noun.

canine adj. 1607, borrowed from Latin canīnus, from canis dog, HOUND; for suffix see -INE¹. —n. pointed tooth like that of a dog. Before 1425, possibly by influence of earlier use of Latin canīnus (before 1398). The informal sense of a dog appeared in 1869.

canister n. Probably 1474, basket, borrowed from Latin canistrum basket for bread, flowers, etc., from Greek kánastron wicker basket, from káneon basket made of reed, from kánna reed, CANE.

canker n. About 1150 cancor, later cankre (before 1400); developed from Old English cancer CANCER (about 1000). —cankerous adj. 1541, formed from English canker + -ous.

cannabis n. 1798, borrowing of earlier New Latin Cannabis the genus name (1728), from Latin cannabis hemp, from Greek kánnabis, perhaps of Scythian or Thracian origin and related to the source of English HEMP.

The sense of a hallucinatory or intoxicating preparation appeared in 1848.

cannibal n. 1553, borrowed from Spanish caníbal, caríbal, from Caniba, Carib, names cited by Columbus as belonging to the Indians of Cuba and Haiti, thought to eat human flesh; apparently local variant forms of Carib Galibi the Caribs, literally, brave men. —cannibalism n. 1796, probably borrowed from French cannibalisme (1796), from cannibale cannibal (1515), from Spanish caníbal + French -isme -ism.

cannon n. 1400, borrowed through Anglo-French canon tube for projectiles, Old French canon, from Italian cannone barrel, great tube, an augmentative form of canna tube, from Latin canna reed, tube, CANE. The differentiation in spelling cannon and canon was not firmly fixed before 1800.

canny adj. 1637, Scottish and Northern English, apparently formed as a variant from English CAN¹ in the older sense “to know, know how” + -y¹.

canoe n. 1590 canow, earlier canoa (1555); borrowed from Spanish, from Arawakan (Haiti) canoa (cited by Columbus), from Carib canoua, canaoua. In the 1600's various forms appeared in English from modern European languages (cano, canoe, canoe, etc.) of which English adopted canoe, in a translation from French in 1600. —v. 1842, from the noun.

canon¹ n. law of a church. Old English canon (before 900); borrowed from Late Latin canōn, from Latin canōn rule, model; and in part borrowed from Old French canon, learned borrowing of Latin canōn, from Greek kanōn rule, (straight) rod, probably from kánna reed, CANE. The sense of a standard of judging appeared in English in 1601. —canonical adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Medieval Latin canonicalis, from Latin canonicus according to rule, (in Late Latin, according to church law), from Greek kanonikós, from kanōn (genitive kanónos) rule; for suffix see -AL¹ and -ICAL. —canonize v. About 1384, borrowed from Old French canonisier and directly from Medieval Latin canonizare, from Late Latin canōn church law; for suffix see -IZE.

canon² n. clergyman. Probably before 1200, borrowed probably through Anglo-French canun, from Old North French canonie, from Late Latin canonicus clergyman living under a rule, from Latin canonicus, adj., according to rule, canonical, from Greek kanonikós, from kanōn, (genitive kanónos) rule, CANON¹; for suffix see -IC.

canopy n. Before 1382, borrowed from Old French canapé, conopé, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin canapeum, canopeum, and directly from Latin cōnōpēum, cōnōpium couch with curtains of mosquito netting, from Greek kōnōpion, kōnōpēōn, an alteration of kanōpion*, influenced by kōnōps mosquito, gnat, of uncertain origin. —v. About 1600, from the noun.

cant¹ n. insincere talk. 1709; earlier, a whining manner of speaking, especially of beggars (1640), developed from cant, v. (1567) to speak in a whining or singsong tone used by beggars; borrowed from Old North French canter to sing, chant, from Latin cantāre, a frequentative form of canere sing.

The meaning “special language of a group, jargon” is recorded in English in 1681.

cant² n. slant. About 1375 (Scottish), edge, brink; borrowed probably from Middle Dutch or Middle Low German cant border, edge, side, or directly from Old North French cant, from Vulgar Latin cantus*, canthus* corner, edge, possibly from Latin cantus, canthus rim of a wheel, tire; see DECANT. —v. 1542–43, from the noun.

cantaloupe or cantaloup n. 1739, borrowing of French cantaloup, apparently from Italian Cantalupo or Cantaluppi, former papal estate near Rome, where it was cultivated.

cantankerous adj. 1772, probably dialectal alteration (influenced by rancorous) of Middle English conteckour troublemaker, quarrelsome person (about 1300); borrowed through Anglo-French contecker, perhaps from Old North French contekier to touch, feel (with the hands), Old French contechier (con- with + teche, related to atachier hold fast, ATTACH); for suffix see -OUS.

canteen n. Before 1744 (probably 1710–11), borrowed from French canteen sutler's shop; also (1737) small case for carrying bottles, from Italian cantina cellar, perhaps from canto corner (for storage), from Vulgar Latin cantus*; see CANT² slant.

canter v. 1706, shortened from earlier Canterbury, v., to gallop gently (1673), from the noun phrase Canterbury gallop or pace, the easy pace of pilgrims riding to Canterbury (1631). —n. 1755, from the verb.

canticle n. Before 1225, borrowed from Latin canticulum, diminutive of canticum song, from cantus song; see CANTO.

cantilever n. 1667, a support that projects from a wall to hold up a beam, balcony, etc. Probably formed from English *cant*² slant + connecting -i- + lever. The meaning applied to a bridge (1850) echoes flying lever bridge a cantilever bridge that appeared in a book on bridges, 1811.

canton n. 1522, probably borrowed from Middle French canton piece, portion of a country, from dialectal Italian (Lombard) cantone region, especially in the mountains, an augmentative form of canto corner, from Vulgar Latin cantus*; see CANT². —cantonment n. (1756, borrowed from French cantonnement).

cantor n. 1538, borrowed from Latin cantor singer, from canere sing, see CHANT; for suffix see -OR².

canvas n. cloth. 1354 canevace, borrowed from Anglo-French canevaz, Old French canevas (fusion of Old North French canevach and Old French chenevas), and from Medieval Latin canavasium, canebaccium; from Vulgar Latin cannapaceus* made of hemp, from cannapus, variant of Latin cannabis hemp, from Greek kánnabis.

canvass v. solicit. 1508 canvas or canvass, from CANVAS, n. The spelling with two s's developed in the 1500's and from that came the verb canvass to toss in a canvas sheet as a sport or punishment, from which developed the sense of shake out, discuss, examine carefully (1530) and to solicit votes (before 1555). —n. 1608–11, from the verb.

canyon or cañon n. 1834 cañon, American English, borrowed from Mexican Spanish cañón, an extended sense of Spanish cañón tube, pipe, of uncertain origin. Since the Spanish word was attested in 1560–75 as callón, it is possible that it comes from calle street (from Latin callis a rough track, path), in the sense "narrow way."

cap n. Probably before 1200 cappe, developed from Old English cæppe (about 1000); borrowed from Late Latin cappa cap, hood, mantle, of uncertain origin (perhaps related to Latin caput head). —v. Probably about 1400 cappen put a cap on, (the verbal noun appears in a surname, 1270), developed from cappe, n. The meaning of cover, as with a cap appeared in 1602 and to excel, outdo, surpass (in Northern dialectal use) in 1821.

capable adj. 1561, borrowed through Middle French capable capable, or directly from Late Latin capābilis capacious, capable of, fit, from Latin capere to take, contain, hold. —capability n. 1587, formed in English from Late Latin capābilis + English -ity.

capacious adj. 1614, borrowed from Latin capāx (genitive capācis) able to take in, from capere to take, hold, contain; for suffix see -OUS.

capacity n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Middle French capacité, from Latin capācitatem (nominative capācitā), from capāx (genitive capācis) able to take in; for suffix see -ITY.

caparison n. 1579, borrowed from Middle French caparasson, caparaçon, from Spanish caparazón, perhaps from Old Provençal caparasso cape with hood, from capa CAPE¹ garment. —v. 1594, probably borrowed from Middle French caparaçonner, from caparaçon caparison.

cape¹ n. garment. Probably before 1200 (not distinguished from cope the ecclesiastical garment, but in 1565–78 and 1611 set apart as a sleeveless garment). Early use was borrowed from Medieval Latin cappa cloak, but the sense of sleeveless garment was borrowed from, or influenced by, Middle French cape, partly from Old Provençal capa hooded mantle, partly from Spanish capa, cape cloak, both from Late Latin cappa CAP.

cape² n. land. About 1387–95, borrowed from Middle French cap cape, head, from Old Provençal cap, literally, head, from Latin caput head.

caper¹ v. prance; frolic. 1588, apparently short for earlier English capriole to leap, skip, caper (1580); borrowed from Italian capriolare, from capriolo roebuck; see CAB. —n. 1592, playful leap or jump, probably from the verb. The sense of a prank, trick, or scheme appeared in 1840.

caper² n. shrub. Before 1398 capar, back formation from earlier caperis, taken as plural (before 1382); borrowed from Latin capparis, from Greek kápparis, of uncertain origin. Possibly caper came into English twice: borrowed from Latin caparis, and later (about 1551), borrowed from Middle French câpre, from Italian cappero, from Latin capparis.

capillary n. 1667, blood vessel, noun use of capillary, adj. —adj. 1664, hairlike, very slender; earlier, of or having to do with hair (1656); borrowed from French capillaire, and replacing earlier capillar (before 1400), both borrowed from Latin capillāris of hair, from capillus hair (of the head); for suffix see -ARY. —capillary attraction (1813) capital¹ adj. principal. Probably before 1200, of or relating to the head; borrowed from Old French capital, from Latin capitālis relating to the head, chief, from caput (genitive capitis) HEAD; for suffix see -AL¹. Other senses soon developed: chief, principal (capital city), probably before 1425; deadly, mortal (capital punishment), 1395; upper-case (capital letter) before 1387. —n. Probably before 1430, a capital letter, from the adjective; later, fund of money (1611), from Medieval Latin capitale assets, from Latin caput principal, money laid out. —capitalism n. 1854, formed from English *capital*¹ + -ism. —capitalist n. 1791, formed from English *capital*¹ + -ist.

capital² n. top part of a column. Before 1300, borrowed through Anglo-French capitel, Old French chapitel, or directly from Latin capitellum small head, diminutive of caput (genitive capitis) head.

Capitol n. 1793, in writings of Jefferson, referring to the Congressional building then under construction; earlier, colonial Statehouse of Virginia (1699), from earlier capitol (about 1450), and capitolie (about 1375) referring to the Temple of Jupiter in Rome; borrowed from Old North French capitolie, Old French capitoile, both learned borrowings from Latin Capitolium temple of Jupiter on the Capitoline Hill in Rome.

capitulate v. 1580, make conditions, stipulate, agree; probably developed in English in part as a back formation of capitulation, and in part from capitulate, adj. stipulated, borrowed from Medieval Latin capitulatus, past participle of capitulare arrange in chapters; and probably borrowed directly from the Medieval Latin past participle of capitulare, from Latin capitulum chapter, section, diminutive of caput (genitive capitis) head; for suffix see -ATE¹. —capitulation n. 1535, borrowed from Middle French capitulation, from capituler agree on specified terms, from Medieval Latin capitulare; for suffix see -TION.

capon n. Before 1250 capun, developed from Old English capūn (about 1000), probably reinforced by Old North French capon, from Latin cāpōnem (nominative cāpō), perhaps better cappōnem*; cognate with Greek kóptein to strike, cut off.

caprice n. 1667, borrowed from French caprice whim, from Italian capriccio whim, sudden start; earlier, shiver, horror, raising of hackles, possibly a blend of capo head (from Latin caput head) and riccio frizzled (hair), hedgehog, from Latin ēricius hedgehog. —capricious adj. 1594, borrowed from French capricieux whimsical, from Italian capriccioso, from capriccio caprice; for suffix see -OUS.

Capricorn n. Before 1387 Capricorne sign of the Zodiac; southern constellation; borrowed through Old French capricorne, or directly from Latin Capricornus, literally, having horns like a goat (caper, genitive caprī, goat + cornū horn).

capsize v. 1788, of uncertain origin (apparently originally sailor's cant, a possible borrowing of Spanish cabezar pitch, as a ship does, and capuzar sink a ship by the head).

capstan n. Probably about 1380, borrowed from Old French cabestant, from Old Provençal cabestan, from cabestran, present participle of cabestrar* roll up cables, from capestre pulley cord, from Latin capistrum halter, from capere to hold, take.

capsule n. 1652, borrowed from French capsule a membranous sac, from Latin capsula little box, diminutive of capsa box, CASE². The sense of a gelatin case enclosing a dose of medicine appeared in 1875. The aerospace use (space capsule) was first recorded in 1958. —adj. 1938, American English, from the noun.

captain n. About 1375 capitayn, borrowed from Old French capitain, capitaine, learned borrowing from Late Latin capitāneus commander, noun use of capitāneus, adj., prominent, chief, from Latin caput (genitive capitis) head. The sense of a naval officer (captain of the fleet) appeared in 1554; master of any vessel, before 1649; army officer, 1567; pilot of an aircraft, 1929; head of a team, 1857. —v. 1598, from the noun.

caption n. 1789, American English, borrowed from Latin captiōnem (nominative captiō) a taking, from capere to take; for suffix see -TION. The meaning was strongly influenced by Latin caput head, as well as by the earlier (1670) legal use of caption, in the phrase "certificate of caption," sometimes interpreted as "the beginning or heading of a warrant, indictment, etc." The word originally appeared in Middle English (about 1384) as capcioun, borrowed from Anglo-French and Old French caption seizure or capture.

captious adj. Probably about 1408 capcyus; borrowed from Middle French captieux, from Latin captiōsus, from captiō a deceiving, fallacious argument; literally, a taking (in), from capere to catch, take; for suffix see -OUS. The meaning of designed to entrap, fallacious, appeared in 1447.

captive adj. Probably about 1425 captif, borrowed from Latin captivus, from captus, past participle of capere to take, hold, seize; for suffix see -IVE. —n. Probably before 1400 captif, from the adjective. —captivate v. About 1526, hold captive; borrowed from Late Latin captivātus, past participle of captivāre, from Latin captivus captive; for suffix see -ATE¹. —captivity n. About 1380, borrowed from Old French captivité, from Latin captivitatē (nominative captivitas, from captivus captive); for suffix see -ITY.

capture n. 1541–42, borrowed from Middle French capture a taking, catching, learned borrowing from Latin captūra a taking, from captus, past participle of capere to take, capture; for suffix see -URE. —v. 1795, from the noun. —captor n. 1688; earlier meaning "censor" (1646), borrowed from Latin captor, from capere to take, capture; for suffix see -OR².

car n. 1301 (in surname) Careman; later, carre any wheeled vehicle (about 1350); borrowed through Anglo-French carre, Old North French carre, and directly from Latin carra, plural of carrus, carum two-wheeled vehicle for carrying loads, wagon, of Gaulish origin (compare Old Irish carr wagon, chariot).

The word was first applied to the automobile in 1896.

carafe n. 1786, borrowing of French carafe, either from Italian caraffa, or possibly from Spanish garrafa, perhaps from Arabic gharrāf, from gharafa draw water.

caramel n. 1725, borrowing of French caramel burnt sugar, from archaic Spanish caramel sugar candy, alteration of Provençal canamel sugar cane, from Medieval Latin cannamellis (apparently by folk etymology from Latin canna CANE + mel, genitive mellis honey). The Spanish caramel was influenced in its formation by caramillo reed, from Late Latin calamellus, a diminutive form of Latin calamus reed, cane.

carapace n. 1836, borrowed from French carapace tortoise shell, from Portuguese carapaça, of uncertain origin.

carat or karat n. 1469 carat measure of the fineness of gold; borrowing of Middle French carat, from Italian carato, from Arabic qīrāt, from Greek keratōn carat, the small carob seed used as a weight, originally, the horn-shaped pod of the carob tree; diminutive form of kéras (genitive kératos) HORN. The unit of weight for precious stones is first recorded in English in 1555.

caravan n. 1588, borrowed from Middle French caravane or from Medieval Latin caravana, both from Persian kārwān.

caravansary n. 1712, inn where caravans rest; earlier cavanzara, carvanzara (1599); borrowed from Middle French caravansera, from Persian kārwānsarāī (from kārwān caravan + sarāī inn).

caravel n. 1527, borrowed from Middle French caravelle, from Portuguese caravela a kind of small vessel, diminutive form of cávaro kind of ship, from Late Latin cārabus, from Late Greek kārabos kind of light ship, Greek kārabos horned beetle, spiny lobster, probably used in allusion to the outline of the ship. Caravel replaces the earlier carvel (about 1425) which still exists in the compound carvel-built a type of ship construction in which the planks of the hull are flush rather than overlapping.

caraway n. 1281–82, spicy seed of a plant; later, the plant itself (1373), borrowed through Anglo-Latin carvi, carvi or Old French carvi, caroi, both probably from Old Spanish alcarahueya, variant of alcaravea, from Spanish-Arabic karawīa, Arabic karawīyā, perhaps from Greek karō, variant of káron caraway.

carbide n. About 1865, formed from English carb- (combining form of carbon) + -ide.

carbine n. 1605, eventually replacing earlier carabin (1590); carbine was a borrowing of French carabine a small harquebus; carabin was borrowed directly from Middle French carabin cavalryman armed with this weapon; origin uncertain.

carbo-, or (before vowels) carb-, a combining form meaning carbon, as in carbohydrate = a hydrate of carbon. 1810, coined from CARBON.

carbohydrate n. 1869, formed from English carbo- carbon + hydrate a compound produced when certain substances combine with water, borrowed from Greek hýdōr water + English *-ate*².

carbon n. 1789 carbone, borrowing of French carbone, coined by Lavoisier from Latin carbō (genitive carbōnis) charcoal.

In Middle English (1415) carbon was borrowed in the sense of charcoal from Anglo-French, but this usage did not survive into the modern period.

carbonate n. 1794, borrowed from French carbonate salt or ester of carbonic acid, from New Latin carbonatum a carbonated substance (Latin carbō, genitive carbōnis + -ātum -ate²). —v. 1805, from the noun, probably by influence of French carbonater transform into a carbonate. —carbonation n. 1881, formed in English from carbonate + -ion.

carboniferous adj. 1799, formed in English from Latin carbō (genitive carbōnis) coal + -iferous combining form of English suffix -ferous producing, containing. —n. Carboniferous After the 1940's the noun use, shortened from the phrase Carboniferous period.

carbonize n. 1806, formed as a back formation of earlier English carbonization (1804), or from carbon + -ize.

carborundum n. 1892, American English, Carborundum, a trademark formed from carbo(n) + (co)rundum.

carbuncle n. Before 1300, fiery colored jewel; also charbugle (about 1250) and charbucle (about 1200); borrowed from Old French charboucle, carbuncle, from Latin carbunculus a gem, and a red tumor or boil; literally, a little coal, diminutive of carbō (genitive carbōnis) charcoal.

The meaning of inflamed tumor, in allusion to the fiery red color of the jewel, appeared probably before 1425.

carburetor n. 1866, device to enhance a gas flame; formed from English carburetor combine with carbon (carb- + -ure, an archaic suffix, from New Latin -uretum, after French words in -ure) + English suffix *-or*².

carcass n. Probably before 1400 carcas, earlier, carkas (before 1330); borrowed from Anglo-French carkeis, carcois, Old French charcois, and Anglo-Latin carcasium, carcosium, dead body, of uncertain origin.

carcinoma n. 1721, borrowed from Latin carcinōma, from Greek karkīnōma a cancer, from karkīnos crab; see CANCER. —carcinogen n. cancer-producing substance. 1936, back formation from carcinogenic, adj. (1926, formed from English carcino(ma) + -genic).

card¹ n. paper. Probably before 1425 cardes playing cards; borrowed from Middle French carte, from Latin charta, carta leaf of paper or papyrus. The sense of a piece of paper to write on, etc., is first recorded in 1596. —v. 1548, from the noun. —cardboard n. (1848; earlier, card paper, 1777). —card table (1713) card² n. tool. 1375 kard, earlier, 1351 (in surname Cardmaker); borrowed from Anglo-Latin cardo, from Medieval Latin cardo a teasel, from Latin carduus thistle, related to carrere to clean or comb with a card. —v. About 1378 karden to comb (wool, etc.), from kard, n.

cardiac adj. 1601, borrowed, perhaps by influence of French cardiaque, from Latin cardiacus, from Greek kardiakós, from kardiā heart. Middle English cardiac, n., about 1440, a vein associated with the heart, dropped out of use in the 1500's, and the meaning of a medicine for the heart disappeared in the 1800's.

cardigan n. 1868, named after Brudenell, Earl of Cardigan (1797–1868), who wore such a jacket during the charge of the Light Brigade.

cardinal n. Before 1126, high official of the Roman Catholic Church; borrowed from Medieval Latin cardinalis a cardinal, from episcopus cardinalis chief bishop, from Late Latin cardinālis, adj., chief, pivotal. —adj. Probably before 1325, borrowed from Old French cardinal, from Late Latin cardinālis chief, or pivotal in the figurative sense of turning or hinging on, in Latin cardinālis of a door hinge, from cardō (genitive cardinis) pivot, turning point; for suffix see -AL¹. —cardinal bird (1678) cardio- a combining form meaning heart, as in cardiogram (1876), cardiology (1847). Borrowed from Greek kardio-, combining form of kardiā heart.

care n. Old English caru, cearu sorrow, anxiety, grief (about 725). The word is cognate, in the primary sense of inward grief, with Old Saxon kara care, Old High German chara wail, lamentation, Middle High German kartac day of mourning (modern German Karfreitag Good Friday), and Gothic kara sorrow, trouble, care, from Proto-Germanic karō*. —v. Old English carian, cearian to be anxious (about 725, in Beowulf), from caru, cearu, n. The Old English verb corresponds to Old Saxon karōn to care, Old High German karōn, karēn to lament, and Gothic karōn to care, ga-karōn be concerned about, from Proto-Germanic karōjanan*. —careful adj. Old English carful (about 1000); earlier, cearful (before 750), formed from caru, cearu care + -ful full. —careless adj. Old English carlēas (before 1000), formed from caru, cearu care + -lēas -less.

careen v. 1600, lean (a ship) on its side, from earlier careen, n. (1591), position of a ship when laid on one side; borrowed from Middle French carène keel, from Italian (Genoese) carena, from Latin carīna keel; originally, nutshell.

career n. About 1534, a run, usually at full speed, course of action, borrowed from Middle French carrière race course, stretch, from Old Provençal carriera road for vehicles, from Medieval Latin via carraria carriageway, from Latin carrum cart, CAR. The sense of occupation or profession appeared in 1803. —v. 1594, to charge at a tournament; from the noun. In 1647 the sense of run at full speed is first recorded.

caress n. 1651, affectionate touch or stroke; earlier, a show of regard (1647); borrowed from French caresse a caress, from Italian carezza endearment, from caro dear, from Latin cārus dear. —v. 1658, borrowed from French caresser to caress, from Italian carezzare, from carezza caress, endearment.

caret n. 1681, mark (A) to show insertion; borrowed from Latin caret there is lacking, 3rd person singular present indicative of carere to be without, lack.

cargo n. 1657, borrowed from Spanish cargo a loading, burden, and carga load, cargo, from cargar to load, from Late Latin caricāre to load on a cart, from Latin carrum cart, CAR. The older term was charge (about 1300).

caribou n. About 1665, American English, borrowed through Canadian French caribou, from Algonquian xalibā, literally, pawer, scratcher, in reference to the animal's habit of pawing snow to find grass.

caricature n. 1748, borrowed from French caricature, from Italian caricatura, from caricare overload, exaggerate, from Late Latin carricāre to load. The Italian spelling caricatura appeared frequently in English into the 1800's. —v. 1749, from the noun, probably by influence of French caricaturer to represent in caricature. —caricaturist n. 1798, formed from English caricature, n. + -ist.

caries n. 1634, borrowed, perhaps by influence of French carie (1537), from Latin caries decay.

carillon n. 1775, borrowing of French carillon, from Old French quarellon a chime of bells, alteration of quarregnon, carignon set of four bells, from Northern Gallo-Romance quadriniōnem, and corresponding to Latin quaterniōnem a set of four. —carillonneur n. 1772, a French term introduced in an English work on music.

carmine n. 1712, borrowed from French carmin, from Medieval Latin carminium, from a fusion of Arabic qirmiz the kermes insect, and Latin minium red lead. —adj. 1737–59, from the noun.

carnage n. 1600, borrowing of Middle French carnage, from Italian carnaggio slaughter, from Medieval Latin carnaticum flesh, often as meat in tribute to a feudal lord, from Latin carō (accusative carnem) flesh; for suffix see -AGE.

carnal adj. Probably about 1400, borrowed through Old French carnal, and directly from Medieval Latin carnalis natural, of the same blood or descent, Latin carnālis of the flesh, from carō flesh; for suffix see -AL¹.

carnation n. 1538, borrowed from Middle French carnation person's color or complexion, probably adapted from Italian (originally Northern dialect) carnagione flesh color, from Late Latin carnātiōnem (nominative carnātiō) fleshiness, from Latin carō flesh; for suffix see -TION.

carnival n. 1549, time of feasting and merrymaking before Lent, borrowed from Italian carnevale the last three days before Lent, alteration of dialectal (Milanese) carnelevale* and (Old Pisan) carnelevare a leaving off of eating meat (carne flesh, meat, from Latin carne + Italian levare + to remove, from Latin levāre lift up). The Italian dialect forms were influenced by Medieval Latin carnelevamen, carnilevamen a form equivalent in use to English Shrove-tide.

carnivorous adj. 1646, borrowing of Latin carnivorus flesh-eating (carō flesh + vorāre devour). English use was patterned after earlier carnivora a name applied to a large order of flesh-eating mammals (1627).

carol n. Probably before 1300, borrowed from Old French carole, probably alteration of Latin choraula one that accompanies a choral dance on a flute, from Greek choraúlēs (chorós dance + aúlós hollow tube, flute). The meaning of hymn of joy, sung at Christmas appeared in 1502. —v. About 1303, borrowed from Old French caroler, from carole, n.

carom n. 1779, shortened from earlier carambole (1775), apparently borrowed from French carambole, from Spanish carambola a red ball in billiards, originally meaning a snare, trap, or trick, of uncertain origin; perhaps from earlier Spanish carambola name of an orange fruit from tropical Asia. —v. glance off, rebound. 1860, from the noun.

carotid adj. 1543, carotides, borrowed directly from Greek; later 1667, borrowed, by influence of French carotide, n. (1541), from Greek karōtídes carotid arteries, from karōún stupefy, whence káros stupor, state produced by compression of carotid arteries. —n. 1741, probably developed in English from the adjective.

carouse v. 1567, drink freely, drain; probably borrowed from Middle French carousser drink, quaff, swill, from carous a bout of drinking. Also possibly abstracted from the phrase drink carouse in which carouse appears as an adverb meaning to the bottom, all up. Both English and French are said to derive from German garaus, adv. all out, from a German phrase (trink gar aus! (drink) all up! —n. 1559, probably borrowed from French carous bout of drinking. —carousal n. 1765, formed from English carouse, v. + -al.

carp¹ v. complain. About 1225 carpen to talk, borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic karpa boast; karp boasting). The sense of find fault with developed about 1378, apparently influenced by Latin carpere to pluck, tear to pieces, (figurative) to slander, revile. —carper n. 1440, talker, from earlier carp, n. (probably about 1350).

carp² n. fish. 1393, borrowed through Old French carpe, from Old Provençal carpa, and directly from Medieval and Late Latin carpa, probably from a Germanic source; compare Old High German karpfo carp (modern German Karpfen), Middle Dutch carpe carp (modern Dutch karper).

carpel n. 1835, borrowed from New Latin carpellum (1817), diminutive from Greek karpós fruit.

carpenter n. About 1300; earlier, as a surname (1175); borrowed from Anglo-French carpenter, Old French charpentier, from Late Latin artifex carpentarius carriage maker, from Latin carpentum two-wheeled carriage, from Gaulish. —carpentry n. About 1378, borrowed from Anglo-French carpenterie, from carpenter carpenter.

carpet n. 1345 karpete cloth to cover floors, tables, beds, etc.; borrowed from Old French carpite and from Medieval Latin carpita; both from Old Italian carpita (thick cloth, used for a cover, originally made of shreds), derived from past participle of Vulgar Latin carpire* pluck, card (wool), for Latin carpere pluck. —v. Before 1626, from the noun. —carpetbagger n. 1868, American English, formed from carpetbag, n. (1830), originally, a traveling bag made out of carpet + *-er*¹.

carriage n. Before 1387, cariage wheeled vehicles collectively; earlier in the compound carriageman carter (1374); borrowed through Anglo-French cariage, Old North French cariage, from carier CARRY; for suffix see -AGE. The word was used about 1398 to refer to an individual wheeled vehicle; in 1596 the sense of a way of carrying one's body, bearing appeared, paralleling earlier act or condition of carrying, and a feudal duty to provide transportation, first recorded in 1253.

carriion n. Before 1325 carion, alteration of earlier caroine, charoine (probably before 1200); borrowed through Anglo-French careine, caroine, Old French charoigne, caroigne, from Vulgar Latin carōnia*, from Latin carō flesh. —carriion crow (1528).

carrot n. 1533, borrowed from Middle French carotte, learned borrowing from Latin carōta, from Greek karōtōn a carrot, possibly from kārā head, top.

carrousel or carousel n. 1673, merry-go-round; developed from "tournament in which companies of knights engaged in exercises, including chariot races" (1650), borrowed from French carrousel a tilting match, from Italian carosello a kind of joust on horseback, of uncertain origin.

carry v. Before 1338 carien, borrowed from Anglo-French or Old North French carier to transport in a vehicle, Old French charier, from Gallo-Romance carriare* (= caridiare*), from Latin carrum cart. —n. 1605, from the verb. —carrier n. Before 1398 cariere, formed from Middle English carien, v. to carry and, in part, borrowed from or at least influenced in formation by Anglo-French carior one who carries, from Old North French carier to carry.

cart n. About 1200 carte, borrowed probably from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic kartr cart) and replacing Old English (before 800) craet cart. Middle English and Old English craet are cognate with Middle Dutch craete woven mat, wagon basket, and Old High German kratto basket; further, Old English craet is related to Old English cradol CRADLE. —v. Probably about 1387 carten, from the Middle English noun. —cartage n. (1305) —carter n. (1193, in part borrowed from Anglo-French careter, and in part formed from English cart + *-er*¹). —cartwheel n. (about 1395) cartel n. 1560, written challenge, borrowed from Middle French cartel, from Italian cartello little card, diminutive of carta paper, letter, bill, from Latin charta CHART. In 1889, extended to mean "written agreement between challengers," and in 1902 to mean "agreement between rival businesses," under influence of German Kartell, from French cartel.

cartilage n. Probably before 1425, borrowed through Middle French cartilage, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin cartilāgō (genitive cartilāginis) cartilage, gristle, possibly related to Latin crātis wickerwork, CRATE. —cartilaginous adj. 1541, borrowed from French cartilagineux, and directly from Latin cartilāginōsus, from cartilāgō; for suffix see -OUS.

cartography n. Before 1843, borrowed from French cartographie, from Medieval Latin carta + French -graphie -graphy. —cartographer n. (before 1843) carton n. 1816, borrowed from French carton pasteboard, from Italian cartone pasteboard, an augmentative form of carta paper, from Latin charta paper. —v. 1921, implied in the past tense cartoned used as an adjective.

cartoon n. 1671, drawing or painting used as model for another work; borrowed from French carton pasteboard (because it was originally drawn on paper), from Italian cartone pasteboard; see CARTON; for suffix see -OON. The meaning of amusing sketch, is first recorded in 1843. —v. 1884, from the noun. —cartoonist n. (1880) cartridge n. 1626, alteration of earlier (1579) cartage; borrowed from French cartouche a full charge for a pistol, held in paper, from Italian cartuccia a cartridge, cylinder or cone of paper, from carta paper, from Latin charta paper.

carve v. cut into slices. Probably before 1200 kerven, partly developed from Old English (about 725) ceorfan and becceorfan, and partly borrowed from or influenced by a Scandinavian word (compare Old Icelandic kurfla cut to pieces, Norwegian karve to carve). The word is cognate with Old Frisian kerva to notch, carve, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch kerven to cut, carve, and Middle High German kerben to notch, carve, from Proto-Germanic kerbanan*. — carver n. (about 1275, in a surname). — carving n. (probably before 1200) — carving knife (about 1415) caryatid n. 1563, cariatide, borrowed from Middle French cariatide, from Latin caryatides, from Greek Karyátides priestesses of Artemis (Diana) at Caryae (Greek Karyai), a town in Laconia where dance festivals were held in the temple of Artemis.

casaba n. 1889, American English, from Kasaba, the place from which the fruit was first imported (now Turgutlu, near Izmir, Turkey).

cascade n. 1641, borrowed from French cascade, from Italian cascata waterfall, from cascare to fall, from Vulgar Latin cāsicāre*, from Latin cāsum, past participle of cadere to fall; for suffix see -ADE. — v. 1702, from the noun.

cascara n. 1903, American English, from Spanish cáscara sacred bark (cáscara bark, from casar to crack, break + sagrada sacred, feminine of sagrado, from Latin sacrātus consecrated).

case¹ n. instance, example. Before 1250, state of affairs, situation; borrowed from Old French cas circumstance, event, chance, learned borrowing from Latin cāsus (genitive cāsius) a falling, event, chance, from cās-, past participle stem of cadere to fall. The meaning of instance or example is first recorded about 1300.

case² n. container. Before 1325, borrowed from Anglo-French cas, Old French chasse, from Latin capsa container, from capere to take, hold. — v. 1575, from the noun. The meaning of examine, inspect is first recorded in 1915. — casings n. covering (1839).

casein n. 1841, borrowed from French caséine, formed from Latin cāseus cheese + French -ine *-ine*².

casement n. Before 1420, hollow molding; borrowed from Anglo-Latin casementum, from cas frame, *CASE*² box; for suffix see -MENT.

cash n. 1593, borrowed from Middle French caisse money box, coffer, from Provençal caissa, from Vulgar Latin capsea* box, from Latin capsa box. — v. 1811, from the noun. — cash book (1622) — cash register (1879, American English).

cashew n. 1703; earlier caju; borrowed from French cajou, acajou, from Brazilian Portuguese cajú, acajú, from Tupi-Guarani acajú the tree producing this nut.

cashier¹ n. person in charge of money. 1596, borrowed from Middle French caissier treasurer, from caisse money box; see CASH; for suffix see -IER.

cashier² v. dismiss. 1592, cassee, borrowed from Middle Dutch casseren, to cast off, discharge, from French casser to discharge, annul, from Late Latin casāre annul, from Latin casus void, empty; see QUASH² annul.

cashmere n. 1684, originally a shawl made of cashmere, from Cashmere, variant of Kashmir, region in north India where the wool was obtained from a breed of long-haired goats.

casino n. 1744, building or room for dancing, etc.; borrowed from Italian casino, diminutive of casa house, from Latin casa hut, cabin, of uncertain origin.

cask n. 1458, borrowed from Middle French casque a cask, helmet, from Spanish casco skull, helmet, cask; originally, fragment, from casar to crack, break, from Vulgar Latin quassicāre*, a frequentative form of quassāre to break, shake.

casket n. 1461, small box for valuables, perhaps formed from English cask + -et or, possibly, an alteration of Middle French casset small box or chest; see CASSETTE. The meaning of coffin appeared in 1849 in American English, as a figurative sense.

casava n. 1565 casava, borrowed from Middle French casave, from Spanish casabe; earlier cazabbi (1555), borrowed from Spanish, from Taino (Haiti) caşábi.

casserole n. 1706, borrowing of French casserole stew pan or saucepan, a diminutive form of Middle French cas pan, from Provençal cas, from Medieval Latin cattia pan, vessel, possibly from Greek kyáthion, diminutive of kyáthos cup, formed from kýar hole.

cassette n. 1793, small box, casket; borrowing of French cassette little box, from Middle French casset, diminutive of Old North French cas box, from Latin capsa box. The meaning of cartridge of photographic film appeared in 1875 and container of tape in a tape recorder in 1960.

cassock n. About 1550, borrowed from Middle French casaque long coat, perhaps from Arabic kazāgand, from Persian kazhāgand padded coat (kazh, kaj raw silk + āgand stuffed).

cast v. Probably before 1200 casten, borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic kasta to throw, related to kps heap thrown up, pile). — n. About 1250, partly developed from casten, v., and, in part, borrowed from Scandinavian (compare Old Icelandic keast, n.). The earliest sense was "a throw," with the idea of the form into which a thing is thrown, which was applied in such varied senses as arrangement, plan, design, conformation, bearing, appearance, and the like. — castaway n. (probably before 1475). — casting n. (before 1300; later, with the meaning of a metal casting, before 1398).

castanet n. 1647, borrowed from Spanish castañeta a castanet, diminutive of castaña chestnut, from Latin castanea CHESTNUT.

caste n. 1555, race, breed, lineage; borrowed from Spanish and Portuguese casta (earlier casta raça unmixed race) originally feminine of casto chaste, from Latin castus pure, related to castrare to cut off, CASTRATE. The sense of one of the hereditary classes in India appeared in 1613.

castellated adj. 1679, formed in English after Medieval Latin castellatus, past participle of castellare to fortify as a castle (from Latin castellum CASTLE) + English suffix *-ed*².

caster n. 1 a small wheel (1748). 2 bottle (1676). 3 person or thing that casts (before 1382). Formed from English cast, v. + *-er*¹.

castigate v. 1607, in part, borrowed from Latin castigatus, past participle of castigare to correct, chastise, formed (perhaps by influence from fatigare to weary), from castus pure, CHASTE, for suffix see *-ATE*¹ and also developed as a back formation from castigation. — castigation n. punishment. About 1390 castigacioun, borrowed from Latin castigatiōnem (nominative castigatiō), from castigare to chastise; for suffix see -TION.

castle n. Old English castel (about 1000); first borrowed from Latin castellum fortified village, and later, as a re-borrowing from Old North French castel fortress, castle, from Latin castellum, diminutive of castrum fort (plural castra camp), related to Latin castrare cut off.

castor n. Before 1398, borrowed through Old French castor, or directly from Latin castor beaver from Greek kástōr, from Kástōr Castor (originally, he who excels), one of the Twins of Greek mythology.

Castor was worshipped by women of Ancient Greece as their healer and preserver from disease. It was because of the healing effect of the beaver's secretion (known as castoreum) in the treatment of diseases that the name of Castor was carried over to the beaver, completely displacing the native Greek word and almost entirely eliminating the native Latin one (fiber).

The name of another substance, castor oil (the extract of a plant), appeared in 1746, and though never obtained from a beaver, was associated with the "oil of a castor," i.e., castoreum, perhaps because both have similar medicinal properties and were noted for their bitter or acrid taste.

castrate v. 1633, probably developed from earlier English castrate, n. a castrated man (1639), from castrated, participial adj., gelded, diminished (1613); borrowed from Latin castratus, past participle of castrare cut off, curtail, castrate (formed from castrum* knife); for suffix see -ATE. It is also possible that castrate is a back formation of earlier castration. — castration n. Probably before 1425 castracioun, borrowed from Latin castratiōnem (nominative castratiō), from castrare castrate; for suffix see -TION.

casual adj. About 1384 casuel accidental, fortuitous; borrowed from Old French casuel, learned borrowing from Latin cāsualis, from cāsus (genitive cāsūs) chance; see *CASE*¹ instance; for suffix see *-AL*¹. — casualty n. 1422 casueltee a casual or incidental charge or payment; later, chance, accident, misfortune (1442); formed from Middle English casuel + -tee *-ty*², by influence of earlier Old French casualité, and Medieval Latin casualitas, from Latin cāsualis depending on chance. The sense of one killed or wounded appeared in 1844.

casuist n. In 1609, a person who resolves questions; borrowed from French casuiste or directly from Spanish casuista, from Latin cāsus (genitive cāsūs) a falling, chance, *CASE*¹ instance; for suffix see -IST.

The pejorative meaning developed in the mid-1600's, and probably led to formation of casuistry n. 1725, formed from English casuist + -ry.

cat n. Old English (before 800) cat, catte, corresponding to Old Frisian katte cat, Old High German kazza (modern German Katze), and Old Icelandic köttur (Danish kat, Norwegian and Swedish katt) all of which probably came from the same source as Late Latin catus, cattus, catta cat, perhaps ultimately from an Afro-Asiatic source (compare Nubian kadīs and Berber kad-diska cat).

cata- or (before vowels) cat- a prefix meaning: 1 down, downward, as in cataract = violent rush, downpour (Greek kata- down + rhāttein to dash). 2 against, as in catapult = a weapon for hurling darts or missiles (Greek kata- against + pallein hurl). 3 wrongly, amiss, as in catagresis = misuse of words (Greek kata- amiss + chrēsthai to use). 4 completely, as in catalog = complete list of (things) counted or said (Greek kata- completely + legein to count or speak).

Most English words with cata- were borrowed, often through Latin, after the 1500's as part of Greek words. Other words in English that have cata- as a prefix are made on analogy with Greek words or follow similar forms of compounding as derivatives. Though cata- was known in Latin (as in catagomb), it is a borrowing from Greek kata-, from katá down, against, over.

catabolism n. 1889; earlier, katabolism (1876), probably formed in English after metabolism, with substitution of cata- down, for meta- (bolism thereby being taken as a derivative combining form in English, formed of Greek bolé a throw + English -ism).

catadysm n. 1633, borrowed from French catadysme, from Latin catadysmos, from Greek kataklysmós flood, ultimately from kata- down + klýzein to wash.

catadomb n. Usually, catadombs. underground burying place. Old English (before 900) catadombas; borrowed from Late Latin catadombae, plural, possibly alteration (influenced by Latin -cumbere to lie) of the phrase cata tumbās among the tombs (cata among, from Greek katá down, over) + (tumbās, plural accusative of tumba TOMB).

catadique n. 1641, borrowing of French catadique, from Italian catadico scaffold, from Vulgar Latin catadicalum* (Latin cata- down + fala scaffolding).

catadipsy n. Before 1398 catadipsia, borrowed from Medieval Latin catadipsia, alteration of Late Latin catadēpsia, from Greek katadēpsis seizure, ultimately from kata- down + lambánein to take, seize.

catalog or catalogue n. Probably before 1425 catadologie, borrowed from Old French catadologie, and directly as a learned borrowing from Late Latin catalogus, from Greek katálogos list, ultimately from kata- completely + légein to count, speak. —v. 1598, from the noun.

catalysis n. 1655, dissolution, borrowed from Greek katálysis, ultimately from kata- completely + lyein loosen. Use of the term in chemistry was introduced in 1836 by the Swedish chemist Jöns Jakob Berzelius.

catalyst n. 1902, formed from English catalysis, on the pattern of analysis, analyst. —catalytic adj. 1836, borrowed from Greek katalytikós, from katálysis catalysis; for suffix see -IC. —catalyze v. 1890, formed from English catalysis, on the pattern of analysis, analyze; probably influenced in its formation by French catalyser (1842).

catamaran n. 1673, borrowed from Tamil kaṭṭu-maram, literally, tie-wood (kaṭṭu to tie + maram tree, wood).

catamount n. 1664, short for cat-o'-mountain (1616), and for cat of the mountain (probably before 1425).

catapult n. 1577, borrowed from Middle French catapulte, and directly from Latin catapulta war machine for throwing, from Greek katapēlētēs, alteration of earlier katapālētēs, ultimately from kata- against + pállēin to hurl. —v. 1848, from the noun.

cataract n. Before 1420, floodgate, portcullis, waterfall; borrowed from Latin cataracta and catarrhācta waterfall; Latin cataracta derives from Greek katarraktēs (ultimately from kat-, down + aráttein to strike hard), and Latin catarrhācta derives from Greek katarraktēs (ultimately from kata- down + rháttein to dash, break).

The meaning of an eye disease appeared probably before 1425, and was borrowed from Middle French cataracte and Medieval Latin cataracta (both from Latin cataracta), supposedly from the sense of portcullis, as of an obstruction to one's eyesight.

catarrh n. Probably before 1425 catarre; borrowed from Medieval Latin catarrus, from Late Latin catarrhus, from Greek katarrhōus a catarrh; literally, a flowing down, earlier katarrhōus, ultimately from kata- down + rhēin to flow.

catastrophe n. 1540, concluding action of a drama, often a reversal of what is expected; borrowed from Greek katastrophē an overturning, ultimately from kata- down + stréphein to turn.

The meaning of sudden disaster appeared in 1748. —catastrophic adj. 1837, formed from English catastrophe + -ic.

catatonic adj. 1908, formed in English from New Latin catatonía (earlier in English katatonía, 1880's, from Greek kata-tonos + tónos tone) + English -ic.

catch v. Probably before 1200 cacchen, cahten capture, ensnare, receive, chase; borrowed from Anglo-French or Old North French cacher, cachier catch or capture (animals), chase, hunt, from Vulgar Latin captiāre*, (attested only in the form of Medieval Latin caciare, from Latin captiāre), try to catch, seek, chase, frequentative form of capere to take. —n. 1399, earlier, a trap in the compound mouscaccache (before 1382); from the verb.

The past tense of the verb, caught, is a rare instance of a strong verb in a root of French origin. Its development probably stems from the influence of the native verb latch (Middle English lachen) which also had the meaning of to catch, ensnare, lie in wait for and was treated as a synonym of catch, replacing Middle English forms of the verb after 1300. Hence the Middle English past tense cahte, cauhte, caughte, caught was apparently patterned on lahte, lauhte, laughte, laught. But in modern English latch became a weak verb (latched, latching), and the regular past tense form of catch (cached, catchte, catched) was superseded in the 1800's by the earlier form caught. In the noun catch and latch are still synonymous as a thing that catches, as in "The catch on the gate is not fastened." —catcher n. 1200 (in a surname); borrowed from Anglo-French cachëour, from cacher.

Catch-22 n. 1961, Catch-22, title of a novel by Joseph Heller. The allusion to the story involves a rule that a pilot is judged insane if he flies combat missions without asking to be relieved; if he does make such a request, he is considered sane and may not be relieved.

catchup n. 1690, borrowed from Malay kěchap, with the spelling influenced by English catch and up, later, cat and sup.

catechism n. 1509, book of questions and answers about religion; earlier, instruction in principles of Christianity (1502); borrowed from Late Latin catēchismus book of instruction, from catēchizāre CATECHIZE; for suffix see -ISM. —catechize v. Probably about 1425, borrowed, from Latin catēchizāre, from Greek katēchízein teach orally, variant of katēcheîn (kata- toward, + ēcheîn to sound); for suffix see -IZE. —catechist n. Before 1563, borrowed from Late Latin catēchista, from Late Greek katēchistēs one who teaches orally; for suffix see -IST.

category n. 1588, borrowed from Middle French catégorie, learned borrowing from Late Latin catēgoria, from Greek katēgoriā assertion, ultimately from kata- down to + the root of agoreúein to speak (in the assembly), from agorá place of assembly. Originally in English the term was used of Aristotle's Categories (ten classes of terms, things, or nations) as early as 1450. —categorical adj. 1598, borrowed from Late Latin catēgoricus, from Greek katēgorikós, from katēgoriā; for suffix see -ICAL. —categorization n. 1886, probably formed from English categorize + -ATION, perhaps influenced by French catégorisation (1845). —categorize v. 1705, formed from English category + -ize.

cater v. 1600, developed from Middle English catour, n., buyer of provisions, borrowed from Anglo-French catur, short for acatur, from acater to buy, Old French acheter, aceter, from Vulgar Latin accaptāre* (from Latin ac-, variant of ad- to before c) + Latin captāre, frequentative form of capere to take. —caterer n. 1469 catourer (1469) and catour (about 1350, earlier, Katur 1270 as a surname) borrowed from Anglo-French.

cater-cornered or catty-cornered adj., adv. 1838, formed from English cater to set or move diagonally (1577; earlier four, probably before 1400; borrowed from Middle French catre, quatre four, from Latin quattuor FOUR) + cornered.

caterpillar n. About 1440 catyrypel, alteration of Old North French catepelose*, literally, hairy cat, Old French chatepelose (from Late Latin catta cat + pelose hairy, from Latin pīlōsus, from pīlus hair). Alteration of the original English form catyrypel was probably influenced by obsolete pillier plunderer.

caterwaul v. 1610 catterwall, 1630 cattenwaul, formed from English cater- (from Middle Dutch cater tomcat) + waul to yowl (1557), from Middle English wrawlen, wrawen be angry, from wrah, wrau angry, apparently from Old English wrag*, wrah*, of uncertain origin. Chaucer used a-caterwawed, (a-caterwrawed) as an adverbial phrase in gon a-caterwawed go caterwauling, suggesting a Middle English verb caterwawen*, caterwrawen*.

catharsis n. 1803, New Latin catharsis, from Greek kátharsis purging, cleansing, from kathairein to purge, cleanse, from katharós clean, pure. The sense of a purging of emotions through drama appeared in 1872. —cathartic adj. 1612, borrowed from Latin catharticus, from Greek kathartikós purgative, from kathairein to purge; for suffix see -IC.

cathedral n. 1587, church of a bishop; earlier in the phrase cathedral church, translation of Medieval Latin ecclesia cathedralis (before 1387). —adj. About 1300, of a bishop's throne or church; borrowed from Old French cathedral and from Medieval Latin cathedralis of or belonging to the (bishop's) chair, from Latin cathedra chair, from Greek kathédra chair; for suffix see -AL¹.

catheter n. 1601, borrowed from French cathéter, replacing earlier cathirum (probably before 1425), a borrowing of Medieval Latin cathirum; both French and Medieval Latin derived from Late Latin cathetēr a catheter, from Greek kathetēr a catheter, plug (kata- down + he-, stem of hiēnai to send + agent suffix -tēr).

cathode n. 1834, borrowed from Greek káthodos a way down (kata- down + hodós way); so called from the path that the electric current was thought to take from the negative pole. —cathode ray (1880, but first known in 1859) —cathode-ray tube (1905) catholic adj. About 1350, of or pertaining to the doctrines of the ancient Christian Church, universally accepted; borrowed from Medieval Latin catholicus, from Late Latin catholicus relating to all, universal, from Greek katholikós universal, general, from kathólou in general, from the phrase kath' hólou (katá, about + the genitive of hólos whole); for suffix see -IC.

The specific sense, since the Reformation, "of or pertaining to the Church of Rome, Roman Catholic," appeared about 1554. The general sense "of interest to all, universal, common" appeared in 1551. —n. 1594, one faithful to the beliefs of the ancient Christian Church. A member of the Roman Church appeared by 1570. —catholicism n. (1609).

cation n. 1834, positively charged ion, borrowed from Greek katiōn (thing) going down, neuter present participle of katiēnai go down (kata- down + iēnai go; see EXIT). For semantic connection see cathode.

catkin n. 1578, borrowed from Dutch kátteken, literally, little cat; so called from the soft downy appearance suggesting a kitten's fur.

catnip n. 1712, American English, a compound of cat + nip, English dialect variant of nep a name for catmint and a variant of Old English nepte, borrowed from Latin nepeta calamint (an aromatic herb). The older name is Middle English catmint (before 1300).

cattle n. About 1250, property; later, livestock (before 1325); borrowed through Anglo-French, Old North French catel property, from Medieval Latin capitale, capitale property, cattle; originally neuter of Latin capitālis of the head, principal. The meaning of cows, bulls, and steers appeared in 1555. —cattleman n. (1864)

Caucasian n. 1807, after New Latin Caucasianus, from Caucasus name of mountains between the Caspian and Black seas. The connection with "white race" came from division of mankind by physical features and the belief that these people came originally from this region.

caucus n. 1763, meeting of a political party; earlier Corcus (1745); American English, possibly borrowed from an Algonquian source (compare Algonquian caucaus elder, adviser, a dialect term of Virginia). —v. 1850, from the noun.

caudal adj. 1661, borrowed from New Latin caudalis, from Latin cauda tail, of uncertain origin; for suffix see -AL¹.

cauliflower n. 1597 cole florée, perhaps a fusion of New Latin cauliflora with Middle English cole, coul, caul cabbage. New Latin cauliflora was formed from Latin caulis cabbage, COLE, (originally) stalk + flōs (genitive flōris) FLOWER.

caulk v. = *calk*¹.

cause n. Probably before 1200, borrowed from Old French cause matter, thing, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin causa reason, purpose, cause. —v. About 1385 causen, from cause, n., or possibly borrowed from Old French causer, from cause, n. —causative adj. (about 1412) causeway n. 1571, variant of Middle English cauceweye (about 1440), a compound of cauce, cauci causeway (probably before 1330) + weye way. The older Middle English cauce, cauci was borrowed through Anglo-French calcee, cauce, perhaps from Old North French, from Vulgar Latin calciāta* via paved way, ultimately from Latin calcis, genitive of calx limestone.

caustic adj. Before 1400, borrowed, perhaps through Old French caustique, from Latin causticus, from Greek kaustikós capable of burning, from kaustós combustible, from kalein to burn; for suffix see +IC. The sense of biting, sarcastic appeared in 1771. —n. Before 1425, probably from the adjective.

cauterize v. Before 1400 cauterizen, borrowed through Old French cauteriser and directly from Late Latin cautērizāre, from Latin cautērium branding iron, from Greek kautērion, diminutive of kautēr burner, from kalein to burn; for suffix see -IZE. —cauterization n. Before 1400, borrowed from Old French cauterisation (1314), and directly from Late Latin cautērizātiōnem (nominative cautērizātiō), from cautērizāre; for suffix see -TION.

caution n. About 1300 caucoun precaution, guarantee or pledge; borrowed through Old French caution, and directly as a learned borrowing of Latin cautiō (accusative cautiōnem), from cautus, past participle of cavēre to beware; for suffix see -ION. The meaning of taking care to be safe, is first recorded in 1605. —v. 1641, from the noun, perhaps by influence of earlier French cautionner (1360). —cautionary adj. 1597, formed from English caution + -ary. —cautious adj. Before 1640, formed from English caution + -ous.

cavalcade n. 1591, a ride, march, raid on horseback; borrowed from Middle French cavalcade, from Italian cavalcata, from cavalcare to ride on horseback, from Late Latin caballīcāre, from Latin caballus horse, nag; for suffix see -ADE.

cavalier n. 1589, a courteous gentleman, usually one trained to arms; borrowed originally in the form cavaliere, cavallero, from Spanish and Italian; later adopting the French spelling in the 1640's, from Middle French cavalier horseman, from Italian cavaliere knight, horseman, from Late Latin caballārius horseman. —adj. Before 1641, gallant, from the noun. The meaning of disdainful, haughty, and offhand appeared in 1657.

cavalry n. 1546 cavallery, borrowed from Middle French cavallerie, from Italian cavalleria + mounted militia, horsemanship, knighthood, from cavaliere knight, horseman. The Italian word developed from Late Latin caballārius horseman, from Latin caballus horse, nag; for suffix see -RY, -ERY.

cave n. Before 1250, borrowed from Old French cave a cave, learned borrowing of Latin cava hollow (places), neuter plural of cavus hollow, adj. —v. 1 usually cave in, to collapse. 1707, American English, probably from the noun, though associated with cave to fall in a heap (1513). The figurative sense of yield to pressure is first recorded in 1837. 2 usually caving, gerund, the action exploring caves as a sport (1932). —cave man (1865) caveat n. 1549, earlier, in caveat emptor (1523); borrowed from Latin caveat let him beware, 3rd person singular present subjunctive of cavēre to beware.

cavern n. About 1380, borrowing of Old French caverne cave, learned borrowing from Latin caverna cave, cavity, from cavus hollow, adj. —cavernous adj. Before 1400, borrowed from Latin cavernōsus full of cavities, perhaps by influence of Old French caverneux; for suffix see -OUS.

caviar or caviare n. About 1560, borrowed from French caviar, from Turkish havyār.

cavil v. 1548, borrowed from Middle French caviller to mock, jest, learned borrowing from Latin cavillārī to jeer, from cavilla a jeering, scoffing, alteration of calvilla*, related to calumniā CALUMNY. Earlier use of the now rare or literary cavillation is attested probably in 1388. —n. 1570, from the verb.

cavity n. 1541, borrowed from Middle French cavité, learned borrowing from Late Latin cavitās hollowness, cavity, from Latin cavus hollow, adj., see CAVE; for suffix see -ITY.

cavort v. 1829, earlier cauvaut (1793), American English, perhaps alteration of still earlier CURVET leap about, frisk.

caw v. 1590, imitative of the cry. —n. 1666, from the verb.

cayenne n. 1756 cayan associated with Cayenne, city in French Guiana, but apparently borrowed from Tupi (Brazil) qui'ynha or ky'ynha.

cayman or caiman n. 1577, borrowed probably through Spanish caimán and French caïman, from a native Guianan or Carib name meaning "crocodile."

cayuse n. 1841, American English, any horse, especially an Indian pony; originally a kind of pony bred by the Cayuse Indians (1825).

cease v. Probably about 1300 cesen, borrowed from Old French cesser, from Latin cessāre to cease, go slowly, frequentative form of cēdere go away, withdraw. —cease-fire n. (1918) —ceaseless adj. (1586) cecum or caecum n. 1721, first part of the large intestine. New Latin intestinum caecum blind intestine (because it is closed at one end), from Latin caecum neuter of caecus blind.

cedar n. 1325 cedre, blending with and partially replacing Old English ceder (about 1000), but found earlier in ceder-beam cedar tree (before 830). The Middle English was borrowed from Old French cedre, learned borrowing from Latin cedrus, from Greek kédros cedar, juniper.

cede v. 1633, borrowed from Latin cēdere to go, proceed, yield, withdraw.

cedilla n. 1599, borrowed from Spanish cedilla, zedilla little z, from Latin zēta. Association with z comes from a mark derived from z and formerly written after c to indicate the sound of s (in French) and ts (in Spanish).

ceiling n. About 1380 celynge paneling, from earlier celyng act of paneling (1347–48), gerund of celyn to cover with paneling; borrowed from Middle French celer, cieler, from ciel canopy, sky, from Latin caelum sky. The meaning of the word (the ceiling of a room) is first recorded in 1535.

celebrate v. 1465, borrowed from Latin celebrātus, past participle of celebrāre, originally, attend in great numbers, from celeber, celebris, celebre thronged, frequented, well-known, perhaps related to Latin celer swift. —celebrant n. 1839, borrowed through French célebrant, or directly from Latin celebrantem (nominative celebrāns), present participle of celebrāre. —celebrated adj. (1586) —celebration n. 1529, probably borrowed from Latin celebratiōnem (nominative celebratiō), from celebrāre; or formed from English celebrate + -tion. —celebrity n. About 1380 celebrete fame, notoriety; borrowed from Old French celebrité, from Latin celebritātem (nominative celebritās) a multitude, fame, renown, from celeber, celebris, celebre well-known; for suffix see -ITY.

celerity n. 1483, borrowed from Middle French celérité, from Latin celeritatem (nominative celeritās), from celer, cleris, celere swift; for suffix see -ITY.

celery n. 1664, borrowed from French céleri, from Italian (Lombard dialect) seleri (plural), from Late Latin selinon parsley, from Greek selinon.

celestial adj. About 1380, borrowed from Old French celestial, from Latin caelestis heavenly, from caelum sky, heaven, of uncertain origin; for suffix see -AL¹.

celibate adj. 1829, formed in English from Latin caelebs, caelibis unmarried + English -ate. —n. 1869, from the adjective, but perhaps influenced by another use of celibate state of celibacy (1614); borrowed from Latin caelibātus, from caelebs (genitive caelibis) unmarried. —celibacy n. 1663, formed in English from Latin caelibātus state of being unmarried + English -acy.

cell n. Before 1131, small monastery; later, probably before 1300, small room, found in Old English cell; borrowed from Latin cella small room, and later reinforced as a borrowing from Old French celle, from Latin cella (in Late Latin, monk's cell). Latin cella especially in the sense of a cloistered cell, is related to Latin cēlāre to hide, conceal.

The sense in biology appeared in 1672–73 as one of a number of cavities, but was not recorded in its scientific application to living organisms as the basic structure before 1845. The figurative sense of brain cells in relation to reason was used as early as 1393 in reference to the compartments into which the brain was believed to be separated. —cell membrane 1870, replacing earlier cellular membrane (1773). —cellular adj. 1753, borrowed probably from New Latin cellularis of little cells, from cellula, diminutive of Latin cella, perhaps by influence of earlier French cellulaire (1740, though not recorded in use in biology before 1860). —cell wall (1847–49) cellar n. Probably before 1200 celer, borrowed through Anglo-French celer, Old French celier, from Latin cellārium storeroom, from cella small room, CELL.

cello or 'cello n. 1876, shortened from VIOLONCELLO. —cellist n. 1888, formed from English cello + -ist.

cellophane n. 1912 Cellophane, a trademark, probably formed in French from cell(ulose) + connecting -o- + -phane substance having a (specified) appearance, from Greek -phanēs appearing, shining.

celluloid n. 1871, American English, formed from English cellul(ose) + -oid. The transferred sense of motion pictures, films appeared in 1934.

cellulose n. 1835, noun use of earlier cellulose, adj., consisting of cells (1753); borrowed from New Latin cellulosus, from Latin cellula, diminutive of cella small room, CELL; for suffix see -OSE².

Celsius adj. 1850, earlier Celsius's thermometer (1797), in allusion to Anders Celsius (1701–1744), who invented the centigrade temperature scale.

cement n. Probably before 1300 cymēt, later siment (about 1330); borrowed from Old French ciment, from Latin caementum rough stone, rubble, earlier caidmentum*, from caedere to cut. The spelling cement appeared before 1398, influenced by French cément, itself a learned borrowing from Latin caementum.

The meaning in English was always a pasty mixture that hardens into rocklike substance, but originally the word referred to rubble mixed with lime and water to form mortar, and later to the mortar itself. —v. Before 1400 cymēten, from the noun.

cemetery n. About 1425 cymitory; earlier (in compound) simeterigarth cemetery yard or plot (1377); borrowed from Old French cimetiere, cimiterie graveyard, from Late Latin coemētērium, (also cimūtērium), from Greek koimētērion sleeping room, (but used among early Christian ecclesiastical writers to mean "burial ground"), from koimán put to sleep, related to keisthai to lie down.

cenotaph n. 1603, borrowed from French cénotaphe, learned borrowing from Latin cenotaphium, from Greek kenotáphion an empty tomb (kenós empty + táphos tomb).

censer n. About 1250, borrowed from Old French censier, encensier, from encens incense, a learned borrowing from Late Latin incensum INCENSE¹.

censor n. 1531, Roman magistrate who took the census and supervised public morals; borrowed through Middle French censor, and directly from Latin cēnsor, from cēnsēre appraise, estimate, assess. —v. act as a censor. 1882, from the noun.

censure n. Probably about 1378, borrowed from Latin cēnsūra judgment, censorship, from cēnsēre appraise, estimate, assess. —v. 1589, from the noun, or borrowed from Middle French censurer, from censure criticism, learned borrowing from Latin cēnsūra.

census n. 1613, poll-tax; later, registration of citizens and their property in ancient Rome (1634); borrowed from Latin cēnsus (genitive cēnsūs), from cēnsēre appraise; see CENSOR.

cent n. Before 1375, a hundred; borrowed from Old French cent hundred and directly from Latin centum HUNDRED; later, in the phrase per cent (1568), and a hundredth part of (1685). This latter meaning was carried over in a suggestion on the proposed units of American currency before the Congress in 1782. In 1786 the Continental Congress designated the cent to be 1/100 of a dollar, probably influenced by French centime, a coin equal to 1/100 of a franc.

centaur n. About 1375, mythical monster that is half man and half horse; borrowed through Old French centaure, and directly from Latin centaurus, from Greek kéntauros. In early Greek literature the name occurs as that of a savage people of Thessaly, who were supposed to have been expert horsemen.

centenary n. 1607, period of 100 years; borrowed from Latin centēnārius consisting of a hundred, from centēnī a hundred each, from centum hundred; for suffix see -ARY. —centenarian n. 1846, formed in English from Latin centēnārius of a hundred + English -an.

centennial adj. Before 1797, formed in English from Latin cent(um) hundred + English (bi)ennial. —n. 1876, from the adjective.

center n. About 1380 centre middle point of a circle; borrowed from Old French centre, learned borrowing from Latin centrum, from Greek kéntron sharp point, goad, stationary point of a compass, middle point of a circle. —v. Probably before 1590, from the noun.

From the 1500's to the 1700's the prevalent spelling was center, used by Shakespeare, Milton, Pope, Addison, Hobbes, and others. But the technical volume (1727) of Bailey's Dictionary had the spelling centre and Johnson followed it in his dictionary, so that centre was generally adopted in Great Britain while center remained the spelling in the United States.

centi- a combining form meaning a hundred or a hundredth part of, as in centimeter, centillion. Borrowed from French centi- hundredth and from Latin centum hundred. —centigrade adj. (1812) —centigram, centiliter, centimeter, n. (1801) centipede n. 1646, from Latin centipeda (centum hundred + pēs, genitive pedis, FOOT).

central adj. 1647, popularized and reintroduced to English by influence of French central, Latin centrālis, from centrum CENTER; for suffix see -AL¹. An adverb, centrally, recorded apparently before 1425 possibly implies earlier the use of central in Middle English. —centralize v. 1800, formed from English central + -ize, probably by influence of earlier French centraliser (1790).

centrifugal adj. Before 1721, in the phrase centrifugal force; formed in English from New Latin centrifugus + English -al¹. New Latin centrifugus was formed from Latin centrum CENTER + fugere to flee. —centrifuge n. 1887, originally an adjective meaning centrifugal (1801); borrowed from French centrifuge, from New Latin centrifugus.

centripetal adj. 1709, in the phrase centripetal force, formed in English from New Latin centripetus + English -al¹. New Latin centripetus was formed from Latin centrum CENTER + petere go toward, seek.

century n. Before 1398, a measure of land; later, a division of the Roman army of about a hundred men (about 1450); borrowed from Latin centuria division of 100 units, company of 100 men, from centum hundred. In the late 1500's the word developed a meaning of any group of a hundred things as in a century of prayers (1611), a century of years (1626), reduced before 1638 to century.

cephalic adj. Probably before 1425, near, on, or in the head; earlier Anglo-Latin cephalica the cephalic vein (before 1398); borrowed from Latin cephalicus, from Greek kephalikós belonging to the head, from kephalē head; for suffix see -IC.

ceramic adj. 1850 keramic, borrowed from Greek keramikós, from kéramos potter's clay, earthen vessel; for suffix see -IC. The spelling ceramic appeared in 1859 in ceramics and was probably influenced by earlier French céramique (1806).

cereal n. 1832, grass yielding edible corn or grain, from earlier adjective "having to do with corn or edible grain" (1818); borrowed from French céréale, from Latin Cereālis of or having to do with cultivation or growing of grain; originally, of or having to do with Cerēs, goddess of agriculture; for suffix see -AL¹. The meaning of a breakfast food made from cereal grain appeared in 1899, in American English.

cerebellum n. 1565, borrowed from Medieval Latin and Latin cerebellum small brain, diminutive of cerebrum brain.

cerebrum n. 1615, borrowing of Latin cerebrum brain. —cerebral adj. 1816, borrowed from French cérébral, from Latin cerebrum brain + French -al -al¹.

cerement n. 1602, cloth to wrap the dead, originally of wax, from cere, v. wrap in a cloth covered with wax (about 1425), developed from ciren to wax, borrowed from Middle French cirer to wax, from Latin cērāre, from cēra wax + -ment.

ceremony n. Before 1382 ceremoyn, later cerymonye (1384); borrowed from Old French ceremonie, and Medieval Latin ceremonia, from Latin caerimōnia sanctity, reverence, ritual, of uncertain origin. —ceremonial adj. 1402, from earlier noun meaning "a ceremonial practice or usage" (before 1397); borrowed from Medieval Latin ceremonialis*, from Late Latin caerimōniālis pertaining to ceremony, from Latin caerimōnia ceremony. —ceremonious adj. 1553, borrowed from Late Latin caerimōniōsus celebrated by rites, from Latin caerimōnia ceremony, possibly by influence of Middle French cérémonieux.

cerise adj., n. 1858, borrowed from French cerise, literally, cherry, from Old French cerise, from Vulgar Latin ceresia*; see CHERRY.

cerium n. 1804, New Latin, formed from Ceres an asteroid discovered in 1801 and named after Cerēs, the Roman goddess of agriculture + -ium.

certain adj. Probably before 1300 certein, borrowed from Old French certain, from Vulgar Latin certānus*, from Latin certus sure, determined, resolved, certain. Originally certus was a variant past participle of cernere to separate, sift, distinguish, discern, decide, which is related to Latin cribrum sieve. —certainly adv. About 1300, with the emphatic meaning "yes, assuredly" formed from English certain + -ly¹. —certainty n. About 1300 certeynte, borrowed from Anglo-French certainté, Old French certaineté, from Old French certain + -té -ty².

certify v. Before 1338, borrowed from Old French certifier make certain, learned borrowing from Late Latin certificāre, from a lost adjective certi-ficus*, from Latin certus sure (see CERTAIN) + the root of facere to make, DO¹ perform; for suffix see -FY. —certificate n. 1439, document that certifies; earlier, act of certifying (about 1419); borrowed from Middle French certificat, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin certificatum, from neuter of Late Latin certificātus, past participle of certificāre certify. —certification n. Probably 1424, borrowed from Middle French certification, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin certificatio (accusative certificationem), from Late Latin certificāre; for suffix see -TION. —certified adj. 1611, as a loan translation of French certifié assured, ascertained.

certitude n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Middle French certitude certainty, learned borrowing from Late Latin certitūdō (accusative certitūdinem) that which is certain, from Latin certus CERTAIN; for suffix see -TUDE.

cerulean adj. 1667, formed in English from Latin caeruleus dark blue (from caelum sky, heaven) + English -an. —n. 1756, from the adjective.

cervix n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Latin cervix (genitive cervicis) neck. —cervical adj. 1681, borrowing of French cervical, from Latin cervix (genitive cervicis neck) + French -al -al.

cesium n. 1861, New Latin; earlier caesium (1860), from neuter of Latin caesius bluish gray; so called in reference to the two blue lines visible in its spectrum.

cessation n. 1447 cessayoun, cessacion, borrowed from Old French cessation, learned borrowing from Latin cessatiōnem (nominative cessatiō) a delaying, ceasing, from cessare delay, CEASE; for suffix see -TION.

cession n. 1399, borrowed from Old French cession, learned borrowing from Latin cessiōnem (nominative cessiō), from cess-, stem of cedere yield; for suffix see -ION.

cesspool n. 1671 cestpool, possibly alteration (with pool) of earlier cesperalle (1583), variant of suspiral cesspool (about 1512), breathing hole, vent, conduit (about 1400); borrowed from Old French souspirail air hole, vent, from souspirer breathe, sigh, from Latin suspirare breathe deep. An alternative derivation suggests that cesspool is the original spelling from dialectal suspool (suss, soss puddle, anything foul or muddy + pool). It is also possible there is some connection with cess a bog on the banks of a tidal river where pools of water form.

cetacean n. 1836, formed in English from New Latin Cetacea the order of mammals including whales and porpoises (from Latin cetus large sea animal, from Greek kētos sea monster, of unknown origin) + English -an.

ch Introduced into English after the Norman Conquest (1066), although the sound of ch in words like bleach developed in English before the 900's. After words with ch, such as charity and riches, were introduced into English, the digraph began to be used to native English words, as in chin, chink, etc., which in Old English had been spelled with c and pronounced with the sound of k.

The spelling is also found in: 1) chasm, representing the sound of k in kind. 2) chivalry, representing the sound of sh in shin. 3) Scottish loch, German ach, imitative of a foreign sound.

chafe v. Probably before 1300 chaußen to inflame, warm, heat; borrowed from Old French chaufer, from Vulgar Latin calefare*, alteration of Latin calefacere to make hot, make warm, from calere be warm + facere make. The sense make sore by rubbing (1526), developed from to rub so as to make warm (about 1410), and anger, vex, or irritate (before 1387), developed from inflame, excite, make hot in temper (probably before 1300).

chaff¹ n. husks. Probably before 1200 chaf, chef; developed from Old English ceaf (about 1000); cognate with Middle Dutch caf chaff, and Old High German cheva pod, husk, from Proto-Germanic kaf-/kef-*.

chaff² n. joking. Probably 1648, of uncertain origin, possibly from *chaff*¹, n. something trivial (about 1390).

chaffinch n. About 1440 caffynche, developed from Old English ceaffinc (ceaf CHAFF, because it feeds on chaff or grain + finc FINCH).

chagrin n. 1716–18, feeling of irritation from disappointment; earlier, melancholy, worry (1656); borrowed from French chagrin melancholy, anxiety, vexation, from Old French chagrin grief, vexation (1389), of uncertain origin; perhaps related to Old North French chagreiner become gloomy. —v. 1727, possibly borrowed from French chagriner to be vexed, grieve, but more likely a back formation from earlier chagrined (1665) or from the noun.

chain n. Probably before 1300 chaene, cheine; borrowed from Old French chäeine, chaine, from Latin catēna chain, fetter; related to cassis hunting net, snare. The meaning of a group of related stores is first recorded in 1846, in American English. —v. Before 1376 cheynen, from the noun. —chain reaction (nuclear physics 1938; the concept was applied in 1916 to explain high quantum yields in gas reactions).

chair n. Probably about 1225 chaere, chayere, borrowed from Old French chaiere, chäere, from Latin cathedra, from Greek kathédra seat (katá down + hédra seat). Old French chaiere represents regular phonetic development in borrowing from Latin cathedra with the loss of th between two vowels and the suppression of d before r. —v. Probably about 1450, implied in the form chairing, from the noun. The sense of be chairman of, preside over (a meeting) is first recorded in 1921. —chairman n. (1654) —chairwoman n. (1681) —chairperson n. (1971, American English) chalet n. 1782, borrowed from Swiss French, apparently a diminutive related to Old Provençal cala small shelter for ships, ultimately from a pre-Latin word meaning sheltered place.

chalice n. Before 1325, borrowed through Anglo-French chalice, as a learned borrowing from Latin calix (accusative calicem) cup. Chalice replaced earlier Middle English calice (1102), and caliz (about 1300), borrowed from Old North French, and also a learned borrowing from Latin calix.

The word is also found in Old English as celic and calic, cælc, etc. Both borrowings are from Latin calix, calicem, but the latter forms came apparently at the time of early Christian use. The earliest dates of recorded use appear before 830.

chalk n. About 1325 chalk; earlier in compound chalston chalkstone (before 1200); developed from Old English calc (about 700); borrowed from Latin calx (genitive calcis) small stone, limestone, chalk, from Greek chális small stone, pebble. —v. 1571, from the noun.

challenge v. Probably before 1200, chalengen, calengen; borrowed from Old French chalengier, chalongier (rarely calengier), from Latin calumniāri accuse falsely, from Latin calumnia trickery, CALUMNY. —n. Probably before 1325 chalange; later, but rarely, calenge (before 1333); borrowed from Old French chalenge, from Latin calumnia trickery. —challenger n. About 1350, in part borrowed through Anglo-French chalengeour, from Old French chalenger, and in part developed from Middle English chalengen + -er.

chamber n. Probably before 1200 chaumbre, borrowed from Old French chambre, from Latin camera vault, arch, from Greek kamárā vaulted chamber, vault, anything with an arched cover. —v. Before 1402, from the noun. —chamber music (before 1789)

chamberlain n. Probably before 1200 chamberleng; later chaumberlein (about 1250); borrowed from Old French chamberlenc, from a Germanic source; compare Old High German chamarling (chamara chamber, from Latin camera vault, in Medieval Latin, room, chamber + *-ling -ling*¹).

chambray n. 1814, American English, alteration (perhaps by influence of champagne, champaign, etc.) of French cambrai, named after Cambrai, city in France where the cloth was originally made.

chameleon n. Before 1387 camelion, borrowed from Old French caméléon, from Latin chamaeleōn, from Greek chamailēōn, literally, ground lion (chamal on the ground + lēōn LION). The spelling with ch in imitation of the Greek begins to appear in the early 1800's. The sense of a changeable or fickle person is first recorded in 1586.

chamois n. 1560, borrowed from Middle French chamois, from Late Latin camōx (genitive camōcis), probably from a pre-Romance Alpine word, represented by Old High German gamiza (modern German Gemse).

champ¹ v. chew noisily. 1530, probably of imitative origin. —n. 1604, from the verb.

champ² n. champion. 1868, American English, shortened from CHAMPION.

champagne n. 1664, borrowing of French champagne, from the name of the former province Champagne, in northwestern France, where it was originally made, from Late Latin campānia level country.

champion n. Probably before 1200 champiun combatant; borrowed from Old French champiun, champion a champion, combatant in a duel, from Late Latin campiō (accusative campiōnem) combatant in the athletic field or arena, from Latin campus field, CAMP¹. The meaning of one who holds first place in a sport appeared in 1730. —v. 1605, from the noun. —championship n. 1825, formed from English champion, n. + -ship.

chance n. Probably before 1300, chaunce, cheance something that takes place, especially unexpectedly; borrowed from Old French cheance accident, the falling of dice, from Vulgar Latin cadentia* a falling, from Latin cadentem (nominative cadēs), from cadere to fall. —v. Before 1393, from the noun.

chancel n. About 1303 chaunsel; later chaunsel (about 1390); borrowed from Old French chancel, from Late Latin cancellus, originally, lattice, from Latin cancelli (plural) grating, bars; see CANCEL. The extension in meaning from the latticework that set off the altar space to the altar itself, took place in Latin.

chancellor n. 1123 canceler; earlier found in Late Old English (before 1066); borrowed from Old Norman French cancheler and later Anglo-French canceler. Another form chaunceler appears (probably before 1300) and is a borrowing of the Anglo-French variant chanceler, Old French chancelier. Both forms in Old French are derived from Latin cancellarius court secretary, but originally meaning officer stationed at the bar or latticework separating the judges from the public in a basilica or other court of law, from cancelli a grating, bars (enclosing the area). The meaning applied to the head of a university is first recorded about 1300. —chancellery n. About 1300 chauncelerie, borrowed from Old French chauncelerie from chancelier chancellor.

chancery n. About 1378, contraction of CHANCELLERY.

chancre n. Before 1605, borrowed from French chancre cancer, from Latin cancer (genitive cancrī) cancer, originally, crab; see CANCER.

chandelier n. Probably before 1382 chaundeler candlestick or chandelier; earlier, one who makes or sells candles (1332); borrowed from Old French chandelier candlestick; see CHANDLER. The word was respelled in the 1600's after the French fashion.

chandler n. 1389, earlier Shaundeler (1332, as a surname); borrowed from Anglo-French chandeler, variant of Old French chandelier candlemaker, from Vulgar Latin candelārius* candlemaker, candelāria candlestick, from Latin candēla CANDLE; for suffix see -ER¹.

change v. Probably before 1200 changen, borrowed from Old French changier, from Latin cambiāre to barter, exchange. —n. Probably before 1200, borrowed from Old French change, from changier, v. —changeable adj. About 1250 chaungable, borrowed from Old French chaungable, from changier, v.; for suffix see -ABLE. —changer n. 1325, in part borrowed from Old French changeour, and in part formed from Middle English change to change -er¹.

channel n. Before 1325 chanel, borrowed from Old French chanel, from Latin canālis waterpipe, canal, channel. The figurative sense of medium of transmission or communication, means, agency appeared in 1537. —v. 1596, from the noun.

chant v. About 1390 chaunten, borrowed from Old French chanter to sing, from Latin cantāre, frequentative form of canere to sing. —n. 1671, borrowed from French chant song, from Old French chant, from Latin cantus song, from canere to sing.

chantey or chanty n. 1856, borrowed probably by alteration of French chanter to sing, or of chantez, imperative plural of chanter, from Old French; see CHANT.

chaos n. Before 1396 cahos, later chaos (1494); borrowed through Old French chaos, (1377) or directly from Latin chaos, from Greek cháos gulf, chasm, abyss, (earlier cháwos*). —chaotic adj. 1713, irregularly formed from English chaos + ending -otic, found in other words derived from Greek, such as erotic (compare eros), hypnotic.

chap¹ v. crack open. Probably 1440 chappen to burst open, split, possibly a variant form of choppen cut off, chop, break chap² n. fellow. 1577, short for chapman purchaser, trader, developed from Old English cēapman tradesman (cēap trade, + man). In the 1700's the sense shifted to fellow, similar to extended meaning of the word customer a purchaser, which developed to mean "a character," as in "tough customer."

(before 1376); of uncertain origin. Perhaps related to Middle Dutch cappen to chop, cut, Danish kappe and Swedish kappa to cut, cut off. —n. Before 1398, place where the skin is rough; from the verb.

chapel n. Probably about 1200 chapele, chappelle, borrowed from Old French chapele, from Medieval Latin cappella chapel, sanctuary for relics, canopy; literally, little cape, diminutive of Late Latin cappa CAPE¹ garment. A traditional explanation of the relation to "cape" is that it refers to the shrine in which the Frankish kings preserved the cappella or cloak of St. Martin of Tours (patron saint of France), using it as a sacred relic carried before them in battle. The name was then generally applied to a sanctuary containing holy relics.

chaperon or chaperone n. 1720, older woman accompanying a young or unmarried woman; earlier meaning hooded cloak (about 1400, and 1130 in a surname); borrowed from French chaperon female companion to a young woman, literally, a hood, from Old French chaperon diminutive form of chape cape, from Late Latin cappa CAPE¹ garment. —v. 1796, probably borrowed from French chaperonner, from French chaperon, n.

chaplain n. Before 1376 chapeleyn, borrowed from Old French chapelain clergyman, from Medieval Latin cappellanus clergyman, originally a keeper of the cloak or cappella of St. Martin; see CHAPEL. Middle English chapeleyn replaced the earlier capeleyn (1114), which had developed from Old English cappellane, a form borrowed from Medieval Latin cappellanus.

chaps n. pl. 1844, American English, borrowed and shortened from Mexican Spanish chaparreras leather leggings to protect trousers from chaparro evergreen oak, a kind of scrubby vegetation.

chapter n. Probably before 1200 chapitre, borrowed from Old French chapitre, chapitle, learned borrowing from Late Latin capitulum, section of a book, from Latin, little head, diminutive of caput (genitive capitis) head. The sense of a local branch developed from the meaning convocation of the canons of a cathedral church. At such a meeting it was the practice to read a capitulum or chapter of the Scriptures or rules of the order, so that the assembled canons or monks themselves came to be called in a body the capitulum or chapter, and their meeting place the chapter house.

char¹ v. scorch, 1679, probably back formation from CHAR-COAL.

char² or chare n. odd job, chore. Before 1250 char occasional turn of work, odd job; earlier cherre (probably before 1200) and in a surname Chareman (1183); developed from Old English (before 900) cer, cierr, cyrr turn, occasion. —charwoman n. 1379 (in surname) Alicia Charwoman, formed from Middle English char + woman.

character n. Before 1333 caracter a symbol or an imprint on the soul; borrowed from Old French caractere, from Latin character, from Greek charaktēr instrument for marking, distinctive mark or nature, from charássein engrave, scratch. The spelling with ch- appeared in English in the 1500's, in imitation of Latin. The meaning of person in a play or book is first recorded in 1664. —characteristic n. 1664; adj. 1665, surviving and ultimately replacing earlier characteristical (1621). —characterize v. 1591, perhaps formed in English: from character + -ize, and as a back formation of characterization (1570); also possibly borrowed by influence of French caractériser (1512) from Medieval Latin characterizare; for suffix see -IZE.

charade n. 1776, borrowed from French charade, from Provençal charrado a chat, chatter, from charra to chatter, of imitative origin.

charcoal n. 1371 charcole, from char-, of uncertain origin, + cole COAL. It is suggested that char- comes from char to turn (in reference to wood being "turned" into coal); another suggested source of char- is by shortening of Middle French charbon charcoal.

charge v. Before 1250 chargen load, fill; borrowed from Old French chargier, charger to load, charge, from Late Latin carricare to load, carry, from Latin carrum wagon, CAR. The meaning of burden, entrust, command, and accuse appeared in Middle English. The extended sense of attack impetuously appeared in 1583, perhaps from an earlier sense of load a weapon (1541). —n. Probably before 1200, load, weight; borrowed from Old French charge a load, from chargier, v., The meaning of burden of expense appeared about 1460.

chariot n. 1358, borrowed from Old French chariot wagon, augmentative of char chariot, from Latin carrum chariot, wagon, CAR. —charioteer n. Before 1382 charieter, a fusion of Old French chariotteur and charetier; for suffix see -EER.

charisma n. 1875, grace, talent bestowed by God, replacing charism (first recorded before 1641); borrowed from Greek charisma, from charizesthai show favor, from charis favor, grace, related to chairein rejoice. Later in the sense of gift of leadership or power of authority (1947), extended to strong personal appeal, especially in reference to political figures (in early 1960's). —charismatic adj. 1882–83, formed in English from Greek charismata favors given (plural of charisma charisma) + English -ic. —n. 1970, Christian who believes in divine gifts, such as the power to heal by the laying on of hands; from the adjective.

charity n. 1137 carited, replaced by later chearite, cherite (before 1200) and charite (about 1200). Earlier carited kindness, hospitality, almsgiving, was borrowed from Old North French carité, carité, Old French charité. Later chearite, cherite, and charite love of God and fellow men, kindness, were borrowed from Old French cherité, charité, learned borrowing from Latin cāritās (accusative cāritātem) costliness, affection, from cārus dear, costly, valued, loved; for suffix see -ITY. —charitable adj. Probably before 1200, borrowed from Old French charitable, from charité; for suffix see -ABLE.

charlatan n. 1611, borrowed from French charlatan mountebank, babbler, from Italian ciarlatano mountebank, babbler, alteration (influenced by ciarlare to babble) of earlier cerretano charlatan; for suffix see -AN.

charlotte n. 1796, probably in allusion to Charlotte, a woman's name. In French, charlotte in the sense of this dessert has been attested only since 1804.

charm n. Probably before 1300 charm, charme incantation, magic spell; borrowed from Old French charme a charm, enchantment, from Latin carmen song, enchantment, incantation. Latin carmen was formed by dissimilation of n to r before m in canmen*, from canere to sing, CHANT. The sense of a pleasing quality appeared in 1598. —v. Probably before 1300 charmen to recite or cast a magic spell; borrowed from Old French charmer to charm, enchant, from Late Latin carmināre enchant, sing, from Latin carmen song.

chart n. 1571, borrowed from Middle French charte card, map, from Latin charta, carta paper, card, map, from Greek chártēs leaf of paper, roll of papyrus. —v. 1842, from the noun.

charter n. Probably before 1200 chartre, borrowed from Old French chartre charter, from Latin chartula, cartula a little paper, diminutive of charta, carta paper, document, CHART. —v. About 1425 (Scottish) chartren, from the noun. The sense of hire some conveyance for transportation appeared in 1806.

chary adj. Probably about 1200 charig, developed from Old English (probably about 750) cearig sorrowful, in the sense of with care or trouble, from cearu, caru CARE. This meaning shifted to careful (caring about one's work) in the 1500's. The Old English cearig is cognate with Old Saxon carag (found in mōdcarag) and Old High German charag sorrow, trouble, care.

chase¹ v. run after. Before 1338 chasen to hunt; earlier chacen (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French chacier to catch, seize, from Vulgar Latin captiāre* to take, seize, catch, Latin captiāre to try to catch. The meaning of run after developed in Middle English probably about 1350. —n. About 1300 chas a hunt; earlier chace (probably about 1250); borrowed from Old French chace, chas, from chacier, v. The meaning of pursuit, as of an enemy developed in Middle English about 1330. —chaser n. 1204, in surname Chacur, later chacer (1275), in part borrowed from Old French chaceor, and in later spellings developed from Middle English chacen + *-er*¹.

chase² v. emboss. 1414, developed by shortening of enchase borrowed from Middle French enchasser to set (gems), enclose, encase (Old French en- in, into + chasse casket, case, setting, from Latin capsa CASE² box).

chasm n. 1596, borrowed from Latin chasma, from Greek chásma yawning hollow, gulf, related to cháskein, chalnein to gape, yawn. The spelling chasma appears in English until the late 1600's.

chassis n. 1903, in American English, frame, wheels, and machinery of a motor vehicle; earlier, window frame, sash (1664); borrowed from French châssis frame (châsse frame, from Latin capsa box, CASE² + suffix -is, a collective for a number of parts taken together).

chaste adj. Probably before 1200, borrowed from Old French chaste morally pure, from Latin castus pure, chaste, holy, related to castrāre to cut off, CASTRATE. —chastity n. Probably before 1200 chastete, borrowed from Old French chasteté, from Latin castitatem (nominative castitās) purity, from castus pure; for suffix see -ITY.

chasten v. 1526, developed by extension with *-en*¹ from an obsolete English verb chaste to correct (a person's) behavior, from earlier chastien chastise (probably before 1200); borrowed from Old French chastier, from Latin castigāre chastise; literally, make pure, formed (perhaps by influence of fatigāre to weary) from castus pure, CHASTE.

chastise v. About 1303 chastysen, probably alteration of chastien CHASTEN; probably developed by influence of -isen, as in baptyzen, baptisen to baptize.

chasuble n. 1611, borrowed from Old French chasuble, from Late Latin casubla, an unaccounted alteration of Latin casula, literally, little house, diminutive of casa hut. The form chasuble replaced earlier chesible, (about 1300), borrowed through Anglo-French, Old French chesible, from Medieval Latin casibula.

chat v. Before 1450, shortened from CHATTER. —n. 1530, from the verb. —chatty adj. Before 1762, formed from English chat, v. + *-y*¹.

chattel n. About 1225 chatel, also chetel (before 1250) property, goods; borrowed from Old French chatel, from Medieval Latin capitale property, originally neuter of Latin capitālis; see CAPITAL¹.

chatter v. Before 1250 cheateren, and chiteren; later chateren (about 1250) to twitter, jabber, gossip, of imitative origin, as in English chitter, twitter, jabber (compare Dutch koeteren jabber, kwetteren to chatter, and Danish levitre twitter, chirp). —n. About 1250, probably from the verb.

chauffeur n. 1899, a motorist, borrowed from French chauffeur stoker (originally, one who fuels the fire of a steam engine), from chauffer to heat, from Old French chauffer; see CHAFE. —v. 1917, from the noun.

chauvinism n. 1870, boastful, warlike patriotism; borrowed from French chauvinisme (1843), from the surname of Nicolas Chauvin; for suffix see -ISM. Chauvin, in spite of being severely wounded in the Napoleonic wars, expressed devotion to the Emperor and the Empire that was at first celebrated but, after the fall of Napoleon, was ridiculed. Chauvin's name was popularized in the French vaudeville La Cocarde Tricolore (1831), and until the 1970's chauvinism was used in English to denote exaggerated loyalty to one's country; about 1970 the term was extended in English to sexism, chiefly in the phrase male chauvinism. —chauvinist n. 1877, borrowed from French chauviniste, from Chauvin; for suffix see -IST.

cheap adj. 1509 chepe low-priced, a shortened form of earlier good chep, goode chepe good bargain, good price (about 1280); earlier, as a surname Godchepe (1166), formed after the noun chep, chepe bargain, barter, price, developed from Old English cēap trade, barter, purchase, sale (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian kāp trade, purchase, Old Saxon kōp, Old High German kouf, koufo trader (modern German Kauf), and Old Icelandic kaup bargain, pay; probably representing an early Germanic borrowing from Latin caupō (genitive caupōnis) petty tradesman, huckster, innkeeper.

The early English meaning market, bargain survives in some place names, such as East Cheap and Cheapside. The idiom to live on the cheap is a later development (1888) of a noun construction of the adverb use meaning cheaply. The sense "of little value or esteem, contemptible," is first recorded in 1596.

cheat v. 1440 cheten confiscate, seize, shortened form of acheten, a variant of escheten ESCHEAT. The current sense of deceive or trick is first recorded in 1590, with reference to unscrupulous actions of those who confiscated lands (escheats) for the state. —n. About 1378 chet forfeited property, shortened of achet, a variant of eschet ESCHEAT (property that goes to a lord by forfeit). The sense of a deceptive act appeared about 1641; from the verb. —cheater n. (1607; earlier as a shortening of escheater officer in charge of escheats, 1327).

check n. Probably about 1300 chek a call in the game of chess giving notice that one's move has exposed the opponent's king; borrowed from Old French eschec, eschac, from Arabic shāh (especially in the phrase shāh māt CHECKMATE), from Persian shāh king.

Out of usage in chess came the sense of an adverse event, repulse, rebuff (before 1303) and the sense of a sudden stoppage (1338). The use of a bank check appeared in 1798, from the earlier sense of a receipt used to check forgery or alteration (1706, spelled cheque, probably from exchequer). The meaning of a pattern of squares (about 1400) is a shortening of CHECKER. The check mark is from earlier verb use of check (1885). —v. Probably before 1387 cheken; borrowed from Old French eschequier play chess, put a check to, from eschec, n., check.

checker n. 1389 cheker pattern of squares; earlier, a chess or checkerboard (probably before 1300), and a game of chess or checkers (about 1250); borrowed from Old French eschekier, eschequier chessboard, from eschec CHECK; for suffix see -ER¹. The meaning of a table covered with a checked cloth for counting is found in Anglo-Latin (1179). —v. Probably before 1400 chekeren (implied in checked) to vary with a different color, from cheker chessboard. —checkers n. game. 1712, American English, plural of checker.

checkmate n. Before 1346 chekmat, borrowed from Old French eschecmat, from Arabic shāh māt the king died (a misinterpretation of Persian māta to die, for mat be astonished), from Persian shāh mat the king is astonished or stumped. —v. to put (an opponent's king) in check. Before 1375 chekmaten, developed from chekmat checkmate.

cheek n. Probably before 1200 cheke jaw, jawbone, cheek, developed from Old English cēace (before 899), cēce (before 830); cognate with Middle Low German kāke, kēke jaw, jawbone, and Middle Dutch kāke jaw (modern Dutch kaak), from Proto-Germanic kaukōn*.

cheep v. 1513, a Scottish use of imitative origin. —n. Before 1774, from the verb.

cheer n. Probably before 1200 chere the face, expression or mood shown by the face; later, gladness (before 1393); borrowed from Old French chere face, from Late Latin cara face, countenance, from Greek kārā head. —v. About 1390 cheren comfort oneself, cheer up, developed from chere, n., cheer. —cheers n.pl. 1919, from earlier meaning of a shout of support or encouragement (1720). —cheerful adj. (probably before 1400). —cheery adj. (1448) cheese n. 1186 chese (in surname Chesemangere); earlier ceose (1131); developed from Old English cēse (800) and cȳse (before 1000); borrowed from Latin cāseus cheese. Other languages that derive a term borrowed from Latin cāseus include Old Saxon kāsi, Old High German chāsi, kāsi (modern German Käse), and Middle Dutch cāse, kāse (modern Dutch kaas).

cheesy adj. 1896, cheap, inferior, possibly from earlier slang meaning "showy" (1858), formed from English cheese (1818, probably in an Anglo-Indian phrase the real chīz, borrowed from Urdu chīz thing, from Persian) + -y¹.

cheetah n. 1781, borrowed from Hindustani chītā a hunting leopard, from Sanskrit citraka-s tiger or hunting leopard; literally, spotted, from citrā-s distinctive, marked, bright, clear.

chef n. 1826, head cook, borrowed from French chef, from Old French chief head, CHIEF.

chela n. 1646, New Latin chela claw, from Greek chēlē claw, hoof.

chemical adj. 1576 chymical, formed in English probably from New Latin chimicus (short for Medieval Latin alchimicus of alchemy, from alchimia ALCHEMY) + English -al¹; possibly influenced by French chimique.

chemise n. Probably before 1200, borrowed from Old French chemise, a half-learned development from Late Latin camisia shirt, from Gaulish, which in turn had borrowed it from Proto-Germanic Hamīthjan*.

chemist n. 1562 chymist, chimist alchemist, alteration of al-kemyst ALCHEMIST, influenced by Middle French chimiste alchemist, and Late Greek chymelā ALCHEMY. The modern sense was introduced in 1626. —chemistry n. 1605 chymistrie alchemy, formed from English chymist chemist + -rie -ry. The modern sense was introduced in 1646.

chemo- or (before vowels) chem- a combining form meaning chemistry or chemical, as in chemosynthesis, chemotherapy. Formed by clipping chem(ical) + connecting vowel -o-, on the pattern of bio-, chromo-, etc.

chemotherapy n. 1907, borrowed from German Chemo-therapie (chemo- chemical + Therapie, from Greek therapelā THERAPY); coined by German biochemist Paul Ehrlich.

chenille n. 1738, borrowing of French chenille, from Old French chenille, literally, hairy caterpillar, from Latin canicula little dog, from canis dog, so called from the cord's furry look.

cherish v. Probably before 1325 chersen, later cherisen, cherischen; borrowed from Old French chérisse-, stem of chérir to hold dear, from cher, chier dear, from Latin cārus; see CHARITY; for ending see -ISH².

cheroot n. 1759, probably borrowed from Portuguese charuto cigar, from Tamil curuttu roll (of tobacco), from curul to roll.

cherry n. Probably before 1300, in compound chirston cherry stone; earlier, in surname Chyrimuth (1266). These forms and the later spelling cherie (before 1393) are replacements of Old English ciris, cirse found only in compounds, as cirisbēam cherry tree. The Middle English forms were borrowings of Anglo-French and Old North French cherise (by influence of Old French cerise) though mistaken as plural (thought to be cheri + -se) as pea is a back formation of pease. Old North French cherise was derived from Vulgar Latin ceresia*, cerasia*, from Late Greek kerasā cherry tree, from Greek kerasós cherry tree, possibly Greek kerasós borrowed from a language of Asia Minor.

cherub n. About 1384, one of an order of angels; borrowed from Late Latin cherub (plural cherubim), from Greek cheroub, from Hebrew kerūbh, probably related to Akkadian karābu be gracious. Modern English cherub replaced the earlier cherubin (recorded probably before 1200), which developed from Old English cerubin (recorded before 830). The Old English form was borrowed from Greek cheroubin, cheroubim, plural forms of cheroub.

chess n. Probably before 1300, shortened borrowing from Anglo-French and Old French *esch*es, (earlier) eschecs, plurals of eschec check; see CHECK.

chest n. Before 1200 cheste box; developed from Old English (about 700) cest, cist box, coffer, casket, an early borrowing from Latin cista box, basket, from Greek kístē basket. Other languages that borrowed from Latin cista include Old Frisian and Middle Dutch kiste box, chest, Old High German and Old Icelandic keista.

The sense of part of the body enclosed by ribs is recorded in 1530, but stems from some use of chest in Middle English in reference to the body recorded as early as 1385.

chestnut n. 1519 chesten nut; developed from obsolete chestein (about 1390) and chesteine (probably about 1300); borrowed from Old French chastaigne, from Latin castanea, from Greek kastanéa, chestnut tree from kástanon chestnut, probably borrowed from a language of Asia Minor.

chevron n. 1395, heraldic device of a bar bent like two meeting rafters, borrowed from Old French chevron rafter, from Vulgar Latin capriōnem*, from Latin caper (genitive capri) goat; perhaps from the angular shape of its hind legs. Similar semantic developments are found in French: chevalet easel (from cheval horse), poutre beam (from a word for mare), bélier battering ram (from the word for ram).

chew v. Probably before 1200 chewen, developed from Old English cēowan (before 1000); cognate with Middle Low German keuwen to chew, modern Dutch kauwen, Old High German kiuwan (modern German kauen), and Old Icelandic tyggva, from Proto-Germanic keuwjanan*.

chicanery n. 1609, borrowed from French chicanerie trickery, from Middle French chicanerie, from chicaner quibble, confuse with crafty argument; of uncertain origin; for suffix see -ERY.

Chicano n. About 1954, borrowed from a Mexican Spanish dialectal pronunciation of Mexicano Mexican, with the loss of the initial unaccented syllable me.

chick n. 1342 cheke young bird; earlier as surname (1214); shortened form of chiken CHICKEN. —chickweed n. 1373 chekwede, replacing earlier chikenmete, chicnemet (before 1300), developed from Old English ācena mete, ācena mete chicken food.

chickadee n. 1838, American English; imitative of its call.

chicken n. Before 1200 chikene young chicken, and probably also any chicken; later cheken (probably before 1325) and chyken (before 1382); developed from Old English ācen (about 950) earlier ācen*; cognate with Middle Dutch kieken, kiekjen, kūken young fowl, chicken (modern Dutch kuiken), Middle Low German kuken (modern German Kūken), from Proto-Germanic kiukinān*.

The word was applied in a disparaging sense in Middle English and had the meaning of cowardly person in the phrase cherles chekyn probably before 1400. —v. Also, chicken out. 1943, American English, from the noun. —chicken pox 1727–38, possibly in allusion to the mild form of the disease when compared with small pox.

chicle n. 1889, American English (in the compound chicle-gum), borrowed from Mexican Spanish chicle, from Nahuatl tzictli.

chicory n. 1605 chicory, as a replacement (influenced by French chicorée) of earlier cicoree (before 1450); borrowed from Middle French cichorée, from Latin cichorēum, from Greek kichōrion, kichōreia (plural) endive, of uncertain origin.

chide v. Probably 1150 chiden scold, nag, rail; developed from Old English (about 1000) ādan to quarrel.

chief n. About 1300 chef, chief, borrowed from Old French chef, chief leader, ruler, head (of something), along with other forms such as Spanish and Portuguese capo, Italian capo suggest a Late Latin capum*, from Latin caput (genitive capitis) head. —adj. About 1300 chef, chief highest in rank, from the noun. —chief justice (about 1395) chieftain n. Before 1338 cheftayne ruler, chief, head (of something), and chevetaine (about 1300); borrowed through Anglo-French chiefteyn, cheftain, and directly from Old French chevetain, chevetaine, from Late Latin capitāneus commander, from Latin caput (genitive capitis) head.

chiffon n. 1756, feminine finery, as ribbon or lace; borrowed from French chiffon, from chiffe a rag, flimsy stuff, of uncertain origin. The meaning in pastry cooking, as in lemon chiffon pie or chiffon cake, is first recorded in 1929.

chiffonier n. 1765, borrowed from French chiffonnier chest of drawers for needlework, cloth (but originally meaning rag collector), from chiffon CHIFFON.

chigger n. 1756, American English, variant of earlier chigoe, especially in West Indies (1668); borrowed from the Indian name in the West Indies possibly of Carib origin, or from a West African language; the variant chigger is almost surely influenced by, if not borrowed from, a West African language (compare Yoruba jígà chigger, Wolof jiga insect, and Tshiluba njiga sand flea).

chilblain n. Usually, chilblains. 1547, formed from English CHILL + blain an inflamed swelling or sore on the skin; Old English blegen (about 1000), from Proto-Germanic blajinōn*.

child n. About 1175 child, developed from Old English cild (about 750), cognate with Old Swedish kulder, kolder litter (modern Swedish and Norwegian kull), Danish kuld offspring, brood, Gothic kilthei womb, inkilthō pregnant.

The original Old English nominative plural was the same as the singular cild, but about 975 the plural cildru (genitive cildra) developed, which became children, about 1175, through influence of the plural ending -en, as in brethren. —childbed n. (probably before 1200) —childbirth n. (probably before 1450) —childhood n. (probably before 1200) —childish adj. Old English cildisc (before 1000). —child's play (about 1350) chili or chilli n. 1662 chille, borrowed from Mexican Spanish chile, chilli, from Nahuatl chilli, native name for these peppers. The word was also applied to chile con carne, or a dish like it, as early as 1846.

chill v. About 1378 chillyng gerund of chillen become cold; formed on chele, chile, n., coldness of weather, frost (about 1175), developed from Old English cele, ciele (before 830), from Proto-Germanic kaliz*, related to ceald, cald COLD. —n. 1601, from the verb. —chilly adj. 1570, formed from English chill + *-y*¹.

chime n. Probably before 1300 chymbe cymbal; later, set of bells (1453), this latter meaning from chymbe bell chime bells (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French chimbe, a back formation of chimble, learned borrowing from Latin cymbalum CYMBAL. —v. About 1340, from the noun.

chimera or chimaera n. Before 1387 chimera; borrowed from Medieval Latin chimera and from Old French chimère, both forms from Latin Chimaera, from Greek chímaira monster, supposed to have been a personification of the snow or winter; originally, she-goat, feminine form of chímaros he-goat (that is one winter old), related to cheíma, cheimōn winter season. The meaning "wild fantasy" is first recorded in 1587. —chimeric adj. (1653) —chimerical adj. (1638) chimney n. About 1280 chymenay, in figurative uses meaning "the furnace of hell, the mouth of a volcano"; later, a chimney (about 1330), and a fireplace (about 1380); borrowed from Old chimpanzee n. 1738, borrowed from a West African Bantu language of Angola, perhaps from Tshiluba kivili-chimpenze ape.

French cheminee fireplace, chimney, from Late Latin camīnāta fireplace, room with a fireplace, from Latin camīnus hearth, oven, flue, from Greek káminos oven, furnace. —chimney sweep (1611; earlier, chimney sweeper, about 1500).

chin n. Probably before 1200, developed from Old English cin (probably before 832) and earlier in the compound cinberg (about 725); cognate with Old Frisian zin, kin (in compounds) chin, Old Saxon kinni chin, jaw, Old High German kinni (modern German Kinn), Old Icelandic kinn cheek, and Gothic kinnus cheek. —v. 1599, from the noun. The meaning of to talk, gossip first appears in American English (1883) and a gymnastic exercise (1903).

china n. 1579, used in compound China-dishes; later, China (1653); borrowed from Persian chīnī China porcelain, manufactured in China and brought to Europe in the 1500's by the Portuguese.

chinch n. 1616, bedbug; borrowed from Spanish and Portuguese chinche bug, from Latin cimex (accusative cimicem) bedbug.

chinchilla n. 1593, borrowed from Spanish chinchilla, literally, little bug, probably alteration influenced by chinche bug, of a word from Aymara or Quechua.

Chinese adj. 1577, from the name of the country China (1555, of uncertain origin, but found in Sanskrit Cīnā-s the Chinese, possibly in allusion to Chin Shihnnangdi, who ruled from 246 to 207 B.C.) + -ESE; formed in English probably by influence of French chinois Chinese.

chink¹ n. crack 1535, perhaps an altered form of chine (before 1382); found in chin, chine cleft, split, crack, Old English (about 888) cinu, related to cinan to crack, split, gape; cognate with Old Saxon and Old High German kīnan to burst open, sprout, Gothic uskeinan to sprout out, and Old High German kīmo sprout (modern German Keim germ, bud, sprout). —v. 1552, to crack, later, in American English, to fill in cracks (1748).

chink² n. 1581, sharp sound; 1573, pieces of money, cash in coins; probably imitative of the sound. —v. 1589, probably from the noun.

chinook n. 1860, American English, said to be from the jargon of Hudson Bay Company traders in reference to the wind that blew from an encampment of Chinook Indians, from Salishan Tsinúk.

chinos n. pl. 1943, borrowed from American Spanish chino toasted; earlier male Indian of white parent, in reference to light-brown skin color (feminine china), from Quechua čina female animal, servant.

chintz n. 1719; originally a plural form of chint a printed calico from India (1614); borrowed from Hindi chint, from Sanskrit citrā-s distinctive, marked, bright, clear. —chintzy adj. 1851, unfashionable, cheap, petty (because the fabric was inexpensive); formed from English chintz + *-y*¹.

chip n. Before 1338, probably developed from Old English cipp, cyp small piece of wood, log, apparently borrowed (like Old Saxon kipp stick, staff, Old High German kipfa wagon pole, and Old Icelandic keppr stick) from Latin cippus stake, post. —v. break off in small pieces. 1425 chuppen, probably developed from Old English forcippian to cut off, which corresponds to East Frisian kuppen to cut, Middle Low German kuppen to hatch (modern German kuppen cut the edges off, clip); probably ultimately related to Old English cipp small piece of wood, chip.

chipmunk n. 1841, American English; earlier, chitmunk (1832); borrowed from Algonquian (probably Ojibwa) at-chitamón squirrel, literally, one who descends trees headlong.

chipper adj. 1837, perhaps a form of English dialect kipper nimble, frisky; or associated with chipper, v. to twitter, possibly imitative of the sound of birds.

chiropodist n. 1785, one who treats diseases of the hands and feet, formed in English from Greek cheir (genitive cheirós) hand + podós (genitive podós) FOOT + English -ist.

chiropactic adj. 1898, American English, of or having to do with treatment by spinal manipulation, probably coined by a patient of Daniel Palmer, founder of the Chiropactic School, from Greek cheir (genitive cheirós) hand + praktikós practical, freely translated as “done by hand.” —n. 1903, from the adjective. —chiropactor n. 1904, formed from English chiropactic (ic) + *-or*².

chirp v. 1566; earlier cyrpinge, chyrrpyinge, gerund (1440), perhaps variant of chirk, chirken to creak, chirp (1380); developed from Old English cearcian to creak (about 1000), related to cracian to CRACK. —n. 1802, from the verb.

chirrup v. 1579, implied in chirruping gerund; probably alteration of chirp. —n. a chirp. 1788, from the verb.

chisel n. 1323, borrowed from Old French chisel, cisel a chisel, from Vulgar Latin cisellum*, a variant form of caesellum (compare Italian cesello) a cutting tool, diminutive from Latin caesus (genitive caesus) a cutting, from caes-, stem of caedere to cut. —v. 1509, from the noun. The slang sense of to cheat is first recorded in 1808, chizzel. —chiseler n. (1918) chit n. 1776, shortened form of Anglo-Indian chitty note, certificate (1673), borrowed from Hindi chitthi, from Sanskrit citā-s distinctive, marked.

chit-chat n. 1710, reduplication of chat; influenced by chit twitter (before 1639), chit-chit-chat a squeaking (before 1618). —v. 1821, from the noun and by shortening of chitter-chatter.

chitin n. 1836, borrowed from French chitine, from Greek chitōn coat of mail, tunic.

chitter v. Probably before 1200 chiteren, imitative of the call of birds. —chitter-chatter n. 1712, reduplication of chatter influenced by chitter; v. 1928, from the noun.

chitterlings n. pl. About 1280 cheterlingis; earlier, in a surname Chiterling; perhaps from Old English cīeterlingas*; for suffix see -LING. The variants chitlins (1845) and chitlings, (1880) are also recorded with a sense “shreds, tatters.”

chivalry n. About 1385 chivalrye; earlier chevalrie body of warriors, knighthood (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French chevalerie horsemanship, from chevalier knight; for suffix -ry see -ERY. —chivalrous adj. Probably about 1350 chevalrous; borrowed from Old French chevalerous, from chevalier; for suffix see -OUS.

chive n. About 1390 chyve, also cyve, cive, probably a transferred sense from earlier civey, cive “sauce containing chives or onions” (apparently before 1300); and in part a borrowing of Anglo-French chive; both from Old French cive small species of onion, from Latin cēpa onion.

chlor- a combining form, the form of chloro- before vowels, as in chloride (1812, on analogy of oxide).

chloral n. 1838, borrowed as French chloral, formed from chlor(ine) + al(cohol); coined after the earlier ethal and is now found chiefly in the commercial preparation chloral hydrate (1874).

chlorine n. 1810, formed in English from Greek chlōrós pale green, greenish yellow + English *-ine*²; discovered in 1774 and called oxymuriatic acid gas. Chlorine was named after the color of the gas. —chlorinate v. 1856, formed from English chlorine + *-ate*².

chloro- a combining form meaning: 1) green, as in chlorophyll. 2) chlorine, as in chloroform. Borrowed from Greek chlōro-, combining form of chlōrós pale green, greenish yellow, related to chlōē young grass.

chloroform n. 1838, borrowed from French chloroforme (chloro- chlorine + -forme, from formique formic (acid)). —v. 1848, from the noun.

chlorophyll or chlorophyl n. 1819, borrowed from French chlorophyle, (formed from Greek chlōrós pale green, CHLORO- + phýllon leaf). —chloroplast n. 1887, shortened in the original German from chloroplastid (chloro- + plastid).

chock n. 1674 chuck lumpy piece of wood, apparently borrowed from Old North French choque log (Picard dialect choke), Old French çoche log, block of wood, related to Old French souche stump, from Gaulish tsukka*. The latter corresponds to Old High German stoc stump (ancient st- changing to ts- in Celtic); see STOCK. —chock-full adj. Probably before 1400 chokkefull crammed full, formed from chokken, in the phrase chokken togeder crammed together + full. Middle English chokken was borrowed from Old French choquier collide, thrust.

chocolate n. 1604, drink made from the seeds of the cacao tree; later, paste or cake made by roasting and grinding the seeds (1640); borrowed from Mexican Spanish chocolate, from Nahuatl chocolatl, now written xocolatl, literally, bitter water.

choice n. About 1300 chois, borrowed from Old French chois, from choisir to choose, from a Germanic source (compare choir n. 1643, spelling alteration (influenced by Latin chorus and by French choeur) of Middle English quyre (about 1405), or earlier quer, queor the part of a church where the choir sings (about 1300); borrowed from Old French cuor choir of a church, from Medieval Latin chorus the chancel; also church singers; in Latin chorus band of dancers; see CHORUS.

Gothic kaujan examine, prove, taste, derivative of kisan (CHOOSE). The borrowed form chois replaced early Middle English cure, kire, developed from Old English cyre (from Proto-Germanic kuzis*). —adj. About 1350, from the noun.

choke v. Before 1387 choken, variant of earlier cheken, (about 1303), a shortened form of acheken (probably before 1200), developed from Old English ācēcan (from Proto-Germanic us-keukōjanan*) to suffocate, choke (about 1000). —n. 1562, from the verb. —choker n. 1928 a necklace or ribbon worn close about the throat, developed from earlier meaning of a neckerchief or high collar (1848).

choler n. About 1390 colre, colere, one of the humors, bile (supposed to cause irascibility or temper), also a digestive disorder (before 1382); borrowed from Old French colre bile, anger, learned borrowing of Late Latin cholera bile; see CHOLERA. —choleric adj. 1340 colrik irascible, temperamental; borrowed from Old French colerique, colorik, learned borrowing of Late Latin cholericus bilious, from Greek cholerikós bilious.

cholera n. 1565–78; earlier probably not differentiated from, and perhaps, often the same as choler (before 1382); borrowed from Middle French choléra, or directly from Latin cholera, from Greek cholérā a digestive disorder, from cholē bile; see GALL¹ bile.

cholesterol n. 1894, formed from English cholester(in) from French cholestrine (from Greek cholē bile + stereós solid, stiff) + English -ol (chemical suffix).

choose v. 1545, respelling of chosen (probably about 1390), variant form of earlier cheosen (probably before 1200), chesen (probably about 1150), and cesen (1123); developed from Old English cēosan (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian ziāsa, kiāsa choose, Old Saxon kiosan, Old High German kiosan (modern German kiesen), Old Icelandic kjōsa, and Gothic kisan choose, from Proto-Germanic keusanan*. —choosy or choosey adj. 1862, American English, formed from choose + *-y*¹. Choose is only indirectly related to choice, since the latter came into Middle English from Old French, and is unknown in Old English, though both are ultimately Germanic.

chop¹ v. cut into pieces. Before 1376, choppen cut with a quick and heavy blow, probably early variant of chappen CHAP¹ crack open; not found in Old English. —n. Before 1376, probably developed from chappen, v. The change in vowel has been explained as analogous to the shift in strap/strop. —chopper n. 1552, formed from English *chop*¹ + *-er*¹. The meaning of a helicopter is first recorded in 1951. —choppy adj. 1867; earlier full of chops or clefts (1605), formed from English *chop*¹ + *-y*¹.

chop² n. Usually, chops, pl. the jaws. About 1400 choppe, variant cheppe (1373), perhaps related to CHOP¹.

chop³ v. shift or veer quickly. Before 1438 (implied in the gerund chopping bargaining), apparently a variant spelling of obsolete chap to bargain, barter; developed from earlier chapen, (probably before 1200), variant of chepen, developed from Old English cēapian to buy. In the 1500's chop and change to barter and exchange, was generalized to "change about," which developed into "to change in direction suddenly" in the 1600's. The expression chop logic to bandy logic, argue (1577) survives from the early sense of chop to exchange, barter. —choppy adj. 1865, formed from English *chop*³ + *-y*¹.

chopsticks n.pl. 1 pair of sticks used to raise food to the mouth. 1699, formed from Chinese Pidgin English chop quick (related to Cantonese kap) + English sticks, a free translation of Chinese k'wai tse quick ones, nimble ones. 2 simple piece played on the piano, with forefingers. 1893, probably from the resemblance of the fingers to sticks.

chop suey 1888, American English, borrowed from Chinese (Cantonese dialect) tsap sui odds and ends.

choral adj. 1587, borrowed from Middle French choral or Medieval Latin choralis belonging to a chorus or choir, from Latin chorus CHORUS; for suffix see -AL¹.

chorale n. 1841, borrowed from German Choral metrical hymn developed in the reformed church of Germany, shortened form of Choralgesang, originally, plain song, choral song; translation of Medieval Latin cantus choralis (Latin cantus song, CHANT + Medieval Latin choralis CHORAL).

chord¹ n. musical notes sounded together. 1608, alteration (influenced by *chord*²) of Middle English cord (before 1398), shortened form of ACCORD, n. English *chord*² and Latin chorda string of a musical instrument have influenced this word by association of form and meaning.

chord² n. 1543, earlier corde (before 1400), structure in an animal resembling a string, alteration (influenced by Greek chorde gut, string) of CORD. The meaning of a straight line connecting two points on a circumference is found in 1570 (earlier corde 1551), and that of feeling, emotions in 1784. —chordate n., adj. 1889, from earlier Chordata phylum of animals having a spinal cord (1880), from Latin chorda chord + *-ate*¹.

chore n. 1751 (recorded earlier as verb, 1746), variant of chare CHAR² odd job.

chorea n. 1806, shortened from New Latin chorea (sic chorus) Sancti Viti St. Vitus dance (1621), from Latin chorēa, from Greek chorēā dance, from chorós. St. Vitus's or St. Vitus dance was originally a form of mass hysterical behavior in Medieval Europe, characterized by convulsive dancing, extended to the nervous disease (1600's).

choreography n. Before 1789 choreography, borrowed from French chorégraphie from Greek chorēā dance, from chorós chorus; for combining form see -GRAPHY. —choreograph

v. 1943, American English, probably borrowed from French chorégrapheur (1827), influenced by English choreography, or perhaps a back formation of choreograph. —choreographer n. 1886; earlier choreograph (1876) and choreographist (1878); formed from choreograph(y) + -er, by influence of French chorégrapheur.

chorister n. 1595, earlier coruster (1563); alteration (influenced by Middle French choristre) of Middle English queristre (before 1400); borrowed from Anglo-French cuieristre, cuieriste, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin chorista chorister, from Latin chorus chorus; for suffixes see -IST and *-ER*¹.

chortle v. 1872, a blend of chuckle and snort. —n. 1903, from the verb.

chorus n. 1561, person who speaks the prologue and comments upon events in a drama; borrowed from Late Latin chorus choir, from Latin chorus dance, band of dancers and singers, from Greek chorós. The sense of a musical choir appears in 1656.

Apparently there is no connection between this borrowing from Latin and the earlier Old and Middle English chor a group or company, choir, a troupe of dancers (1200). —v. 1703, from the noun.

chow n. 1 Slang. food. 1856, American English, shortened from earlier Chinese Pidgin English chow-chow food (1795), perhaps reduplication of Chinese cha or tsa mixed, Pidgin chow-chow mixture. 2 breed of dog, originally from China. 1889, earlier chow-chow (1886), of uncertain origin.

chowder n. 1751, American English, apparently borrowed from French chaudière pot, from Late Latin caldāria, calidāria CALDRON. The practice of making chowder spread from the fishermen of Brittany to Newfoundland and thence to Nova Scotia and New England.

chow mein n. 1903, American English, borrowed from Chinese ch'ao mien fried flour.

chrism n. About 1250 crisme, developed from Old English (before 1000) crisma; borrowed from Late Latin chrīisma, from Greek chrīisma an anointing, unction, from chrīein anoint, smear.

Christ n. Middle English and Old English crist the anointed one, Jesus Christ, (about 830, earlier 675, according to the Peterborough Chronicle); borrowed from Latin Christus, from Greek Chrīstós, noun use of chrīstós anointed, from chrīein anoint. The Greek is a translation of Hebrew māshīah anointed (of the Lord), MESSIAH. The more frequent name in Old English is Hælend healer, Savior. Pronunciation of Old and Middle English crist with a “long” i is a result of Irish missionary work in England during the 600’s and 700’s. In the late 1300’s it became common to write Christ and words such as Christian with a capital letter, but the practice did not become fixed until the 1600’s, and the spelling Christ did not become standard until after 1500.

christen v. Probably about 1200 cristnen to baptize; developed from Old English (before 900) cristnian make Christian, from cristen Christian; borrowed from Latin chrīstiānus CHRISTIAN. —Christendom n. Old English (before 900) cristendōm condition of being Christian, Christianity, formed from cristen Christian (from Latin chrīstiānus) + -dōm -dom.

Christian n., adj. Middle English and Old English cristen (about 750); borrowed from Latin chrīstiānus, from Greek chrīstiānós, from Chrīstós Christ. —Christianity n. Probably before 1300 cristiante, borrowed from Old French crestienté, from Late Latin chrīstiānitātem (nominative chrīstiānitās), from Latin chrīstiānus Christian; for suffix see -ITY. —Christianize v. 1593, formed from English Christian + ize, perhaps influenced by Medieval Latin christianizare.

Christmas n. 1100 Cristesmesssa, literally, Christ’s festival, Christmas Day, found in Old English Cristes mæsse (Cristes, genitive of Crist Christ and mæsse festival, feast day), MASS²; apparently spelled with a capital C from its first recorded use. —Christmastide, n. (1626) —Christmas tree (1835, earlier a Christmas decoration, 1789). —Christmas Eve (probably before 1300 Cristenmesse even).

chrom- a combining form of chromo- before vowels, as in chrominance (the difference between colors of equal luminance or brightness).

chromatic adj. 1603, of or relating to a kind of four-tone chord in Greek music; borrowed (possibly by influence of earlier Middle and Old French chromatique) from Greek chrōmatikós, from chrōma (genitive chrōmatos) complexion, character, style of music; for suffix see -IC. The adjective sense “of or relating to color or colors” appears in 1831, from the noun meaning “science of color” (about 1790), probably from the obsolete “art of coloring” (1695), recorded in Middle English cromatik in a figurative sense relating to color, 1464, from Medieval Latin chromaticus. —chromatic scale (before 1789, chromatic tones, 1680). —chromatin n. 1882, formed in English from Greek chrōma color + English suffix *-in*².

chrome n. chromium 1800, borrowed from French chrome, from Greek chrōma color; so called from the brilliant colors of its compounds. —v. 1876, from the noun.

chromium n. 1807, New Latin, formed from French chrome + New Latin -ium.

chromo- a combining form meaning color, as in chromography, chromodynamics, chromosphere. Adapted from Greek chrōma color. The combining form of Greek chrōma was chrōmato-, based on the stem as seen in the genitive chrōmatos; this appears in some borrowings, such as chromatic, and coinages such as chromatography.

chromosome n. 1889, borrowed from German Chromosom, from Greek chrōma color + sōma body, -SOME³; so-called because the threadlike structures contain a substance that stains readily with basic dyes.

chron- a combining form of chrono- before vowels, as in chronic.

chronic adj. Probably before 1425 cronic, borrowed from Old French cronique, learned borrowing from Latin chronicus, from chronicle n. 1303 kronikel, (about 1330) cronikle, cronicle, kronikel; borrowed from Anglo-French cronicle, alteration of Old French cronique, learned borrowing from Latin chronica, abstracted from the Greek phrase chronikà biblía books of annals, in which chronikà is neuter plural of chronikós pertaining to time, CHRONIC. The ending -icle may have been introduced in the Anglo-French cronicle on the analogy of words like article. —v. Probably about 1400 croniclen, from the noun. —chronicler n. Before 1420 cronicler, formed from Middle English cronicle + -*er*¹.

Greek chronikós pertaining to time, from chrónos time; for suffix see -IC.

chrono- a combining form meaning time, as in chronology, chronometer (before 1735). Borrowed from Greek chróno-, combining form of chrónos time.

chronology n. 1593 (but implied before 1572 in chronologer and perhaps influenced by Middle French chronologie, 1579); borrowed from New Latin chronologia, from Greek chrónos time; for suffix see -LOGY. —chronological adj. 1614, formed from English chronology + -ic and -*al*¹.

chrysalis n. 1601, borrowed from Latin chrýsallis, from Greek chrýsallís golden pupa of a butterfly, from chrýsós gold. The variant chrysalid appears in 1621, perhaps borrowed from Middle French chrysalide, 1593.

chrysanthemum n. 1551, borrowed, perhaps by influence of Middle French chrysanthemon, from Latin chrýsanthemum, from Greek chrýsánthemón, literally, gold flower (chrýsós gold + ánthemón flower, for ánthos flower).

chub n. About 1450 chobe, of unknown origin.

chubby adj. 1611, short and thick like a chub; later, round-faced, plump (1722), formed from English chub + -*y*¹. —chubbiness n. 1850, formed from English chubby + -ness.

chuck¹ v. toss. 1593, variant of chock give a blow under the chin (1583); perhaps borrowed from Middle French choquer to jolt, SHOCK¹. —n. 1611, perhaps borrowed from Middle French choc a knock or blow.

chuck² n. 1674, chunk of wood or meat, variant of CHOCK, and perhaps CHUNK; the meaning of a cut of shoulder meat is first recorded in 1723, device for holding a piece of work in a machine chock (1703), later chuck (1807). —chuck wagon (1890, American English) chuckle v. 1598, probably frequentative form of earlier Middle English chukken make a clucking noise (1390); for suffix see -LE³; chukken is also the source of chuck, v. (1598) laugh to oneself, which may be the source of chuckle; all probably of imitative origin. —n. Before 1754, from the verb.

chug n. 1866, imitative of a sound such as a thump or that from a steam engine. —v. 1896, from the noun.

chum n. 1684, roommate, in British students' slang, suggested as a form of chamber-fellow (1580) roommate. —chummy adj. 1884, from English chum + -*y*¹.

chunk n. 1691, possibly nasalized variant of CHUCK² cut of meat. —chunky adj. 1751, American English, formed from English chunk + -*y*¹.

church n. Probably before 1200 chirche, developed from Old English cirice public place of worship, Christians collectively (about 750), an early borrowing (like Old Frisian zerke, ziurke church, Old Saxon kirika, and Old High German kirihha), from Greek kýriakòn dôma the Lord's house, from kyrios master, from kýros power. The phonetic spelling church for Middle English chirche began to appear at the end of the 1200's, and became established in the 1500's. —churchman n. (1259) —churchwarden n. (1443, earlier churchward sacristan, before 1121) —churchyard n. (1137) churl n. Probably about 1200 cherl, developed from Old English ceorl man, husband (before 800); later, freeman of the lowest rank (before 1000); cognate with Old Frisian zerl man, fellow, Middle Low German kerle (modern German Karl), Old High German karal man, husband, lover, (modern German Karl, proper name), and Old Icelandic karl man, old man, from Proto-Germanic keralaz/karlaz*.

The meaning of rude, surly person appeared in Middle English about 1250. —churlish adj. Before 1382, developed from Old English clerlisc, ceorlisc (before 1000 ceorl churl + -isc -ish¹).

churn n. About 1350 chirne; earlier, kirne (1339), developed from Old English cyrin (about 1000); cognate with Middle Low German kerne, kirne churn, Middle Dutch kerne (modern Dutch karnen), and Old Icelandic kirna, kjarni, from Proto-Germanic kernjōn*. —v. About 1440 chyrnen, from the noun.

chute¹ n. inclined trough, tube. 1804, American English, rapid fall or descent of water, borrowing of French chute, cheûte fall, and replacing earlier shoot (before 1613); alterations of Old French cheoite fall, from Gallo-Romance cadēta*, feminine past participle of cadēre* to fall, from Latin cadere.

chute² n. parachute. 1920, shortened from PARACHUTE.

chutney n. 1813, borrowed from Hindi chatnī.

chutzpah n. 1892 chutzbah, borrowed from Yiddish khutspe impudence, gall, from Hebrew hutzpāh.

chyle n. 1541, borrowed from Middle French chyle, from Late Latin chylus, from Greek chylós (earlier chylós*) juice, chyle. Compare CHYME.

chyme n. 1 Probably before 1425 chime, chyme any of various bodily fluids; borrowed from Middle French chyme, from Latin chymus. 2 1681 chyme, earlier chymus (1607) semi-liquid mass of food in the stomach; borrowed from Latin chymus, from Greek chymós (earlier chymós*) juice, from the stem of cheîn to pour; differentiated by the Greek physician Galen (130–200 A.D.) from CHYLE as being natural (i.e., semi-digested) juice.

ciborium n. 1651, borrowed from the special use in Medieval Latin of earlier Latin ciborium cup, from Greek kibōrion cup, originally, cup-shaped seed vessel of the Egyptian water lily.

cicada n. Before 1387, borrowed from Latin cicāda tree cricket.

-cide¹ a combining form meaning killer, and -cide² a combining form meaning (the act of) killing; often the same words can be cited for the two derivations and the two meanings (homicide, fratricide, etc.), but occasional examples such as insecticide illustrate only the meaning of killer. The forms were the same in Old French and Middle French with -cide meaning “killer,” a borrowing of Latin -cida and French -cide meaning “the killing” from Latin -cidium. The Latin forms are derived from -cidere, the usual form in compounds of caedere to cut, kill.

cider n. Probably about 1280 sider, before 1325 cidar, before 1400 cidre strong drink, borrowed from Old French sīdre pear or apple cider (earlier cīdre), from Late Latin sīcera, from Greek sīkera.

cigar n. 1730, borrowed from Spanish cigarro, of uncertain origin; perhaps derived from Spanish cigarra grasshopper (by comparison with the dark cylindrical shape of this insect), ultimately from Latin cicāda CICADA; or possibly from Mayan sīc tobacco, (and by extension) cigar, or its derivative sicar to perfume, smoke.

cigarette n. 1835, American English, borrowed from French cigarette, diminutive form of cigare, from Spanish cigarro CIGAR.

cilia n. pl. 1794, hairlike projections. New Latin cilia, plural of earlier cilium eyelid (1715), from Latin cilium eyelid, cover, probably a back formation from supercilium eyebrow, ridge; see SUPERCILIOUS.

cinch n. 1859 sinche, American English, replacing earlier English surcingle, cingle; borrowed from Spanish cincha girth, from Latin cinctus (genitive cinctūs) and cingula saddle-girth, girdle, from cingere to bind, gird; see CINCTURE. The sense of a sure or easy thing; dead certainty (1898) is a further extension of a strong or sure hold (1888). —v. 1866, fix securely with a cinch, from the noun.

cincture n. 1587, process of girding, specifically in a ceremony in which a sword and belt is put on; borrowed from Latin cinctūra girdle, from cinctus, past participle of cingere to bind, gird.

cinder n. 1530, earlier, cyndre ashes (about 1400), slag of metal, dross, variant of synder (before 1398), and Synderhelle a place name (1239); developed from Old English sinder (before 800), cognate with Old Saxon sinder slag, dross, Old High German sintar (modern German Sinter), Old Icelandic sindr, from Proto-Germanic sindran*.

cinema n. 1899 cinéma motion-picture projector; borrowing of French cinéma, shortened form of cinématographe motion-picture projector and camera. Anglicized cinema is first recorded in 1909, the sense motion-picture theater (1913), and a motion picture (1922). —cinematic adj. 1927, Anglicized form of French cinématique (1917, used earlier in studies of motion, 1834).

cinematography n. 1897, apparently derived from cinematograph + *-y*³ (on analogy of photograph, photography). Cinematography motion-picture projector (1896), is a borrowing of French cinématographe from Greek kīnēma (genitive kīnēmatos) motion + French -graphie -graph.

cinnabar n. Probably 1440 cynabare; borrowed from Latin cinnabaris, from Greek kinnābari.

cinnamon n. About 1390 cynamome, borrowed from Old French cinnamome, from Latin cinnamōmum, cinnamon, from Greek kinnāmōmon, kīnnamon, from Phoenician (compare Hebrew qinnāmōn cinnamon).

cipher n. 1399 siphre zero, borrowed from Middle French cifre, from Medieval Latin cifra, ciphra, from Arabic ṣifr empty, null, zero, a loan translation of Sanskrit śūnyā-s empty. The sense of secret writing, cryptographic code is first recorded in English in 1528, about the time when cipher was extended to mean any of the numerals, not just zero. —v. 1530, from the noun.

circa adv., prep. 1861, borrowed from Latin circā, adv., around, from circum round about; see CIRCUM-.

circadian adj. 1959, formed in English from Latin circā around + diēs day + English -an.

circle n. About 1300 cerle figure of a circle; borrowed from Old French cerle, from Latin circulus, diminutive form of circus circle, ring, probably from Greek kirkos, an altered form of earlier kirkos ring. Old English (about 1000) circul astronomical sphere or orbit, also borrowed from Latin circulus, was a separate borrowing and, while recorded as late as 1104, did not influence the formation or later borrowing from Old French. —v. About 1385 cerlen, from the noun.

circuit n. Before 1382 circuyt, borrowed from Old French circuit, from Latin circuitus (genitive circuitūs) a going around, from stem of circuīre, circumīre go around (circum around + īre to go). The sense path of an electric current is first recorded in 1746. —v. About 1410, from the noun. —circuitous adj. 1664, borrowed from Medieval Latin circuitōsus, from Latin circuitus (genitive circuitūs) a going around; for suffix see OUS. —circuitry n. 1946, formed from English circuit + -ry.

circular adj. 1370 circuler, borrowed from Anglo-French circuler, Old French circulier, learned borrowing from Latin circulāris, from circulus CIRCLE; for suffix see -AR. —n. 1560 circuler a circular figure, from the adjective. The sense of notice circulated or distributed is first recorded in 1818. —circularity n. 1582, formed from English circular + -ity. —circularize v. 1799, formed from English circular + -ize.

circulate v. 1545, from earlier circulate, past participle (1471); borrowed from Latin circulātus, past participle of circulāre make circular, encircle, from circulus CIRCLE. —circulation n. 1440 circulacion, borrowed from Middle French circulation, and directly from Latin circulatiōnem (nominative circulatiō), from circulāre circulate; for suffix see -TION. —circulatory adj. 1605 (perhaps 1597), borrowed from French circulatoire, and directly from Latin circulātorius of circulation, from circulātor one that circulates, from circulāre.

circum- a prefix meaning around, on all sides, as in circumpolar = around the pole. Many words came into English with the Latin prefix, such as circumnavigate, which was later abstracted as if an English formation. Borrowed from Latin circum around, about, originally accusative of circus circle.

circumcise v. About 1250, borrowed from Latin circumcīsus, past participle of circumcīdere, literally, cut around (circum- around + caedere cut). — circumcision n. Probably before 1200, borrowed from Latin circumcīsiōnem (nominative circumcīsiō), from circumcī-, stem of circumcīdere; for suffix see -ION.

circumference n. Before 1393, borrowed (possibly by influence of Old French circonférence), from Latin circumferentia, from circumferēs (genitive circumferentis), present participle of circumferre to carry around (circum- around + ferre to carry).

circumflex n. circumflex accent. Before 1577 as an adjective, borrowed from Latin circumflexus bent around, past participle of circumflectere (circum- around + flectere to bend, FLEX). In reference to the accent mark, the word is a loan translation from Greek perispōmenos drawn around (in allusion to its shape); a term used by the grammarian Dionysius of Halicarnassus to designate the rising and falling tone on certain Greek vowels.

circumlocution n. Before 1401, borrowed from Latin circumlocūtiōnem (circum- around + locūtiōnem, nominative locūtiō a speaking, from stem of loquī speak); for suffix see -TION. Latin circumlocūtiō was a loan translation of Greek periphrasis circumlocution. The term in English may have been influenced by Old French circonlocution.

circumnavigate v. 1634, borrowed from Latin circumnāvigāre to sail around; for suffix see -ATE¹.

circumscribe v. About 1385, borrowed from Latin circumscribere to draw a line around, limit, confine (circum- around + scribere write).

circumspect adj. Before 1420, borrowed from Latin circumspectus, past participle of circumspicere look around, take heed (circum- around + specere to look). — circumspection n. Before 1387, borrowed from Latin circumspectiōnem (nominative circumspectiō), from circumspicere look around; for suffix see -TION.

circumstance n. Probably before 1200, borrowed from Latin circumstantia surrounding condition, from circumstāns (genitive circumstantis), present participle of circumstāre stand around (circum- around + stāre to stand). — circumstantial adj. 1600, formed in English from Latin circumstantia + English -al¹. — circumstantial evidence (1736) circumvent v. About 1450, borrowed from Latin circumventus, past participle of circumvenire get around, deceive (circum- around + venire come). The sense of get the better of appeared before 1564. — circumvention n. 1424, borrowed from Latin circumventiōnem (nominative circumventiō), from circumvent-, stem of circumvenire circumvent; for suffix see -TION.

circus n. About 1380, probably in reference to the Circus Maximus in ancient Rome; a borrowing of Latin circus, literally, ring; see CIRCLE. The meaning of a traveling show is first attested in 1791.

cirrrosis n. 1839–47, New Latin cirrrosis from Greek kirrhós orange-yellow; for suffix see -OSIS; coined because of the yellowish appearances of the diseased liver.

cirrus n. 1803, New Latin cirrus, Latin cirrus curl, fringe.

cis- a prefix meaning on the near side of, on this side of, as in cislunar, cisalpine, used chiefly to form scientific terms. Borrowed from Latin cis-, from the preposition cis on this side of, related to citrā, adv., on this side.

cistern n. About 1250, borrowed from Old French cisterne, and from Latin cisterna underground reservoir, from cista box, CHEST.

citadel n. Before 1586, borrowed from Middle French citadelle, from Italian cittadella (diminutive form of cittade city, later città) from Latin civitātem; see CITY.

cite v. 1438 citen to summon; borrowed from Old French citer, learned borrowing from Latin citāre move, excite, summon, a frequentative form of cīre set in motion, call. The sense of quote or refer to as an authority appeared by 1535. — citation n. About 1300, a summons, written notice to appear; borrowed through Old French citation or, as a learned borrowing, directly from Latin citātiōnem (nominative citātiō), from citāre to summon; for suffix see -TION. The sense of a quotation appeared in 1548.

citizen n. Probably before 1300 citisein inhabitant of a city; borrowed from Anglo-French citesein, citezein, alteration of Old French citeain, citeien (cite CITY + -ien -ian). The sense of inhabitant of a country appeared about 1380. — citizenry n. (1819, formed from English citizen + -ry). — citizenship n. (1611) citron n. 1391, implied in citronade candied citron, also later citrine (probably about 1425), and citron (1526); borrowed from Old French citron, possibly from Old Provençal citron, alteration (influenced by limon LEMON) of Latin citrus CITRUS. — citric adj. 1800, formed in English from Latin citr(us) + English -ic.

citronella n. 1858, New Latin citronella, and French citronnelle citronella, lemon liquor, from citron; so called from its citronlike smell.

citrus n. 1882, borrowed from New Latin Citrus the genus name, from Latin citrus a lemon or citron, citron tree; of uncertain origin (compare Greek kítron citron).

city n. Probably before 1200 cite town, borough, especially a walled town or city and its government; also a cathedral town with its bishopric; borrowed from Old French citē, earlier citet, from Latin civitātem (nominative civitās) citizenship, citizenry, the state, city, from civis citizen; for suffix see -TY². — citified adj. 1828, American English, formed from English city + -fied, past participial form of -fy, as if from cityfy (1865).

civet n. 1532, borrowed from French civette, from Italian zibetto, from Medieval Latin zibethum, Medieval Greek zapētion, from Arabic zabād musk. — civet cat (1607) civic adj. 1542, borrowed from Latin civicus of or for a citizen (chiefly in corōna civica civic crown, awarded to one who saved the life of a fellow citizen in war), from civis citizen, see CITY; for suffix see -IC. It is unlikely that Middle French civique (1504) was the source, as the earliest use in English was in translation from Latin referring to the Roman civic crown and the meaning “of or having to do with a citizen or citizens” is first recorded in 1790, in Burke’s works on the French Revolution. —civics n.pl. 1886, American English, formed from English civic + s, on analogy with politics.

civil adj. Before 1387, borrowed through Old French civil, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin civilis of or proper to a citizen, relating to private rights, state law, and public life, urbane in manner, from civis citizen; see CITY. Though already known in Latin, the meaning “polite” is not recorded in English before 1606, “not barbarous, civilized” before 1553, and the distinction between military and ecclesiastical function and that of the ordinary citizen not before 1592. —civil law (about 1380) —civil liberty (1788) —civil rights (1721) —civil service (about 1785) —civil war (probably before 1439) —civilian n. Before 1397, judge or authority on civil law; borrowed from Old French civilien of the civil law, from civil civil; for suffix see -IAN. The meaning of non-military person is first recorded in 1829, formed from English civil + -ian. —adj. 1645, from the noun. —civility n. About 1384, borrowed from Old French civilité, from Latin civilitatem (nominative civilitās) courteousness, politeness, from civilis; for suffix see -ITY.

civilize v. 1601, apparently borrowed from French civiliser, civilizer, from Old French civil civil; for suffix see -IZE. It is possible that the Old French word was based upon Medieval Latin civilizare* to consider a criminal action as a civil matter. —civilization n. 1704, law which makes a criminal process civil, formed from English civilize + -ation. The sense of civilized condition or state is first recorded in 1772, probably from French civilisation.

clack v. Before 1250 clacken, probably of imitative origin like Dutch klakken to clack, crack, Old High German kleken to crack, and Old Icelandic klaka to twitter, chatter (compare CLUCK). —n. Before 1450, from the verb.

clad adj. About 1250, developed from Old English geclæthd (about 950), past participle of clæthan to clothe, from clāth CLOTH.

claim n. Before 1325, borrowed from Old French claime, from clamer to call, appeal, claim, from Latin clāmāre cry out, call, proclaim. —v. Probably about 1300 cleimen lay claim to; later claymen (before 1338); borrowed from Old French clām-, accented stem of clamer, from Latin clāmāre proclaim. —claimant n. 1747, formed from English claim + -ant.

clairvoyant adj. 1850, able to see things that are out of sight; earlier, having insight (1671); borrowing of French clairvoyant, clear-sighted, literally, clear-seeing (clair clear, from Latin clārus CLEAR + voyant, present participle of voir to see, from Latin vidēre). —n. 1851; earlier, a clear-sighted person (1794); borrowing of French clairvoyant, n., from French clairvoyant, adj.

—clairvoyance n. 1847, borrowing of French clairvoyance, from clairvoyant, adj.

clam n. 1500, in the compound clam-shell, apparently special use of earlier clam pincers, vise, clamp (1399); developed from Old English (971) clamm fetter, bond, chain; cognate with Old High German klamma cramp, fetter, constriction (modern German Klamm), possibly suggesting a Proto-Germanic form klam-, klamm-, or klamb-* to press or squeeze together. —v. 1636, American English, dig for clams; from the noun. The idiom clam up be silent is American English (1916), but a similar use is found in Middle English clam! be silent (probably about 1350).

clamber v. About 1375 clambren, possibly a frequentative form of climben to CLIMB, by way of its Middle English preterit clamb.

clammy adj. Before 1398, from earlier clam viscous, sticky, muddy (about 1340); developed from Old English clām mud, sticky clay (compare Flemish klammig, Low German klamig sticky, damp); for suffix see -Y¹.

clamor n. About 1385 clamour, borrowed from Old French clamour, from Latin clāmora a shout, from clāmāre cry out; for suffix see -OR¹. —v. About 1385, from the noun. —clamorous adj. 1402, borrowed, by influence of Middle French clamoreux, from Medieval Latin clamosus, from Latin clāmōr; for suffix see -OUS.

clamp n. 1402, earlier in compound clampchute (1304), probably borrowed from Middle Dutch clampe (modern Dutch klamp); cognate with Middle Low German klampe clasp, hook, Old High German klampfer clip, clamp and Old English clamm fetter; see CLAM. —v. 1677, from the noun.

clan n. About 1425 (Scottish), from Gaelic clann family, stock, offspring, a borrowing (like Old Irish cland, clann stock, offspring, and Welsh plant children) from Latin planta sprout, root, scion. The Gaelic branch (Goidelic) of the Celtic languages having no initial p regularly substituted k or c for Latin p. —clannish adj. 1776, formed from English clan + -ish. —clansman n. 1810, formed from English clan’s, genitive of clan + man.

clandestine adj. 1566, borrowed, by influence of French clandestin (about 1355), from Latin clandestinus secret, hidden (apparently formed from clam-de*, on the model of intestinus internal), from clam secretly, related to cēlāre to hide.

clang v. 1576, apparently borrowed from Latin clangere re-sound, ring, clang; cognate with Greek klangē sharp sound, din, klāzein make a sharp sound, scream, bark. It is also possible that clang is an independent imitative formation related to clank (compare modern German Klang). —n. 1596, probably from the verb. —clangor n. 1593, borrowed from Latin clangor sound, clang, noise, from clangere to clang; for suffix see -OR¹. —clangorous adj. 1712, formed from English clangor + -ous.

clank n. 1656, possibly borrowed from Dutch klank sound, ring, from Middle Dutch clank; cognate with Middle Low German klank, and Old High German klanc (modern German Klang). —v. 1656, apparently from the noun, but in the sense of put down resoundingly is found before 1614, suggesting an imitative origin.

clap v. About 1300 clappen, perhaps earlier, about 1150; developed from Old English clæppan, clappian to beat, throb, probably of imitative origin like Old Frisian klapa to beat, Middle Low German klappen to chatter, Old High German klaphōn to beat, and Old Saxon klapunga clatter. Middle English clappen may also be borrowed from Old Icelandic klappa to beat. —n. Probably before 1200 cleappe, claipe thing that makes a clapping noise, stroke or blow, loud talking; from the verb. —clapboard n. About 1520, partial loan translation replacing earlier clapholt (1378) with English board for Low German holt wood. —clapper n. About 1280, developed from Old English clipur, by influence of Middle English clappen, v. —claptrap n. 1727–31, formed from English clap + trap, in its earliest sense of an actor's stage device to get applause.

claret n. About 1440, light-colored yellow or reddish wine; earlier, wine sweetened and spiced (before 1398); borrowed from Middle French claret in the phrase vin claret light-colored wine (vin wine, and claret light-colored, in Old French also a noun meaning "wine mixed with honey and spices," diminutive of Old French cler CLEAR). About 1600, used in English for any red wine and after 1700 for red wine of Bordeaux.

clarify v. Before 1325 clarifien make illustrious, make known; borrowed from Old French clarifier, learned borrowing from Late Latin clārificāre make clear, from clārificus brilliant (Latin clārus CLEAR + the root of facere make); for suffix see -FY. —clarification n. 1612, borrowed from French clarification, from Late Latin clārificātiōnem (nominative clārificātiō) from clārificāre to clarify; for suffix see -TION.

clarinet n. 1796, borrowed from French clarinette, diminutive of clarine bell; earlier, clarion, from Old French noun clarine, from the feminine of the adjective clarin, from clair, cler, CLEAR; for suffix see -ET.

clarion n. Before 1338 clarioun, borrowed through Old French clarion, and directly from Medieval Latin clarionem (nominative clario) trumpet, from Latin clārus CLEAR, for suffix see -ET. —clarion call (1838) clarity n. About 1425 clarite brightness, splendor, glory; (influenced by or reborrowed from Latin clāritās); earlier clerte, clarte (probably about 1300); borrowed from Old French clarté, from Latin clāritās clearness, brightness, splendor, from clārus CLEAR; for suffix see -ITY.

clash v. About 1500, probably of imitative origin. The figurative meaning of come into conflict with is first recorded in 1622. —n. 1513, probably imitative like the verb. The figurative meaning of hostile encounter, conflict is first recorded in 1646, and that of conflict of opinions in 1781.

clasp n. 1307 claspe, probably an alteration (by metathesis of p and s) of clapse, which may have been the older form even though not recorded until 1388; probably related to Old English clpypan encircle, embrace. —v. About 1387–95 claspēn, clapsen, from the noun.

class n. 1602 classe group of students; borrowed from French classe, learned borrowing from Latin classis class, division, army, fleet. The ancient Romans related this word to calāre call out, proclaim. An earlier form in English classis a division according to rank (1593), was a borrowing of Latin classis. —v. 1705, divide into classes; 1776, to place in a class; from the noun. —classy adj. 1891, formed from English class high quality, 1847 + -y¹.

classic adj. 1613, borrowed from French classique, from Latin classicus pertaining to the highest class (of Romans), from classis class. The sense "of or relating to the ancient Greek or Roman writers or arts," appeared in English in 1628. —n. 1711, in classics pl. ancient Greek or Latin writings, from the adjective, probably influenced by French classiques. —classical adj. 1599, of the highest rank, formed in English from Latin classicus + English -al¹. —classicism n. 1837, formed from English classic + -ism.

classify v. 1799, borrowed from French classifier, from classe class; for suffix see -FY. —classification n. 1790, borrowed from French classification, from classifier + -fication, similar to English pairs such as falsify/falsification, purify/purification. —classifiable adj. 1846, formed from classify + -able. —classified adj. (1889) clatter v. Probably about 1200 clateren, found in Old English (about 1050) clatrun a clattering, of imitative origin and corresponding to Middle Dutch klāteren to clatter, chatter, East Frisian klatern, and Low German klāteren. —n. Probably about 1350, from the verb.

clause n. Probably before 1200, borrowed from Old French clause, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin clausa conclusion, from Latin clausa, + feminine past participle of claudere to CLOSE¹. The meaning of an article or section of a text appeared about 1300.

claustrophobia n. 1879, New Latin claustrophobia, formed from Latin claustrum closed place + New Latin phobia fear. —claustrophobic adj. 1889, formed in English from New Latin claustrophobia + English -ic; n. person who has claustrophobia. 1953, from the adjective.

clavichord n. 1457–58 clavecord, borrowed from Medieval Latin clavichordium (Latin clāvis key + chorda string).

clavicle n. 1615, borrowed from Middle French clavicule small key, tendril, collarbone, from Medieval Latin clavicula collarbone (Latin clavicula small key, bolt, diminutive form of clavis key), loan translation from Greek kleis key, collarbone (supposedly because of the function of the bone as a key or as fastener of the shoulder).

clavier n. 1845, musical instrument with keyboard and strings; earlier, the keyboard of a musical instrument (1708); borrowed from German Klavier, from French clavier keyboard, from Old French clavier key bearer, from Latin clāvis key; for suffix see -ER¹.

claw n. About 1250 clawe, developed from Old English (about 700) clawu, alteration of clēa claw, talon (influenced by clawe the oblique form). Old English clawu, clēa are cognate with Old Frisian klāwe, klē claw, hoe, Middle Dutch klouwe (modern Dutch klauw), Old High German klāwa claw (modern German Klaue), from Proto-Germanic klawō* related to Old Icelandic klō claw. —v. About 1250 clawen, developed from Old English (about 1000) clawen, clawian, derived from the Germanic root of claw, n.

clay n. Before 1325 clai, also clay (about 1325); earlier in compound clepputh clay pit (about 1241); developed from Old English clæg stiff, sticky earth, clay (about 1000). Old English clæg is related to clām mud, clay and is cognate with Old Frisian klai clay, Old Saxon klei, Middle Dutch clai clay, from Proto-Germanic klaijaz* related to Old High German klīwa bran (modern German Kleie).

claymore n. 1722, Gaelic claidheamh mor great sword (from Old Irish claidheab sword + mōr great). The military term claymore mine, or claymore, a mine that sprays small metal pellets, is first recorded in 1962.

—cle a suffix in various words of French and Latin origin, as in clavicle, obstacle, spectacle, vehicle, sometimes with diminutive force, as in cubicle, particle. Borrowed from Old French -cle, from Latin -culus, -cula, -culum.

clean adj. 1110 clene clear, pure; developed from Old English clæne (about 750); cognate with Old Saxon klēni dainty, delicate, Old Frisian klēne small, and Old High German kleini delicate, fine, small (modern German klein small), from Proto-Germanic klainiz*. —adv. Old English clæne (before 900), from the adjective. —v. About 1450, from the adjective, in part taking the place of cleanse in the more literal senses of modern English. —cleaner n. 1466, formed from Middle English clene + *-er*¹. —cleanup n. (1866) cleanly¹ adj. clean. About 1340, developed from Old English clænlic (clæne clean + lic body, having a clean body); for suffix see *-LY*².

cleanly² adv. in a clean manner. Probably before 1200, developed from Old English clænlice (clæne clean + lice, -lic *-ly*²); for suffix see *-LY*¹.

cleanse v. Probably about 1200 cleansen, also clennsen; developed from Old English clænsian (about 750), from clæne CLEAN. The modern spelling cleanse appeared in the 1500's, but the word retained the pronunciation represented in the Middle English spelling. —cleanser n. (1373) clear adj. About 1280 cler bright; borrowed from Old French cler, from Latin clārus clear, bright, distinct, illustrious, related to clāmāre cry out, call, proclaim. —adv. About 1303, from the adjective. —v. About 1380 cleren to enlighten, from the adjective. —n. 1237, the phrase in the clear is first recorded in 1715. —clearance n. Before 1563, formed from English clear, v. + -ance. —clearing n. (1678, American English) cleat n. 1302 clēte wedge, wedge-shaped piece from Old English clēat*, probably related to Old English clott and clūt CLOT.

The sense of a fixture to stop a rope from slipping is first recorded in 1377. —v. 1794, from the noun.

cleave¹ v. split, divide. Probably before 1200 cleven, developed from Old English (about 1000) clēofan (910); cognate with Old Saxon klioban to split, Old High German klioban, chliuban (modern German klieben), and Old Icelandic kljūfa to split, from Proto-Germanic kleubanan*. The early Middle English and Old English past tense plural form cloven (clufon, etc.) is now seen mostly in the form cloven-footed (1415) and as a separate past participle in cloven foot or hoof (about 1200). —cleavage n. 1816, formed from English cleave + -age. —cleaver n. About 1360, formed from English cleave + *-er*¹.

cleave² v. stick, cling. Probably about 1200 cleovien, developed from Old English cleofian, clifian (before 899); cognate with Old Saxon klībōn to stick, cling, from West-Germanic kli-bōjanan*, related to Old High German klebēn to stick (modern German kleben), and Old Icelandic klifja to climb, clamber.

clef n. Before 1577, borrowed from Middle French clef key, from Latin clāvis key.

cleft n. 1576, replacement of earlier clift (recorded before 1325), developed from Old English geclýft, adj. split, cleft. The spelling cleft was influenced by cleft, a form of the past participle of CLEAVE¹ split. Old English clýft* (geclýft) is cognate with Old High German kluft (modern German Kluft) cleft, Norwegian kluft, kløft, Danish kløft cleft, from Proto-Germanic klufits*.

clématis n. 1551, a name for periwinkle; borrowed from Latin clématis, from Greek klēmatis a climbing vine, from klēma (genitive klēmatis) vine, branch.

clement adj. 1459, merciful, mild; earlier (1230 as surname) Clement; borrowed from Old French clement, learned borrowing from Latin clémentem (nominative clēmēns) calm, mild. —clemency n. 1553, borrowed from Latin clémentia calmness, gentleness, from clémentem calm; for suffix see -CY.

clench v. About 1250 clenchen, developed from Old English beclencan hold fast, from Proto-Germanic klankjanan*; cognate with Old High German chlanckhan, klenkan, and Middle High German klenken to fasten closely together, tie, knot, entwine. Related to CLINCH. —n. 1779, a grasp, grip; earlier perhaps meaning “a swaddling band” (about 1250), from the verb.

clerestory n. 1412, possibly formed from Middle English clere CLEAR + *story*² floor.

clergy n. Before 1300 clergie a group of persons ordained for religious work; earlier, learning, branch of learning (probably about 1200); borrowed from two words in Old French: 1) clergié, clergé clerics, learned men, from Medieval Latin clericatus, from Latin clēricus CLERIC, and 2) clergie also meaning “clerics” and “learning” (literally) clerkship, from clerc cleric, CLERK + -ie *-Y*³. Confusion of clergié and clergie so that both finally came to mean “cleric” in Old French was prompted by substitution of g for c in clergie* on the pattern of earlier clergié. —clergyman n. (1577) —clergywoman n. (1673) cleric n. 1621, borrowed from Latin clēricus + clergyman, priest; (literally as an adjective) priestly, from Greek klērikós of the clergy, from klēros the clergy; (originally, inheritance, lot, allotment); for suffix see -IC. Greek klēros was originally applied (in the Septuagint) to the Levites, the service of God being the priest's lot, and was a loan translation of Hebrew nahalāh inheritance, lot. Compare CLERK.

According to the available record Old English clēric member of a holy order merged with Old French clerc to become Middle English clerc, modern English CLERK, and clerc was reborrowed into English in the 1600's with the specific meaning "clergyman." —clerical adj. 1592; earlier (about 1475), learned borrowing of Old French clerical and from Latin clericālis, from clericus clergyman, priest; for suffix see -AL¹.

clerk n. Probably before 1200 clerc member of the clergy, clergyman, in part developed from Old English (about 975) clēric clergyman, (later) secretary, scribe; and in part borrowed from Old French clerc clergyman, both Old English and Old French borrowed from Latin clericus CLERIC. Since scholarship in the Middle Ages was often limited to clergymen, who performed writing and secretarial work, the word clerk and its Old English equivalent clēric came to mean scribe, and later in Middle English, scholar and was applied to a notary, secretary, recorder, accountant, or writer. —v. 1551, from the noun.

clever adj. 1580–95, handy, dexterous; earlier in Middle English cliver nimble-handed (before 1250), possibly related to clivre claw, talon (earlier, cleuvre) and to Old English clifian CLEAVE² to stick.

cliché n. 1832 as a French word introduced in an English work on manufacturing. French cliché stereotype (printing plate cast from a mold), from past participle of cliquer to click, strike melted lead to obtain a cast or mold, perhaps variant of Old French cliquer to click, probably of imitative origin. The figurative meaning "worn out expression, trite idea" appeared in 1888, paralleling the figurative extension of earlier stereotype (1850).

click v. 1581, of imitative origin, and perhaps related to Dutch klik click, German klicken to click, Old French clique tick of a clock, and cliquer to click. The figurative sense of to fit together, agree, harmonize is first recorded in 1915. —n. 1611, perhaps from the verb.

client n. Probably before 1387, one who engages the services of a lawyer, borrowed through Anglo-French cliyent (1306), learned borrowing from Latin cliēns (accusative clientem) retainer, follower, dependent, perhaps literally one who leans on another, and so possibly related to clināre to bend.

The meaning was extended to one who obtains any professional or business service, a customer by 1608. —clientele n. 1563–68, group of dependents; borrowed from Latin clientēla relationship between dependent and patron, body of dependents, from cliēns CLIENT.

The word was reborrowed into English in 1854, from French clientèle clients of a professional person, customers in general, also from Latin clientēla.

cliff n. Old English clif (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon clif cliff, Middle Dutch klippe (modern Dutch klip), Old High German klep promontory, and Old Icelandic klif cliff, klifa to climb, clamber; see CLEAVE² stick. —cliff dweller (1881, American English).

climacteric adj. 1601, borrowed from Latin climactericus, from Greek klīmaktērikós of a critical period, from klīmaktēr rung of a ladder, from klīmax ladder; see CLIMAX. —n. 1630, borrowed from French climaterique, but with a spelling change to climacteric, influenced by the adjective.

climactic adj. 1872, from climax, apparently derived on the analogy of syntax, syntactic; see CLIMAX.

climate n. 1375 (Scottish) climat zone of the earth lying between two parallels of latitude; borrowed through Old French climat, learned borrowing from Latin clima (genitive climatis region, slope of the earth, from Greek klīma (genitive klīmatos) inclination, slope of the earth, from klīnein to incline, LEAN¹ slant.

The meaning of a region of the earth was often used in reference to the region's atmospheric conditions and later evolved weather conditions of a region by 1611. —climatic adj. Before 1828, formed from English climate + -ic.

climax n. 1589, rhetorical series of expressions in ascending order of effectiveness; borrowed from Late Latin clīmax (genitive clīmacis), from Greek klīmax (genitive klīmakos) rhetorical climax, literally, ladder, something that inclines, from klīnein to incline, LEAN¹ slant. The term is first recorded as meaning highest point, as reached by gradual ascent by 1789. —v. 1835, from the noun.

climb v. Probably before 1200 climben, developed from Old English (before 1000) climban; cognate with Middle and modern Dutch klimmen to climb, Old High German klīmban (modern German klimmen), from West Germanic klīmbanan*. —n. 1577–87, from the verb. The b has been dropped in most languages where it did occur. Compare COMB.

clime n. 1542, borrowed from Latin clima; CLIMATE.

clinch v. 1570, fasten firmly, variant of CLENCH. The sense of settle decisively is recorded before 1716. —n. 1627, from the verb. —clinch n. 1330, formed from English clinch + -er¹. The meaning of a conclusive argument or statement is first recorded in 1737.

cling v. Before 1280 hold fast; earlier, shrivel, shrink (about 1150); developed from Old English clingan hold fast, contract, shrivel (about 1000); cognate with Middle Dutch klīngen to stick, adhere, Old High German klīnga narrow gorge, Middle High German klīngen to climb, Old Icelandic klengjask press onward, push upward (Norwegian klenge cling, Swedish klānga climb).

Another form appears in Middle English clengen to cling, adhere, and in clengen down to shrink, disappear, developed from Old English clengan.

clinic n. Before 1626, a bedridden person; borrowed from Latin clīnicus physician (also as an adjective, meaning of or having to do with bed), from Greek klīnikós physician who visits bed patients (and, as in Latin, with adjective meaning “of bed”), from klīnē bed, from klīnein to incline, LEAN¹ slant.

The modern meaning of place for medical treatment is first recorded in 1884, developed in English by influence of German Klinik, from earlier French clinique. English had already adopted the meaning of medical instruction at the bedside of hospital patients, by 1843 from French clinique, a borrowing from Greek klinikḗ (téchnē) art of treating the bedridden, from klīnikós (iātrós) physician who visits bedridden patients.

The adjective clinic (1626), generally gave way to clinical adj. 1780, formed in English from Latin clīnicus + English -al.

clink¹ v. make a light, ringing sound. Before 1325 clinken, probably of imitative origin, similar to Middle and modern Dutch klinken, and Old High German klingan (modern German klingen) to sound, ring, clink. —n. Probably before 1400, from the verb.

clink² n. jail. 1515, from the Clink, a noted prison in the south of London.

clinker n. 1769, alteration of earlier klincard kind of paving brick made in Holland (1641), borrowed from earlier Dutch klinkaerd (modern Dutch klinker), from klinken to ring (as it does when struck), from Middle Dutch; see CLINK. The sense “bad or stupid mistake” is first recorded in 1950 in American English.

clip¹ v., cut. Probably about 1200 clippen, apparently borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic klippa to clip, modern Icelandic and Swedish klippa clip, Danish and Norwegian klippe; probably imitative). —n. Possibly 1465, shears, from the verb. —clippers n.pl. 1876, formed from English *clip*¹, v. + -er(s), replacing earlier clipping shears (1435). —clipping n. 1324–25, formed from Middle English clippen + *-ing*¹.

clip² v. fasten. Probably before 1200 clippen, developed from Old English (about 725) clyppan encircle, embrace, grasp; cognate with Old Frisian kleppa to embrace. —n. 1354, hook for holding pots, from the verb. —clipboard n. (1907) clique n. 1711, borrowed from French clique, from Old French cliquer to click (of indeterminate sense); at one time the French word apparently equivalent to claque group hired to applaud in a theater.

clitoris n. 1615, New Latin clitoris, from Greek kleitoris, diminutive of kleitōr* hill, related to kleitōs hill, and klīnein to LEAN¹ slant.

cloaca n. 1834, New Latin cloaca, from Latin clōāca sewer, drain. The word is first recorded in English in the sense of sewer, borrowed directly from Latin.

cloak n. 1293 cloke, borrowed from Old North French cloque, from Medieval Latin clocca cape worn by travelers, literally meaning bell and so called from its shape; see CLOCK. —v. 1509, from the noun.

clobber v. 1941 (first recorded as British Air Force slang) clobbering a bombing, possibly imitative.

clock n. About 1370 clocke timepiece sounding the hours by a bell; borrowed either from Middle Dutch clocke clock, bell, or from Old North French cloque, both forms from Medieval Latin clocca bell. The Medieval Latin word probably came from a Celtic source (compare Middle Irish clocc bell, Breton kloc'h, Welsh cloch), though it is also possible that the Celtic words were borrowed from Medieval Latin; ultimately of imitative origin. The Middle Dutch form is cognate with Old Frisian klocka, klocke, Old High German klocka, glocka, glogga (modern German Glocke bell), Old Icelandic klocka bell (Swedish klocka, Norwegian and Danish klokke bell, clock). —v. 1872, to sound a bell; later, to time by the clock (1883); from the noun. —clockwise adj., adv. (1888) —clockwork n. (1662) clod n. Before 1398 cludde clot (of blood); developed from Old English clodd-, clod- (as in clod-hamer field goer), from Proto-Germanic kludda-*. The meaning became differentiated to “lump of earth” and the spelling shifted to clodde (1440). Later a figurative sense of the human body or a person, as being a mere lump of earth is recorded (1595), and the sense “blockhead, clumsy person” (1605).

clog n. Before 1325 clogge block, lump, of uncertain origin. The sense “shoe with a thick wooden sole” is first recorded in the compound surname Clogmaker (1367). —v. Before 1398 cloggen fasten a clog or block of wood to something (as a hindrance), from the noun.

cloister n. Before 1225 cloistre, borrowed from Old French cloistre, an alteration of earlier clostre by influence of cloison partition, probably from Vulgar Latin clausiōnem* (nominative clausiō*), from Latin clausus closed. The early Old French clostre was derived from Latin claustrum closed place, lock (in Medieval Latin, monastery, room in a monastery), from claus-, past participial stem of claudere to CLOSE¹. —v. Probably about 1408 (implied in cloistered), past participle, from the noun.

clone n. 1903, borrowed from Greek klōn twig (earlier probably klaón*), related to kládos sprout. Figurative extension of exact duplicate, replica appeared about 1978. —v. 1959, from the noun.

close¹ v. to shut. About 1280 clösen, replacing earlier clusen (recorded before 1200); developed from Old English beclýsan close, enclose. The new Middle English clösen was borrowed from Old French close, clōs-, stem of clōre to shut, from Latin claudere stop up, fasten, shut, related to clāvis bar, key. —n. About 1399 clos, from the verb.

close² adj. confined, near. Probably about 1380 clos (past participle) closed, shut, borrowed from Old French clos, from Latin clausus, past participle of claudere to CLOSE¹. —n. About 1250, a dwelling or apartment; perhaps later, an enclosed space (about 1280), borrowed from Old French clos enclosure; see CLOSET. —close call (1881, also earlier close shave, 1834, American English).

closet n. About 1385, private room for study or prayer; borrowed from Old French closet, diminutive of clos enclosure, from Latin clausum closed space, from neuter past participle of claudere to CLOSE¹; for suffix see -ET.

The meaning of small room, cupboard appeared in 1616. —adj. 1685, private, secluded; later, hidden, covert, secret (1968); from the noun. —v. 1595, to shut up in (or as though in) a closet; from the noun.

closure n. About 1390, an encircling barrier or fence, enclosure; borrowed from Old French clousure that which encloses, from Late Latin clausura lock, fortress, from claus-, stem of Latin claudere to CLOSE¹; for suffix see -URE. The meaning of act of closing or shutting (an establishment, a debate, etc.) appeared in 1423.

clot n. Probably before 1200, developed from Old English (about 1000) clott; cognate with Middle High German kloz, klotzes lump, ball (modern German Klotz), from Proto-Germanic klutta-*. —v. Before 1425, from the noun.

cloth n. Before 1200 cloth, developed from Old English (before 800) clāth woven or felted material, article of clothing, garment; cognate with Old Frisian klāth cloth, Middle Dutch cleet (modern Dutch kleed garment, dress), Middle High German kleit (modern German Kleid garment, dress), Old Icelandic kleðhi cloth, clothing (Danish klæde, Norwegian klede, Swedish kläde), from Proto-Germanic klaiθaz*. —clothes n.pl. Old English (before 800) clāthes, plural of clāth cloth, garment.

Originally the plural of cloth was clothes; but after cloth meaning "article of clothing" became obsolete, the plural cloths (cloth + -s) was formed in the 1800's to distinguish cloths materials of wool, felt, etc., from clothes garments.

clothe v. Old English (about 950) clāthian, from clāth cloth, garment. —clothespin n. (1846, American English) —clothier n. (about 1470), earlier Clothier (1286, as a surname) —clothing n. (probably about 1200).

cloture n. 1871, borrowed from French clôture (used in the French Assembly), from Middle French clôture, possibly from Old French clousure through Vulgar Latin clausitūra*, or directly from Late Latin clausūra, a variant of clausura lock, fortress, from claus-, stem of Latin claudere to close.

cloud n. Probably before 1200 clude mass of rock, hill, cloud; later cloude (about 1280); developed from Old English clūd rock, hill (about 893), from Proto-Germanic klūdās*. —v. Before 1420 clouden to dim, darken; from the noun. Cloud replaced Old English wolcen cloud and differentiated in meaning from Middle English skie which originally also meant cloud; see SKY. —cloudburst n. (before 1817) —cloudy adj. Probably about 1200 cludig, later cloudi (about 1300), developed in part from Old English clūdīg and in part from Middle English clude, cloude; for suffix see -Y¹.

clout n. Probably before 1325 cloute a stroke, blow, a special sense of earlier clout piece of cloth, rag (probably before 1300) and clut (probably before 1200); found in Old English (about 700) clūt small piece (of cloth, metal, etc.), and from Proto-Germanic klūtaz* cognate with Middle Low German klōt, klüte and Middle Dutch klūt, klüte lump, clod (modern Dutch kluit), and Old and Middle High German klōz lump, clod (modern German Kloss). The sense "a blow, as with a sword or the fist" developed from the verb sense. The figurative sense of political power or influence appeared in 1963 in American English. —v. Probably about 1300, to beat or strike, apparently an extension of the earlier meaning to add patches (of cloth, metal, etc.), add (something untrue) by means of a change (probably before 1200) from the noun and formed partly by influence of Old English, implied in the past participle geclūtod patched.

clove¹ n. spice. Probably before 1200 in the Anglo-French phrase cloues de gilofre; borrowed from Old French clo de girofle (variant gilofre) spike of the gillyflower, a compound phrase of clo, from Latin clāvus nail, spike, and girofle, ultimately from Greek karyóphyllon nut leaf. In the 1300's the forms cloues, clauves, clouys began to appear in English by themselves, finally yielding cloves, probably before 1475. The two words *clove*¹ and *clove*² were frequently confused in Middle English.

clove² n. section of a bulb of garlic, etc. Probably about 1300 clouf, developed from Old English (about 1000) clufu clove, from Proto-Germanic klubō* and cognate with Old Saxon klufōk garlic, Old High German klubilouh, Middle Low German klōf, klōve a cleft, Old Icelandic klöfi cleft, cloven thing; see CLEAVE¹ split.

clover n. Before 1300 clovere, claver, developed from Old English (about 1000) clāfre; cognate with Middle Low German klēver, Middle Dutch klāver (modern Dutch klaver), from Proto-Germanic klaiβrōn*. —cloverleaf n. (1882, first recorded to describe a highway intersection, 1933).

clown n. 1600 clowne a fool or jester, apparently the same word as earlier clowne a rustic, boor, peasant (1567), also spelled clowne (1563, 1565); possibly borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Icelandic klunni clumsy, boorish fellow, Swedish dialect kluns clumsy fellow). The notion that clown is derived from Latin colōnus husbandman, farmer, colonist is not supported. —v. 1599, from the noun.

cloy n. 1530, weary by too much, an extended sense of cloyen hinder movement, obstruct; encumber (probably before 1387); shortened from earlier acloyen, (about 1330) and encloyen cripple a horse by driving a nail into the hoof; borrowed from Old French enclouer, enclouer, from Vulgar Latin inclāvare*, from Latin clāvus nail, related to clāvis key. Middle English cloyen was also influenced in its development by Anglo-French cloyé hurt by a nail.

club n. Probably before 1200 clubbe thick stick used as a weapon, probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic klubba, klumba heavy stick, Norwegian klubbe club, Swedish klubba gavel), from Proto-Germanic klumbōn*. The sense of a social club (1670) comes from an association of people, (1648) which developed from the verb senses gather into a clublike mass, and collect, combine (1625). The suit of cards (clubs) is a translation of Spanish basto or Italian bastone from the picture on Spanish cards, though the picture has been replaced by the trefoil of French cards. —v. 1593, beat with a club, from the noun.

cluck v. 1481, an alteration of earlier clucken to cluck (about 1350); developed from Old English cloccian; apparently cognate with Middle Dutch klokken to cluck, Middle High German klucken, glucken to cluck (modern German glucken), Old Icelandic klaka to cackle (Danish and Norwegian klukke, Swedish klucka). —n. 1703, from the verb.

clue n. 1596, ball of thread, variant of clew (about 1250), developed from Old English (about 750), clīewen ball, skein; cognate with Old Saxon kleuwin ball of thread, skein, from West Germanic kleuwin*.

In Greek legend Theseus was guided by a ball or clew of thread through the Cretan Labyrinth, thus the sense of a guide to solving a mystery or problem is in allusion to the Greek myth, and is first recorded as clue (1628) and clew (1386). —v. 1934, from the noun.

clump n. Before 1586, cluster of trees; lump; from Middle English clompe a lump (about 1300), probably developed with influence of Middle Low German klumpe and Middle Dutch klompe (modern Dutch klomp) lump, mass, from Old English clympre lump, mass of metal. —v. form a clump; earlier, to walk with heavy tread (1665), from the noun.

clumsy adj. 1597, acting as if numb, moving awkwardly, probably derived from clomsen 1) become numb with cold (about 1378) and 2) as a past participle, stupefied, overcome, dazed (before 1325); possibly borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Icelandic klumsa lock-jawed, Swedish dialect klumsen benumbed with cold, Norwegian klumsen speechless); for suffix see -Y¹.

cluster n. Before 1382 clustre, developed from Old English (before 800) clyster, cluster, probably from the same root as CLOT. —v. Probably about 1380 clustren, from the noun.

clutch¹ v. grasp. Probably before 1325 cluchen to bend clenċ, a dialectal variant of clichen (probably before 1200); developed from late Old English (about 1025) clýccan bring together; cognate with Swedish klýka clamp, fork, from Proto-Germanic klukja-*. —n. About 1300 cloche claw, alteration of earlier cloke (probably before 1200) and Scottish and Northern English cluke; both words related to clichen, v. clutch. The sense developed in English from that of claw to grasping hand (1525), and tight grasp (1784). The mechanical coupling device of machinery appeared in 1814, and was applied to motor vehicles in 1899.

clutch² n. nest. 1721, variant of earlier cletch (1691), from clekken to hatch (1402, paralleling bake-batch). The verb was borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic klekja to hatch, perhaps related to klaka to cackle, Danish klække, Norwegian klekke, Swedish kläcka; see CLUCK).

clutter v. 1556, to collect in heaps, apparently developed from Middle English clutteren (about 1425), variant of cloteren to form clots, to heap on (about 1400), derived from CLOT. The sense of to litter with things appeared in 1674. —n. 1580, from the verb. The sense of litter appeared in 1666.

co- a prefix, originally the form of com- before vowels and h (as in coalesce, cohere) and meaning: 1) with, together, as in cooperate, coproduce; 2) joint, fellow, as in coauthor, copilot; 3) equally, same, as in coexisting, coextensive; 4) in mathematics, complement, as in cosine. The prefix was borrowed from Latin co-, variant of com-, and is related to cum with, together with.

coach n. 1556, borrowed from Middle French coche, from earlier German Kotsche (now Kutsche), from Hungarian kocsi, short for kocsi szekér Kocs cart, meaning a cart made in or from Kocs, a town in northern Hungary where such carriages were made. The sense of a private tutor is first recorded in 1848 in British university usage and that of an athletic trainer in 1861. —v. 1849, to tutor, train; earlier, to convey in a coach (1612); from the noun. —coachman n. (1579) coagulate v. Probably before 1425 either as coagulen, formed as a borrowing from Middle French coaguler, from Latin coāgulāre, or as coagulaten, verb use of earlier coagulat, adj. clotted (1395); borrowed from Latin coāgulātus, past participle of coāgulāre to coagulate, curdle, is from coāgulum rennet, means of curdling, literally, thing that presses or drives together (co- together + agere to drive); for suffix see -ATE¹. —coagulation n. Before 1400 coagulation, borrowed from Latin coāgulatiōnem (nominative coāgulatiō), from coāgulāre coagulate; for suffix see -TION.

coal n. Probably before 1200 col, cole charcoal, developed from Old English col (before 830 earlier in compound colthred blackened thread, plumbline about 700); cognate with Old Frisian kole charcoal, coal, Middle Dutch cole (modern Dutch kool), Old High German kolo, kol (modern German Kohle), Old Icelandic kol (Swedish and Norwegian kol, Danish kul), from Proto-Germanic kula(n)-*. —v. 1602, from the noun. —coal bin (1423) —coal-black adj. (about 1250) —coal cellar (1281) —coal mine (1475)

coalesce v. 1541, borrowed from Latin coalēscere coalesce (co- together + alēscere grow up, from alere nourish). —coalescence n. 1541, borrowed possibly from Middle French coalescence (1537), from Latin coalēscētem (nominative coalēscēns), present participle of coalēscere; for suffix see -ENCE. —coalescent adj. 1655, borrowed from French coalescent (1539), from Latin coalēscētem (nominative coalēscēns), present participle of coalēscere; for suffix see -ENT.

coalition n. 1612, the growing together of parts, coalescence; borrowing of from French coalition (1544), formed to the participle coalitus of Latin coalēscere COALESCE; for suffix see -TION. The sense of a political coalition is first recorded in English in 1715.

coarse adj. 1582, spelling alteration of cors ordinary, coarse, inferior (1424, referring to cloth), variant of earlier cours (1398, probably an adjectival use of the noun cours COURSE ordinary or habitual way, in the sense of the ordinary run or sort, probably before 1300). Coarse was probably used to describe the type of rough cloth used for ordinary wear and may be connected by alteration of spelling of course meaning of the ordinary sort and with Medieval Latin cursorius ordinary, current. The sense of unrefined, uncivil, rude, developed about 1510, and that of vulgar, gross, obscene, in 1711. —coarsen v. 1805, formed from English coarse + -en¹.

coast n. Before 1338 coste seashore; earlier, a rib as part of the side of the body (probably about 1125); borrowed from Old French coste (modern French côte) coast, hill, from Latin costa side, rib (and in Medieval Latin, coast). —v. Probably about 1390 costen go by the side of, skirt the border of; developed from the noun. The sense of slide down a slope or hill (1775, implied in coasting) and the figurative extension of do or achieve effortlessly (1934), are from American English. —coastal adj. (1883) —coastline n. (1860) coat n. About 1330 cote tuniclike garment; borrowed from Old French cote, from Frankish (compare Old High German chozza cloak of coarse wool, German dialect Kotze, and Old Saxon kot woolen coat).

Probably about 1390, the original sense was transferred to an animal's natural covering, and later to a layer of paint, tar, or other substance (1663). —v. Before 1376 coten provide with a coat, from the noun. The sense of cover with a coating appeared in 1753. —coating n. (1768) —coat of arms (before 1338) coati n. 1676, Brazilian Portuguese word introduced in an article in an English journal; borrowed from Tupi coati, cuati, cuatim (from cua belt + tim nose).

coax v. 1586 coaxes to blandish, coddle; from earlier noun, meaning silly fellow, simpleton (1567), of uncertain origin. The sense of persuade by soft words appeared in 1663; the spelling coax in 1706.

coaxial adj. 1881 formed from English co- + axis + -al. —coaxial cable (1936; earlier coaxial line, 1934).

cob n. 1684, corncob; earlier, head of a herring (1594), thick nut of a hazel (1589), headman, chief (about 1412); possibly borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Icelandic kubbi block, lump, in Old Icelandic, -kubbi, related to Old Icelandic kjfi round point, heap).

cob n. male swan. 1406 cobbe; probably cognate with Old Icelandic kobbi seal, and Icelandic kubbi block, lump; see COB¹.

cobalt n. 1683, borrowed from German Kobalt, dialectal variant of Kobold goblin (so called by miners from their belief it was left in silver ore by goblins after stealing the silver and because of the ill effects of arsenic and sulphur in the rock). Kobalt, Kobald, Kobold derived from Middle High German kobolt household goblin kobe hut, shed + holt* goblin, in Old High German holdo ghost, from hold gracious, friendly, from the reference to evil beings by complimentary names to avoid their wrath. Compare NICKEL.

cobble¹ n. paving stone. 1600, shortened from earlier cobelstone (about 1440, from cobel-, possibly diminutive of *cob*¹, in the sense of block, lump + stone). A Northern English dialectal variant kobilstone is found about 1375. —v. 1691, from the noun.

cobble² v. mend. 1496 coblen, apparently back formation from earlier cobelere one who mends shoes, cobbler (1287), of uncertain origin.

cobbler¹ n. one who mends shoes. 1287, see COBBLE².

cobbler² n. pie. 1859, American English, but perhaps ultimately related to, or developed from unrecorded use of cobeler, n. 1385, wooden bowl or dish.

cobra n. 1802, shortened form of cobra capello (1671), borrowed from Portuguese cobra de capello snake with a hood (cobra, from Latin colubra snake, of uncertain origin, and capello, from Vulgar Latin cappellus* little cape, from Late Latin cappa CAPE¹ garment).

cobweb n. 1323, coppewebbe, a compound of Middle English coppe spider and WEB. Middle English coppe developed from Old English -coppe (as in ātorcoppe poison spider, from ātor poison + -coppe), possibly from copp top, head, of uncertain origin.

Old English -coppe is cognate with Middle Dutch and modern Flemish coppe, cobbe, modern Dutch spinnekop, and Danish (edder)kop, all meaning spider. Old English āt(t)or is cognate with Old High German eit(t)ar (modern German Eiter pus), from Proto-Germanic aitra-* poisonous ulcer.

coca n. 1577, borrowed from Spanish coca, from Quechua cáca, perhaps from Aymara (language of a group of South American Indians of Bolivia and Peru).

cocaine n. 1874, probably borrowed from French cocaine (1856), from coca, from Spanish coca; for suffix see -INE².

coccus n. 1883, from New Latin Coccobacteria (1874), ultimately from Greek kókkos seed, berry, a loanword of unknown origin; earlier type of insect (1753).

coccyx n. 1615, borrowed possibly through French coccyx, or directly from Latin coccyx, from Greek kókkýx, originally, cuckoo; so called because of its supposed resemblance to the beak of a cuckoo.

cochlea n. 1688, cavity of the inner ear; earlier, in reference to Archimedes' screw (1641), borrowed from New Latin and Latin cochlea snail shell, from Greek kochliás, from kóchlos spiral shell.

cock¹ n. male chicken, rooster. Before 1250 coc; earlier in surname Bulecoc (1221); developed from Old English cocc (before 900); of imitative origin, like Old Icelandic koker cock, borrowed from Old French coq.

Origin of cock in a tap or faucet (about 1425) and the hammer or firing pin of a gun (1566), is unclear. —v. 1598, fire the cock of a gun; from the noun. —cock-a-doodle-doo n. (1573) —cockscorn n. (about 1400) —cocky adj. vain. 1768; earlier, lecherous (1549, formed from English *cock*¹ + *-y*¹).

cock² v. to set in a jaunty way. 1575 to swagger, and cocken to wrangle, fight (probably about 1150), apparently from COCK¹, especially referring to fighting cocks. —n. 1711, an upward turn of the brim of a hat, from the verb. —cockeyed adj. 1821, squint-eyed, apparently from *cock*², v. to set or turn the head or eye in such a direction as to see; later cockeyed to things tilted to one side, extended to anything askew or foolish and silly (1896).

cock³ n. cone-shaped pile of hay in a field. Before 1398, of uncertain origin, but probably cognate with dialectal German Kocke heap (of hay or dung), Norwegian kok heap, pile. —v. Probably before 1387, probably from the noun, despite the earlier date.

cockade n. 1709, alteration (with -ade) of earlier cockard (1660), borrowed from French cocarde (earlier coquarde), feminine of cocard foolishly proud, cocky, from coq COCK¹.

cockamamie or cockamamy adj. Slang. 1960, from earlier cockamamie decal (probably before 1926), apparently an alteration of DECALCOMANIA.

cock-and-bull adj. especially cock-and-bull story. 1621, "to talk of Cock and Bull," either in allusion to the strain on credulity produced by the fables of Aesop and his imitators, in which cocks moralize and bulls debate; or perhaps derived from the parallel French expression coq-à-l'âne a cock-and-bull story, earlier du coq à l'asne a libel, satire (a tale of the cock to the ass).

cockatoo n. 1616, cacatoe; borrowed from Dutch kaketoe, from Malay kakatiua a cockatoo, perhaps in imitation of its call. The later spelling was apparently influenced by COCK¹.

cocker n. (especially cocker spaniel). Before 1811, a breed of bird dog; earlier, Middle English cocker a fighter or quarrelsome man (probably about 1150); formed from English cock, coke + *-er*¹.

cockle¹ n. mollusk. 1311–12 cokel, borrowed from Old French coquille, alteration (influenced by coque shell) of Vulgar Latin conchilia*, neuter plural taken to be feminine singular of Latin conchylium shellfish, from Greek konchylion, diminutive of konchē, from kónchē mussel, CONCH.

cockle² n. weed. Probably before 1300 cockel, found in Old English cocele, perhaps from Medieval Latin cocculus* little berry, diminutive form of coccus, from Greek kókkos grain, seed. —cockleshell n. (about 1420) a weed.

cockney n. 1600, inhabitant of a section of London; dialect of such a person; earlier, a city dweller generally (perhaps 1521, referring to pampered city child), from cokeney pampered child, literally, cock's egg (about 1390); formed, possibly by derivative use of cokenei on the model of chiken ei, chicken egg, (coke, coc COCK¹ + ei, ey egg, from Old English æg). It is also possible that some popular association existed with Cockaigne imaginary country of luxury and idleness (from Old French Cocagne), humorously applied to the Cockney area of London. —adj. 1632; earlier, effeminate (1573), from the noun.

cockpit n. 1914 place in an airplane; earlier, junior officers quarters on a warship (1706); buildings housing Treasury and Privy Council, built on the site of a former London theater, The Cockpit (before 1635) where a cockpit (1587) for cock-fighting once stood.

cockroach n. 1624, alteration (by influence of a *cock*¹ and roach) of Spanish cucaracha, from cuca kind of caterpillar.

cocktail n. 1806, American English, apparently formed from *cock*¹ + tail, but the allusion is uncertain. In American English the word is applied also to non-alcoholic appetizers, fruit cocktail (1928), oyster cocktail (about 1938), and, by extension, to any concoction, Molotov cocktail (1940).

coco n. 1582, borrowed from Spanish coco, from Portuguese côco grinning face, bugbear, coco; so called from the hollows of the coconut shell resembling a grimacing face. An earlier Latinized form cocus a name for the coconut (1555) was Anglicized to cocos from 1579. Both coco and cocoa were confused in Johnson's Dictionary and to some extent the confusion still exists. —coconut n. (1613) cocoa n. powder made from cacao seeds; drink made of this powder. 1707, variant of earlier CACAO (1555), by confusion with COCO.

cocoon n. 1699, borrowed from French cocon, coucon, from coque shell of a clam, mussel, etc., or of an egg, husk, nut, from Old French coque shell, from Latin coccum oak gall, berry, from Greek kókkos seed, berry.

cod n. 1357, earlier, cofish (1273), origin uncertain, perhaps related to by resemblance of the fish cod, n. a seed pod, bag or wallet (1131).

coddle v. 1598, boil gently, stew, perhaps alteration of caudle a hot, thin gruel mixed with wine or ale (about 1300); borrowed through Anglo-French caudel, Old French chaudel, from Late Latin calidellum measure for hot drink, from Latin calidum hot drink, neuter of calidus hot, from calere be warm. The transferred sense of treat tenderly appeared in 1815.

code n. About 1303, system of laws; borrowed from Old French code, learned borrowing from Latin cōdex, dialect variant of caudex tree trunk, block of wood split into flat tablets for writing, book, code of laws, related to Latin cūdere to beat; see HEW. The sense of system of secret writing appeared in 1808. —v. 1815, enter in a legal code; later, to encode (1885); from the noun.

codeine n. 1881, borrowed from French codéine, from Greek kōdeia poppy head + French -ine *-ine*².

codicil n. About 1419, borrowed from Middle French codicille, from Latin cōdicillus a short writing, especially in a will, diminutive form of cōdex (genitive cōdicis) ledger; see CODE.

codon n. 1962, formed from English code + -on unit of genetic material (as in operon).

coefficient n. 1708–15, earlier as an adjective (1665–66), formed from English co- + efficient, perhaps by influence of French coefficient, n. or by New Latin coefficientis, used in mathematics before 1600.

coelenterate adj. 1872, borrowed from New Latin Coelenterata the phylum name, from Greek koslos hollow + enteron intestine. —n. 1888, borrowed from New Latin Coelenterata.

coerce v. Probably about 1451 cohercen, borrowed from Middle French cohercer, from Latin coercere confine, control (co- together + arcere shut in, keep).

There is no record of the use of this verb in English between the late 1400's and mid-1600's; its revival in the new spelling coerce (1659, implied in coercing) was probably a back formation from coercion. —coercion n. 1414 cohercion, borrowed from Middle French cohercion, from Latin coercitiōnem, variant of coercitiōnem (nominative coercitiō), from coercere; for suffix see -TION. The spelling coercion (without the h) appeared in 1467. —coercive adj. Before 1600, formed from English coerce + -ive.

coeval adj. 1622–62, formed in English from Late Latin coaeuus (from Latin co- equal + aeuum AGE) + English -al.
—n. 1605, apparently noun use of coeval, adj., though recorded earlier than the adjective.

coffee n. 1598 chaoua, 1601 coffe, 1603–30 coffa, borrowed from Turkish kahveh, or directly from Arabic qahwah coffee; originally, wine. —coffee house (1615) —coffeepot n. (1705) coffer n. About 1250 cofre, borrowed from Old French cofre, from Latin cophinus basket; see COFFIN.

coffin n. Before 1338, chest, case; borrowed from Old French cofin sarcophagus; earlier, basket, from Latin cophinus, from Greek kóphinos basket, of uncertain origin. The sense of a burial casket appeared in 1525.

cog n. Before 1300, probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Swedish and Norwegian kugg cog; cognate with Middle High German kugel ball. —cogwheel n. (1354) cogent adj. 1659, borrowed from French cogent necessary, urgent, from Latin cogentem (nominative cogēns), present participle of cogere compel, constrain (co- together + agere to drive, lead, act). —cogency n. 1690, formed from English cogent + -cy.

cogitate v. 1563–83, probably in part a back formation from cogitation, and in part borrowed, perhaps by influence of Middle French cogitare to meditate, from Latin cogitātus, past participle of cogitare to think (co- intensive prefix + agitare consider, set in motion, frequentative form of agere to drive, lead). —cogitation n. Probably before 1200, borrowed from Old French cogitation, from Latin cogitātiōnem (nominative cogitātiō) from cogitare; for suffix see -TION.

cognac n. 1594 Coniacke wine produced in Cognac; borrowed from French Cognac, in allusion to the town and region in western France, where it is made. The sense of a brandy appeared in 1755 and earlier as cognac brandy (1687).

cognate adj. About 1645, related by family or origin; borrowed, perhaps by influence of French cognat, from Latin cognātus of common descent (co- together + gnātus, past participle of gnāscā, later nāscā be born). —n. 1754, from the adjective.

cognition n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Latin cognitiōnem (nominative cognitiō) a getting to know, acquaintance, from cogni-, stem of cognōscere to come to know, see COGNIZANCE; for suffix see -TION. —cognitive adj. 1586, formed from English cognition + -ive.

cognizance n. About 1350 conissauce recognition; later, knowledge, understanding (probably before 1400); borrowed from Anglo-French conysance, conusance, from Old French connaissance, connuissance, from connaissance, from past participle connoistre to know, from Latin cognōscere to come to know (co- intensive + gnōscere KNOW). In English the g appeared in the late 1400's and has gradually affected the pronunciation, (kog' nēzəns) though in law (kon' əzəns) was used into this century. —cognizant adj. 1820, from the noun, on analogy of assistance, assistant, distance, distant, etc.

cohabitation n. About 1454, borrowed perhaps from Middle French cohabitation, from Late Latin cohabitātiōnem (nominative cohabitātiō), from cohabitāre to dwell together. —cohabit v. About 1530, probably a back formation from cohabitation, but possibly borrowed directly from Late Latin cohabitāre.

cohere v. 1598, borrowed from Latin cohaerere (co- together + haerere cling, cleave to). —coherence n. About 1580, borrowed from Middle French cohérence, from Latin cohaerentia, from cohaerentem (nominative cohaerēns), present participle of cohaerere cohere; for suffix see -ENCE. —coherent adj. About 1555, borrowed from Middle French cohérent, from Latin cohaerentem (nominative cohaerēns), present participle of cohaerere cohere; for suffix see -ENT. —cohesion n. 1678, formed as if borrowed from Latin cohaesiōnem* (nominative cohaesiō*), itself formed to cohaesus, past participle of cohaerere to stick together. —cohesive adj. 1727–31, implied in the derivative cohesiveness. Formed in English from cohes- as if it were a stem of cohesion + -ive.

cohort n. 1422, borrowed from Middle French cohorte, and directly from Latin cohortem, accusative of cohors a tenth part of a Roman legion; any group of persons enclosed together; an enclosure; see COURT.

The informal sense of colleague, accomplice appeared in 1952 in American English, from the sense of a group united in a common cause (1719).

coif n. About 1330 koife, borrowed from Old French coife, coiffe, from Late Latin cofia, of West Germanic origin (compare Middle High German kupfe, kuffe cap). —v. About 1450 coifen cover with a cap; borrowed from Middle French coiffer, from coiffe coif, from Old French. The sense of arrange the hair is first recorded in English in 1835. —coiffeur n. hairdresser. 1850, borrowed from French, from coiffer + -eur -er.
—coiffure n. Before 1631, borrowed from French coiffure, from coiffer to arrange the hair; for suffix see -URE.

coil v. 1611, borrowed from Middle French coillir to gather, collect, cull, from Latin colligere gather together, COLLECT. —n. 1627, from the verb.

coin n. 1304, a wedge; borrowed from Old French coin wedge, corner, stamp, piece of money, from Latin cuneus wedge. The meaning of piece of money is first recorded about 1380; this sense developed first in Old French from the wedge-shaped die used for stamping coin and from the die, also called a coin. —v. About 1338 coinen to mint (money), borrowed from Old French coignier, from coin, n. The figurative sense of invent a new word or phrase is first recorded in English in 1589.

—coinage n. About 1380, borrowed from Old French coignage, from coignier to coin + -age; for suffix see -AGE. The sense of something invented (as a new word) is first recorded in 1602.

coincide v. 1715, borrowed from French coïncider, from Medieval Latin coincidere (Latin co- together + incidere fall upon, itself a compound of in + upon, and cadere to fall). —coincidence n. 1605, exact agreement or correspondence; borrowed from French coïncidence, from Middle French coïncidence, from coïncider coincide, from Medieval Latin coincidere; for suffix see -ENCE. —coincident adj. 1563–83, borrowed from French coïncident, from coïncider; for suffix see -ENT. —coincidental adj. 1800, formed from English coincident + -al.

coitus n. 1855, borrowed from Latin coitus, from the stem of coire come together (co- together + ire come, go; see EXIT). The word also appeared in Middle English as coite (probably before 1425). —coition n. 1615; coitus; earlier, coming together (1541); borrowed from Late Latin coitiōnem (nominative coitiō), from coire; for suffix see -TION.

coke¹ n. residue of fuel. 1669, perhaps variant of colk core, in Middle English colke (before 1400) and specifically in reference to charcoal (1430). If the sense development has been from “pit” to “what is in the pit,” the source may be Old English -colc a hole, cognate with Old Frisian kolc pit, hole, Middle Low German kolk, kulk water hole, gulf (from Proto-Germanic kulkaz*). —v. 1804 (earlier, implied in coking, 1791), from the noun.

coke² n. Slang. 1908, American English, shortening and alteration of COCAINE.

col- a prefix meaning with, together, the form of com- before l, as in collinear = together on the same line. The Latin form col- resulted from sound change by assimilation of con-, com- to l before word elements beginning with l, though conl- persisted in Latin. The spellings in Middle English that were reduced to one l were later changed to include two l's during the revival of learning and its emphasis on Classical Latin forms, and it is these latter forms that largely survive today.

cola n. See KOLA.

colander n. 1368 coloundour, alteration of Medieval Latin colatorium strainer, from Latin cōlātus, past participle of cōlāre to strain, from cōlum strainer.

cold adj. Before 1200 cold, colde, developed from Old English, probably about 725 (Anglian) cald, (West Saxon) ceald; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon kald cold, Old High German (and modern German) kalt, Old Icelandic kaldur, Gothic kalds, from Proto-Germanic kaldās*. See COOL, CHILL. Cold and its Germanic cognates may have been originally past participial formations, hence the endings d and t. —n. Before 1300, coldness; from the adjective. The sense of the common cold appeared in 1537, from the earlier indisposition caused by exposure to cold (before 1338) and the discomfort or pain caused by cold (about 1300). —cold-blooded adj. (1595) cole n. Before 1325 col, developed from Old English (about 1000) cāl, variant of cāwel, from Latin caulis, dialectal variant cōlis cabbage, stalk.

coleopterous adj. 1791, insects with sheathed wings, including beetles; borrowed from Greek koleópteros sheath-winged (koleós sheath + pterón wing); for suffix see -OUS.

coleslaw n. 1794 cold slaw, American English; borrowed from Dutch kool sla cabbage salad (from kool cabbage, from Latin caulis cabbage, stalk and sla, variant of salade salad, from French). The common spelling of this word was cold slaw up to the 1860's when cole appeared, through association with cole.

colic n. Probably about 1421, borrowed through Middle French colique, or directly from Late Latin cōlicus, from Greek kōlikós colicky, of the colon, from kōlon COLON; so called because of pain in the lower intestine. —colicky adj. 1742, formed from English colic + *-y*¹. The spelling with k follows the convention found in trafficker, trafficking, picnicker, mimicking.

coliseum n. 1708–15, borrowed from Medieval Latin, variant of colosseum COLOSSEUM.

collaborate v. 1871, borrowed from Latin collaborātum, past participle of collaborāre work with (col- with + laborāre to work, from labor, genitive labōris, work); for suffix see *-ATE*¹. During World War II the word was associated with those who cooperated with the Nazis or Fascists, especially in France (1941).

—collaboration n. 1860, borrowed from French collaboration, from collaborer collaborate, from Latin collaborāre; for suffix see -ATION. —collaborator n. 1802, borrowed from French collaborateur, from collaboration; for suffix see *-OR*².

collage n. 1919, borrowed from French collage, literally, a pasting, gluing, from Old French coller to glue, colle glue, from Vulgar Latin colla*, from Greek kólla glue. —v. 1964, from the noun.

collagen n. About 1865, borrowed from French collagène, from Greek kólla glue; for suffix see -GEN.

collapse v. 1732, borrowed from Latin collāpsus, past participle of collābi fall together (col- together + lābi to fall, slip). —n. 1801, from the verb. —collapsible adj. 1843, formed from English collapse + -ible.

collar n. About 1300 coler neck piece in armor; borrowed from Old French coler, from Latin collāre band for the neck, collar, from collum neck, cognate with Old English heals neck, Old Saxon, Old Frisian, Old High German, Old Icelandic, and Gothic hals. By gradual approximation to the Latin form collāre, Middle English coler changed to modern English collar. —v. Before 1555, seize a person's collar or neck; from the noun. —collar bone (perhaps 1500) collate v. 1612, borrowed from Latin collātus, a form serving as past participle of cōnferre bring together (con- together + ferre bring); for suffix see *-ATE*¹.

collateral adj. About 1378, borrowed from Old French collateral, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin collateralis accompanying, concomitant; literally, side by side (Latin col- with + lateralis of the side, LATERAL). —n. 1513–75, colleague, associate; from the adjective. The sense of anything given as collateral security appeared in American English (1832), from collateral security (1720).

collation¹ n. act of collating. About 1380, act of bringing together for comparison; borrowing of Old French collation, learned borrowing from Latin collātiōnem (nominative collātiō), from the verbal stem of collātus, a form serving as past participle of cōnferre bring together; for suffix see -TION.

collation² n. light meal. Before 1300, borrowed from Medieval Latin collationem light meal taken by members of a monastery after a reading of the Collationes (a work written in the form of a conference on monastic life by John Cassian, about 410), from Late Latin collātiōnem conference; (see COLLATE).

colleague n. Before 1533, borrowed from Middle French colleue, learned borrowing from Latin collēga associate, colleague (col- together + lēgare send or choose as deputy).

collect v. Probably before 1425, collecten to accumulate, gather; borrowed from Old French collecter and Latin collectus, past participle of colligere gather together (col- together + legere gather). —n. Probably before 1200, borrowed from Old French collecte and directly from Latin collecta a gathering, from collectus; see the verb. —collectible adj. 1662 (1660 -able), formed from English collect + -ible. —collectibles n.pl. 1952, from collectible, adj. —collection n. 1387, borrowed from Old French collection, learned borrowing from Latin collectiōnem (nominative collectiō), from the stem of colligere gather together; for suffix see -TION. —collective adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Middle French collectif, collective, learned borrowing from Latin collectivus, from collectus, see collect, v.; for suffix see -IVE. —n. 1925, from the adjective. —collector n. About 1405, borrowed through Anglo-French collectour, Old French collecteur and Medieval Latin collector, from Latin collectus, see collect, v.; for suffix see -OR².

colleen n. 1828, borrowed from Irish cailín girl, diminutive of caille girl, woman.

college n. Probably about 1378, a body of scholars and students within a university (as at Oxford or Cambridge); borrowed from Old French college, learned borrowing from Latin collēgium a fellowship, company, from collēga COLLEAGUE. The meaning of educational institution appeared in 1563. —collegiate adj. 1514, borrowed from Medieval Latin collegiatus of or having to do with a college, from Latin collēgium; for suffix see -ATE¹.

collide v. 1621, borrowed from Latin collidere strike together (col- together + laedere to strike, of uncertain origin).

collie n. Before 1651, possibly Colle (about 1386, as a proper name), origin uncertain. Colle may have had a diminutive form collie and the form is equivalent to “coaly” meaning black, the original color of the breed.

collier n. 1276 collere charcoal maker and seller; later colier (1408–09), formed from Middle English col coal + -ere, -ier collision n. Probably before 1425, borrowing of Middle French collision, learned borrowing from Latin collisiōnem (nominative collisiō), from collidere COLLIDE; for suffix see -SION.

-er¹. —colliery n. 1635, formed from English collier + -y³, as in -ERY.

collocation n. 1605, probably borrowed from French collocation, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin collocātiōnem (nominative collocātiō), from collocare place together; for suffix see -TION. General references to arrangement of words or sounds in language appear as early as 1750 though as a technical term the meaning does not appear before 1940.

It is also possible that collocation is a native formation from earlier collocate, v., to place. 1513, borrowed from Latin collocatus, past participle of collocare (col- together + locare to place, put); for suffix see -ATE¹.

colloid n. 1849–52, jelly-like substance; earlier, as an adjective (1847–49); borrowed from French colloïde (1845), from Greek kólla glue; for suffix see -OID. —colloidal adj. 1861, probably borrowed from French colloïdal (1855), from colloïde; for suffix see -AL¹; or perhaps formed from English colloid + -al¹.

colloquy n. 1459, a discourse; later, a conversation (1581); borrowed from Latin colloquium conference, conversation, from colloqui speak together (col- together + loqui speak). —colloquial adj. 1751–52, formed from English colloquy + -al¹. —colloquialism n. 1810, formed from English colloquial + -ism.

collusion n. 1389, borrowed from Old French collusion, learned borrowing from Latin collūsiōnem (nominative collūsiō) act of colluding, from collūdere collude; for suffix see -SION. —collude v. 1525, borrowed from Latin collūdere collude (col- together + lūdere to play, from lūdus game).

cologne n. 1814 cologne water, American English, loan translation of French eau de Cologne, literally, water of Cologne, from Cologne, Germany, where it is made; used to describe articles made in Cologne (before 1399).

colon¹ n. punctuation mark. 1550, borrowed from Latin cōlon part of a poem, member of a verse, from Greek kólon limb, member of the body or of a sentence, clause, related to skélos leg. The punctuation mark (:) was so called because it was originally used to separate independent clauses (Greek kólon clause).

colon² n. part of the intestine. Before 1398, borrowed from Latin colon, from Greek kólon part of the intestine.

colonel n. Originally (1548) spelled coronel, borrowed from Middle French coronel, coronnel, which with Spanish coronel came from Italian colonnello the commander of a column of soldiers at the head of a regiment, from colonna column, from Latin columna pillar, post, COLUMN.

The change from Italian to r in French and Spanish is due to dissimilation of identical neighboring sounds.

The form colonel came into English (1583) from Middle

French and Italian through literary use and in translations of Italian military treatises in the late 16th century.

Two pronunciations (kolənel', korənel') existed until 19th century when kər'ənəl gave way to kər'nəl though the familiar literary form colonel remained firmly established in printing.

colonnade n. 1718, borrowing of French colonnade, alteration of earlier colonnate (1675), from Italian colonnato, from colonna column, from Latin columna pillar, COLUMN; for suffix see -ADE.

colony n. About 1384, colonie a Roman settlement; later, any settlement dependent on another country (1548–49); borrowed through Old French colonie, or directly from Latin colōnia, from colōnus cultivator, settler, from colere cultivate, till, inhabit. — colonial adj. 1776, formed in American English from Latin colōnia colony + English -*al*¹; or perhaps from English colony + -ial, on the pattern of barony, baronial. — colonist n. (1701) — colonization n. (1770) — colonize v. (1622) — colonizer n. (1781)

colophon n. 1774, publisher's inscription at the end of a book (corresponding to the modern title page); borrowed from Latin colophōn, from Greek kolophōn summit, final touch. The sense of a publisher's imprint is attested in English since 1930.

color n. About 1225 colurskin color, complexion; later, visible color, color of an object (probably before 1300); probably borrowed through Old French colour, from Latin color (accusative colōrem) color, hue, related to cēlāre to hide, conceal. — v. About 1375–90 colouren give color to, probably borrowed through Old French colorer, from Latin colōrāre to give color to, color, from color color. — coloration n. 1626, possibly borrowed from French coloration, but more likely from Late Latin colōrātiōnem (nominative colōrātiō) act or fact of coloring, from Latin colōrāre to color. — color-blind adj. 1844, implied in earlier color-blindness. — colored adj. (probably about 1375–90). — colorful adj. (1889) — coloring n. (probably before 1425) — colorless (About 1380)

Colosseum n. 1563, borrowed in reference to the Colosseum in Rome from Latin colossēum, neuter of colossēus gigantic, from colossus COLOSSUS; compare COLISEUM.

colossus n. Before 1398, a Latin word used in reference to the Colossus of Rhodes; from Greek kolossós gigantic statue (in reference to Egyptian statues described by Herodotus), later specifically that of Apollo at Rhodes. The transferred sense of anything vast or gigantic is first recorded in English in 1794. — colossal adj. 1712, borrowed from French colossal, from colosse colossus, from Latin colossus; for suffix see -AL¹.

colostomy n. 1888, formed in English from *colon*² + Greek stōma opening + -*y*³.

colt n. Probably before 1382, from Old English colt young donkey or camel (about 1000); probably cognate with dialectal Swedish kult young boar, piglet, boy, Norwegian kult stout person, block, stump, and Danish kuld offspring, brood, from Proto-Germanic kultaz*; see CHILD.

columbine n. Before 1310, borrowed perhaps through Old French columbin, from Medieval Latin columbina, apparently transferred sense from Late Latin columbina verbena, feminine of Latin columbinus + dovelike, from columba dove (because the inverted flower supposedly resembles a cluster of five doves).

column n. About 1440, a vertical division of a page; also, a pillar, post (before 1449); borrowed from Old French colombe, colompne, and Latin columna column, pillar, post, related to columen, culmen top, summit. The specific sense of matter written for a newspaper or magazine column, is recorded since 1785. — columnar adj. 1728, probably formed from English column + -ar, on the pattern of curricular; but possibly a borrowing from Late Latin columnāris, from Latin columna column. — columnist n. 1920, American English, formed from (newspaper) column + -ist.

com- a prefix added primarily to verbs, meaning with, together, as in combine, compress, or serving as an intensive to strengthen the force of the verb, as in commute, complete. Com- is also added to nouns and adjectives, meaning joint, fellow, as in compatriot. English com- was borrowed from Latin com-, from the preposition com, early form of cum with.

In Latin, the form com- survived when followed by b, m, p, as illustrated by examples of English borrowings (combine, commute, compete); before other consonants com- became con- or was assimilated (as con- would be) to col- and cor-. Before a vowel or h the m dropped out, and co- became the form or h as in coagulate, coerce, cohere. See also CO-, COL-, CON-, COR-.

coma¹ n. unconsciousness. 1646, borrowed from New Latin, from Greek kōma (genitive kōmatos) deep sleep, perhaps related to kámnein to toil, be sick or worn out, suffer. — comatose adj. 1755, either formed in English from Greek kōma (genitive kōmatos) coma + English -*ose*¹; or borrowed from earlier French comateux, feminine comateuse (1616).

coma² n. head of a comet. 1669, tuft of hairs on foliage, borrowed from Latin coma hair of the head, mane, from Greek kómē. The sense in astronomy is first recorded in 1765.

comb n. Old English (about 700) camb, later (chiefly Anglian) comb; cognate with Old Saxon and Old High German camb comb (modern German Kamm), Middle Dutch cam (modern Dutch kam), Old Icelandic kamb (Swedish kamm, Norwegian and Danish kam), from Proto-Germanic kambaz*. Compare CLIMB. — v. 1495, from the noun; earlier kombid, past participle, before 1398. — comber n. About 1200, one who cards wool, formed from Middle English comben to card wool + -*er*¹.

combat v. 1564, borrowed from Middle French combattre, learned borrowing from Late Latin combattere (Latin com- with each other + Late Latin battere to beat, strike; see BAT¹ stick). — n. 1567, borrowed from Middle French combat, from combattre to combat. — combatant n. 1489, from Middle French combattant, from present participle of combattre to combat; probably influenced by Middle English combattant, adj. (about 1460); borrowed from Middle French, present participle. — combative adj. Before 1834, formed from English combat + -ive.

combine v. Before 1420, borrowed probably through Middle French combiner, from Late Latin combināre yoke together, combine (Latin com- together + binī two each, two by two). —n. 1887, American English, an alliance of persons, especially for fraudulent purposes; from the verb. —combination n. Before 1398 combinacyoun, borrowed from Late Latin combinātiōnem, (nominative combinātiō), from combināre combine; for suffix see -TION.

combustion n. Probably before 1425, borrowing of Old French combustion, learned borrowing from Latin combustionem (nominative combustio), from combūrere burn up; for suffix see -TION. Latin combūrere was formed from com- completely + -būrere, an alteration (influenced by ambūrere burn around, scorch) of ūrere to burn. An earlier use of this word in Middle English (before 1398) referred to an obscuring by the sun. —combustible adj. 1529, in Sir Thomas More's works, but implied earlier in combustibility (1471); borrowed probably from Middle French combustible and Late Latin combustibilis, from Latin combustum, past participle of combūrere burn up.

come v. About 1175 comen; earlier cumen (before 1121), developed from Old English cuman (before 830) and having the forms in the past tense cuōm, cōm, past participle cumen. The Old English cuman is cognate with Old Saxon cuman to come, Old Frisian kuma, Middle Dutch comen (modern Dutch komen, past tense kwam), Old High German queman, coman, past tense quam (modern German kommen, past tense kam), Old Icelandic koma (Swedish komma, Danish and Norwegian komme), and Gothic qiman, all from a Germanic base kwem-, from Proto-Germanic kwemanan.

The Old English past tense cuōm, later cōm, became com, come in Middle English, but was soon replaced, perhaps through the influence of Scandinavian (compare Old Icelandic past tense form kvam) by cam, came (modern English came). The Old English past participle cuman was used occasionally down to the 1600's as comen, but the loss of the final -n (which began in the 1200's) finally caused this form to be leveled with the infinitive form as come. —comer n. Before 1376, formed from Middle English comen + -*er*¹. —coming n. (1280); adj. (about 1460).

comedy n. About 1385, borrowed from Old French comédie, from Latin cōmoedia, from Greek kōmōidía a comedy, amusing spectacle, from kōmōidós actor or singer in a comic chorus (kōmos merrymaking, festive procession + aidós singer, from aeidein to sing, member of the compound related to Greek oîdē ODE). The sense of an amusing play or theatrical performance is the same as that used by the ancient Greek and Roman writers, but in the Middle Ages the application was chiefly to poems and stories, though a "happy ending" continued to be an essential part of the meaning. —comedian n. 1581, writer of comedies; borrowed from Middle French comédien, from Old French comédie; for suffix see -IAN. The sense "comic actor" is first recorded in 1601.

comely adj. Before 1400 comly beautiful, handsome; earlier, noble (probably before 1300), and kumelich becoming, appropriate (probably about 1200); possibly shortened from bicumelic (probably before 1200), from BECOME fitting, seemingly, attractive; for suffix see -LY. Middle English kumelich developed from Old English cūmlīc finely made, handsome (about 1000, but recorded earlier as an adverb, about 725, in Beowulf), from Old English cūme fine, exquisite.

comestible n. 1837, in Theodore Hook's Jack Brag, noun use of earlier adjective meaning fit to eat, edible (1483); borrowing of Middle French comestible, + a learned borrowing from Late Latin comestibilis, from Latin comēstus, an alteration (under the influence of pōtus drunk) of earlier comēsus, past participle of comedere eat up, consume (com- thoroughly + edere EAT; for suffix see -IBLE).

comet n. Probably before 1200 comete, borrowed from Old French comete, learned borrowing from Latin comēta, from Greek kōmētēs comet, (originally) wearing long hair (because a comet's tail resembles long hair), from kōmān let the hair grow long, from kōmē hair; see COMA².

comfort v. About 1280 conforten cheer up, console; borrowed from Old French conforter to help, strengthen, from Late Latin cōnfortāre strengthen (Latin con-, variant of com- altogether + fortis strong; see FORT). —n. Probably before 1200 cunfort a feeling of consolation; later confort (about 1200 and about 1280); borrowed probably through Anglo-French from Old French confort, confort, noun use derived from the stem of Latin cōnfortāre strengthen. In English the noun replaced earlier Old English frōfor. The change of con- to com- before f took place in English. —comfortable adj. About 1340 comfortabil pleasant, enjoyable, borrowed from Anglo-French confortable from conforter to help, strengthen + -able. —comforter n. About 1350, borrowed through Anglo-French confortour from Old French conforteur, from Late Latin cōnfortātōrem*, from cōnfortāre; for suffix see -ER¹.

comic adj. Before 1387 comice, borrowed from Latin cōmicus, from Greek kōmikós of or pertaining to comedy, from kōmos merrymaking, see COMEDY; for suffix see -IC. —n. 1581, from the adjective. —comical adj. Probably before 1425, formed in English from Latin cōmicus + English -*al*¹. An earlier meaning "epileptic" (before 1398) was borrowed from Latin morbus comitiālis epilepsy.

comity n. 1543, borrowed from Latin cōmitās friendliness, from cōmis friendly, courteous, probably from Old Latin cōsmis, of uncertain origin; for suffix see -ITY.

An early use is found in Middle English comite association (probably before 1425); borrowed from Medieval Latin comitas, from Latin cōmitās friendliness.

comma n. 1586, short part of a sentence, division of a period or full sentence; borrowed probably through Middle French comma, from Latin comma, from Greek kōmma stamp, short clause; literally, piece cut off, related to kōptein to cut off, strike. The sense of the punctuation mark is first recorded in English in 1599.

The words colon, comma, and period originally denoted divisions in Greek rhetoric and prosody. The comparative length of the parts of the sentence evolved into terms of punctuation indicating shorter or longer parts, just as the period, or full stop, marks the end of the “period” or sentence itself.

command v. Probably before 1300 comanden, borrowed from Old French comander to order, enjoin, entrust, from Vulgar Latin commandāre*, alteration (influenced by Latin mandāre command, entrust) of Latin commendāre to recommend, COM-MEND. —n. Before 1400, borrowed from Old French comande, from comander to command. —commandant n. 1687, borrowing of French commandant, originally in the sense of commanding, present participle of comander to command, from Old French comander to command; for suffix see -ANT. —commander n. Before 1325 comandur; borrowed from Old French comandeur, from comander to command; for suffix see -ER¹. —commandment n. About 1275, borrowing of Old French comandement, from Vulgar Latin commandāmentum*, from commandāre*; for suffix see -MENT.

commandeer v. 1881, in the London Times, borrowed from Afrikaans kommandeer, from French commander to command.

commando n. 1791, a military expedition or raid; borrowed from Afrikaans kommando, from Dutch commando a troop under a commander, from Portuguese comando a command, from comandar to command. The meaning of a soldier who makes daring raids appeared in World War II and is first attested in 1940, in Winston Churchill's Second World War.

commemorate v. 1599, to recall, possibly borrowed through Old French commemorer, or directly from Latin commemorātus, past participle of commemorāre bring to remembrance, mention (com- together + memorāre bring to mind, from memor mindful of; see MEMORY); for suffix see -ATE¹. Alternatively, the verb may be a back formation of earlier commemoration. —commemoration n. About 1384, a calling to remembrance; borrowed through Old French commemoration, or directly from Latin commemoratiōnem (nominative commemoratiō), from commemorāre commemorate; for suffix see -TION.

commence v. Probably about 1300; borrowed from Old French comencier, from Vulgar Latin cominiāre* (Latin com- together + Late Latin iniāre begin, from Latin iniāre INITIATE). The doubling of the m started in Old French, and was fully established in English by 1500. —commencement n. About 1275, borrowed from Old French commencement, from comencier commence; for suffix see -MENT.

commend v. Probably about 1350 comenden, borrowed from Latin commendāre recommend, praise (com- with, intensive form + mandāre commit, entrust, MANDATE). —commendable adj. Probably about 1350, borrowed from Middle French commendable, from Latin commendābilis praiseworthy, from commendāre; for suffix see -ABLE. —commendation n. About 1390, expression of approval; earlier, eulogy (probably before 1200); borrowed from Old French commendation, learned borrowing from Latin commendatiōnem (nominative commendatiō), from commendāre commend; for suffix see -TION.

commensurate adj. 1641, borrowed from Late Latin commēnsūrātus (Latin com- together + Late Latin mēnsūrātus, past participle of mēnsūrāre to measure, from Latin mēnsūra MEASURE); for suffix see -ATE¹. —commensurable adj. 1557, borrowed through Middle French or directly from Late Latin commēnsūrābilis having a common measure (Latin com- together + Late Latin mēnsūrābilis that can be measured, from mēnsūrāre to measure); for suffix see -ABLE.

comment n. Before 1387, borrowed possibly through Old French comment, or directly from Late Latin commentum comment, interpretation, from Latin commentum invention, originally neuter past participle of commīniscā invent (com- thoroughly + -miniscā to think, related to mēns, genitive mentis MIND). —v. 1591, from the noun; earlier commenten explain (probably before 1425); borrowed from Latin commentārī think about, discuss, frequentative form of commīniscā invent. —commentary n. Probably before 1425, borrowed possibly through Old French commentaire, or directly from Latin commentārius, originally as adjective with the meaning of relating to comment, from commentum comment; for suffix see -ARY. —commentator n. Before 1398, borrowed, possibly by influence of Old French commentateur, from Late Latin and Latin commentātor inventor, author, from Latin commentārī think about, discuss, frequentative form of commīniscā invent.

commerce n. 1537, borrowing of Middle French commerce, learned borrowing from Latin commercium trade, trafficking (com- together, with + merx, genitive mercis wares, merchandise; see MARKET). —commercial adj. Before 1687, formed in English from Latin commercium trade + English -al¹.

commiserate v. 1606, to pity, borrowed from Latin commiserātus, past participle of commiserārī to pity (com- with, together + miserārī bewail, lament, from miser wretched, MISERABLE); for suffix see -ATE¹. Possibly back formation from commiseration. —commiseration n. 1585, borrowed from Middle French commiseration and directly from Latin commiseratiōnem (nominative commiseratiō) act or fact of pitying, from commiserārī to pity.

commissar n. 1918, borrowed from Russian komissar, from German Kommissar commissioner, from Old French commissaire, from Medieval Latin commissarius; see COMMISSARY.

commissariat n. 1779, in correspondence of Thomas Jefferson; earlier use in Scottish law, a court, the office, or the jurisdiction of a commissioner (1609); borrowed from French commissariat, from Medieval Latin commissarius COMMISSARY + French -at -ate¹.

commissary n. Before 1376 comissarie, borrowed from Medieval Latin commissarius, from Latin commissus entrusted, past participle of committere entrust, COMMIT; for suffix see -ARY.

commission n. 1344, authority entrusted to anyone; borrowed from Old French or directly from Latin commissiōnem, accusative of commissiō, from commiss-, past participle stem of committere COMMIT; for suffix see -ION. The sense of a body of persons charged with a trust is first recorded in 1494. —v. Before 1661, from the noun. —commissioner n. 1427, formed from English commission + -er¹, possibly by influence of Middle French commissioner.

commit v. About 1390 committen give in charge, entrust; borrowed from Latin committere put together, join (com- with + mittere send, put). The meaning “perpetrate” appeared in 1449. —commitment n. 1611, formed from English commit + -ment. The sense of a pledge, promise, appeared in 1793.

committee n. 1621, body of persons charged or entrusted in Parliament with a special assignment, formed from English COMMIT to entrust + -ee. Earlier the word applied to a person charged with a special duty; borrowed from Anglo-French replacing Old French commis, from Latin commissus, past participle of committere COMMIT.

commode n. 1786, chest of drawers; earlier, a fashionable ladies’ headdress (before 1688); borrowed from French noun use of adjective commode suitable, convenient, learned borrowing from Latin commodus convenient, appropriate, fit (com- with + modus measure, *MODE*¹). The meaning of a chamber pot, esp. one enclosed in a box or a lavatory (1851) developed from the sense of convenience.

commodious adj. 1423, beneficial, advantageous; borrowed from Medieval Latin commodiosus, from Latin commodus convenient (see COMMODE); for suffix see -OUS. The sense of roomy, spacious appeared in 1553.

commodity n. 1410 commoditee benefit, profit, welfare; later, a convenient or useful product (before 1420); borrowed from Middle French commodité, learned borrowing from Latin commoditatem (nominative commoditās) due measure, fitness, convenience, from commodus suitable, convenient, see COMMODE; for suffix see -ITY.

commodore n. 1694 commandore, probably borrowed from Dutch kommandeur commander, from French commandeur, from Old French comandeur commander, from comander to COMMAND.

common adj. Before 1300 commune belonging to all, general, borrowed from Old French comun, from Latin communis common, public; originally, sharing burdens (com- together + mūnia duties, related to mūnus office, duty). —n. About 1300, a fellowship or brotherhood; later, land held in common (before 1475); borrowed from Old French comun, commun common, and from Medieval Latin communia common, public. The Old French and Medieval Latin forms are from Latin communis common, public. —commoner n. (1357) —commons n.pl. (1600) —common sense (1535) —commonwealth n. (about 1425) commotion n. About 1390, borrowed from Middle French commocion, learned borrowing from Latin commotiōnem (nominative commotiō) violent motion, agitation, from commovēre move violently, agitate (com- thoroughly + movēre MOVE); for suffix see -TION.

commune¹ v. talk intimately. About 1303 comonen have dealings with; later comounen talk together (before 1387); borrowed from Old French communier make common, share, from comun COMMON.

commune² n. division of local government. 1792, borrowed from French, from Middle French commune free city, group of citizens, from Medieval Latin communia, originally neuter plural of Latin communis COMMON. —communal adj. 1811, borrowed from French, from Late Latin commūnālis, from Latin communis common; for suffix see *-AL*¹.

communication n. About 1384 communicacioun an imparting or transmitting of something; borrowed from Old French communication, learned borrowing from Latin communicatiōnem (nominative communicatiō) from communicāre make common to many, share, impart (com- together + a lost adjective moinicos* carrying an obligation, from mūnia, Old Latin moenia duties); for suffix see -ATION. —communicate v. 1526, partake in common, share; probably a back formation from English communication, and borrowed from Latin communicāus, past participle of communicāre make common, share, impart; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —communicable adj. Before 1398, borrowed probably through Old French communicable and directly as if from Latin communicābilis*, from Latin communicāre; for suffix see -ABLE.

communion n. Before 1382, borrowed from Old French communio, learned borrowing from Latin communiōnem (nominative communiō) mutual participation, from communis COMMON; for suffix see -ION.

communism n. 1843, borrowed from French communisme (1840), from commun common, communal (from Old French comun COMMON); for suffix see -ISM. As the name of the political system translated in 1850 from German Kommunismus in Marx and Engels’ Manifesto of the German Communist Party (1848); the German word from French. —communist n. 1841–42, borrowed from French communiste (1840), from commun COMMON; for suffix see -IST.

community n. 1375 (Scottish) comminite; borrowed from Old French communité, learned borrowing from Latin communitatem (nominative communitās) fellowship, community, from communis COMMON; for suffix see -ITY.

commute v. About 1450 commuten, borrowed from Latin commūtāre change altogether, exchange (com- altogether + mūtāre to change, MUTATE). The sense “make less severe,” is first recorded in 1633, and “travel regularly to or from work” in 1889. —commutation n. 1435 commutacion exchange, borrowed from Middle French, learned borrowing from Latin commutātiōnem (nominative commutātiō), from commūtāre commute; for suffix see -TION. —commuter n. person who commutes. 1865, formed from English commute, v. + *-er*¹.

compact¹ adj. closely packed together. Before 1398, borrowed through Old French compact, or directly from Latin compactus, past participle of compingere to confine (com- together + pangere fasten). —v. Probably before 1425 compacten consolidate, pack together; from the adjective. —n. 1921, small case for face powder; later, small, compact car (1960); both from the adjective.

compact² n. agreement. 1591, borrowed from Latin compactum a compact, agreement; originally neuter past participle of compacisci to contract together (com- together + pacisci make an agreement, contract).

companion n. Probably before 1300 companion; borrowed from Old French compaignon fellow, mate, from Late Latin compānionem (nominative compāniō) literally, one who takes bread with someone (Latin com- together + pānis bread; see FOOD). The Late Latin word, found only in the Lex Salica, a Frankish document of the 500's, is probably a translation of a Germanic word related to Gothic gahlaiba and Old High German galeipo, both meaning mess mate (ga- with, together + Gothic hlaiþs, Old High German hleib LOAF). —companionable adj. 1627, formed from English companion + -able.

company n. 1275 compainie companionship, fellowship, society; earlier compainie a (large) group of people (probably about 1150); borrowed through Anglo-French compaignie, Old French compaignie body of soldiers, companion, from compain companion, from Late Latin compāniō COMPANION; for suffix see -Y³. Company in the military sense was first used probably before 1300. The sense of an association for business or commerce appeared in 1553, preceded by reference to the trade guilds (1303).

compare v. 1375 comparen, borrowed from Old French comparer, learned borrowing from Latin comparāre make equal with, liken, compare, from compār like, equal with (com- with + pār equal). —comparable adj. 1410, borrowed from Middle French comparable, from Latin comparābilis, from comparāre; for suffix see -ABLE. —comparative adj. About 1434 comparatif; borrowed from Middle French comparatif (feminine comparative), from Latin comparātīvus, from comparātus, past participle of comparāre compare; for suffix see -IVE. —comparison n. 1340, borrowed from Old French comparaison, from Latin comparātiōnem (nominative comparātiō) act of comparing, from comparāt-, past participle stem of comparāre compare.

compartment n. 1564, borrowed from Middle French compartment part partitioned off, from Italian compartimento, from compartire divide, from Late Latin compartiri (Latin com- with + partiri to share, from pars PART); for suffix see -MENT.

compass n. Before 1325 compas circumference, borrowed from Old French compas, from compasser to measure, divide equally, from Vulgar Latin compassāre* measure off, from compassus* equal step (Latin com- with + passus, genitive passūs a step, PACE). The sense of an instrument for drawing circles appeared in 1349, and that of an instrument for showing directions perhaps before 1422. —v. About 1380 compasen encircle, encompass; borrowed from Old French compasser to measure, divide equally.

compassion n. 1340 compassioun, borrowed through Old French compassion sympathy, pity, or directly from Late Latin compassiōnem (nominative compassiō, loan translation of Greek sympátheia), and formed from compass-, stem of compati suffer together with, feel pity (com- with + pati suffer); for suffix see -SION. —compassionate adj. 1587, formed from English compassion + *-ate*¹.

compatible adj. 1459, sympathetic, borrowed from Middle French compatible, from Medieval Latin compatibilis, from Latin compati suffer; for suffix see -IBLE. —compatibility n. 1611, borrowed from French compatibilité; for suffix see -ITY.

compel v. Probably about 1350 compellen oblige, force, borrowed from Old French compeller, compellir to compel, learned borrowing from Latin compellere to force; literally, drive together, collect (com- together + pellere to drive).

compendium n. 1589, reborrowing from Latin compendium a shortening, saving; literally, thing weighed or kept together (com- together + pendere weigh). Middle English had a form compendi (about 1441), the original borrowing from Latin compendium, but the word apparently did not survive.

—compendious adj. About 1395, borrowed from Latin compendiōsus abridged, brief, from compendium; for suffix see -OUS.

compensate v. 1646, borrowed, perhaps through influence of French compenser, from Latin compēnsātus, past participle of compēnsāre balance out (com- with + pēnsāre weigh out, frequentative form of pendere weigh); for suffix see -ATE¹. Compensate is probably also a back formation from the earlier compensation in some of its uses. —compensation n. Before 1387 compensacioun, borrowed from Old French compensation and directly from Latin compēnsātiōnem (nominative compēnsātiō), from compēnsāre compensate; for suffix see -TION.

compete v. 1620, borrowed from French compéter be in rivalry with, or directly from Late Latin competere strive in common; in Latin, coincide, agree, be fit for (com- together + petere seek, aim at, go toward). The meanings of strive for command of a market appeared in the 1840's, perhaps as a back formation from earlier competition (1793 in this sense). The use in athletics appeared late in the 1800's, also perhaps by back formation from competition (in the sense of contest, 1618). —competition n. 1605, borrowed from Late Latin competitiōnem (nominative competitiō) rivalry, from competere strive in common; for suffix see -TION. —competitive adj. 1829, formed (as if from Latin competitīvus*) from English compete + -ive. —competitor n. 1534, borrowed, probably by influence of Middle French compétiteur, from Latin competitor rival, from competi-, a stem of competere strive in common + -tor.

competent adj. Before 1398, suitable, borrowed through Old French competent from Latin competentem (nominative competēns), present participle of competere coincide, agree, be fit for; for suffix see -ENT. The sense of being legally qualified appeared in 1483 and that of able, fit for, in 1647. —competence n. 1594, rivalry; later, adequate supply (1597), and legal power (1708–15); borrowed from French compétence aptness, fitness, learned borrowing from Latin competentia agreement, from competēns, present participle of competere coincide, agree; for suffix see -ENCE. The sense of ability appeared in 1790. —competency n. 1594, rivalry, formed as a variant of COMPETENCE; for suffix see -ENCY.

compile v. Probably before 1325 compilen, borrowed from Old French compiler, learned borrowing from Latin compilāre steal, pillage, plagiarize; originally, pile up (com- together + pilāre to press, from pila PILE¹ heap). —compilation n. 1426 compilacioun, borrowed from Middle French compilation, learned borrowing from Latin compilātiōnem (nominative compilātiō) a compilation; literally a pillaging, from compilāre; for suffix see -TION. —compiler n. Before 1338, borrowed through Anglo-French compilour, Old French compileor author or chronicler, from Latin compilatōrem, from compilāre; for suffix see -ER¹.

complacent adj. 1660, pleasing; later, pleased with oneself (1767); borrowed from Latin complacentem (nominative complacēns), present participle of complacere be very pleasing (com- completely + placere PLEASE); for suffix see -ENT. —complacence n. 1436, pleasure; later, self-satisfaction (before 1500); borrowed from Medieval Latin complacencia satisfaction, pleasure, from Latin complacentem (nominative complacēns), present participle of complacere; for suffix see -ENCE. —complacency n. 1643, borrowed from Medieval Latin complacencia satisfaction, pleasure; for suffix see -ENCY.

complain v. About 1370 compleinen find fault, lament; borrowed from Old French complain-, stem of complaindre, from Vulgar Latin complangere* (Latin com- thoroughly + plangere to lament). —complaint n. About 1380, lamentation, grief; borrowed from Old French complainte, from feminine past participle of complaindre complain.

complaisant adj. 1647, borrowing of French complaisant, from Middle French complaisant pleasing, present participle of complaire acquiesce to please, learned borrowing from Latin complacere be very pleasing (with influence of Old French plaire gratify); see COMPLACENT. —complaisance n. 1651, borrowed from French complaisance, from Middle French complaisance care or desire to please, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin complacencia COMPLACENCE.

In English of the 1600's to at least the 1850's, complaisance, complaisant and complacent, complacence overlapped in the sense of obliging, graciousness.

complement n. Before 1398, borrowed from Old French complement, from Latin complémentum that which fills up or completes, from complere fill up, COMPLETE; for suffix see -MENT. —v. 1612, exchange courtesies; later, make complete (1641); from the noun. —complementary adj. 1628, ceremonious; later, forming a complement, as of colors (1829), formed from English complement + -ary.

complete adj. About 1384, borrowed from Old French complet, complete full, complete, learned borrowing from Latin complētus, past participle of complere fill up, finish, fulfill (com- completely + plere to fill). —v. About 1390 completen, from the adjective. —completion n. Before 1398 complecioun, borrowed from Latin complētiōnem (nominative complētiō), from complere to complete; for suffix see -TION.

complex adj. Before 1652, combining various parts; borrowed from French complexe, from Latin complexus, past participle of complexi encompass, comprise (com- together + plexere to braid, twine). The sense of complicated is first recorded in 1715. —n. Before 1652, a whole comprising various parts; borrowed from Latin complexus (genitive complexūs) a surrounding, compass, from complex-, stem of complexi encompass. —complexity n. Before 1721, formed from English complex, adj. + -ity.

complexion n. 1340, bodily constitution; borrowed from Old French complexion, learned borrowing from Late Latin complexiōnem (nominative complexiō) physical constitution, from Latin also meaning combination, connection, from complex-, stem of complexi encompass, related to complexus COMPLEX; for suffix see -XION. The sense of appearance of the skin, especially of the face is first recorded before 1450, originally implying that the complexion indicated a person's temperament or health.

complicate v. 1621, unite, combine, from earlier complicate, participial adjective meaning involved, complicated (probably before 1425); borrowed from Latin complicatus, past participle of complicare fold together (com- together + placare to fold); for suffix see -ATE¹. The sense of combine in a complex way is first recorded in 1673 (possibly before 1631). —complication n. Probably before 1425 complicacioun; borrowed from Middle French complication, from Latin complicātiōnem (nominative complicātiō), from complicare fold together; for suffix see -TION.

complicity n. 1656, borrowed from French complicité, from Middle French complicité, from Old French complice ACCOMPLICE, learned borrowing from Late Latin complicem, accusative of complex partner, confederate, from Latin complicare fold together; see COMPLICATE; for suffix see -ITY.

compliment n. 1578 complement courtesy paid to another; restyled as compliment gradually after about 1650, in imitation of French compliment expression of respect, from Italian complimento, from Spanish cumplimiento, from cumplir fulfill, accomplish (from Latin complere fill up) + -miento -ment; for suffix see -MENT. —v. 1612 complement, restyled as compliment, see the noun (1668), borrowed from French complimenter, from compliment, n. —complimentary adj. 1628 complementary ceremonious, restyled as complimentary by 1716; formed originally from English complement + -ary.

comply v. Before 1333 complier to fulfill, carry out; borrowed from Old French complier, past participle compli, from Latin complere fill up, COMPLETE. The meaning of consent is first recorded in 1650. —compliance n. 1641, act of courtesy; formed from English comply + -ance. The sense of consent is first recorded in 1647.

component n. 1645, constituent element; earlier, one making up a group of persons (1563); borrowed from Latin compōnentem (nominative compōnēns), present participle of compōnere put together, compose (com- together + pōnere put, place); for suffix see -ENT. —adj. constituting. 1664, borrowed from Latin compōnentem, present participle of compōnere compose; for suffix see -ENT.

comport v. About 1385 comporten tolerate, endure; borrowed from Middle French comporter endure, behave, learned borrowing from Latin comportare carry together (com- together + portare carry). The sense of behave is first recorded in 1616. —comportment n. 1599, borrowed from Middle French comportement, from comporter; for suffix see -MENT.

compose v. Probably before 1402 compousen, borrowed from Old French composer put together, arrange, (com- together + poser to put, place, see POSE; influenced by the perfect stem, compos- of Latin compōnere put together, arrange; see COMPO- NENT). —composer n. 1597 formed from English compose + *-er*¹. —composition n. Before 1382 composicioun, borrowed from Old French composition, learned borrowing from Latin compositiōnem (nominative compositiō) act of putting together, from compōnere put together; for suffix see -TION.

composite adj. Probably before 1400, borrowed from Old French composite, from Latin compositus, past participle of compōnere put together, arrange (com- together + pōnere to put, place; see POSITION). —n. Probably before 1400, from the adjective.

compost n. Before 1399, compote; later, prepared mixture of manure, leaves, etc. to fertilize land (1587); borrowed from Middle French compost mixture of leaves, etc. for fertilizing land, from Latin compositus, past participle of compōnere put together; see COMPOSITE. —v. 1499, borrowed from Middle French composter, from the noun.

composure n. 1667, composed condition; calmness; earlier, composition (1599); formed from English compose + -ure; coined earlier on the analogy of enclosure and similar words.

compote n. 1693, borrowing of French compote stewed fruit, from Old French compote mixture, compost, from Latin composita mixture, feminine of compositus, past participle of compōnere put together; see COMPOSITE. The sense of a dish with a supporting stem for fruit or candy is first recorded before 1904, but appears earlier as comport (1881).

compound¹ v. About 1380 compounen mix, combine, compose; borrowed from Old French componre, compondre arrange, direct, from Latin compōnere put, place, or bring together (com- together + pōnere to put, place; see POSITION).

The -d in compound appeared in 1500's on analogy of expound, and was influenced by the past participle compounded, which became the adjective *compound*². —adj. Before 1387, originally compounded, past participle of compounen, v. —n. About 1434, from the adjective.

compound² n. enclosure. 1679, borrowed from Malay kampung, kampung enclosure, village, first used by Englishmen in the early factories of the Malay Archipelago. The English spelling was influenced by *compound*¹.

comprehend v. About 1340 comprehenden understand; borrowed from Latin comprehendere to grasp, seize, comprise (com- completely + prehendere seize; see PREHENSILE). —comprehensible adj. 1529, borrowed from Latin comprehēnsibilis, from comprehēnsus, past participle of comprehendere. —comprehension n. About 1445, borrowed from Middle French comprehension, learned borrowing from Latin comprehēnsiōnem (nominative comprehēnsiō) a seizing, from comprehendere comprehend; for suffix see -SION. —comprehensive adj. 1614, comprising much, of great scope; perhaps earlier implied in Middle English comprehensively comprehendingly, thoroughly (about 1454); borrowed from French compréhensif, compréhensive, and from Late Latin comprehēnsivus, from Latin comprehēnsus, past participle of comprehendere; for suffix see -IVE.

compress v. About 1380 compressen press together; borrowed from Old French compresser, from Latin compressare to press together, oppress, frequentative form of comprimere press together, restrain (com- together + primere to PRESS¹ push). —n. 1599, pad applied to stop bleeding; borrowed from Middle French compresse, from Latin compressa, from compressus, past participle of comprimere compress. —compression n. Before 1400, borrowed from Middle French compression, learned borrowing from Latin compressiōnem (nominative compressiō), from comprimere press together; for suffix see -SION.

comprise v. About 1425, to include, developed from comprised included; borrowed from Old French compris, past participle of comprendre to contain, comprise, comprehend, from Latin comprehēnsus, past participle of comprehendere grasp, seize, COMPREHEND. Also possibly formed on analogy of apprise, surprise, formed from compounds of French prendre.

compromise n. 1426, joint agreement; borrowed from Middle French compromis, learned borrowing from Latin compromissum, originally neuter past participle of compromittere promise together, as in an arbiter's decision (com- together + promittere PROMISE). The sense of a coming to terms is first recorded probably about 1435. —v. Probably before 1450; earlier be agreed (1437); from the noun.

comptroller n. a variant spelling of CONTROLLER (probably before 1400), because of the mistaken analogy with earlier compter (now counter), and account (now account), artificial respellings after Latin computāre COMPUTE; see ACCOUNT.

compulsion n. Probably before 1425, use of force, coercion; borrowed from Middle French compulsion, learned borrowing from Latin compulsiōnem (nominative compulsiō), from compellere COMPEL; for suffix see -SION. The psychological sense is first recorded in 1909 in compulsion neurosis, a loan translation of Zwangsneurose, in Freud's Interpretation of Dreams. —compulsive adj. 1602, probably borrowed from French compulsif, from Latin compulsus (past participle of compellere compel); for suffix see -IVE. —compulsory adj. 1581, borrowed from Medieval Latin compulsorius, from Latin compulsus, past participle of compellere compel; for suffix see -ORY. —n. 1968, required demonstration of skill in gymnastics, etc., earlier, a compulsory means, constraining authority (1516); from the adjective.

compunction n. About 1340, borrowed from Old French compūnciōn, learned borrowing from Late Latin compūnciōnem (nominative compūnciō) a pricking, remorse, from Latin compūnc-, past participle stem of compungere to prick severely, sting (com- thoroughly + pungere prick); for suffix see -ION.

compute v. 1631, borrowed from French computer, learned borrowing from Latin computāre to count, sum up (com- together + putāre count, reckon, consider). —computation n.

Probably about 1408 computacion, borrowed from Old French computacion, learned borrowing from Latin computatiōnem (nominative computatiō), from computāre compute; for suffix see -TION. —computer n. 1646, person who computes; later, mechanical calculating machine (1897); and electronic machine (1946, perhaps 1941); formed from English compute + -er¹.

comrade n. 1591 camerade one who shares the same room, also close companion (1593); borrowed from Middle French camarade partner, comrade, from Spanish camarada roommate; originally, roomful, from cámara room, from Latin camera vault; see CAMERA.

con¹ adv. against (a proposition, opinion, etc.). 1572, shortened from Latin contrā against; originally, in the phrase pro and con. —n. reason or argument against. 1589, from the adverb.

con² v. pore over, study, memorize. About 1425, variant of Middle English cunnen to know, developed from Old English cunnan know, know how, the infinitive form of can know; see CAN¹; also related to CUNNING.

con³ adj. duping, swindling. 1889, American English, shortened from confidence game, man, etc. (1849), in which the victim hands over money as a token of "confidence" in the swindler. —v. 1896, American English, from the adjective.

con⁴ n. Slang. convict. 1893, shortened form of convict.

con- a prefix meaning with, together, as in concentrate, conduct, or used as an intensive, as in conceive, conceal. Borrowed from Latin con-, the form of COM- before most consonants except h and the labials b, m, p; con- in Latin was also the form which by assimilation yielded col- and cor-.

This prefix appears in words taken from Latin and Old French, or from both sources, such as conceive, conception, confirm, confess, conquer, conquest. The prefix was not productive in Middle English and words formed rather used the form co-, as in copilot. So also in Old French con- was often reduced to co-, especially before v, as in covenant; on the other hand some words were later respelled with con-, such as convent.

concave adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed probably through Old French concave, or directly from Latin concavus (con- intensive + cavus hollow). —n. Before 1398, borrowed from Old French concave, n., from Old French concave, adj. —concavity n. Before 1400, concave surface or side, borrowed from Old French concavité, or directly from Late Latin concavitatem (nominative concavitās), from Latin concavus concave; for suffix see -ITY.

conceal v. Before 1325 concelen to keep secret; borrowed from Old French conceler to hide, from Latin concelāre conceal completely (con- intensive + celāre to hide). —concealment n. Before 1325, borrowed from Old French concelement, from conceler conceal; for suffix see -MENT.

concede v. 1632, borrowed through French concéder or directly from Latin concedere give way, yield (con- intensive + cedere to yield, CEDE).

conceit n. About 1380, something conceived in the mind, thought, notion; apparently formed from earlier conceiven CONCEIVE on the analogy of deceive, deceit, and receive, receipt. The sense of fanciful action or witty notion is first recorded about 1513. The meaning of vanity, pride (1605), developed from self-conceit (1588); earlier a personal opinion or judgment (about 1395). —conceited adj. 1542, having intelligence; later, vain (1608–11), shortened form of self-conceited (1595).

conceive v. Probably about 1280 conceiven receive (seed) in the womb, become pregnant; later, take into the mind (1340); borrowed from Old French conceiv-, stem of concevoir, from Latin concipere take in, perceive (con- intensive + -cipere, combining form of capere to take; see CAPTIVE). —conceivable adj. About 1454 (implied in conceivableness, about 1443), formed from English conceive + -able.

concentrate v. 1640, come to a common center or focus, developed as a variant of concenter, concentre meet in a common center (before 1591) + suffix -ate¹. The earlier concenter, concentre, was probably borrowed from Italian concentrare (con- together + centro, from Latin centrum CENTER). The sense of condense to appears in 1689, and later of focus the attention or mind on (about 1860). —n. 1883, from the verb. —concentration n. 1634, the act or state of bringing to a common center or focus; probably formed from English concentrate (or less likely, concenter, concentre) + -ation. The term concentration camp first appeared in the Second Anglo-Boer War (1899–1902).

concentric adj. About 1400, borrowed from Old French concentrique and Medieval Latin concentricus (from con- together + centrum circle, center).

concept n. 1556, borrowed from Middle French concept, or directly from Late Latin conceptus (genitive conceptūs) draft or abstract, from classical Latin with the meaning of a taking in, a conceiving, fetus, from concep-, stem of concipere take in, CONCEIVE. —conception n. Before 1333 concepcioun act of conceiving; borrowed from Old French conception, learned borrowing from Latin conceptionem (nominative conceptiō), from concipere CONCEIVE; for suffix see -TION. The sense of the mental processes forming concepts, is first recorded about 1380. —conceptive adj. 1640, conceiving (in the mind); borrowed from Latin conceptivus, from conceptus, past participle of concipere conceive; for suffix see -IVE. —conceptual adj. 1662, borrowed from Medieval Latin conceptualis, from Late Latin conceptus (genitive conceptūs) concept; for suffix see -AL¹.

concern v. Before 1420 concernen perceive, distinguish; later, refer to, relate (1420); borrowed through Middle French concerner concern, touch, belong to, or directly from Medieval Latin concernere relate to, belong to, regard, in Late Latin with the meaning of mingle with, mix (Latin con- together + cernere separate, distinguish, sift). —n. 1589, regard, reference, relation; from the verb. —concerned adj. 1656, from concern, v. —concerning prep. Before 1425, developed from English concerning, present participle of concern.

concert¹ n. 1665, agreement, accord, harmony, borrowed from French concert, from Italian concerto concert, harmony, from concertare to accord together. The sense of a public musical performance or entertainment appeared in English in 1689.

concert² v. 1598, to unite; later to arrange by agreement (1694); borrowed from French concert contrive, adjust, from Italian concertare accord together, settle, adjust, possibly from Latin concertare contend, discuss, debate (con- together + certare contend, frequentative form from certus, variant past participle of cernere separate, decide).

concerto n. 1730, an Italian word introduced in an English work on music, from Italian concertare accord together; see CONCERT², v.

concession n. 1464, borrowed through Middle French concession or directly from Latin concessiōnem (nominative concessiō), from concedere CONCEDE; for suffix see -SION. The meaning of a right granted is first recorded in 1856. —concessionaire n. 1862, borrowed from French concessionnaire, from concession + -aire, from Latin -arius; see English suffix -ARY.

conch n. 1391, shallow bowl; later shell (1410); borrowed from Latin concha shellfish, mollusk, from Greek kónchē mussel, cockle.

The earlier English forms conke, congh accord with the English pronunciation of Latin concha (kongk).

conciliate v. 1545, from Latin conciliatus, past participle of conciliare unite in feeling, make friendly, from concilium convocation, COUNCIL; for suffix see -ATE¹. —conciliation n. 1543, borrowed from Old French conciliation, learned borrowing from Latin conciliatiōnem (nominative conciliatiō), from conciliare; for suffix see -TION. —conciliatory adj. 1576, formed from English conciliate + -ory.

concise adj. About 1590, borrowed, perhaps through Middle French concis (feminine concise), or directly as a learned borrowing from Latin concisus cut off, brief, past participle of concidere cut up, cut short (con- completely + -cidere, combining form of caedere to cut; see EXCISE² cut).

conclave n. Before 1393, meeting of cardinals to elect a pope; borrowed through Old French, or perhaps Italian conclave, learned borrowing from Latin conclāve room that can be locked up (con- with + clāvis key, bar; see CLAVICLE). The meaning of a private assembly is first recorded in English in 1568, probably from a private meeting room (about 1450).

conclude v. Before 1325, to shut off an argument; Borrowed from Latin concludere close up, end (con- completely -cludere, combining form of claudere shut, CLOSE¹). The meaning of reach a conclusion, deduce, appears about 1380. —conclusion n. Probably about 1370, destiny, fate; later, outcome, result (about 1380); borrowed from Old French conclusion, from Latin conclusiōnem (nominative conclusiō), from concludere conclude; for suffix see -SION. —conclusive adj. 1590, summary; later, concluding (1612), and convincing (1649); borrowed from French conclusif, conclusive, learned borrowing from Late Latin conclūsivus, from Latin conclūs-, past participle stem of concludere close up; for suffix see -IVE.

concoct v. 1533, digest (food); borrowed from Latin concoctus, past participle of concoquere boil together, digest, ripen (con- together + coquere to COOK). The sense of prepare a soup, drink, etc., is first recorded in English in 1675, and that of make up or devise a story, scheme, etc., in 1792. —concoction n. 1531, digestion, borrowed possibly from Middle French concoction, or directly from Latin concoctiōnem (nominative concoctiō), from concoquere digest; for suffix see -TION. The sense of something concocted appears in 1823.

concomitant adj. 1607, borrowed from French concomitant, learned borrowing from Latin concomitantem (nominative concomitāns), present participle of concomitari accompany, attend (con- with, together + comitari join as a companion, from comes, genitive comitis companion). —n. 1621, from the adjective, though in Francis Bacon's Of the Advancement of Learning the Latin concomitantia appears, suggesting a direct connection between the English noun and Latin. —concomitance n. Before 1530, borrowed from Middle French concomitance, from Medieval Latin concomitantia, from Latin concomitantem (nominative concomitāns), present participle of concomitari accompany; for suffix see -ANCE.

concord n. Before 1325, borrowed from Old French concorde, learned borrowing from Latin concordia agreement, union, harmony, from concor (genitive concordis) of one mind, agreeing (con- together + cor, genitive cordis HEART). —concordance n. Before 1387, borrowed from Old French concordance, from Medieval Latin concordantia, from Latin concordantem (nominative concordāns), present participle of concordare be of one mind, agree, from concor (genitive concordis) of one mind; for suffix see -ANCE.

concordat n. 1616, borrowed from French concordat, from Middle French concordat, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin concordatum, noun use of Latin concordātum, neuter past participle of concordare agree, from concor (genitive concordis) of one mind; see CONCORD.

concourse n. 1384, crowd of people; borrowed from Old French concours, learned borrowing from Latin concursus (genitive concursūs) a running together, crowd, from past participle of concurrere run together. The sense of an open space as in a park, boulevard, or large building, is first recorded in 1862 in American English.

concrete adj. Before 1398, denoting an actual or solid substance; borrowed from Latin concretus, past participle of concreſcere grow together (into a mass), solidify (con- together + creſcere grow). Chiefly a term of logic and grammar to contrast with abstract, but from the 1600's it spread in the sense of particular, real, as used by Milton, Burke, Lowell, and others. —n. 1834, mixture of sand, gravel, etc., formed into a mass with cement; earlier, solid mass (1656), from the adjective.

concubine n. About 1300, borrowed from Old French concubine, or directly from Latin concubina a concubine (con- with + cubare to lie).

concur v. 1410 concurrere, borrowed from Latin concurrere run together, coincide (con- together + curre to run). —concurrency n. Probably before 1425, borrowed through Old concussion n. Before 1400, borrowed from Latin concussio (nominative concussio), from concute shake violently; for suffix see -SION. The medical sense of injury to the brain by a blow, is first recorded in 1541.

French concurrence, or directly from Medieval Latin concurrentia, from Latin concurrentem, (nominative concurrēns), present participle of concurrere concur; for suffix see -ENCE. — concurrent adj. Before 1398, borrowed through Old French concurrent, or directly from Latin concurrentem (nominative concurrēns), present participle of concurrere concur; for suffix see -ENT.

condemn v. Probably before 1325 condempnen; later, condemnen to blame, censure (1340); borrowed from Old French condemner, condempner, learned borrowing from Latin condemnare convict, accuse, blame (con- intensive + damnare cause loss to, condemn, from damnum loss, injury). — condemnation n. About 1384, borrowed from Latin condemnatio (nominative condemnatio), from condemnare condemn; for suffix see -TION.

condense v. Probably before 1425, borrowed through Middle French condenser, or directly as a learned borrowing from Latin condensare make dense, compress, thicken (con- together + densare make thick, from densus thick, DENSE). — condensation n. 1603, borrowed through French condensation, or directly from Late Latin condensatio (nominative condensatio), from condensare make thick; for suffix see -TION.

condescend v. 1340, to comply, acquiesce, borrowed from Old French condescendre, learned borrowing from Late Latin condescendere to stoop, condescend (Latin con- together + dēscendere DESCEND). The meaning of stoop to the level of inferiors, deign, is first recorded probably about 1435. — condescension n. 1642, borrowed possibly from Middle French condescension, or formed in English after Late Latin condescensio (nominative condescensio), from condescendere condescend; for suffix see -SION.

condiment n. Before 1500, seasoning; earlier, a pickling fluid (probably 1440); borrowed from Middle French condiment, from Latin condimentum spice, from condire to preserve, season, a variant (perhaps influenced by sallire to salt, preserve) of condere to make, build, lay up, store, preserve (con- together + -dere to put, place); for suffix see -MENT.

condition n. Before 1333 condicioun provision, stipulation; borrowed from Old French condition, condicion, learned borrowing from Latin condicio (in Late Latin sometimes spelled conditio) (nominative condicio, conditio) stipulation, compact, agreement, apparently from condicere talk over together, agree upon (con- together + dicere to say). — v. 1494, make conditions, stipulate; borrowed from Middle French conditionner, from Old French, from condition, n. The sense of bring to a desired condition, is first recorded in 1849. — conditional adj. About 1380 condicional, condicional, borrowed probably from Old French condicional, and directly from Latin condicionalis, from condicio; for suffix see -AL¹.

condole v. 1588, to grieve, lament, borrowed from Late Latin condolere suffer greatly, suffer with (Latin con- with + dolere grieve, suffer pain). The verb in English was influenced by earlier Middle English condolent sympathizing, contrite (before 1500). — condolence n. 1603, sympathetic grief; probably formed in English from Late Latin condolere + English -ence. For a time, roughly 1600 to 1800, the spelling condoleance was used, borrowed from French condolérance, from Old French condouloir condole, from Late Latin condolere + -ance -ance, but by 1800 condoleance had been leveled to condolence.

condom n. 1706, of unknown origin. A popular belief that it was named for an 18th-century physician who invented the device has no basis in fact.

condominium n. Before 1714, joint rule or sovereignty, New Latin condominium (from Latin con- together + dominium property, ownership). Until 1962 a term of politics and international law but a new sense appeared in American English of individual ownership of an apartment unit, and by 1963 an apartment house with this type of ownership. Condo is first recorded in 1964.

condone v. 1857, borrowed as a legal term from Latin condonare to grant, permit, forgive (con- intensive + dōnare give, present, pardon, from dōnum gift).

Apparently not a back formation of the earlier legal condonation (1623). Condone appeared in early English dictionaries, such as Blount (1656) and Bailey (1731), but until the 1850's it remained an Anglicized form for a term in law, and was omitted in later dictionaries, such as that of Johnson (1755), Webster (1828), and Craig (1847).

condor n. 1604, borrowed from Spanish cóndor, from Quechua ámtur, the native name.

conduce v. About 1400, borrowed from Latin conducere to lead or bring together, contribute, serve (con- together + ducere to lead). — conductive adj. 1646, formed from English conduce + -ive, on analogy with conduct, conductive.

conduct v. Before 1422 conducted guided or directed; borrowed from Latin conductus, past participle of conducere lead or bring together. The sense of to behave in a certain way, is first recorded in 1706–10 was an extension of to direct, manage (1632). The sense of convey appeared in 1740. Middle English conducten replaced conduiten to guide, control oneself; earlier condyten, conduyten (about 1400), from conduit, n. — n. About 1441, guide, in the phrase sauf conduite safe conduct; borrowed from Latin conductus (genitive conductus), from the stem conduc- of conducere conduce. The sense of behavior appeared in 1673. Middle English conduct, n. replaced earlier conduit, n., a guide, escort; earlier conduyt a channel or pipe to convey water, etc. (about 1300). — conduction n. 1538, hiring; later, conveying (1541); borrowed from Middle French conduction, from Latin conductionem (nominative conductio), from conducere. — conductor n. 1526 conductour leader; borrowed from Middle French conducateur, and directly from Medieval Latin conductor, both from Latin conductor one who hires, from conduc-, past participle stem of conducere bring together, hire; for suffix see -OR². Conductor replaced earlier conduitor a guide or leader (about 1410); borrowed from Old French conduitor, from Latin conductor. The sense of an orchestra director is first recorded in conduit n. About 1300 conduyt (differentiated in meaning from conduct in the 1400's); borrowed from Old French conduit, from Medieval Latin conductus a leading, a pipe, from Latin conduc-, stem of conducere lead or bring together.

English in 1784–85; of a person in charge of a railroad train, etc., in American English in 1832; and of a wire for conducting electricity, in 1737.

cone n. 1562, borrowed from Middle French cone, cône, or directly from Latin cōnus cone, from Greek kōnos cone, peak, pine cone. The meaning of the geometrical shape is implicated in Middle English cone angle or corner of a quadrant (probably before 1400). —conic adj. 1570, formed in English after Greek kōnikós, from kōnos cone; for suffix see -IC. —conical adj. 1570, formed in English after Greek kōnikós conic + English -al¹.

confection n. Before 1387 confeccioun anything prepared by mixing ingredients; earlier confeccioun (1345–46); borrowed from Old French confection a confection, learned borrowing from Late Latin confectionem (nominative confectiō), from Latin confectionem a making, preparing, from conficere put together, prepare; for suffix see -TION. —confectioner n. 1591, formed from English confection + -er¹. —confectionery n. 1769, confused with earlier confectionary (1599), both words formed in English: confectionery, from confectioner + -y¹ and confectionary, from confection + -ary.

confederate v. About 1370 confederen, borrowed through Old French confédérer, from Late Latin confoederātus, past participle of confoederāre unite in a league (con- together + Latin foederāre establish by treaty or league, from foedus, genitive foederis, league, compact); for suffix see -ATE¹. —adj. Before 1387 confederat; borrowed from Late Latin confoederātus, past participle of confoederāre; for suffix see -ATE¹. —n. 1495, from the adjective. —confederacy n. About 1380, league, alliance; borrowed from Anglo-French confederacie, as if from Late Latin confoederātia*, from confoederāre unite in a league; for suffix see -ACY. —confederation n. About 1422 confederacion league, alliance; borrowed through Middle French confédération, or directly from Late Latin confoederātiōnem (nominative confoederātiō), from confoederāre; for suffix see -TION.

confer v. 1570, give, grant; earlier, contribute (1528); borrowed perhaps through Middle French conferer to give, converse, compare, from Latin conferre bring together, consult together, compare (con- together + ferre bring, carry). Although the meaning of to compare is now obsolete, the abbreviation cf. (for Latin confer compare) is widely used. —conference n. 1555, act of conferring; earlier, comparison (1538); borrowed from Middle French conférence, or directly from Medieval Latin conferentia, from Latin conferentem (nominative conferens), present participle of conferre confer; for suffix see -ENCE.

confess v. About 1378 confessen, borrowed from Old French confesser, from Latin confessus, past participle of confiteri acknowledge, avow, confess (con- intensive + fatēri to utter, declare, disclose, related to fātus, past participle of fārī to speak). —confession n. About 1378, borrowed from Old French confession, from Latin confessionem (nominative confessio), from confiteri confess; for suffix see -ION. —confessor n. Before 1376, priest who hears confession; earlier, person who avows Christianity (about 1200); borrowed through Anglo-French confessour, Old French confessor, or directly from Late Latin confessor a confessor (of Christianity), from Latin confessus, past participle of confiteri; for suffix see -OR².

confetti n. pl. 1895, bits of colored paper thrown by celebrators on festive occasions; earlier, candy or plaster imitations of candy, thrown during carnivals in Italy, borrowing of Italian confetti, plural of confetto sweetmeat, candy, adapted from Old French confit confection.

confide v. Before 1455 (Scottish), to trust; borrowed from Latin confidere have full trust (con- completely + fidere to trust). The sense of to entrust secrets to is first recorded in 1735.

—confidant n. 1714, close friend, intimate; earlier, also confident (1619 to about 1870); borrowed from French confident close friend, from Italian confidente, from Latin confidentem (nominative confidēs), present participle of confidere have full trust; for suffix see -ANT and -ENT. —confidence n. Before 1400, borrowed from Old French confidence and directly from Latin confidentia, from confidentem (nominative confidēs), present participle of confidere have full trust; for suffix see -ENCE. —confident adj. 1576, borrowed from Middle French confident, learned borrowing from Latin confidentem (nominative confidēs) firmly trusting, bold, present participle of confidere have full trust; for suffix see -ENT. —confidential adj. 1759, perhaps borrowed from French confidentiel, as if from Latin confidentialis*, from confidentia; see CONFIDENCE.

configuration n. 1559, perhaps borrowed from Latin configuratiōnem (nominative configuratiō), from configurare (con- together + figurare to shape); for suffix see -TION.

confine n. Usually, confines. boundary, limit. About 1400, region, territory, borrowed from Old French confins, pl., boundaries, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin confines, from Latin confinia, plural of confinium boundary, from confine, neuter of confinis having the same boundary (con- together + finis boundary, limit). —v. 1523, border on; borrowed from Middle French confiner, from Old French confiner, from confins, pl., bounds, confines. The sense of to keep within limits, restrain, is first recorded in 1595. —confinement n. 1646, borrowed from French confinement, from confiner confine + -ment -ment.

confirm v. Probably before 1250 confirmen to ratify; later confermen (about 1300); borrowed from Latin confirmare, and from Old French confermer, learned borrowing from Latin confirmare make firm, strengthen, establish (con- intensive + firmare strengthen, from firmus FIRM). —confirmation n. About 1303, ceremony admitting person to church membership; borrowed from Old French confirmacion, from Latin confirmatiōnem (nominative confirmatiō), from confirmare confirm; for suffix see -TION. The sense of verification, proof, is first recorded about 1382. —confirmed adj. (about 1350) confiscate v. 1552, verb use of earlier past participle or adjective; perhaps influenced by Middle French confisquer, but borrowed from Latin cōfiscātus, past participle of cōfiscāre seize for the public treasury (con- together + fiscus public treasury); for suffix see -ATE¹. — confiscation n. 1543, borrowed from Middle French confiscation, and as a learned borrowing directly from Latin cōfiscātiōnem (nominative cōfiscātiō), from cōfiscāre confiscate; for suffix see -TION.

conflagration n. 1555, borrowed from Middle French conflagration, learned borrowing from Latin cōnflagrātiōnem (nominative cōnflagrātiō), from cōnflagrāre burn up (con- intensive + flagrāre to burn); for suffix see -TION.

conflict n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Latin cōnflīctus (genitive cōnflīctūs), from cōnflīc-, stem of cōnfligere strike together, clash, fight (con- together + fligere to strike, dash). —v. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Latin cōnflīctus, past participle of cōnfligere to conflict, fight.

confluence n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Late Latin cōnfluentia, from Latin cōnfluentem (nominative cōnfluēns), present participle of cōnfluere flow together (con- together + fluere to flow); for suffix see -ENCE. — confluent adj. Probably 1473, borrowed from Middle French confluent, learned borrowing from Latin cōnfluentem (nominative cōnfluēns), present participle of cōnfluere; for suffix see -ENT.

conform v. About 1340 confourmen, borrowed from Old French conformer make or be similar, learned borrowing from Latin cōnformāre to make of the same form (con- with + fōrmāre to shape, from fōrma a shape, FORM). — conformation n. 1511, borrowed from Latin cōnformātiōnem (nominative cōnformātiō), from cōnformāre. — conformist n. 1634, formed from English conform + -ist. — conformity n. Probably before 1425 conformite correspondence in form or manner, resemblance; borrowed from Middle French conformité, from Late Latin cōnformitatem (nominative cōnformitās), from cōnformis similar in shape (Latin con- with + fōrma form); for suffix see -ITY.

confound v. About 1300 confounden make uneasy and ashamed; borrowed through Anglo-French confondre, Old French confondre, from Latin cōnfundere pour together, confuse (con- together + fundere pour). The sense of to confuse, perplex is first recorded before 1376.

confront v. About 1568, stand in front of; borrowed from Middle French confronter, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin confrontare assign limits, adjoin (Latin con- together + frontem, nominative frōns, forehead). The sense of to face in defiance or hostility, appeared in 1580. — confrontation n. 1632, action of bringing persons face to face; borrowed from French confrontation, from confronter confront + -ation -ation.

confuse v. About 1330, to defeat, frustrate; later implied in confused bewildered (1378); borrowed from Old French confus confused, from Latin cōnfusus, past participle of cōnfundere pour together, mix up, CONFOUND. — confusion n. About 1300, discomfiture; borrowed from Old French confusion, learned borrowing from Latin cōnfusiōnem (nominative cōnfusiō), from cōnfundere confuse; for suffix see -SION. The sense of a confusing, or throwing into disorder appeared about 1380.

confute v. 1529, prove (something) false; borrowed from Latin cōnfutāre disprove, restrain, silence (con- intensive + -fūtāre to beat; or possibly a back formation from earlier English confutation. — confutation n. 1459 confutacioun, borrowed from Latin cōnfutātiōnem (nominative cōnfutātiō), from cōnfutāre confute; for suffix see -TION.

congeal v. About 1380 congelen, borrowed from Old French congeler freeze; thicken, learned borrowing from Latin congelāre (con- together + gelāre freeze, from gelū frost, ice).

congenial adj. About 1625, probably formed in English from con- together + Latin geniālis of birth or generation; or borrowed from New Latin congenialis* (con- together + genialis of birth, from genius). The sense of agreeable, suited to is first recorded in 1711.

congenital adj. 1796, borrowed from Latin congenitus born with (con- with + genitus born, past participle of gignere beget, bear); for suffix see -AL¹.

congest v. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Latin congestus, past participle of congerere bring together, collect (con- together + gerere to carry). — congestion n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Middle French congestion accumulation, learned borrowing from Latin congestiōnem (nominative congestiō), from congerere bring together; for suffix see -TION.

conglomerate adj. 1572, borrowed from Latin conglomerātus, past participle of Latin conglomerāre heap together (con- together + glomerāre form into a ball, from glomus, genitive glomeris ball, as of yarn; see CLAM); for suffix see -ATE¹. —n. 1961, from the adjective. —v. 1596, borrowed from Latin conglomerātus, past participle of conglomerāre; for suffix see -ATE¹. — conglomeration n. 1626, borrowed from Late Latin conglomerātiōnem (nominative conglomerātiō), from Latin conglomerāre; for suffix see -TION.

congratulate v. 1548, borrowed, perhaps through Middle French congratuler, from Latin congrātulātus, past participle of congrātulārī congratulate, wish joy (con- together + grātulārī give thanks, show or express joy); for suffix see -ATE¹. Alternatively congratulate may be a back formation in English from the earlier congratulation. — congratulation n. 1438 congratulation, borrowed from Middle French congratulation, or directly from Latin congrātulātiōnem (nominative congrātulātiō), from congrātulārī; for suffix see -TION. The plural noun congratulations is first recorded in 1632.

congregate v. Probably before 1450, verb use of earlier congregat, past participle or adjective (probably before 1425); borrowed from Latin congregātus, past participle of congregāre collect, assemble (con- together + grex, genitive gregis flock, herd, crowd); for suffix see -ATE¹. — congregation n. About 1380 congregacioun a gathering, assemblage; borrowed from Old French congregation, from Latin congregātiōnem (nominative congregātiō), from congregāre; for suffix see -TION.

The words referring to a sect of Christian worship are first recorded for Congregational (1639), Congregationalist (1692), Congregationalism (1716).

congress n. Before 1400 congrece body of attendants; later congress meeting of armed forces (before 1460), and congress a coming together of people, a meeting (1528); borrowed from Latin congressus (genitive congressūs) a coming together, assembly, encounter, from past participle of congrēdi meet with, fight with (con- together + grādī to step, walk; see GRADE). The sense of a meeting of delegates for discussion or settlement of some question is first recorded in English in 1678; the meaning of a lawmaking body of a country, in 1765, and with specific reference to the Congress of the United States, in 1775. —congressional adj. Before 1691, formed in English from Latin congressionem (nominative congressiō) a meeting, encounter (from the stem of congrēdi meet with) + English -al. —Congressman n. (1780) —Congresswoman n. (1918) congruent adj. Probably before 1425, suitable, proper; borrowed from Latin congruentem (nominative congruens), present participle of congruere agree, correspond with, fit (con- together + -gruere, as in ingruere rush into, fall upon, attack, combining form of a lost verb gruere*, compare ab-luere wash off, with lavere wash); for suffix see -ENT. The sense in geometry of exactly coinciding, is first recorded in 1706. —congruence n. About 1443, borrowed from Latin congruentia, from congruentem (nominative congruens), present participle of congruere agree, correspond with; for suffix see -ENCE. Use in geometry is first recorded in 1879. —congruity n. Before 1393, borrowed from Latin congruitatem (nominative congruitās) agreement, coincidence, from congruus agreeing, coinciding; for suffix see -ITY. —congruous adj. 1599, formed (on the model of Latin congruus) from Latin stem congru- + English -ous.

conic, conical. See CONE.

conifer n. 1851, borrowed probably by influence of French conifère, from Latin cōnifer cone-bearing (cōnus CONE + ferre to carry, *BEAR*²). —coniferous adj. 1664, formed from Latin cōnifer cone-bearing + English -ous.

conjecture n. About 1384, interpretation of signs, forecast; borrowed through Old French conjecture, or directly from Latin conjectūra a casting together of facts and indications, from the stem of conicere discuss, throw together (con- together + -icere, combining form of jacere to throw); for suffix see -URE. The sense of guess, surmise, is first recorded in Middle English about 1395. —v. Probably before 1425 coniecturen to infer from signs and omens, forecast; borrowed from Old French conjecturer, from conjecture, n. —conjectural adj. 1553, implied in earlier conjecturally (1447), formed from English conjecture + -al.

Originally conjecture existed alongside conjecten, v. (and conjecte, n.) in Middle English, but the noun disappeared in the 1500's and during the 1600's conjecture took the place of conjecten.

conjoin v. About 1380, borrowed from Old French conjoindre, stem of conjoindre, from Latin conjungere to join together (con- together + jungere to join). —conjoint adj. Before 1393, implied in earlier conjointly (before 1325), borrowed from Old French conjoint, past participle of conjoindre.

conjugal adj. 1545, borrowed from Middle French conjugal, or directly from Latin conjugalīs, from conjūnx (genitive conjugis) wife or husband, consort, from conjungere join together; for suffix see *-AL*¹.

conjugate v. 1530, verb use of earlier conjugate, adj., combined, united (1471); borrowed from Latin conjūgātus, past participle of conjūgāre to yoke together (con- together + jūgāre to yoke, from jūgum YOKE); for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —conjugation n. About 1450 conjagation, borrowed perhaps through influence of Old French conjugaison, from Latin conjūgātiōnem (nominative conjūgātiō), from conjūgāre; for suffix see -TION.

conjunction n. 1375, an apparent proximity of two planets; later, act of joining together, union (about 1380), and a word that connects words, phrases, and sentences in grammar (before 1397); borrowed from Old French conjunction, conjonction, from Latin conjūnctiōnem (nominative conjūnctiō), from conjungere join together (con- together + jungere JOIN); for suffix see -TION. The meaning in grammar was probably a direct borrowing from Latin, where the meaning existed as a loan translation borrowed from Greek syndesmos. —conjunctive adj. About 1475 conjunctyf connective; earlier (before 1450) in the grammatical sense "subjunctive," from Latin conjunctivus, from conjunct-, past participle stem of conjungere join together; for suffix see -IVE. —conjunctivitis n. 1835, New Latin, formed from conjunctiva connecting (as of the membrane over the eye) + -itis inflammation.

conjure v. About 1280 conjuren command or charge on oath, adjure; borrowed from Old French conjurere, learned borrowing from Latin conjūrāre make a compact, also in Late Latin with the meaning of adjure, entreat, exorcise (Latin con- together + jūrāre swear). The sense of compel to appear or disappear by magic is first recorded about 1300. The phrase conjure up cause to appear (in the mind) by magic, appeared in 1590. —conjuror, conjuror n. Probably about 1350, from Middle English conjuren + *-er*¹, *-or*².

connect v. Probably 1440 connecten; borrowed from Latin cōnectere join together (cō- together + nectere to tie, bind). The spelling connex replaced connect in the 1500's modeled on the Latin conexāre* a supposed frequentative form of cōnectere, possibly influenced by Middle French connexer; but this Latinized form was itself replaced by connect in the late 1600's. —connection n. About 1385 conneccion; later connexioun (before 1447); borrowed from Old French connexion, learned borrowing from Latin cōnexiōnem (nominative cōnexiō), from cōnectere; for suffix see -TION. The spelling with -tion became prevalent in American English, influenced by words such as affection, collection, direction. —connective adj. 1655–60; earlier connexive, borrowed from Latin cōnexivus serving to connect, from cōnex- past participle stem of cōnectere + -ive. The spelling with -tive was influenced by words such as effective.

conniption n. 1833 conniption-fit, American English, perhaps a euphemism for corruption in the sense of anger, temper (1799).

connive v. 1602, borrowed from French conniver, or directly from Latin connivēre, spelling variant of the Classical cōnivēre wink at, connive (con- together + earlier cnivēre*, with its frequentative form nicāre to blink, wink constantly). —connivance n. 1596 connivence, borrowed from Middle French, from Latin cōniventia, from cōniventem (nominative cōniventis), present participle of cōniverē; for suffix see -ANCE, -ENCE. —conniver n. 1639, formed from English connive + -er¹.

connoisseur n. 1714, borrowed from French, from Old French connoisseur, from connoistre know, from Latin cognōscere become well acquainted with (con- with + gnōscere recognize, KNOW).

connote v. Before 1665, imply; borrowed from French connoter, from Medieval Latin connotare signify in addition to the main meaning (Latin con- with + notāre to note, from nota a mark, sign). Also connote may be a back formation in English from the earlier connotation. —connotation n. 1532, borrowed from Medieval Latin connotationem (nominative connotatio), from connotare connote; for suffix see -TION.

connubial adj. 1656, borrowed from Latin connubiālis, a spelling variant of the Classical cōnubiālis, from cōnūbium marriage (con- together + nūbere, earlier sneubere* marry, see NUPTIAL); for suffix see -AL¹.

conquer v. Probably about 1200 cunquearen, borrowed through Old French conquerre, from Vulgar Latin conquerere*, re-formed from Latin conquiere seek for, procure by effort, win (con- completely + quaerere seek, procure, gain). —conqueror n. Probably before 1300 conquerur, borrowed through Anglo-French cunquerrur, Old French conquereor, from conquerre conquer; for suffix see -OR². —conquest n. Before 1325, borrowed from Old French conqueste (from Vulgar Latin conquasita*, re-formed from Latin conquisita), feminine past participle of conquerre.

consanguineous adj. 1601, borrowed from Latin cōnsanguineus of the same blood (con- together + sanguineus of blood); for suffix see -OUS. —consanguinity n. About 1400 consanguinite, borrowed from Old French consanguinité, or directly from Latin cōnsanguinitatem (nominative cōnsanguinitās), from cōnsanguineus consanguineous; for suffix see -ITY.

conscience n. Probably before 1200, borrowed from Old French conscience, learned borrowing from Latin cōscientia knowledge, consciousness, conscience, from cōscientem (nominative cōsciēns), present participle of cōscire know, be conscious (con- intensive + scire to know); for suffix see -ENCE. Latin cōscientia is probably a loan translation of Greek synēldēsis (literally) with knowledge. —conscientious adj. 1611, borrowed from earlier French conscientieux (now conscientieux), learned borrowing from Medieval Latin conscientiosus, from Latin cōscientia conscience; for suffix see -OUS.

conscious adj. 1601, knowing, privy to; borrowed from Latin cōsciūs knowing (something) with another (con- intensive + scire know). Latin cōsciūs was probably a loan translation of Greek synēldōs. The sense of having perception, being aware is first recorded in English in 1632. —consciousness n. 1632, formed from English conscious + -ness.

conscript n. 1800, back formation from CONSCRIPTION; influenced by French conscrit, noun use of Old French conscrit, adj., drafted, from Latin cōscriptus, past participle of cōscribere enter in a list, enroll, draw up (con- together + scribere write). —v. 1813, American English, from the noun. —conscript n. 1382 conscriptioun written agreement or record; later, enrollment or enlistment of soldiers (1529); borrowed from Middle French conscription, learned borrowing from Latin cōscriptiōnem (nominative cōscriptiō) a drawing up of a list, enrollment, a levying of soldiers, from cōscribere; for suffix see -TION.

consecrate v. Before 1387, borrowed, possibly by influence of Old French consacrer, from Latin cōsecrātus, past participle of cōsecrāre devote, dedicate as sacred to a deity, deify (con- intensive + sacrāre make sacred, from sacr-, stem of sacer SACRED); for suffix see -ATE¹. —consecration n. Before 1382, borrowed from Old French consecration, learned borrowing from Latin cōsecratiōnem (nominative cōsecratiō) from cōsecrāre; for suffix see -TION.

consecutive adj. 1611, borrowed from French consécutif (feminine consécutive), from Middle French, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin consecutivus, from Latin cōsecūtus following closely, past participle of cōsequi follow closely (con- intensive + sequi follow); for suffix see -IVE.

consensus n. 1633, as a nonce coinage; later, as a Latin borrowing (1843) of cōsensus (genitive cōsensus) agreement, accord, from cōsens-, stem of cōsentire feel together, agree. —consensual adj. 1754, of or having to do with consent; later, by consent (1800); formed from English consensus + -al¹.

consent v. Probably before 1200, borrowed from Old French consentir + agree, comply, learned borrowing from Latin cōsentire feel together, agree, accord (con- together + sentire feel, think). —n. About 1300, borrowed from Old French consente agreement, compliance, from consentir, v.

consequent adj. 1410, borrowed from Middle French conséquent following, resulting, learned borrowing from Latin cōsequentem (nominative cōsequēns), present participle of cōsequi to follow closely; for suffix see -ENT. —consequence n. About 1380, an inference or conclusion; borrowed from Old French consequence result, learned borrowing from Latin cōsequentia, from cōsequentem (nominative cōsequēns), present participle of cōsequi; for suffix see -ENCE. —consequential adj. 1626, implied in earlier consequentially (1607), formed in English from Latin cōsequentia thing resulting, from cōsequentem (nominative cōsequēns), present participle of cōsequi + -al¹.

conserve v. About 1380 conserven, borrowed from Old French conserver protect, preserve, learned borrowing from Latin cōservare preserve (con- intensive + servare keep, watch, maintain). —n. Often, conserves. Before 1393, a preservative; borrowed from Old French conserve, from conserver conserve. The sense of a medicinal preparation of fruit preserved in sugar as a confection or as jam, appeared probably about 1425, and as the plural noun conserves confections (before 1425). —conservation n. About 1380 conservacioun preservation; borrowed from Old French conservacion, and directly from Latin cōservātiōnem (nominative cōservātiō), from cōservāre; for suffix see -TION. —conservationist n. (1870) —conservative adj. About 1380 conservatyf, borrowed from Middle French conservatif (feminine conservative), learned borrowing from Late Latin cōservātīvus, from Latin cōservātus, past participle of cōservāre conserve; for suffix see -IVE. —n. 1831, member of the Conservative party; from the adjective. —conservatism n. (1835) —conservatory n. 1563, a preservative, borrowed from New Latin conservatorium, from Medieval Latin, from the past participle stem of Latin cōservāre conserve; for suffix see -ORY. The sense of a greenhouse is first recorded in 1664, and that of a school for music, drama, etc., in 1842.

consider v. 1375, borrowed from Old French considerer, learned borrowing from Latin cōsiderāre look at closely, consider; probably originally meaning “examine the stars,” in reference to augury or navigation (con- with + sidus, genitive sideris constellation). —considered adj. (probably before 1400) —considering prep. (about 1390) —considerable adj. About 1449, that can be considered; borrowed from Medieval Latin considerabilis, from Latin cōsiderāre consider; for suffix see -ABLE. The meaning of worthy of consideration, significant is first recorded before 1619, and then extended to somewhat large in 1651. —considerate adj. 1572, well-considered, deliberate; earlier in Middle English considerat observed, noted (probably before 1425); borrowed from Latin cōsiderātus, past participle of cōsiderāre; for suffix see -ATE¹. —consideration n. Probably about 1350, contemplation; borrowed from Old French considération, learned borrowing from Latin cōsiderātiōnem (nominative cōsiderātiō), from cōsiderāre; for suffix see -TION.

consign v. Before 1449, ratify or attest (as with a sign or seal), borrowed from Middle French consigner, learned borrowing from Latin cōsignāre furnish or mark with a seal (con- with + signum seal, SIGN). The sense of hand over, deliver, commit is first recorded in 1528. —consignment n. 1563, a sealing with a sign, formed from English consign + -ment. The general sense of a handing over or delivery, is first recorded before 1668.

consist v. 1526, exist, consist, borrowed through Middle French consister, or directly from Latin cōsistere take a standing position, remain firm, exist (con- intensive + sistere cause to stand, place, related to stāre be standing, STAND). —consistence n. 1598 consistence a standing fast, firmness; borrowed from Middle French consistence (modern French consistance), from Medieval Latin consistentia, from Latin cōsistentem (nominative cōsistēns), present participle of cōsistere; for suffix see -ENCE. —consistency n. 1594, borrowed from Medieval Latin consistentia or from Latin cōsistentem; for suffix see -ENCY. —consistent adj. 1574, standing still, borrowed from Latin cōsistentem (nominative cōsistēns), present participle of cōsistere. The sense of agreeing, compatible, congruous, is first recorded in 1646.

consistory n. Probably before 1300, a secular tribunal; borrowed from Old North French consistorie, consistoire, and directly from Late Latin cōsistōrium waiting room, meeting place of the imperial council, the imperial cabinet, from Latin cōsistere, see CONSIST; for suffix see -ORY. The meaning of a church council is first recorded before 1325.

console¹ v. comfort. 1693, borrowed from French consoler, learned borrowing from Latin cōsōlārī offer solace, console (con- intensive + sōlārī soothe); also possibly be a back formation in English from consolation, influenced in its formation by French consoler. —consolation n. About 1385, borrowed through Old French, or directly from Latin cōsōlātiōnem (nominative cōsōlātiō), from cōsōlārī console; for suffix see -TION.

console² n. cabinet, panel. 1706, ornamental structural support, borrowed from French console a bracket, from Middle French, of uncertain origin (possibly shortened from consoleteur a sculptured figure originally used as support in church architecture); literally, consoler, from Latin cōsōlātor (from cōsōlārī CONSOLE¹).

English console is first recorded in 1881 with the meaning of a case enclosing the keyboard, knobs, etc., of an organ. This sense was extended to the cabinet enclosing a radio, phonograph (1925), later, to that of a television, tape recorder, or computer set, and to a control panel or switchboard (1944).

consolidate v. 1511–12, borrowed from Latin cōsolidātus, past participle of cōsolidāre make solid (con- intensive + solidus SOLID); for suffix see -ATE¹. —consolidation n. Before 1400, uniting of a broken bone, healing of a wound, borrowed from Old French consolidation and from Latin cōsolidātiōnem (nominative cōsolidātiō), from cōsolidāre make firm, consolidate; for suffix see -TION. The general sense of the action of consolidating, is first recorded in 1603.

consonant n. Probably before 1325, a sound other than a vowel; borrowed through Old French, from Latin cōsonantem (nominative cōsonāns), present participle of cōsonāre sound together, i.e. with the vowels (con- together + sonāre to sound, from sonus a SOUND¹); for suffix see -ANT. —adj. 1410, agreeing, consistent, borrowed from Middle French consonant, from Latin cōsonantem (nominative cōsonāns), present participle of cōsonāre. —consonance n. Before 1420, borrowed through Old French consonance, from Latin cōsonantia harmony, agreement, from cōsonantem; for suffix see -ANCE.

consort n. 1419, colleague, partner, borrowed from Middle French consort mate, fellow, partner, wife, learned borrowing from Latin cōsortem, accusative of cōsors sharer, partner, comrade (con- with + sortem, accusative of sors lot SORT). The sense of husband or wife is first recorded in 1634. —v. 1588, to escort, attend; from the noun. —consortium n. 1829, borrowed from Latin cōsortium partnership, from cōsors (genitive cōsortis) partner.

conspicuous adj. 1545, borrowed from Latin cōspicius visible, striking, from cōspicere see, notice (con- thoroughly + specere look at); for suffix see -OUS.

conspire v. Before 1376 conspiren, borrowed from Old French conspirer, learned borrowing from Latin cōspirāre agree, plot; literally, breathe together (con- together + spirāre breathe).

—conspiracy n. 1357, borrowed from Anglo-French conspiracie, Old French conspiratie, replacing conspiration (before 1325), borrowed from Old French conspiration, from Latin cōspīrātiōnem (nominative cōspīrātiō) conspiracy, from cōspīrāre; for suffix see -TION. —conspirator n. 1403, borrowed through Anglo-French conspiratour, Old French conspirateur, from Latin cōspīrātōrem; for suffix see -OR².

constable n. Probably about 1200, chief household officer; later, governor of a royal domain, justice of the peace (about 1300); borrowed from Old French constable, from Late Latin comes stabuli officer of the stable (comes COUNT² nobleman + Latin stabuli, genitive of stabulum stall). The sense of a police officer is first recorded before 1836, preceded by king's peace officer (about 1300), officer of the peace (1597). —constabulary n. Before 1461, an adaptation of Medieval Latin constabularia, replacing earlier constablerie (1333); borrowed from Old French constablerie, from constable; for suffix see -ARY.

constant adj. About 1390 constaunt steadfast; borrowed from Old French constant and directly from Latin cōstantem (nominative cōstāns) standing firm, stable, present participle of cōstāre stand firm (con- intensive + stāre to STAND); for suffix see -ANT. —n. unvarying quantity (in mathematics or physics). 1832, from the adjective (1753). —constancy n. 1526, probably developed from earlier constance, constaunce + -y, after the pattern fragrance/fragrancy, but ultimately influenced by Latin cōstantia, from cōstantem (nominative cōstāns), present participle, see CONSTANT; for suffix see -ANCY. —constantly adv. (probably about 1425) constellation n. About 1330, configuration of stars; borrowed from Old French constellation, from Late Latin cōstellātiōnem (nominative cōstellātiō), from cōstellātus studded with stars (Latin con- with + stellātus covered with stars, from stella STAR); for suffix see -TION.

consternation n. 1611, borrowed from French consternation dismay, confusion, learned borrowing from Latin cōsternātiōnem (nominative cōsternātiō), from cōsternāre overcome, confuse, dismay (con- with + sternāre throw down); for suffix see -TION.

constipate v. 1533, implied in earlier constipat, adj., constipated (probably before 1425); borrowed from Latin cōstīpātus, past participle of cōstīpāre press closely together (con- together + stīpāre press, cram full); for suffix see -ATE¹. Constipate, v. replaced earlier constipen (before 1398; borrowed from Old French constiper, from Latin cōstīpāre). Modern English constipate is in part a back formation from the earlier constipation. —constipation n. Before 1400 constipacioun constriction of tissues; borrowed through Old French, or directly from Late Latin cōstīpātiōnem (nominative cōstīpātiō), from Latin cōstīpāre; for suffix see -TION.

constitute v. 1442, verb use of earlier adjective constitute made up, formed (before 1398); borrowed from Latin cōstitūtus, past participle of cōstituere set up, appoint (con- intensive + -stituere, combining form of statuere set up). —constituency n. 1831, formed from English constituent + -cy of -ency. —con- stituent n. 1622 constituent, constituant one who constitutes another as an agent (in 1714, one who elects another to public office); borrowed, by influence of French constituant, from Latin cōstituentem (nominative cōstituēns), present participle of cōstituere. —adj. 1660, probably from the noun. —constitution n. Probably about 1350 constitucion law, regulation, edict; borrowed from Old French constitution, constitucion, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin cōstitutiōnem (nominative cōstitutiō) disposition, nature, arrangement, from cōstituere; for suffix see -TION. —constitutional adj. 1682, formed from English constitution + -al¹. —constitutionality n. 1787, formed from English constitutional + -ity. —constitutionally adv. (1742) constrain v. Probably before 1325 constreynen, borrowed from Old French constraign-, constraign-, stem of constrindre, constrindre, from Latin cōstringere tie tightly together, compress (con- together + stringere pull tightly). —constraint n. About 1385 consteinte, borrowed from Old French consteinte, consteinte, originally feminine past participle of constrindre, constrindre.

constrict v. Probably before 1425 (implied in constrict, adj.); borrowed from Latin cōstrictus, past participle of cōstringere compress, CONSTRAIN. Also a back formation from constriction. —constriction n. Before 1400 constriction, borrowed through Middle French or directly from Latin cōstrictiōnem (nominative cōstrictiō), from cōstrict-, past participle stem of cōstringere; for suffix see -ION. —constrictive adj. Before 1400, borrowed from Latin cōstrictivus, from cōstrictus; for suffix see -IVE. —constrictor n. Before 1735, formed in English from constrict + -or² on the pattern of Latin conductor from conducere.

construct v. probably before 1425 (implied in construct, past participle); borrowed from Latin cōstrūctus, past participle of cōstruere pile together, build up (con- together + struere pile, build). Also a back formation from construction. —n. 1871, from the verb. —construction n. Before 1387 construccioun act of construing or translating; borrowed through Old French construction or directly from Latin cōstrūctiōnem (nominative cōstrūctiō), from cōstrūct-, past participle stem of cōstruere; for suffix see -ION. The sense of putting together appeared probably before 1425. —constructive adj. Before 1425; borrowed through Old French constructif or directly from Latin cōstrūctivus, from cōstrūctus, from cōstruere; for suffix see -IVE.

construe v. Before 1376 construen analyze parts of a sentence; borrowed from Late Latin cōstruere relate grammatically, in Classical Latin build up; see CONSTRUCT.

consul n. About 1384, a magistrate in ancient Rome; borrowed through Old French consul and directly from Latin cōsul, probably originally "one who consults the senate," from cōsulere CONSULT. Consul appears as "a representative of a government in a foreign country" by 1599. —consular adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed perhaps by influence of Old French consulaire, from Latin cōsulāris, from cōsul; for suffix see -AR. —consulate n. Before 1387, government by consuls, borrowed from Latin cōsulātus (genitive cōsulātūs), from cōsul; for suffix see -ATE¹. The sense of a consul's office or residence is first recorded in 1702.

consult v. 1527, borrowed through Middle French consulter and directly from Latin cōsultāre consult, frequentative form of cōsulere take counsel, consult, probably originally "to gather (the senate) together" (con- together + selere* take, gather). Also consult may be a back formation in English from the earlier consultation. — consultation n. About 1425 (Scottish); borrowed from Middle French consultation, from Latin cōsultātiōnem (nominative cōsultātiō), from cōsultāre; for suffix see -TION. — consultant n. 1697, probably formed from English consult + -ant, perhaps by influence of French consultant.

consume v. use up, devour. About 1380, borrowed through Old French consumer, and directly from Latin cōsumere take up, use up (con- intensive + sūmere take up, formed from sus-, from earlier subs-, variant of sub- up, + emere to take). — consumer n. About 1425, one who consumes or destroys, formed from English consume + *-er*¹. The sense of one who makes use of goods (opposite of producer) is first recorded in 1745. — consumerism n. 1944, American English, formed from English consumer + -ism.

consummate adj. 1447 consummat, adjective or participle, borrowed from Latin cōsummātus, past participle of cōsummare sum up, complete (con- intensive + summa highest degree, total). — v. 1530, fulfill, complete; from the adjective. — consummation n. Before 1398 consummacion completion; borrowed through Old French consummation, and directly from Latin cōsummātiōnem (nominative cōsummātiō), from cōsummare complete; for suffix see -TION.

consumption n. Before 1398, a wasting of the body by disease, specifically after the 1650's, tuberculosis; borrowed probably through Old French consumption, consumption, from Latin cōsumptiōnem (nominative cōsumptiō) a using up, wasting, from the stem of cōsumere use up; for suffix see -TION. The literal sense of the use of material appeared before 1535, and the sense in economics (opposite of production), in 1662. — consumptive adj. Probably before 1425. — n. Before 1398; both functions of the word ultimately probably formed in English as if from Latin cōsumpt-, participial stem of cōsumere + English -ive.

contact n. 1626, action of touching; borrowed perhaps through French contact, and directly from Latin contāctus (genitive contāctūs) a touching, from past participle of contingere touch closely (con- intensive + tangere to touch). The figurative sense of connection, communication (as in come in contact with), appeared in 1818. — v. 1834, put in contact. The sense of get in touch with (someone) is first recorded in 1927 in American English.

contagion n. About 1380, corrupting influence, contamination; later, a communicable disease (before 1398); borrowed from Old French contagion, from Latin contāgiōnem (nominative contāgiō) contact, contagion, related to contingere touch closely, CONTACT; for suffix see -ION. — contagious adj. About contain v. Probably before 1300 contenir behave in a certain way, restrain (oneself); borrowed from Old French contenir, from Latin continēre hold together, restrain, contain (con- together + tenēre to hold). — container n. About 1443 container, formed from Middle English contenir contain + *-er*¹. — containment n. 1655, formed from English contain + -ment.

1380, borrowed from Old French contagieux, from Late Latin contāgiōsus, from contāgiō a touching; for suffix see -OUS.

contaminate v. Probably before 1425, borrowed by influence of Old French contaminer, from Latin contāminātus, past participle of contāmināre bring into contact, contaminate, from a lost noun con-tāmen*, from earlier com-tag-smen*, related to tangere touch; for suffix see -ATE¹. — contaminant n. 1934, formed from English contaminate + -ant. — contamination n. Probably before 1425, borrowed possibly through Middle French contamination, or directly from Latin contāminātiōnem (nominative contāminātiō), from contāmināre; for suffix see -TION.

contemplate v. 1592, probably in part a back formation in English from the earlier contemplation, and a borrowing from Latin contemplātus, past participle of contemplārī survey, observe (originally, an augury), consider (con- intensive + templum area for the taking of auguries, consecrated place, temple); for suffix see -ATE¹. — contemplation n. Probably before 1200 contemplaciun devout meditation; borrowed through Old French contemplacion, contemplation, and directly from Latin contemplātiōnem (nominative contemplātiō) the act or fact of looking at or considering, from contemplārī; for suffix see -TION. — contemplative adj. 1340, borrowed from Old French contemplatif, contemplative, from Latin contemplātivus, from contemplātus.

contemporaneous adj. 1656, borrowed from Late Latin contemporāneus (from Latin con- together + tempor-, stem of tempus time + -āneus, from -ānus -an); for suffix see -OUS.

contemporary adj. 1631, originally borrowed on the model of Medieval Latin contemporarius, from Latin con- together + temporārius of time (tempor-, stem of tempus time + -ārius -ary). — n. Before 1635, cotemporary; later contemporary (1646); from the adjective.

contempt n. Before 1393, borrowed from Latin contemptus (genitive contemptūs), from past participle of contemnere to scorn, despise (con- intensive + pre-Latin temnere* to slight, scorn, of uncertain origin; the later Classical Latin temnere is an artificial form abstracted from contemnere by Roman poets). — contemptible adj. About 1384, worthy of contempt, despicable; borrowed from Latin contemptibilis, from contemptus (genitive contemptūs) contempt; for suffix see -IBLE. — contemptibly adv. About 1575, formed from English contemptible + *-ly*¹. — contemptuous adj. 1595, formed in English from Latin contemptus (genitive contemptūs) contempt + English -ous.

contend v. Probably 1440 contenden, borrowed through Middle French contendre, or directly from Latin contendere exert oneself, strain, strive (con- intensive + tendere to stretch). —contender n. 1547, formed from English contend, v. + *-er*¹.

content¹ n. what is contained. Probably before 1425 contents; borrowed through Middle French, and directly from Latin contentum, neuter past participle of continēre CONTAIN. The singular content is recorded earlier (before 1420).

content² v. satisfy, please. 1418 contenten, borrowed from Middle French contenter, from content, adj., satisfied, from Latin contentus contained, satisfied, from past participle of continēre CONTAIN. —adj. Probably before 1400, borrowed from Old French content, from Latin contentus contained, satisfied, past participle of continēre. —contented adj. About 1445, from the verb. —contentment n. 1437, satisfaction of a claim; borrowed from Old French contentement, from contenter; for suffix see -MENT.

contention n. About 1384 contencioun strife, borrowed from Old French contention, learned borrowing from Latin contentiōnem (nominative contentiō), from the stem of contendere CONTEND; for suffix see -TION. —contentious adj. Before 1500, borrowed through Middle French contentieux, and directly from Latin contentiōsus, from contentiōnem; for suffix see -OUS.

contest v. 1603, borrowed from French contester dispute; oppose, also Middle French, from Latin contestārī (litem) introduce (a lawsuit) by calling witnesses, bring an action (con- intensive + testārī be a witness, testify, from testis witness). —n. 1643, from the verb, but perhaps influenced by French conteste, from contester to contest. —contestant n. 1665, borrowed from French contestant, present participle of contester to contest.

context n. Probably before 1425, literary composition; borrowed from Latin contextus (genitive contextūs), from past participle of contexere weave together (con- together + texere to weave). The sense of surrounding parts of a text, is first recorded about 1568.

contiguous adj. 1611, borrowed, perhaps by influence of French contigu, from Latin contiguus near, touching from contingere to touch (con- together + tig- in compounds the form of tag-, root of tangere to touch); for suffix see -OUS. —contiguity, n. 1641, borrowed, probably through French contiguité, from Latin contiguitās, from contiguus.

continent¹ n. land mass. Probably about 1425, content; borrowed from Latin continentem component part, noun use of continentem (nominative continēns) holding together, continuous, the present participle of continēre hold together, CONTAIN; for suffix see -ENT. The sense of a continuous tract of land, is first recorded in English in 1559. —continental adj. 1760, formed from English continent + *al*¹. The form Continental, as of the American Colonies is first recorded in 1774. —Continental Divide (1868) continent² adj. showing restraint. Before 1382, borrowed from Old French continent and from Latin continentem (nominative continēns), present participle of continēre hold together, restrain, CONTAIN; for suffix see -ENT. —continence n. Before 1387; borrowed through Old French continence and directly from Latin continentia, from continentem, present participle of continēre contain; for suffix see -ENCE.

contingent adj. About 1385, borrowed through Old French contingent or directly from Latin contingentem (nominative contingēns) happening, touching, present participle of contingere happen, touch; see CONTACT; for suffix see -ENT. —n. 1548, thing happening by chance; from the adjective. The sense of an additional part, group, etc., sent out to augment another, is first recorded in 1727 and the meaning of an unexpected event, in 1623. —contingency n. 1561, formed from English contingent + -cy in -ency, or possibly on a model of Late Latin contingentia, from Latin contingentem; for suffix see -ENCY.

continue v. About 1340 contynuen, borrowed from Old French continuer, learned borrowing from Latin continuāre join together, connect, from continuus joining, connecting, from continēre hold together, CONTAIN. —continual adj. Before 1325 continuel, borrowed from Old French continuel, from Latin continuus; for suffix see *-AL*¹. —continuance n. Before 1349, a keeping up, a going on; borrowed from Old French continuance, from continuant continuing, from Latin continuantem (nominative continuantis), present participle of continuāre. —continuation n. About 1380, borrowed through Old French continuation, continuation, or directly from Latin continuātiōnem (nominative continuātiō), from continuāre; for suffix see -TION. —continuity n. Probably before 1425 continuite, borrowed from Middle French continuité, from Latin continuitatem (nominative continuitās), from continuus continuous; for suffix see -ITY. —continuous adj. 1642, borrowed, through French continues, or directly from Latin continuus hanging together, uninterrupted from continēre; for suffix see -OUS. —continuum n. 1650, a borrowing of Latin continuum a continuous thing, neuter of continuus continuous.

contort v. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Latin contortus, past participle of contorquere to twist, twirl (con- intensive + torquere to twist). —contortion n. Probably before 1425 contorsion, borrowed from Middle French contorsion, from Latin contortio (nominative contortio), from the stem of contorquere contort; for suffix see -TION. —contortionist n. 1859, formed from English contortion + -ist.

contour n. 1662, borrowing of French contour circumference, outline, from contourner go around, perhaps through Italian contorno, from Italian and Medieval Latin contornare go round, turn around (Latin con- with + turnare to turn, round off, turn on a lathe, from turnus lathe). The word was known earlier meaning bedspread or quilt, in reference to its falling over the sides of the mattress (1423).

contra- a prefix meaning in opposition, counter, against, as in contradistinction, contraindication. Borrowed from Latin contrā, from contrā, preposition and adverb, originally meaning in comparison with, from an old ablative singular feminine form of a pre-Latin adjective com-teros* (com-terā*, com-terom*). As a prefix contra- existed alongside countre- (about 1303).

contraband n. Before 1529 counterbande smuggling; borrowed from Middle French contrebande, from early Italian contrabando (now contrabbando) unlawful dealing against law or proclamation (contra- against, + bando proclamation). The meaning of smuggled goods appeared in English in 1599.

contraception n. 1886, formed from English contra- against + (con)ception. —contraceptive n. 1891, formed from English contra- against + (con)ceptive. —adj. 1918, from the noun.

contract v. Probably before 1425 contracten make an agreement or contract; occurring in English in part as: 1) a development from verb use of earlier participle and adjective contract incurred, contracted (1390), borrowed from Latin contractus; and 2) a borrowing from Middle French contracter, from Latin contractus, past participle of contrahere draw together, combine, make an agreement (con- together + trahere to pull). The sense of make narrow, draw together, is first recorded before 1398, usually with reference to the drawn-up or shrunken appearance of paralyzed limbs. —n. Before 1333, borrowed from Old French contract, learned borrowing from Latin contractus (genitive contractūs) agreement, from past participle of contrahere. —contraction n. Before 1398 contraccioun; borrowed through Old French contraction, or directly from Latin contractionem (nominative contractiō), from the past participle stem of contrahere; for suffix see -TION. —contractor n. 1548, borrowed from Late Latin contractor one who makes a contract, from Latin contrahere; for suffix see -OR².

contradict v. 1570–76, speak against; borrowed from Latin contradictus, past participle of contradicere speak against, from contrā dicere say in opposition (contrā against + dicere say). The sense of assert the contrary, deny, is first recorded in 1582. Also contradict may be a back formation from earlier contradiction. —contradiction n. Before 1382, borrowed through Old French contradiction, or directly from Latin contradictionem (nominative contradictiō), from contradicere speak against; for suffix see -TION. —contradictory adj. 1534, from earlier noun use (about 1385); borrowed from Late Latin contradictorius, from contradictor one who opposes, from contradicere; for suffix see -ORY.

contrail n. vapor trail left by an airplane. 1945, formed from English con(densation) + trail.

contraption n. 1825, dialect use (western England), a formation of unknown origin, possibly suggested by sense of contempt in figurative meaning of trap pitfall, snare.

contrapuntal adj. 1845, formed in English probably from early Italian contrapunto counterpoint + English -al¹.

contrary adj. 1340 contrarie, borrowed through Anglo-French contrarie, also in early Old French, from Latin contrarius opposite, hostile, from contrā against; for suffix see -ARY. Another spelling, contraire, from Old French, is found after 1370 but the spelling disappeared by 1500. —n. About 1275 contrarie, borrowed through Anglo-French contrarie, also in early Old French, from the adjective in Old French.

contrast v. 1695, borrowed from French contraster, from Italian contrastare strive, contend, stand out against, from Vulgar Latin contrāstare* (Latin contrā against + stare to STAND). —n. 1711, borrowed from French contraste, from Italian contrasto, from contrastare to contrast. —contrastive adj. 1816, formed from English contrast, v. + -ive.

The verb contrast was reintroduced in English as a term of art after having become obsolete. The earlier term spelled contrast, from Middle French contrestre, was recorded in the late 1400's.

contravene v. 1567, borrowed from Middle French contravenir to transgress, decline, depart, learned borrowing from Late Latin contrāvenire oppose, also in Medieval Latin, transgress (Latin contrā against + venire to COME). —contravention n. 1579, borrowed from Middle French contravention, from Late Latin contrāventiōnem* (nominative contrāventiō*), from contrāvenire contravene; for suffix see -TION.

contribute v. 1530, give jointly with others; probably a back formation in English from the earlier contribution, and in part a borrowing from Latin contribūtus, past participle of contribuere bring together, add, collect (con- together + tribuere bestow, assign, allot). —contribution n. Before 1387, tax; borrowed through Old French contribution, and directly from Latin contributiōnem (nominative contributiō), from contribuere; for suffix see -TION. —contributor n. 1433, borrowed through Anglo-French contributour, formed as if from Latin contributor*, from contribuere + -tor; for suffix see -OR². —contributory adj. 1410, formed as if from Latin contributōrius*, from contribūtus, past participle of contribuere; for suffix see -ORY.

contrite adj. Probably before 1300 contrit, borrowed through Old French contrit, and directly from Latin contritus (thoroughly) crushed, past participle of conterere to wear down, crush (con- thoroughly + terere rub, grind, wear). —contrition n. penitence. About 1303 contricyn, borrowed through Old French contricion, and directly from Latin contritiōnem (nominative contritiō), from the stem contrī- of conterere to crush; for suffix see -TION.

contrive v. Before 1338 contreven, controven; borrowed from Old French contreuer, controver, from Late Latin contropāre compare, search out (Latin con- together, with + Vulgar Latin tropāre* to compose, from Latin tropus song, musical mode, from Greek trōpos mode, style). In the 1400's the prevailing form contreve changed to contrive, representing a phonetic change that is unexplained; compare *brier*¹, friar, and choir for a similar change. —contrivance n. 1627–28, artifice, trick, formed from English contrive + -ance. The sense of a mechanical device or arrangement appeared in 1667.

control v. 1422 countrollen check or verify (accounts); borrowed from Anglo-French and Old French contreroller, from contrerolle copy of a register, for checking, verification (contre against + rolle ROLL). The sense of to direct, dominate, is first recorded in 1451. —n. 1590, probably in part developed from the verb, and in part borrowed from Middle French contrôle, from Old French contrerolle. —controller n. Probably before 1387 contreroller; borrowed from Anglo-French countrerollour, Old French contrerolleur, from contrerolle. See COMPTROLLER.

controversy n. About 1384, borrowed through Old French controverisie, or directly from Latin contrōversia, from contrōversus turned against, disputed (contrō- against, from a lost adverb contrō*, + Latin versus, past participle of vertere to turn). —controversial adj. 1583, borrowed from Latin contrōversialis, from contrōversia.

contusion n. Before 1400, borrowed from Middle French contusion, learned borrowing from Latin contūsionem (nominative contūsio) crushing, bruising, from the participle stem contūs- of contundere to crush, bruise (con- intensive + tundere to beat).

conundrum n. 1605, a whim; earlier Cunundrum, a name for a pedant (1596); of unknown origin. In 1645, in the sense of a pun or word play, it was referred to as an Oxford term, hence possibly it originated as a parody of some Latin term.

convalesce v. 1483, borrowed from Latin convalescere thrive, convalesce (con- intensive + valēscere grow strong, from valēre be strong, be worth). —convalescence n. About 1489, borrowed from Middle French, from Late Latin convalescentia regaining of health, from Latin convalescentem (nominative convalescēns), present participle of convalescere convalesce; for suffix see -ENCE. —convalescent adj. 1656, borrowed from French convalescent, from Latin convalescentem (nominative convalescēns), present participle of convalescere; for suffix see -ENT. —n. 1758, from the adjective.

convection n. 1623, borrowed from Latin convectiōem (nominative convectiō), from convect-, past participle stem of convahere to carry together (con- together + vehere to carry); for suffix see -ION.

convene v. About 1425 (Scottish), borrowed from Middle French convenir, from Latin convenire come together, unite, agree, suit (con- together + venire COME).

convenient adj. About 1380, borrowed from Latin convenientem (nominative conveniēns), present participle of convenire come together, agree, suit, see CONVENE; for suffix see -ENT. —convenience n. Before 1398, conformity, suitability, borrowed through Old French convenience, and directly from Latin convenientia agreement, meeting, from convenientem (nominative conveniēns), present participle of convenire; for suffix see -ENCE.

convent n. Probably before 1425, assemblage, alteration (influenced by Latin conventus) of earlier cuvent (probably before 1200); borrowed through Anglo-French covent, from Old French convent, from Latin conventus (genitive conventūs) assembly, from past participle of convenire come together, CONVENE. The sense of a group of nuns living together, is first recorded before 1450, but that of a group of men or women living as a religious order, is first recorded about 1230 as cuvent, which became obsolete by the late 1600's.

convention n. Before 1420 convencioun agreement; borrowed through Middle French convention, or directly from Latin conventiōem (nominative conventiō) meeting, assembly, covenant, from convenire CONVENE; for suffix see -TION. —conventional adj. Before 1475, borrowed from Late Latin conventionālis, from Latin conventiōem convention; for suffix see *-AL*¹.

converge v. 1691, borrowed from Late Latin convergere to incline together (Latin con- together + vergere to incline).

—convergence n. 1713, formed from English converge + -ence. —convergent adj. 1727–51, borrowed from Medieval Latin convergentem (nominative convergens), present participle of convergere.

conversant adj. About 1390 conversaunt, borrowed from Old French conversant, from Latin conversantem (nominative conversans), present participle of conversari associate with; see *CONVERSE*¹.

converse¹ v. talk. About 1380 conversen live, dwell; borrowed from Old French converser to live with, learned borrowing from Latin conversari associate with, frequentative form of convertere to turn about, change, CONVERT. The sense of talk informally is first recorded in English in 1615. —conversation n. 1340, a living together, manner of behaving; borrowed from Old French conversation, from Latin conversatiōem (nominative conversatiō) act of living with, from conversari associate with; for suffix see -TION. The sense of informal talk, is first recorded in 1580. —conversational adj. 1779, formed from English conversation + *-al*¹. —conversationalist n. 1836, formed from English conversational + -ist.

converse² adj. reversed. 1570, in mathematics; borrowed from Latin conversus turned around, past participle of convertere CONVERT. —n. 1570, in mathematics, borrowed from Latin conversus turned around; earlier convers a convert to a religious faith (before 1325).

conversion n. About 1340, turning of a sinner to righteousness; later, transformation (probably before 1425); borrowed from Old French conversion, from Latin conversionem (nominative conversio), from past participle stem convers- of convertere CONVERT; for suffix see -ION.

convert v. About 1300 converten, borrowed from Old French convertir, learned borrowing from Latin convertere turn about, transform, translate (con- intensive + vertere to turn). —n. 1561, from the verb; replacing earlier convers a convert (before 1325); borrowed through Old French converters, from Latin conversus, past participle of convertere. —convertible adj. About 1385, borrowed from Old French convertible, from Late Latin convertibilis, from Latin convertere; for suffix see -IBLE. —n. automobile with a folding top. 1916, American English, from the adjective.

convex adj. 1571, borrowed from Middle French convexe, from Latin convexus vaulted, arched (probably from con- intensive + -vexus, found also in subvexus sloping upwards from below).

convey v. Before 1393 conveien carry, transport; earlier, go along with, accompany (before 1325); borrowed through Anglo-French conveier, Old French convoier, from Vulgar Latin conviare*, literally, go together on the road (Latin con- with + via road). —conveyance n. About 1437, formed from English convey + -ance. —conveyer n. 1513–14, conveyor n. 1647, formed from English convey + *-er*¹, *-or*².

convict v. About 1340 convicten, borrowed from Latin convictus, past participle of convincere overcome (in argument), convict, CONVINCE. —n. About 1475, from the verb.

—conviction n. 1437, borrowed from Late Latin convictionem (nominative convictio) proof, refutation, from convict-, participle stem of Latin vincere convince; for suffix see -ION. The sense of a firm belief, is first recorded in 1699.

convince v. 1530, overcome in argument; borrowed from Latin vincere overcome, convict, convince (con- intensive + vincere conquer). The sense of persuade is first recorded in 1606. —convincing adj. (1624) convivial adj. Before 1668, belonging to a feast, festive, borrowed through French convivial, or directly from Late Latin convivialis, from Latin convivium social feast, entertainment (con- with + vivere to live); for suffix see -AL¹. The sense of sociable is first recorded in the 1700's.

convoke v. 1598, borrowed from Middle French convoyer, learned borrowing from Latin convocare call together (con- together + vocare to call). —convocation n. Before 1387, assembly of persons; borrowed from Old French convocation and from Latin convocatio (nominative convocatio), from convocare call together; for suffix see -TION.

convolute v. 1698, probably a back formation from convolution, and possibly also formed as if borrowed from Latin convolutus, past participle of convolvere roll together (con- together + volvere to roll). —adj. 1794, possibly from the verb, especially in botany. —convolution n. 1545, a fold, twist, coiled form, formed as if from Latin convolut-, past participle stem of convolvere to roll up, roll together + -ion.

convoy v. 1375 convoyen accompany, escort; borrowed from Old French convoyer, from Vulgar Latin conviare*, literally, go together on the road. —n. 1500–20, conduct, borrowed from Middle French convoy, from convoyer to convoy, from Old French.

convulse v. 1643, borrowed, perhaps by influence of Middle French convulsé, past participle of convulser, from Latin convulsus, past participle of convellere tear violently (con- intensive + vellere tear away, pull, pluck). Also convulse may be a back formation in English from convulsion. —convulsion n. 1585, borrowed from Middle French convulsion, and directly from Latin convulsio (nominative convulsio), from convuls-, past participle stem of convellere; for suffix see -ION. —convulsive adj. 1615, formed from English convulse + -ive, modeled on New Latin convulsivus*, from Latin convulsus.

coo v. 1670, in imitation of the sound. The sense of to murmur softly, is first recorded in English in 1736. —n. 1729, from the verb.

cook n. Probably before 1200 coke man charged with the preparation of food; developed from Old English (about 700) cōc, borrowing from Latin cocus a cook. The Latin form cocus is a variant of coquus, related to coquere to cook, from pre-Latin pequ-, from the original pequ-.

For English, cognates exist in Old Saxon kok cook, Middle Dutch coc (plural cōke) and modern Dutch kok, Old High German choh, koch (modern German Koch), Swedish kock. —v. Before 1387 coke act as a cook, from the noun. —cookbook n. 1809, probably American English, but earlier cookery book (1639). —cookery n. Before 1393, formed from English cook, v. or n. + -ery. —cookhouse n. 1296, in surname Cokehuse, Middle English coke + huse. —cookout n. (1947, American English).

cookie or cooky n. 1703, American English, probably borrowed from Dutch koekje little cake, diminutive of koek cake, from Middle Dutch kōke; see CAKE.

cool adj. About 1150 cole, developed from Old English cōl (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Middle Dutch coel (modern Dutch koel), from Proto-Germanic kōluz*, related to Old High German kuoli cool (modern German kühl), and Old Icelandic kala be cold. —v. Probably about 1200 colen, developed from Old English cōlian become cool (about 750), from Old English adjective cōl cool, replacing earlier kele to make cool. —n. Probably before 1400, from the adjective. —coolant n. 1930, formed from English cool, v. + -ant. —cooler n. 1575, formed from English cool, v. + -er¹.

coon n. 1742, American English, shortened form of RAC-COON.

coop n. 1342 coupe coop for chickens; earlier, cupe a wicker basket (about 1250); developed apparently through Old English cupe*, a variant of Old English cype, cypa basket, cask; probably ultimately a borrowing (like Middle Low German kupe large pot, Middle Dutch cupe cask, and Norwegian kupe, Swedish kupa, Icelandic kúpa bowl, hive, vessel) from Latin cūpa tub, cask; see CUP. —v. 1563–87, from the noun.

cooper n. 1176 Cupere, as surname; later coupere (before 1376), and cooper (1589); an early borrowing (like Middle Dutch cupe and Middle Low German kupe) from Latin cūpārius, from cūpa cask; see CUP.

cooperate v. 1604, possibly implied in earlier cooperante, present participle (apparently before 1425), borrowed from Latin cooperantem, present participle of cooperari; but probably borrowed through influence of French coopérer from Late Latin cooperatus, past participle of cooperari to work together (Latin co- together + operari to work, OPERATE); for suffix see -ATE¹. Also cooperate may be a back formation from earlier cooperation.

—cooperation n. 1495, borrowed possibly through Middle French coopération, and directly from Late Latin cooperatio (nominative cooperatio) a working together (Latin co- together + operatio OPERATION); for suffix see -TION.

—cooperative adj. 1603, borrowed possibly through French coopératif, coopérative, and directly from Late Latin cooperativus collaborating, from cooperatus, past participle of cooperari; for suffix see -IVE. —n. 1829, from the adjective. —co-op n. 1872, clipped form of cooperative (store); earlier, a clipped form of cooperator (1861).

co-opt v. 1651, borrowed as a shortened form of Latin cooptare (co- together + optare choose). The usually expected English form borrowed from a Latin verb ending in -are would be cooptate, but this form that appeared in English in 1623 is archaic or obsolete today. The extended sense of take over, adopt, commandeer, is first recorded about 1953.

coordinate adj. 1641, formed from English co- together, equal coot n. About 1300 cote, corresponding to Dutch koet, earlier Dutch meercoet lake coot; of unknown origin.

+ -ordinate, as a parallel to subordinate, adj. —n. 1823, from the adjective. —v. 1665, either from the adjective, or formed from English co- together, equal + -ordinate, as a parallel to subordinate, v.; a back formation from earlier coordination. —coordination n. 1605, orderly combination; borrowed probably through French coordination, and directly from Late Latin coördinātiōnem (nominative coördinātiō), from Latin co- together + ordinātiōnem (nominative ordinātiō) arrangement, ORDINATION; for suffix see -ATION. —coordinator n. 1864, formed from English coordinate, v. + *-or*².

cop v. 1704, capture, catch, perhaps a variant of obsolete cap to arrest (1589); borrowed from Middle French caper seize, perhaps from Sicilian capere, from Latin capere; see CAPTIVE. The phrase cop out withdraw, drop out, appeared in American English about 1967, probably from the meaning of plead guilty, to a lesser charge as in cop a plea (about 1925). The noun cop-out has been recorded since 1942. —n. 1859, a shortening of copper policeman (1846), from cop, v. + *-er*¹.

copacetic adj. 1919 copasetic very good, all right, American English, said to have originated among southern blacks in the 1800's, of uncertain origin.

The suggestion that copacetic came from a Hebrew phrase such as (hā)kōl b'seder all in order, or (unrecorded) kōl b'sedek all with justice, is not accepted among scholars of American English.

cope¹ v. deal with. Before 1375 implied in coupyng, coupen come to blows, strike; borrowed from Old French couper, coper (earlier colper) to strike, cut, from coup, colp a blow; see COUP. The sense of contend or deal with successfully, is first recorded in 1641.

cope² n. cape. Probably before 1200 cope, developed from earlier cape as in compound cantelcape (before 1121); borrowed from Medieval Latin capa cloak, from Late Latin cappa hood, mantle; see CAP. —v. Before 1376, cover with or as with a cape, from the noun.

coping n. 1601, formed from *cope*², v. provide with a cope + -ing. —coping saw 1931, from coping arching, of an arched or vaulted form.

copious adj. Probably about 1350, borrowed from Latin cōpiōsus plentiful, from cōpia plenty, from cōpis well supplied (co- with + ops, genitive opis power, wealth, resources; see OPULENT); for suffix see -OUS. It is possible that copious was reinforced in English by Old French copieux.

copper¹ n. metallic element. Probably about 1225, developed from Old English (about 1000) coper, an early borrowing (like Middle Dutch koper copper, Old Icelandic koparr, and Old High German kupfar) from Late Latin cuprum copper, for Latin cyprum from aes Cyprium metal of Cyprus, island in the eastern Mediterranean where copper was found in ancient times. —copperhead n. (1775, American English) copper² n. policeman. 1846, formed from English cop, v., to capture, nab + *-er*¹.

copse n. 1578, contraction of earlier koppis (before 1398), borrowed from Old French coupeiz, copeiz a cut-over forest, from Gallo-Romance colpāticium*, from Vulgar Latin colpāre* to cut, strike, from Late Latin colpus a blow; see COUP.

copulate v. 1425, to join; later, join sexually (1632); borrowed, possibly by influence of Middle French copuler, from Latin cōpulātus, past participle of cōpulāre join together, link, couple, from cōpula bond; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —copulation n. About 1385, act of coupling; later, coupling sexually (1483); borrowed from Old French copulation, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin cōpulātiōnem (nominative cōpulātiō), from cōpulāre; for suffix see -TION.

English use of Latin cōpula as a grammatical term for "linking verb" is first recorded in 1619.

copy n. Before 1338 copie a written account or record; later kopy (about 1385); borrowed from Old French copie, from Medieval Latin copia reproduction, transcript, from Latin cōpia plenty, means; see COPIOUS.

In English, the sense of a written transcript was extended by the 1500's to any specimen of writing ("clean copy") and to any reproduction or imitation. —v. Before 1376 copien make a copy of, transcribe; borrowed from Old French copier, from Medieval Latin copiare transcribe, from copia transcript. —copier n. (1597) —copyright n. (1735); v. (1806, implied in copyrighted) coquette n. 1669, borrowing of French feminine of coquet male flirt, from Old French coq COCK¹ + -et-et; so called from the similarity to the cock's strutting gait. —coquetry n. 1656 coquetterie pertness; borrowed from French coquetterie, from coquette; for suffix see -ERY.

cor- a prefix, meaning with, together, altogether. It is the form of com- before r, as in correlation. In words from Latin the form cor- resulted from assimilation of com-, con- to the following consonant (r).

coracle n. 1547, borrowed from Welsh conwgl, cunwgl, alteration of conwg, cunwg coracle, skiff, cognate with Middle Irish curach coracle, which was the source of earlier Middle English currok coracle (probably about 1450).

coral n. Before 1300, borrowed from Old French coral, from Latin corallium, from Greek korállion.

corbel n. 1360, in the compound corbeiltable stone used as a corbel; borrowed from Old French corbel, diminutive of corp raven, from Latin corvus RAVEN; possibly so called because originally the corbel was cut at a slant, so that its profile resembled a raven's beak.

cord n. 1199, Probably before 1300, in the compound surname Cordemaker, borrowed from Old French corde, from Latin chorda string, gut, from Greek chordē, altered (perhaps by influence of kardīa heart) from chorḗ*. Compare CHORD². —v. 1610, tie with a cord; earlier, to string, as a bow (about 1450); from the noun.

cordial adj. Before 1400, of the heart; later, hearty (1458); borrowed from Middle French cordial, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin cordialis of or for the heart, from Latin cor (genitive cordis) HEART; for suffix see -AL¹. —n. About 1386, medicine, food, or drink that stimulates the heart; borrowed from Medieval Latin cordialis of or for the heart. —cordiality n. 1611, borrowed from French cordialité, from cordial hearty; for suffix see -ITY.

cordón n. 1440, cord or ribbon worn as an ornament or badge, borrowed from Middle French cordón ribbon, diminutive of Old French corde CORD. The sense of a line of people or things guarding a place, appeared in 1758. —v. 1561, to ornament with a cord or ribbon, borrowed from French cordonner decorate with a cord or ribbon, from French cordón, n. The sense of guard with a cordón (1891) is from English cordón, n.

cordovan adj. 1591, of Cordova, Spain, or a kind of leather manufactured there; borrowed from Spanish cordován, cordobán, from Córdoba, Spain. The form cordewan (1303) from Old French cordewan, cordōan, developed into English cordwain in the 1400's. —n. 1599, from the adjective.

corduroy n. 1780, American English, in compound corduroy road; later, corduroys corduroy trousers (1787–91); perhaps formed from English CORD + duroy obsolete name for a kind of coarse woolen cloth, of uncertain origin. The supposed connection with corde du roi* does not appear in French, early reference being confined to kings-cordes (1807). —adj. 1789, from the noun.

core n. Probably before 1400; earlier kore central part of an apple, pear, etc. (probably before 1325); borrowed probably from Old French cuor, coeur core of fruit, heart of lettuce, but literally, heart, from Latin cor HEART. The form core is traditionally thought to have replaced colk but colk is not recorded in Middle English until about 1400. The form cork also meaning core of an apple found probably about 1300. The sense of part of a nuclear reactor containing fissionable material is first recorded in 1949. —v. Before 1450, from the noun.

corgi n. 1926, borrowed from Welsh corgi, (cor dwarf + ci dog; see HOUND).

coriander n. 1373, borrowed from Old French coriandre, learned borrowing from Latin coriandrum, from Greek koríandron, variant of koríannon.

cork n. 1303, borrowed probably in North Africa and Spain from Arabic qurq, from Latin cortex (genitive corticis) bark, CORTEX. The sense of cork sandal (1391) may have been influenced by Spanish alcorque, of the same meaning, which derived from Arabic qurq. —v. 1580, furnish (a shoe) with a cork sole or heel; from the noun. —corkscrew n. (1720) corm n. 1838, borrowed from New Latin cormus (about 1800), from Greek kormós stripped tree trunk.

cormorant n. About 1330 cormeraunt, borrowed as an alteration of Old French cormaran, cormoran, (earlier) cormareng, literally, raven of the sea, from corb, corp raven + marenc* of the sea in dialectal pie mareng sea magpie (Latin mare sea + a suffix -enc, -enge from Germanic -ing); compare Late Latin corvus marinus sea raven.

corn¹ n. Old English (probably about 750) corn seed, grain; earlier in compound berecorn barleycorn, grain of barley (about 700); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon korn grain, Middle Dutch coren (modern Dutch koren corn, grain), Middle High German korn (modern German Korn), Old Icelandic, Swedish, Norwegian, and Danish korn, Gothic kaurn, Crimean Gothic korn.

In the United States the word became restricted to Indian corn or maize, first attested in 1608. The restriction to a single type of grain also occurs in other countries: corn usually means wheat in England and oats in Scotland and Ireland, and in parts of Germany Korn refers to rye. —v. 1456, to provision with corn; later, to granulate (1560) and to salt (1565–73); from the noun. —cornfield n. (1297, as a surname) —corny adj. About 1390, tasting strongly of malt; later, of or producing corn (1580); formed from English *corn*¹ + -y¹. The sense of old-fashioned, trite, or sentimental appeared in the 1930's in American English, originally (about 1932) with the meaning "of a kind that appeals to country people; rustic, unsophisticated," perhaps with allusion to earlier corn-fed, of the same meaning (1929).

corn² n. hardening of skin. Probably before 1425 corne; borrowed from Old French corn horn, (later) corn on the foot, from Latin cornū (genitive cornūs) HORN.

cornea n. Before 1398, transparent part of the coating of the eyeball; borrowed as a shortening of Medieval Latin cornea tela or tunica horny web or sheath, from Latin cornū (genitive cornūs) HORN. Shortening of the Medieval Latin form was probably influenced by Old French cornee (1314). —corneal adj. 1808, formed from English cornea + -al¹.

corner n. About 1280, borrowed through Anglo-French corner, variant of Old French cornere, corniere, from corne horn, corner, from Vulgar Latin cornea*, from Latin cornua, plural of cornū (genitive cornūs) point, end, HORN. The sense of a difficult position appeared in 1548. —adj. 1535, from the noun. —v. Before 1387, furnish with corners; from the noun. The sense of going around a corner, as in a race, appeared in 1864, and that of force into a difficult position in 1824 in American English. —cornerstone n. About 1280; the figurative sense of a foundation or basis, is first recorded before 1325.

cornice n. 1563 cornishe, borrowed from Middle French corniche ornamental molding along a wall, etc., from Italian cornice, originally a crow, then (from the bird's curved beak or feet) an ornamental molding, cornice, from Latin cornicem, accusative of cornix crow. For the sense development, compare CORBEL.

cornucopia n. 1508, borrowed from Late Latin cornūcōpia, from Latin cornū cōpia horn of plenty (cornū HORN + cōpia, genitive of cōpia plenty). The original cornucopia was fabled to be the horn of the goat Amalthea, who suckled the infant Zeus.

corolla n. 1671, crown, borrowed from Latin corōlla small garland, diminutive of corōna garland, wreath, CROWN. The botanical sense appeared in 1753.

corollary n. About 1380, borrowed through Old French corollaire, and directly from Late Latin corollarium corollary, consequence, in Latin corollarium money paid for a corolla or small garland, gratuity, gift, from corolla small garland; for suffix see -ARY.

corona n. 1658, borrowed from Latin corōna garland, wreath, CROWN.

coronary adj. 1610, of or suitable for garlands; borrowed possibly from Middle French coronaire, and directly from Latin corōnarius of a crown, from corōna CROWN; for suffix see -ARY. By 1679 the word was applied to blood vessels which encircle a part of the body, such as the heart, like a crown.

coronation n. About 1400 coronacioun, borrowed from Late Latin corōnātiōnem (nominative corōnātiō) a crowning, from Latin corōnāre to crown, from corōna CROWN; for suffix see -TION.

coroner n. Probably about 1350 corowner officer of the crown (originally charged with protecting property of the royal family); borrowed from Anglo-French curuner, from coroune CROWN + -er¹. Original duties were narrowed, until by the 1600's his chief function was to determine cause of death.

corporal¹ adj. of the body, bodily. About 1390 corporel secular, temporal (probably before 1400) of the body, physical; borrowed from Old French corporal, learned borrowing from Latin corporālis of the body, from corpus (genitive corporis) body; for suffix see -AL¹.

corporal² n. noncommissioned army officer. 1579, borrowed from Middle French corporal, variant (perhaps influenced by corps body) of caporal a corporal, from Italian caporale a corporal, from capo head, from Latin caput HEAD; for suffix see -AL¹.

corporate adj. 1425 corporat, borrowed from Latin corporātus, past participle of corporāre form into a body, from corpus (genitive corporis) body; for suffix see -ATE¹. — corporation n. 1439, a legal corporate body, the governing body of an incorporated town; borrowed from Late Latin corporātiōnem (nominative corporātiō), in Classical Latin, an embodying, physical makeup, from corporāre form into a body; for suffix see -TION.

corporeal adj. Probably before 1425; formed in English from Latin corporeus belonging to the body (from corpus, genitive corporis body) + English -al¹.

corps n. 1a) About 1275 cors dead body; later, corps (before 1333); and b) probably before 1300 cors a live body; later, corps (about 1378). 2) 1429 corps a body of citizens; later, a band of knights (1464). Borrowed from Old French corps, cors body, and directly from Latin corpus body.

corpse n. 1542, variant spelling of earlier Middle English corps (before 1333); borrowed from Old French corps, cors, from Latin corpus body.

corpulent adj. Before 1398, borrowed from Old French corpulent stout, fat, from Latin corpulentus fleshy, fat, large, from corpus body + -ulentus full of. — corpulence n. Before 1500 corpulence carnal nature; later corpulence stoutness; obesity corpus n. About 1390, in oaths such as goddes corpus and by corpus bones with reference to the body of Christ; later, body of a person or animal (about 1450); borrowed from Latin corpus body. The sense of a body of writings and literature appeared in Chambers Cyclopaedia, in 1727.

(1581); borrowed from Middle French corpulence, from Latin corpulentia, from corpulentus stout, fat; for suffix see -ENCE.

corpuscle n. 1660, small particle or body of matter; borrowed from French corpuscle, and from Latin corpusculum, diminutive of corpus body. The word was not recorded in English with reference to blood cells until 1845–46. — corpuscular adj. 1667, formed in English, as if from Latin corpuscularis*, from corpusculum + English -ar.

corral n. 1582, as a Spanish term for an enclosed yard or pen, used in an English translation; perhaps from Vulgar Latin currāle*, from Latin currus (genitive currūs) chariot, cart, from curre to run. — v. 1847, from the noun. The meaning “capture, secure” appeared in 1860 in American English.

correct v. 1345–46, borrowed from Latin corrēctus, past participle of corrīgere make straight (cor- intensive + -rīgere combining form of regere to direct, lead straight). — adj. 1676, borrowed from French correct right, proper, from Latin corrēctus, past participle of corrīgere. — correction n. 1340, borrowed through Anglo-French correccioun, Old French correction, from Latin corrēctiōnem, from corrīgere; for suffix see -TION.

correlate v. Before 1742, back formation from correlation, or verb use of the earlier noun. — correlation n. 1561, mutual relation; borrowed from Middle French corrélation, formed from cor- together + relation relation. — correlative adj. 1530, borrowed from Middle French correlatif, correlative, formed from cor-, variant of com- before r + relatif relative; perhaps suggested by New Latin correlativus*. — n. 1545, from the adjective.

correspond v. 1529, borrowed through Middle French correspondre be in harmony, agree, or directly from Medieval Latin correspondere (Latin cor- together, with + respondere RESPOND). The sense of communicate by exchanging letters is first recorded in 1645. — correspondence n. 1413, harmony, agreement; borrowed through Middle French correspondance, or directly from Medieval Latin correspondentia, from correspondentem (nominative correspondens), present participle of correspondere correspond; for suffix see -ENCE. The sense of communication by letters is first recorded in 1644. — correspondent adj. Probably before 1425, analogous; borrowed from Medieval Latin correspondentem, present participle of correspondere correspond; for suffix see -ENT. — n. 1630, one who communicates by letters; from the adjective, but probably influenced by French correspondant, of the same meaning. The extended sense of one who contributes news (originally through letters) and other material to a newspaper, is first recorded in 1711. — corresponding adj. (1579) corridor n. 1591, a covered way of a fortification; later, passage (1620), and a long hallway (1814); borrowed from French corridor, from Italian corridore, alteration (by influence of corridore runner) of corridoio, from Vulgar Latin curritorium* running place (Latin currere to run + -torium -ory; see CUR-RENT).

corrigible adj. 1451, borrowed from Middle French corrigible correctable, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin corrigibilis, from Latin corrige make straight; for suffix see -IBLE.

corroboration n. 1459 corroboracion strengthening or support; borrowed through Middle French corroboration or directly from Late Latin corroboratiōnem (nominative corroboratiō), from Latin corroborāre strengthen (cor- intensive + rōborāre make strong, from rōbur, genitive rōboris oak tree, strength; see ROBUST); for suffix see -TION. The sense "confirmation" is first recorded in 1768. —corroborate v. 1530, probably back formation of English corroboration, possibly influenced by Middle French corroborer confirm, from Latin corroborātus, past participle of corroborāre; for suffix see -ATE¹. —corroborative adj. 1583, probably borrowed from Middle French corroboratif, corroborative, formed as if from Latin corroborativus*, from corroborāt-, past participle stem of corroborāre; for suffix see -IVE.

corrode v. Before 1400, borrowed through Old French corroder, or directly from Latin corrōdere gnaw away (cor- intensive + rōdere gnaw; see RODENT). —corrosion n. Before 1400, borrowed through Middle French corrosion, or directly from Late Latin corrosiōnem (nominative corrosiō), from the stem of Latin corrōdere; for suffix see -SION. —corrosive adj. About 1395, borrowed from Old French corosif, corosive, or directly as if from Medieval Latin corrosivus*, from Latin corrōsus, past participle of corrōdere.

corrugate v. 1620; earlier, corrugate as a past participle or adjective (probably about 1425); borrowed from Latin cornūgātus, past participle of cornūgāre (cor- intensive + nūgāre to wrinkle, from nūga wrinkle, of unknown origin); for suffix see -ATE¹. —corrugated paper (1897) corrupt adj. 1340 conrupt, borrowed from Old French corrupt, and directly from Latin corruptus, past participle of corrumpere destroy, falsify, corrupt (cor- intensive + rumpere break, RUPTURE). —v. About 1385, pervert, debase; possibly from English corrupt, adj. and later considered as a borrowing from Latin corruptus, past participle of corrumpere. —corruption n. Before 1340, destruction, decomposition; borrowed from Old French corruption, or directly from Latin corruptiōnem (nominative corruptiō), from corrumpere; for suffix see -TION. —corruptible adj. Before 1382, borrowed from Old French corruptible, and directly from Late Latin corruptibilis from Latin corrupt-, past participle stem of corrumpere; for suffix see -IBLE.

corsage n. 1843, bodice; earlier, size of the body (1481); borrowed from Old French corsage upper part of the body (cors body + -age -age). The sense of a bouquet worn on the bodice appeared in 1911 in American English, apparently from the French phrase bouquet de corsage bouquet of the bodice.

corsair n. 1549, borrowed from Middle French corsaire pirate, from Italian corsaro, from Medieval Latin cursarius runner, from cursus hostile excursion, booty, from Latin cursus (genitive cursūs) a race, journey, from past participle of currere to run.

corset n. 1299, a kind of laced bodice, borrowed from Old French corset, diminutive of cors body. The sense of a stiff supporting undergarment is first recorded in 1795.

cortege n. 1648, borrowed from French cortège retinue, procession, from Italian corteggio a train of followers, from corteggiare make up the court, from corte court, from Latin cohortem enclosure, crowd in an enclosure, retinue, accusative of cohors enclosure.

cortex n. 1653, outer shell, husk; borrowed from Latin cortex (genitive corticis) bark. The form cortex replaced earlier cortice, n. first recorded probably before 1425. —cortical adj. 1671, borrowed from Latin corticālis of the bark, skin, or hide, from cortex; for suffix see -AL¹.

cortisone n. 1949, coined as an abbreviation of 17-hydroxy-11 dehydro-cortico-sterone, ultimately from Latin corticis (genitive of cortex CORTEX) + English sterol + -one. Originally called Compound E (1936) and obtained from the cortex of the adrenal glands.

corundum n. Before 1728, borrowed through Anglo-Indian, from Tamil kurundam, also found in Telugu kuruvindam and Hindi kurund referring to various kinds of sapphire found in India and China.

corvette or corvet n. 1636, borrowing of French corvette small warship, from Middle French corvette, corvot, probably from Middle Dutch corver a fishing boat, also a privateer, of uncertain origin, though the form corver was known in Middle English by 1420.

cosine n. 1635, but coined in 1620 from co- + Medieval Latin sinus sine.

cosmetic n. 1605, art of beautifying; borrowed from Greek kosmētikē téchnē, from feminine of kosmētikós skilled in ordering or adorning, from kosmētós well-ordered, from kosmein to order, adorn, from kósmos COSMOS; for suffix see -IC. The sense of a preparation for beautifying is first recorded in 1650, probably from the adjective. —adj. 1650, borrowed from French cosmétique, from Greek kosmētikós.

cosmic adj. 1649, borrowed from Greek kosmikós of the world or universe; also parallel form of cosmical (1583). Modern use of cosmic is first recorded in 1846, borrowed from French cosmique, from Greek kosmikós, from kósmos COSMOS; for suffix see -IC. —cosmic rays (1925) cosmo- a combining form meaning: 1 world, universe, as in cosmology = science or study of the universe. 2 cosmic rays, as in cosmogenic = originating from cosmic rays. 3 Since 1957 it has had the further meaning of outer space, especially the Russian activities in it, and is sometimes equivalent to English astro-, as in cosmonaut, an adaptation of Russian kosmonavt astronaut. Borrowed from Greek kosmo-, combining form of kósmos world, universe.

cosmography n. About 1433 cosmagraffie (perhaps earlier, before 1387); borrowed from Late Latin cosmographia, from Greek kosmographiā (title of a work by Democritus), from kósmos universe + -graphiā drawing, delineation, from gráphein write, mark.

cosmology n. 1656, borrowed from French cosmologie, from New Latin cosmologia, from Greek kósmos universe + -logiā treatment of, -logy.

cosmopolitan adj. 1844, formed from English cosmopolite + -an, on the pattern of metropolitan. — cosmopolite n. About 1618, citizen of the world; earlier, a man of this world (1614); borrowed from Greek kosmopolitēs (kósmos world + politēs citizen, from pólis). The word apparently dropped out of use in English during the 1700's and was revived in English in the 1800's.

cosmos n. Probably about 1200, borrowed from Greek kósmos order, ornament; world, universe (so called by Pythagoras who regarded the physical world as a perfectly ordered system). Except for the use in 1200, the word disappears from the record until 1848, in a translation of Humboldt's Kosmos.

cost n. Probably about 1200, borrowed from Old French cost, from coster to cost, from Latin cōstāre stand together, stand firm, be settled or fixed, stand at a price, con- together + stāre to STAND). — v. About 1378 costen to involve great expenditure; earlier, to buy; borrowed from Old French coster to cost. — costly adj. Probably about 1384, formed from cost, n. + *-ly*¹.

costive adj. Before 1400 costif, probably borrowed through Anglo-French costif* (with loss of final -é), from Old French costivé (past participle of costiver to constipate, from Latin cōnstipāre), from Latin cōnstipātus, past participle of cōnstipāre.

costume n. 1715, style of dress, etc.; borrowing of French costume, from Italian costume fashion, habit, custom, from Vulgar Latin cōnsuētūmen*, corresponding to Latin cōnsuētūdinem, accusative of cōnsuētūdō habit, usage, CUSTOM. — v. 1823, from the noun. — costume jewelry (American English, 1933) cot¹ n. portable bed. 1634, borrowed through Anglo-Indian cot light bedstead, from Hindi khat bedstead, hammock, from Sanskrit or Prakrit khātva, probably from Dravidian (compare Tamil kattil bedstead).

cot² n. cottage. Old English (about 893) cot small house, cottage, lair of wild animal; cognate with Old Icelandic kot hut, Middle Dutch cot cottage, and Middle Low German kot cottage (Proto-Germanic kutan*).

cote n. Old English (before 1034) cote cottage for poor people, variant of cot COT². The sense of shelter for doves, small animals, etc. appeared about 1300.

coterie n. 1738, borrowed from French coterie circle of acquaintances, in Middle French meaning an association of tenant-farmers, from Old French cotier cottager, cotter, from cote hut, COTTAGE.

cotillon n. 1766 cotillon kind of complicated dance; borrowed from French cotillon a kind of country dance, from Middle French cotillon petticoat, peasant girl's frock, from diminutive of Old French cotte, cote COAT. The sense of a formal dance derives from a shortening of cotillon ball (1811).

cottage n. About 1390 cottage small house, borrowed through Anglo-French cottage* and directly from Old French cote (cote hut, cottage + -age). Anglo-French and Old French cote is probably of Scandinavian origin (compare Old Icelandic kot hut, COT²). — cottager n. 1555, formed from English cottage + *-er*¹. — cottage cheese (1848) cotter n. Before 1338 coter pin, wedge, bolt, inserted through a hole in a rod, etc.; perhaps a shortened form of cotterel cotter pin or bolt, bracket to hang a pot over the fire; both of uncertain origin. — cotter pin 1881, but implied much earlier by cotter hole (1649).

cotton n. 1286 coton, borrowed from Old French coton, from Arabic qutūn, variant of qūṭn. The Arabic is the source of Dutch keatoen, German Katun, Provençal coton, Italian cotone, and with the prefixed article al- the, Spanish algodón and Portuguese algodão. — v. 1488 (Scottish) form down or nap on; from the noun. The informal sense of get on together, agree, is first recorded in 1567; the sense of to take a liking to is first recorded in 1805.

cotyledon n. 1776, embryo leaf in the seed of a plant. New Latin (named by Linnaeus in 1751), from Latin cotylēdōn navelwort (a plant) from Greek kotylēdōn cup-shaped hollow.

couch n. 1340, borrowed from Old French couche, earlier culche, from coucher lay in place, from Latin collocāre put in place, put together (col- together + locāre to place, put, LOCATE). — v. Probably before 1300, to overlay as with gold, inlay; borrowed from Old French coucher lay in place. The sense of to frame or express in words appeared in 1529.

cougar n. 1774, borrowed from French couguar, coined in French by contraction of New Latin cuguacuara, apparently a misreading of Brazilian Portuguese çuçuarana, from Tupi suasuarana (suasu deer + rana false; apparently so called from its tawny color).

cough v. Before 1325 kouwen, later coughen (about 1378); related to Old English cohhetan to bluster, probably of imitative origin, as in Middle Dutch kochen to cough, Middle High German küchen breathe on, exhale, and Old English ceahhetan laugh loudly.

The original sound represented by gh, in cough, was a guttural ch, as in Scottish loch. As the pronunciation shifted to the sound of f in off the spelling of many words also changed, as in draft for draught; but a group of spellings remained fixed; see ROUGH. — n. About 1300, from the verb, probably the dating being a defect of the record.

could v. past tense of CAN¹. Old English cūthe, past tense of cunnan (about 725, in Beowulf). In Middle English the form was coude, cowde (about 1350), but in the early 1400's the l was inserted on analogy with should and would. The earliest recorded spelling with l is colde, about 1400.

coulee n. 1804, Canadian English, borrowed through Canadian French coulée a small stream or bed of such a stream when dry, from French coulée flow, flow of lava, from feminine past participle of couler to flow.

coulomb n. 1881, in allusion to Charles de Coulomb, who devised a method of measuring quantity of electricity.

council n. 1125 concilie assembly of churchmen; later counseil (about 1300) and council (probably before 1400); borrowed from Old North French concilie, Old French concile, cuncile, learned borrowing from Latin concilium gathering, assembly (con- together + -cilium, related to calāre call out).

In early English council and counsel were frequently confused. In the 1500's council became established as a deliberative body, and counsel was restricted to the giving of advice. —councilman n. (before 1637) —councilor n. (before 1325 counsallour; later councillor, 1586).

counsel n. Probably before 1200 cunsail advice, direction; borrowed probably through Anglo-French cunseil*, and directly from Old French cunseil, conseil, from Latin cōsiliū counsel, deliberation, from cōsulere to CONSULT. The sense of a body of advisers is first recorded probably before 1300; the sense of a single adviser, probably about 1250, and of a legal adviser, advocate, lawyer, before 1393. Compare COUNCIL. —v. About 1280 counsaylen take counsel with oneself, consider; later, to give or seek advice (probably before 1300); borrowed probably through Anglo-French cunseiler, and directly from Old French conseiller, from Latin cōsiliārī, from cōsiliū counsel. —counselor n. Probably before 1200, borrowed probably through Anglo-French cunseiler, and directly from Old French conseillor.

count¹ v. reckon. 1341–42, implied in counting reckoning, accounting; borrowed from Old French cunter, conter, from Latin computāre calculate, compute (com- together + putāre to count, think, consider). —n. Before 1325, a reckoning, an accounting; borrowed from Old French conte, cunte, from Late Latin computum calculation, reckoning, from Latin computāre. —countless adj. 1588, formed from English count, n. + -less.

count² n. About 1303, nobleman, implied in counte a shire; borrowed through Anglo-French counte (about 1290), Old French conte, cunte, from Latin comitem, accusative of comes member of the imperial court, attendant, associate, companion (com- with, together + it-, from the root of ire to go).

countenance n. About 1250 cuntenaunce demeanor; borrowed from Old French cuntenaunce, countenance bearing, behavior, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin continentia, from Latin continentia self-control, from continentem (nominative continēns), present participle of continēre CONTAIN; for suffix see -ANCE. —v. 1486, to behave or act, approve; borrowed from Middle French countenancer, from countenance countenance, from Old French.

counter¹ n. table. 1345 countour counting table; borrowed through Anglo-French countour, Old French conteoir, from Medieval Latin computatorium place for counting or making accounts (Latin computātus, past participle of computāre compute, COUNT¹ + -ōrium -ory).

counter² n. person that counts. About 1300 countour accountant, tax collector; borrowed from Anglo-French countour, Old French conteoir one who counts, from Latin computātōrem (nominative computātor) computer, reckoner, from computāre compute, COUNT¹; for suffix see *-ER*¹.

counter³ adv. opposed. About 1450, borrowed from Middle French countre facing, opposite (to), from Latin contrā against; see CONTRA-. —v. Before 1397 countren, borrowed from Old French countre opposite (to). —adj. 1596, from English counter-, prefix.

counter- a prefix meaning: 1 against, in opposition to, as in counteract = act against. 2 in return, as in counterattack = attack in return. 3 corresponding, as in counterpart = corresponding part. Middle English and Anglo-French countre-, borrowed from Old French contre, countre facing, opposite (to), from Latin contrā against; see CONTRA-. —countervail v. (1678) —counterclockwise adv., adj. (1888) —counterintelligence n. (1940) —countersink v., n. (1816) counterbalance v. 1580, borrowed from Middle French contre-balancer (contre- against, counter- + balancer BALANCE). —n. 1603, either noun use of English verb, or borrowed from French contre-balance, n., from the French verb.

counterfeit adj. Before 1393 contrefet, borrowed from Old French contrefait imitated, past participle of contrefaire imitate (contre- against, counter- + faire make); perhaps also formed from English countrefet, counterfet, a past participial form of earlier English countrefeten, v. —v. About 1300 countrefeten, borrowed from Old French contrefait, past participle of contrefaire imitate. —n. 1397, from the adjective.

countermand v. Before 1420, borrowed from Middle French contremander reverse an order or command (contre- against, counter- + mander, from Latin mandāre to order). —n. 1548, borrowed from Middle French contremand, from contremander countermand, and possibly from English countermand, v.

counterpane n. 1603, alteration of earlier counterpoynte quilt (1467); borrowed from Old French cuite contrepointe quilt stitched through and through. Old French contrepointe was an alteration of coute pointe, representing Medieval Latin culcita puncta quilted mattress (Latin culcita cushion + puncta, feminine past participle of pungere to prick, stab). The substitution of pane coverlet, for pointe was a semantic development, English pane being a borrowing from Old French pan cloth, from Latin pannus PANE.

counterpart n. 1451 countre part duplicate of a legal document; borrowed from Old French contrepartie (contre, countre facing, opposite (to), corresponding, + partie copy of a person or thing, originally, feminine past participle of partir to divide; see PARTY).

counterpoint n. Before 1450, art of singing an accompaniment; borrowed probably through Anglo-French and Old French contrepoint, from Medieval Latin contrapunctum* (in music, cantus contrapunctus song or melody pointed against, explained as the accompaniment or second melody indicated by notes jotted down over or under the primary melody), from Latin contrā against + pūctus dotted, pūctum dot, POINT.

country n. Probably before 1250 contre one's native land; borrowed from Old French contree, cuntree, from Vulgar Latin contrāta* regiō region lying opposite, i.e., spread out before one (Latin contrā opposite, against + regiō REGION). The sense of a land is recorded probably before 1300, and that of a national territory, about 1300. —adj. Before 1387, from the noun. —countryfy v. (usually in countryfyed) 1653, formed from English country + -fy. —countryfolk n. (about 1300) —countryman n. (1279) —countryside n. (about 1450) —countrywoman n. (1440) county n. About 1378 counte domain of a count; earlier, a shire (before 1338), and a shire court (about 1303); borrowed through Anglo-French counté, Old French conté, cunté territory or domain of a lord, from Late Latin comitatus court or palace, from Latin comitatus train, retinue, from comes (accusative comitem) a state officer; earlier, attendant of the emperor, associate, companion; see COUNT² nobleman. —countyseat n. (1803, American English) coup n. Probably before 1400, borrowed from Old French coup, colp a blow, from Late Latin colpus, from Latin colaphus a blow with the fist, from Greek kólaphos a blow, slap. The meaning of a sudden decisive act is first recorded in 1852, by shortening from coup d'état. —coup de grâce 1699, borrowing from French, action that quickly kills a suffering person or animal, literally, stroke of grace. —coup d'état 1646, borrowing from French, sudden and decisive act in politics, especially the overthrow of a government, literally, stroke of state.

couple n. About 1280, a married couple or pair of lovers; later, a pair of things (1338); borrowed from Old French cople couple, from Latin cōpula bond; later, pair, from coapla* connected together (co- together + apla*, noun showing means by which something is fastened or connected, derived from apere fasten, connect); see APT. —v. Probably before 1200 cuplen, borrowed from Old French cople, from cople, n., couple. —couplet n. 1580, pair of successive lines of verse; borrowed from Middle French couplet, diminutive of couple, from Old French cople couple, couplet.

coupon n. 1822, certificate of interest due on an investment bond which can be cut from the bond and presented for interest; borrowed from French coupon, from Old French coupon piece cut off, from couper to cut, from coup a blow. The sense of a certificate or one of a series of tickets that gives the holder certain rights, such as to a ride, a discount in price, etc., was introduced by the travel agent Thomas Cook in 1864.

courage n. Probably before 1300 corage spirit, disposition, nature; borrowed from Old French corage, curage, from Vulgar Latin coraticum*, from Latin cor HEART; for suffix see -AGE. The sense of bravery, fearlessness is first recorded in English before 1338, stemming from the notion that the heart is the center of feeling, thought, and character. —courageous adj. Probably before 1300 corageus brave, fearless; borrowed from Old French corageus, from corage courage; for suffix see -OUS.

courier n. Probably before 1350 currur, borrowed through Anglo-French courrier, Old French coreor, corier, from Italian corriere, from correre to run, from Latin currere to run. The spelling courier is first recorded in English in 1770, altered from earlier courrier (1718), borrowed from modern French courrier.

course n. Probably before 1300 cours onward movement; borrowed from Old French cours, curs, from Latin cursus (genitive cursūs), a running race or course, from past participle stem curs- of currere to run. The sense of a planned or prescribed series of classes, lectures, etc., is first recorded in English in 1605; probably from French, found in the 1300's and earlier. Earliest instances of the phrase of course (literally, of or in the ordinary course) are from 1541, replacing earlier bi cours with the same meaning (probably before 1300). —v. 1466, to pursue; from the noun.

courser n. Probably about 1300, a swift horse; borrowed from Old French coursier, cursier, corsier, from Medieval Latin cur-sarius, from Latin cursus, see COURSE; for suffix see -ER¹.

court n. Probably before 1200 curt princely residence or household; borrowed from Old French cort, curt, from Latin cōrtem, accusative of cōrs (earlier cohorte, accusative of cohors) enclosure, courtyard, company, cohort (co- together, and a stem hort-, related to hortus garden, plot of ground; see YARD¹). The sense of homage such as offered at court, attention or courtship (especially in the phrase pay court to), is first recorded in 1589. —v. 1515 (implied in courting); from the noun. —courthouse n. (probably about 1475) —courtly adj. (before 1475) —court-martial (probably 1435); v. (1859). —courtship n. (1588) courteous adj. Probably about 1350 but rare before 1500, alteration of earlier curteis (before 1300) with substitution of -ous, -eous for -is, -eis. Early Middle English curteis was borrowed from Old French curteis, corteis, having courtly bearing or manners (cort, curt COURT + -eis from Latin -ēnsis). —courtesy n. Probably before 1200 curteisie; borrowed from Old French curtesie, cortisie, from curteis, corteis; for suffix see -Y³.

courtesan n. 1426 courtezane, borrowed from Middle French courtisane, courtisan, from Italian cortigiana prostitute; originally, woman of the court, feminine of cortigiano, cortegiano one attached to a court, from corte court, from Latin cōrtem COURT. Compare ARTISAN.

courtier n. 1228–29 Curtier, as a surname; later courteours (about 1300); borrowed through Anglo-French courteour, curteour courtier, Old French courtier, cortier judge, from cort, curt COURT; for suffix see -IER.

cousin n. 1160 Cusin, as a surname; later, cosin a relative, by blood or marriage (probably about 1225) and, a cousin (about 1300); borrowed from Old French cosin, cusin, from Latin cōsobrinus mother's sister's child, cousin (con- together + so-brinus, from earlier sosrīnos* cousin on mother's side, from soror, genitive sorōris SISTER).

couth adj. 1896, reintroduced as a back formation from uncouth, adj. Earlier, in Middle English couth courteous, polite couturier n. 1899, as a modern French term. Earlier couturière (1818), from Old French costurier, costurier dressmaker, from costure a sewing, seam, from Vulgar Latin cōnsūtūra*, from past participle of Latin cōsuere sew (con- together + suere SEW).

(before 1325, and surviving to the 1500's); in Old English (before 1000) cūth known, well-known, renowned, was a past participle of cunnan to know (see CAN¹), corresponding to Old Frisian kūth known, Old Saxon cūth, Old High German kund, chund (modern German kund), and Gothic kunths known. Old English cūth developed from Proto-Germanic kúnthaz*.

cove n. Before 1325, a den or cave; later, a narrow valley (probably before 1400), developed from Old English (before 800) cofa small chamber, cell; cognate with Middle Low German kove hut, Old High German kubisi, chubisi tent, hut, Middle High German kobe pen, stall (modern German Koben), and Old Icelandic kofi hut, shed, cell (Norwegian kove small room). The sense of a small bay is first recorded in English in 1590.

coven n. 1500–20, meeting, variant of covent, cuvent (probably before 1200), earlier form of CONVENT, as found in Covent Garden (London). The sense of a gathering of witches appeared in 1662.

covenant n. Probably before 1300 covenant, borrowed from Old French covenant agreement, (originally) present participle of covenir agree or meet, from Latin convenire come together, CONVENE. —v. Probably before 1300, from the noun.

cover v. Probably about 1150 coveren protect or shelter, borrowed from Old French covrir, from Late Latin cōperire, from Latin *co-*perire to cover over (co- intensive + operire to close, cover). —n. 1223, in compound koverchief kerchief, a woman's covering for the head or veil; later, koverchief a wrapping, protective covering (1245), and in bancover, bankcover protective covering (1346–47); in compounds borrowed from Old French cuevre-chiefhead covering, and covert table furnishings and utensils for a meal. —coverage n. 1462, a charge for a booth at a fair; borrowed possibly from Middle French couvraige a cover; later, reintroduced in American English in the sense of risk covered by insurance (1912), formed from English cover + -age. —covered wagon (1745) —covering n. (1303) —coverlet n. (1303) covert adj. About 1303, borrowed from Old French covert (past participle of covrir to cover), from Latin coopertus, past participle of coopere to COVER. —n. Probably before 1300, a covering; later, a shelter (1338); borrowed from Old French covert, coverte cover or shelter, from Medieval Latin coopertum a cover, from Latin coopertus, past participle; see covert, adj.

covet v. Before 1250 cuveiten, later coveiten (about 1300); borrowed from Old French coveitier, probably derived from Gallo-Romance cupidietāre*, from cupidietās*, alteration (influenced by Latin pietās, ānxiētās, mediētās) of Latin cupiditās passionate desire, from cupidus very desirous, from cupere long for, desire. —covetous adj. About 1250 covetus; borrowed from Old French coveitous, probably from Gallo-Romance cupidietōsus*, from cupidietās*, alteration of Latin cupiditās CUPIDITY; for suffix see -OUS.

covey n. About 1350, borrowed from Middle French covée, from feminine past participle of cover incubate, brood, from Latin cubare be in a lying position.

cow¹ n. female of cattle. Middle English ku (before 1200); later, in a place name Cowmede (1227); developed from Old English (before 800) cū; cognate with Old Frisian kū cow, Old Saxon kō, Middle Dutch coe (modern Dutch koe), Old High German kuo (modern German Kuh), Old Icelandic kýr (Norwegian ku, Danish and Swedish ko), from Proto-Germanic kwōn*, earlier kwōm*. Related words outside Germanic are found in Old Irish bō cow, Middle Welsh buw, Latin bōs ox, bull, cow. Greek bois, Latvian gūovs cow, Armenian kov, Sanskrit gāu-s ox, bull, cow, Avestan gāuš, and Tocharian A ko cow, Tocharian B kau. —cowbell n. (1652, American English) —cowboy n. (1725) —cowhand n. (1852, American English) —cowherd n. 1222, developed from Old English cūhyrde, -hierde, etc. —cowhide (before 1399) —cowlick n. (1598) —cowslip n. Before 1325, developed from English (about 1000) cūshype, literally, cow slime.

cow² v. intimidate. 1605, probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Danish and Norwegian kue to cow, subdue, Old Icelandic kūga to force, oppress); of unknown origin.

coward n. Before 1250 couard, borrowed from Old French coart, from coe tail, from Latin cōda, dialectal variant of cauda tail, of uncertain origin; for suffix see -ARD. Perhaps reference to the tail is in allusion to an animal "turning tail" in fright or to the habit of a frightened animal drawing the tail between the hind legs. In the Old French version of Reynard the Fox, the name of the hare is Coart. —cowardice n. Probably before 1300, borrowed from Old French couardise (couard, coart coward + -ise noun suffix, from Latin -itia). —cowardly adv. (before 1375) coxcomb n. 1573, fool; also with the meaning "cap worn by clowns," variant of cock's comb (1562), since the cap resembled the comb of a cock; earlier cokkes comb crest of a cock (about 1400).

cower v. Before 1300 couren to skulk, apparently borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic kūra doze, lie quiet, Danish and Norwegian kure and Swedish kura to squat); cognate with Middle Low German kūren lie in wait (modern German kauern to crouch, squat).

cowl n. Probably before 1200 cule; later, couel; developed from Old English cūle, earlier cugele (about 961); borrowed from Late Latin cuculla monk's cowl, variant of Latin cucullus hood, of uncertain origin. —v. 1536, from the noun. —cowling n. covering of an aircraft engine (1917).

coxswain n. 1327, officer in charge of a ship's boat and its crew (cock ship's boat + swain boy).

coy adj. Before 1338, quiet, still; earlier, in surname Coyman (1230); borrowed from Old French coi, earlier quei, from Vulgar Latin quētus*, from Latin quīētus resting, at rest. The sense shy or modest, is first recorded about 1386.

coyote n. 1759, American English, borrowing of Mexican Spanish coyote, from Nahuatl coyotl.

cozen v. 1561 (implied in cozener a cheater); perhaps borrowed from French cousiner cheat on the pretext of being a cousin, from cousin, n.; or developed from Middle English cosyn fraud, trickery (1453), of uncertain origin (compare Old French cozon dealer, from Latin cōzionem horse dealer). — cozenage n. 1583, formed from English cozen + -age.

cozy or cosy adj. 1709 colsie, originally Scottish; possibly borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Norwegian kose [seg] be cozy, koselig cozy).

crab¹ n. shellfish. Probably before 1200 crabbe; earlier as a surname (1188); developed from Old English (about 1000) crabba; cognate with Middle Low German krabbe crab, Old High German krebitz (modern German Krabbe), Old Saxon krebit, Old Icelandic krabbi (Danish and Norwegian krabbe, Swedish krabba) crab. — v. Probably before 1400 crabben to vex, irritate, anger, either from earlier crabbed, adj., or from crabbe crab¹ or crab² used figuratively. The sense of complain irritably, find fault appeared before 1500. — crab grass 1743; earlier, possibly a marine grass of salt marshes (1597).

crab² n. sour wild apple; (crab apple, 1712). Probably before 1300 crabbe, of uncertain origin (perhaps a transferred use of CRAB¹ the animal, its disposition compared with the sour taste of the fruit). The sense of a sour person is first recorded in 1580, in part a figurative use of crab the apple, and later, as a back formation from crabbed and also directly from crab the animal. — crabby adj. 1550, crooked, gnarled, cross-grained; formed from English *crab*² sour apple + *-y*¹. The sense of peevish, is first recorded in 1776, in American English.

crabbed adj. Before 1376, formed from crabbe crab¹ (shellfish) + -ed, with reference to the crab's crooked motion, and its perverse disposition; later, the sense of harsh, unpleasant, and bitter to the taste, is recorded (probably about 1390), evolving into the figurative use of sour-tempered, peevish (about 1565), most likely under influence of *crab*² wild apple.

crack v. Probably before 1200 craken make a bursting or splitting sound; developed from Old English (about 1000) cracian make a sharp noise, crack; related to cearcian to creak, and cognate with Middle Dutch craken to crack, creak (modern Dutch kraken), Old High German krakhōn (modern German krachen), krach loud noise (modern German Krach). The sense of break something hard with a sharp noise, is first recorded probably before 1300. — n. Probably before 1300 crak sharp noise; related to Old English cracian make a sharp noise. The meaning of split, opening is first recorded about 1450. — adj. first-class. 1793, from the noun sense of that which is superior (1637). — cracked adj. About 1440; later, specifically of the mind (1611). — cracker n. 1440; specifically a thin crisp biscuit (1739).

crackle v. Before 1450 crackelen, frequentative form of cracken to crack; for suffix see -LE³.

— cracy a combining form meaning rule or ruling body or class, as in aristocracy. Borrowed from Greek - kratīā (as in aristokratīā rule of the best-born, and dēmokratīā rule of the people) from krátos power, rule, through Latin -cratia and Middle French -cratie.

Since the 1800's -cracy has become productive in English, especially in the form -ocracy, possibly by influence of bureaucracy (borrowed from French), for example technocracy rule of technical experts (1932).

cradle n. Probably before 1200 cradel, developed from Old English cradol little bed or cot (about 1000) from Proto-Germanic kerađulās*; cognate with Old High German kratto, krezzo basket. — v. Before 1500 credelen, from the noun. — cat's cradle (1768) craft n. Old English cræft skill or art (before 899), but originally with the meaning of power, strength, might; cognate with Old Frisian kreft strength, skill, Old Saxon kraft, Old High German chraft (modern German Kraft), and Old Icelandic kraptr strength, virtue (Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish kraft strength). The sense craft for boat, as in small craft is first recorded in 1671–72. — v. 1436, make skillfully; earlier, to attain; from the noun. The verb became obsolete after the 1500's, but was revived in the late 1950's, especially by American manufacturers who advertised products "crafted or carefully put together." — craftsman n. (probably before 1200) — craftsmanship n. (before 1652) — crafty adj. Probably before 1200 crafti skillful, developed from Old English cræftig strong, powerful (about 893); formed from cræft craft + -ig -*y*¹. The sense of skillful appeared in 971, and that of cunning, wily, probably about 1200.

crag n. Before 1325; earlier, in place name Cragdal (1218); borrowed from a Celtic source (compare Old Irish crec, carra rock, cliff, Irish carraig, and Welsh craig rock, stone). — craggy adj. Probably about 1400, formed from English crag + *-y*¹.

cram v. Before 1325 crommen fill, stuff, dialectal variant of crammen (about 1353); developed from Old English crammian (about 1000), derivative of crimman to insert; cognate with Old High German krimman to press or pinch, Middle High German krammen to claw, Old Icelandic kremlja to squeeze or pinch (Danish, Norwegian kramme, Swedish krama).

cramp¹ n. metal bar bent at both ends. 1423, borrowed from Middle Dutch crampe or Middle Low German krampe hook; cognate with Old Saxon kramp cramp or clamp, Old High German kramph, krampho bent or crooked (modern German Krampe), Old Icelandic krappr (with -pp- from -mp-) narrow. The sense of something that confines or hinders, constraint, is first recorded in 1719. — v. Probably about 1408 crawmpen to bend or twist; later crampe compress forcibly (before 1555); in part from the noun, and in part from *cramp*², n. The figurative sense of restrict, limit or confine, is first recorded in 1625.

cramp² n. painful contraction of muscles. About 1378 crampes; borrowed from Old French crampe, from a Frankish word (compare Old High German kramph, krampe cramp, spasm, related to kramph bent, crooked, Old Icelandic krappa to clench; see CRAMP¹). — v. Probably about 1425 crampen; from the noun. — writer's cramp (1853) cranberry n. 1647 cranberry, American English, apparently borrowed from Low German Kraanbere (Kraan crane, from Middle Low German krān + bere berry; of unknown origin).

crane n. 1177, as surname Crane, developed from Old English cran large wading bird (about 1000); cognate with Old Saxon kerano crane, Old High German kerano and chranuh (modern German Kranich), Old Icelandic trani, Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish trane (with unexplained change of k- to t-).

The use of crane for a machine with a long arm for moving heavy weights, is first recorded as early as 1299 in compound creneman; a similar meaning existed in Old High German cognates. —v. 1570, hoist or lower with a crane; from the noun.

cranium n. Probably before 1425 craneum; borrowing of Medieval Latin cranium, from Greek krānion, related to kārā head. —cranial adj. 1800, formed from English cranium + -al.

crank n. About 1440 cranke; earlier cronk (1295); developed from Old English (about 1000) cranc-, in compound crancstæf weaver's instrument, related to crinca to bend, yield. The sense of a person with a mental twist, an eccentric, is first recorded in 1833, probably as a back formation of cranky. —v. 1592, to zigzag, from the noun. The sense of turn a crank, is first recorded in 1908. —crankshaft n. (1854) —cranky adj. 1821, capricious, cross-tempered; later, queer, eccentric (1850); formed from English crank, n. + -y.

cranny n. About 1440 crayne small, narrow opening, scribal error for cranye; possibly borrowed as an alteration of Middle French cran, cren notch, fissure, from crener to notch, split, from Medieval Latin crenare, from Vulgar Latin crināre* to split, probably related to Latin cernere to separate, sift.

crap n. 1898, rubbish; earlier, chaff (before 1425); borrowed from Middle French crape siftings, Old French crappe, from Medieval Latin crappa, crapinium chaff. —v. 1930, talk nonsense; spoil; earlier, defecate (1846). —crappy adj. 1846, formed from English crap, n. + -y.

crape n. piece of crepe used in mourning. 1446, variant of crepe, possibly borrowed from Middle French crepe; see CREPE.

crappie n. 1856, American English, kind of fish; apparently borrowing of dialectal Canadian French crappé.

craps n. 1843, American English, borrowing of Louisiana French craps the game of hazard (ancestor of craps), from English crabs the lowest throw in hazard, being two aces (1768), from CRAB¹ shellfish.

crash v. Probably before 1400 crasschen, craschen break in pieces; about 1390, earlier, make a crashing sound; probably of imitative origin, like clash, dash, etc.; but compare Middle English crāsen to shatter, from Old French crasir, and Middle English cruschen to crush, from Old French croissir. The sense of wreck a vehicle (or originally an airplane), have a collision, is first recorded in 1910. —n. 1580, sudden loud noise; from the verb. The sense of a sudden business failure or financial ruin, is first recorded in 1817.

crass adj. 1545, thick, fat, gross; borrowed from Middle French crasse, from Latin crassus solid, thick, dense, related to crātis wickerwork, hurdle. The sense of grossly dull or stupid appeared in 1660, though it was used earlier in French (as in ignorance crasse).

crate n. 1397–98, hurdle, grillwork, borrowed from Latin crātis wickerwork, lattice, HURDLE. The sense of large box is first recorded in 1688 with the spelling creat. —v. 1871, from the noun.

crater n. 1613, mouth of a volcano; borrowed from Latin crāter, from Greek krāter bowl for mixing wine with water. —v. 1884, from the noun.

cravat n. 1656 crabbat, borrowed from French cravate, from special use of Cravate Croat (in Régiment de Royal-Cravate), from German dialect Krabate, from Serbo-Croatian Hrvat a Croat. The cravat came into fashion in France in the 1600's in imitation of the linen scarf worn by Croatian mercenaries in the French military service.

crave v. Probably before 1200 craven, developed from Old English (about 1000) crāfian demand by right; cognate with Old Icelandic kræfja to demand, (Danish kræve, Norwegian kræve, and Swedish kräva). The sense of long for is first recorded before 1375.

craven adj. Probably before 1200 cravant vanquished, defeated; perhaps borrowed from Old French crevanté, past participle; or even crevant, present participle of crever burst, rattle, from Latin crepare to crack, creak. The sense of cowardly, is first recorded probably before 1400.

craw n. About 1395 crawe pouch in a bird's gullet; earlier crei neck or throat (about 1250); developed from Old English craeg*, craga*; cognate with Middle Dutch crāghe neck, throat (modern Dutch kraag collar), Middle High German krage neck, throat (modern German Kragen collar, neck).

crawfish n. 1624, American English, variant of CRAYFISH. —v. 1842, American English, back out, from the noun (in allusion to the animal's manner of moving backward).

crawl v. Before 1400 crawlen; earlier crewlen (about 1200); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (Old Icelandic krafla, Danish, Norwegian kravle, Swedish kravla to crawl). —n. 1818, from the verb.

crayfish n. 1555 crefisse, alteration (influenced by fish in some confusion with -vis, -vish*) of earlier crevis (1311–12); borrowed from Old French crevice, from a Frankish word (compare Old High German krebiz CRAB¹ shellfish).

crayon n. 1644, borrowed from French crayon pencil, (originally) chalk pencil, from craie chalk, from Latin crēta, chalk. —v. 1662, from French crayonner, from French crayon, n.

craze n. About 1369 crasen perforate; later, shatter (about 1399); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Swedish krasa to crack, Norwegian krase to crush), possibly imitative of the sound.

A figurative sense of break down in health (1450) is followed by the sense of break down mentally, make insane (1496–97). The literal meanings developed into become minutely cracked (1832), as of glaze on pottery. —n. 1534, a flaw or defect; from the verb. The sense of a mania appeared in 1813 and that of a fad in 1877. —crazy adj. 1576, broken down, sickly; later, insane, mad (1617); formed from English craze, n. + *-y*¹. —crazy bone (1876, American English) creak v. Before 1325 creken utter a harsh cry, apparently of imitative origin. The sense of squeak loudly, is first recorded in 1583. —n. 1605, from the verb. —creaky adj. 1834, formed from English creak + *-y*¹.

cream n. 1378 creem, earlier creyme (1332); borrowed from Old French creme, craine, creme, a blending of Late Latin chrīma ointment, from Greek chrīma an anointing, unguent + Late Latin crānum cream, of uncertain origin, perhaps from Gaulish (compare Welsh cramen scab, Breton crammen, cremmen, Middle Irish screm surface, skin). The Middle English word replaced Old English rēam cream. —v. 1440, to foam, froth; later, add cream to (1834), and to apply cream to (1921); from the noun. —creamier n. (1858, dish for skimming cream; later, pitcher for cream, 1877). —creamy adj. (about 1450) —cold cream (1381, as a custard; later, a preparation for the skin, 1709).

crease n. 1665, alteration of earlier creaste furrow, fold, or ridge, perhaps a variant of crest; found in creste fold in a length of cloth (1433); earlier, bony ridge (before 1398). —v. 1588 crested, past participle, perhaps alteration of crested, past participle of crest.

create v. About 1380, borrowed from Latin creātus, past participle of creāre to make, produce, from a lost noun crē-yā growth, related to crēscere arise, grow; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —creation n. About 1390 creacion a created thing, borrowed through Old French création, or directly from Latin creātiōnem (nominative creātiō), from creāre create; for suffix see -TION. —creative adj. 1678, probably borrowed from French créatif, créative, from Latin creātus, past participle of creāre create; for suffix see -IVE. —creator n. About 1300 creatour, creatur God, borrowed through Anglo-French creatour, Old French creator, creatur, creatour, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin creātōrem (nominative creātor), from past participle stem of creāre create; for suffix see *-OR*². The word was not generally capitalized Creator until the appearance of the King James Bible (1611).

creature n. About 1280, human being; borrowed from Old French creature, and probably directly as a learned borrowing from Latin creātūra, from past participle stem of creāre create; for suffix see -URE.

credence n. About 1338, borrowed from Medieval Latin credentia, from Latin crēdētem (nominative crēdēns), present participle of crēdere believe, trust; for suffix see -ENCE. —credential adj. 1470, recommending for credit, accrediting; borrowed from Medieval Latin credentialis, from credentia credence; for suffix see *-AL*¹. —credentials n.pl. Before 1674, letters of recommendation or introduction; earlier, testimonial (1660, in singular); from credential, adj.

credible adj. About 1380, borrowed from Latin crēdibilis, from crēdere believe; for suffix see -IBLE. —credibility n. 1594, borrowed from Medieval Latin credibilitas, from Latin crēdibilis credible; for suffix see -ITY.

credit n. 1542, borrowed from Middle French crédit belief, trust, from Italian credito, learned borrowing from Latin crēditum a loan, thing entrusted to another, from past participle of crēdere to trust, entrust, believe. —v. 1541, trust (a person) with goods or money; formed from the noun and borrowed directly from Latin crēditus, past participle of crēdere. —creditable adj. 1526 credible, worthy of belief; later, bringing credit or honor (1659); formed from English credit, v., n. + -able. —creditor n. Probably 1435 creditor, borrowed through Anglo-French creditor, Old French créditeur, learned borrowing from Latin crēditōrem (nominative crēditor), from crēdere; for suffix see *-OR*².

credo n. Probably before 1200, the Apostles' Creed or the Nicene Creed; borrowed from Latin crēdō I believe, 1st person singular present indicative of crēdere to believe, trust. Credo is the first word of the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds in Latin; and became the name for either Creed. The general sense of formula or statement of belief is first recorded in 1587.

credulous adj. 1576, borrowed from Latin crēdulus from crēdere to believe; for suffix see -OUS. —credulity n. Probably before 1425 credulite readiness to believe; borrowed through Middle French credulité or directly from Latin crēdulitatem (nominative crēdulitās), from crēdulus; for suffix see -ITY.

creed n. Before 1225 crede, developed from Old English (before 1000) crēda Christian article or statement of belief, such as the Apostles' Creed, from Latin crēdō I believe. The sense of any statement of belief or cherished opinion is first recorded in 1613.

creek n. 1449 creke inlet; earlier in Krekeset (place name, 1198), alteration (by influence of Middle Dutch kreke creek) of the earlier kryk (1220–30), also in place name Sayercrik (1160–80). The term was probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare dialectal Swedish krik corner, bend, creek, cove, Old Icelandic kriki corner, nook, related to kriker bend, creek, and krökr hook). Middle English crike may have been reinforced by Anglo-French crique (1386), from the Normans, who were of Scandinavian origin. The sense of small stream or brook, is first recorded in 1622, in American English.

creel n. 1323–24 crele, borrowed perhaps from Old French crēille* (compare Middle French crille latticework), from Latin crātīcula, diminutive of crātis wickerwork.

creep v. Probably before 1200 crepen, developed from Old English crēopan (about 899); cognate with Old Frisian kriāpa to creep, Middle Low German krūpen, Middle Dutch crūpen, Old Icelandic krjúpa (Danish krybe, Norwegian krype, and Swedish krypa to creep), from Proto-Germanic kreupanan*. —n. 1818, a creeping motion; from the verb. The slang sense of a despicable person is first recorded in 1935, in American English, perhaps an extension of robber or sneak thief (1914).

—creeper n. 1440 crepere, developed from Old English (before 1000) crēopere + (crēopan to creep + -ere -er¹). —creepy adj. 1794, formed from English creep + *-y*¹.

cremate v. 1874, back formation of cremation; occasionally, perhaps also an artificial borrowing from Latin cremātus, past participle of cremare to cremate. —cremation n. 1623, borrowed from Latin cremātiōnem (nominative cremātiō), from cremare; for suffix see -TION. —crematory n. 1876, crematorium n. 1880, from New Latin crematorium, from Latin cremātus (past participle of cremare) + -orium -ory.

crenelated adj. 1823, formed from English crenel one of the open spaces of a battlement (1481, from Middle French crenel notch, a diminutive form of Old French cren notch; see CRANNY) + *-ate*¹ + *-ed*². —crenelation n. 1849, formed from English crenelate + -ation.

Creole or creole n. 1697 Cirole a native of the West Indies, etc., of European or African descent; later Creole (1737); borrowed from French créole, from Spanish criollo person native to a locality, from Portuguese crioulo, diminutive of cria person (especially a servant) raised in one's house, from criar to raise or bring up, from Latin creāre to produce, CREATE.

In 1792 the word is recorded in American English as applied to a descendant of early French or Spanish settlers in Louisiana. The sense of a creolized language is first recorded in 1879. —adj. 1748, from the noun. —creolize v. 1818, to lounge or pass time quietly; later, to naturalize in the West Indies, etc. (1834); formed from English creole + -ize. A creolized language (1932) is a language developed from a mixture of two or more languages.

creosote n. 1835, borrowing of German Kreosot, from Greek kreos-, combining form of kréas flesh + sōtēr savior, preserver, from sōizein save, preserve. Originally so called from its use in surgery and medicine as a powerful antiseptic. —v. 1846, from the noun.

crepe n. 1797, borrowed from French crêpe, from Old French crēpe, from Latin crispa, feminine of crispus curled, CRISP. The sense of a thin pancake, usually curled or rolled up, is first recorded in 1877. —crepe paper, 1895 crepe tissue paper.

crescendo n. 1776, borrowing of Italian crescendo increasing, from Latin crēscendō, ablative case of the gerund of crēscere arise, grow. The figurative sense of an increase in force or effect, is first recorded in 1785.

crescent n. 1399 cressaunt crescent-shaped ornament; later, crescent of the moon (before 1460); borrowed through Anglo-French cressaunt, from Middle French creissant growing (creistre to grow), from Latin crēscēntem (nominative crēscēns), present participle of crēscere arise, grow; for suffix see ENT.

cross n. Old English (before 700) cresse, cressa, cæse; cognate with Middle Low German kerse, karse cross, Middle Dutch kerse (modern Dutch kers), Old High German kresso, kressa (modern German Kresse). The shift of r (by metathesis) in Old English craese and Middle Low German karse, is similar to that in GRASS.

crest n. About 1312, replacing Old English hrīs; borrowed from Old French creste tuft, comb, summit, from Latin crista tuft or plume. —v. About 1380, put a crest on; from the noun.

cretaceous adj. About 1675, borrowed from Latin crētāceus chalky, from crēta chalk; for suffix see -OUS. —Cretaceous adj. (1832) —n. 1851, from the adjective.

cretin n. 1779, borrowed from French crétin, from French Alpine dialect (probably of Savoy or Valais) crétin a kind of dwarfed and deformed idiot, from Vulgar Latin christianus*, from Latin christianus CHRISTIAN. In many Romance languages the equivalents of Christian have the general meaning of human being, but as a euphemism carry the sense of poor fellow. —cretinism n. 1801, formed from English cretin + -ism, reinforced by French crétinisme.

crevasse n. 1823, borrowing of French crevasse, from Old French crevace a burst or split.

crevice n. About 1380 crevace; earlier crevice (probably about 1350) and crevesse (probably before 1350); borrowed from Old French crevace, from Vulgar Latin crepācea*, from Latin crepāre to crack, creak.

crew n. About 1437 crewe group of soldiers, reinforcement of a military force; borrowed from Middle French crue, from Old French creüe an increase, recruit, from feminine past participle of creistre grow, from Latin crēscere; see CRESCENT. The sense of any group of people working or acting together, is first recorded in English in 1570. —v. 1935, from the noun.

crewel n. 1598, embroidery done originally with worsted yarn; earlier, a thin worsted yarn (1494), of unknown origin.

crib n. Old English (before 1000) cribbe, crib manger; cognate with Old Saxon kribbia manger, Old High German krippa (modern German Krippe). The sense of a child's bed, is first recorded in English in 1649. —v. Before 1460, to eat from a manger; later to confine as in a crib (1605); from the noun. The sense of to steal, is first recorded in 1748, and of plagiarizing in 1778.

cribbage n. 1630, probably formed from English crib, n. + -age.

crick n. About 1424 crikke, of uncertain origin (perhaps imitative of the sudden check or spasm in a muscle).

cricket¹ n. insect. Before 1325 criket; earlier as a surname (1198); borrowed from Old French criquet a cricket, from criquer to creak, rattle, crackle, of imitative origin; found also in Middle Dutch crekel (modern Dutch krekel) and Low German Krekel cricket.

cricket² n. ball game. 1598, apparently borrowed from Old French criquet goal post in game of bowls, stick, perhaps from Middle Dutch cricke stick, staff. The sense of fair play is first recorded in 1851. —v. About 1809, from the noun.

crime n. About 1250 cryme sinfulness; later, offense punishable by law (1384); borrowed from Old French crime, crimne, from Latin crimen (genitive criminis) charge, indictment, offense.

—criminal adj. About 1400; borrowed through Middle French criminel, and directly from Latin crimīnālis of or pertaining to crime, from crīmen (genitive crīmīnis) crime; for suffix see -AL¹. —n. Before 1626, from the adjective.

crimp v. 1698, to compress, curl, shrink; earlier, in a single use crympen be drawn together (before 1398); possibly originally developed from Old English gecrympian to crimp, curl, but generally agreed to have been reintroduced from Dutch or Low German krampen to shrink, crimp, from Middle Dutch crimpen or Middle Low German krampen to shrink, shrivel, crimp. The word crimpen to wrinkle, shrivel up (about 1378) is associated with crumple, but may also have direct connection with crimp. —n. 1863, American English, natural curl in wool fiber; from the verb.

crimson n., adj. 1416 crimesyn, cremesin; borrowed from early Spanish cremesin, early Italian cremesino, and directly from Medieval Latin cremesinus, all from Arabic girmazī of or belonging to the kermes (insect from which a deep red dye was obtained). —v. make crimson. 1601, from the adjective.

cringe v. Probably about 1200 crengen twist or bend, often haughtily; corresponding to Old English crengan*, a causative form derived from Old English cringan give way, fall (in battle), shrink into a bent position. —n. 1597, from the verb.

crinkle v. About 1386 krynkelen turn or wind repeatedly; developed from the stem of Old English crincan to bend, yield; for suffix see -LE³. —n. 1596, probably from the verb. An apparent noun form is found in Middle English place names, such as Krinkelker (1212).

crinoline n. 1830, borrowed from French crinoline hair cloth, from Italian crinolino (crino horsehair, from Latin crinis hair + lino flax, thread, from linum; so called from the original mixture of these fibers).

cripple n. Probably about 1200 crupel; later cripel (about 1330); developed from Old English crypel (about 950), related to cryppan to crook, bend. The Old English crypel is cognate with Old Frisian kreppel cripple, Middle Dutch cropele, crepel (modern Dutch kreupele), Middle Low German kroppel, kreppel, Middle High German krüppel (modern German Krüppel), and Old Icelandic kryppill cripple from Proto-Germanic krupilaz*. —v. Before 1250 criplen move or walk lamely, from Middle English cripel, n. The sense of make a cripple of, lame, is first recorded before 1325.

crisis n. Probably about 1425, turning point in a disease; borrowed from Latin crisis, from Greek krīsis a separating, discrimination, decision, from krīnein to separate, decide, judge. The sense of decisive moment, is first recorded in English in 1627.

crisp adj. 1 curly. Before 1325 crisp having a curled or fretted surface; earlier, crisp (about 1300) and as a surname Crips (about 1200), Crispe (1279); developed from Old English (about 900) crisp curly; borrowed from Latin crispus curled. 2 brittle. Before 1530, origin uncertain; perhaps imitative of the sound made by things described as “crisp,” such as the burning of dry sticks on a fire. Noun use as early as 1381, for a kind of crisp pastry is suggestive of a possible source for the adjective. —v. 1 to curl. Probably about 1390, from the adjective, possibly influenced by Old French crispir and Latin crispāre to curl. 2 to become brittle. 1805, from the adjective. —crispy adj. 1 curly (before 1398). 2 brittle (1611). Both senses from English crisp + -y¹.

crisscross v. 1818, alteration of Middle English Crist-crosse (about 1475) and earlier Cros-Kryst (probably about 1390) referring to the mark of a cross formerly written before the alphabet in hornbooks. The mark itself stood for the phrase Crist-cross me speed (“May Christ’s cross give me success”), a formula said before reciting the alphabet. —adj. 1846, from the verb. —n. 1848, American English, the game of tick-tack-toe, from the verb. The sense of a transverse crossing, is first recorded in 1876, and of a network of intersecting lines, in 1881.

criterion n. 1661, borrowed from Greek kritērion means for judging, standard, from kritēs judge. Earlier, the word is recorded in English spelled with the Greek letters (1613, 1622, etc.). The Latinized form criterium is recorded before 1631 and was used occasionally until the late 1800’s.

critic n. 1588, one who passes judgment; later, one who judges the merits of books, plays, etc. (1605); borrowed from Middle French critique, learned borrowing from Latin criticus literary critic, from Greek kritikós one who is able to judge, noun use of adjective, from kritēs judge, from krīnein to separate, decide, judge; for suffix see -IC. —critical adj. 1590, given to passing judgment, formed in English from Latin criticus, from Greek kritikós able to judge + English -al¹. The sense “of the nature of a crisis, decisive, crucial,” is first recorded in English in 1649, influenced by now obsolete English critic, adj. and Late Latin criticus decisive, critical, from Greek kritikós suitable for deciding, able to judge. —criticism n. 1607, formed from English critic + -ism. —criticize v. 1649, formed from English critic + -ize.

critique n. 1702, alteration of earlier critick art of criticism (1656); borrowed from French critique, from Greek kritikē technē the critical art, feminine of kritikós critical, able to judge; see CRITIC. —v. write a critique upon, review, criticize. 1751, from the noun.

croak v. 1547, from crok (before 1460), crouken (before 1325), perhaps imitative, but possibly developed from Old English crāc(ettan) to croak, related to Old English cracian make a sharp noise, CRACK. —n. 1561, deep hoarse cry; from the verb.

crochet n. 1846, borrowing of French crochet, from Old French crochet, diminutive of croche, croc hook, from a Germanic source (compare Old Icelandic krökr hook). —v. knit with a hooked needle. 1858, from the noun.

crock n. Old English (about 1000) crocc, crocca; related to crūce pitcher, and cognate with Old Frisian kerocha pot, Old Saxon knūka, Middle Dutch crūke (modern Dutch kruike), Middle High German knūche pot, Old High German krūog pitcher (modern German Krug), and Old Icelandic krúka (Danish, Norwegian kruke, and Swedish kruka) pot, from Proto-Germanic krōgu-*. —crockery n. 1719, formed from English crook + -ery.

crocodile n. 1563, alteration (influenced by Latin crocodilus) of Middle English cokedrille (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French cocodrille, from Medieval Latin cocodrillus, itself an alteration of Latin crocodilus, from Greek krōkōdilos crocodile, lizard.

crocus n. Before 1398, borrowed through Old French crocus, and directly from Latin crocus, from Greek krōkos saffron, crocus.

crone n. About 1390; earlier, as a surname Hopcrone (1323–24); borrowed through Anglo-French carogne, as a term of abuse, from Old North French carogne, caroigne cantankerous woman, literally, CARRION.

crony n. 1665 chrony, said to be originally a term of college or university slang, perhaps as a borrowing from Greek chrōnios lasting, from chrōnos time.

crook n. Probably before 1200 crok, borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic krōkr hook, Danish krog, Norwegian, Swedish krok); cognate with Old High German krācho hooked tool. The figurative sense of a person who is crooked, a swindler or criminal, is first recorded in 1879 in American English. —v. Probably before 1200 croken to bend, curve; apparently from crok, n. —crooked adj. Probably before 1200 croked bent, curved; formed in part from the past participle of croken to crook, and in part from crok crook + -ed, as in hunched, etc. The figurative sense of dishonest is first recorded in 1708, in American English.

croon v. Probably about 1400 crownen hum, sing, or murmur in a low tone; later, croynen (about 1460); borrowed from Middle Dutch krōnen to lament, mourn, groan; cognate with Old High German krōnan to chatter, prattle, of imitative origin.

crop n. Old English (about 700) cropp rounded head or top of an herb, sprout; later, craw of a bird (about 1000); cognate with Old High German kropf swelling on a bird's throat, craw of a bird (modern German Kropf), Old Icelandic kroppr (Danish krop, Norwegian, Swedish kropp) body. The sense of the produce of a field, harvest, is first recorded about 1300. —v. Probably before 1200 croppen remove the top of a plant; from the noun. The general meaning of cut off is first recorded before 1440.

croquet n. 1858, borrowed from Northern French dialect croquet hockey stick, from Old North French croquet shepherd's crook, variant of Old French crochet CROCHET.

crossier n. 1203 crozier; later crossier (1483) one who carries a cross before a prelate or the crook of a bishop, and (about 1400) crozier the pastoral staff itself; borrowed from Old French croisier, from crois CROSS; and through Anglo-French crossier, from Old French crossier, crozier crook bearer, from crosse, croce hook, pastoral staff, from a Frankish word (compare Old High German krucka CRUTCH); for suffix see -IER.

cross n. Old English (963–84) cross, replacing earlier Old English rōd, and borrowed from Old Irish cross (probably through Scandinavian; compare Old Icelandic kröss), from Latin crux (genitive crucis) stake, cross; originally, a tall, round pole.

Other forms of the word are also recorded in English: Old English cruc, borrowed from Latin crucem, and Middle English croiz, crois, borrowed through Anglo-French cross, and from Old French croiz, crois, but they became obsolete after 1450. —v. Probably before 1200 crossen make the sign of the cross over; from the noun. The sense of to cancel by drawing lines across, strike out, is first recorded in 1443, and that of go across, probably before 1400. —adj. 1523, from the noun and elliptical use of the earlier adverb (probably before 1200 in across). The sense of ill-tempered, peevish, is first recorded in 1639, from the earlier sense of contrary, opposed to (1565). —cross-examine v. (1664) —cross-eyed adj. (1791) —cross-purposes n.pl. (1666) —crossroad n. (1719) —crossways adj., adv. (1300) crotch n. 1539, fork, probably in part a variant of CRUTCH, and in part a variant of croche crook, crosier, borrowed from Old North French croche shepherd's crook, variant of crok hook; see CROCHET. The meaning of part of the body where the legs meet is recorded in English before 1592.

crotchety adj. 1825, formed from English crotchet whim or fancy (1573) + -y¹. Originally crotchet referred to an architectural ornament of curled leaves (about 1395); borrowed from Old French crochet, diminutive of croche, crok hook.

crouch v. Probably about 1395; probably borrowed from Old French crochir become bent, crooked, from croche hook. —n. 1597, from the verb.

croup¹ n. disease of the throat and windpipe. 1765, noun use of obsolete verb croup to cry hoarsely, croak (1513); probably of imitative origin. —croupy adj. 1834, formed from English croup + -y¹.

croup² n. rump of a horse, etc. Probably before 1300 croupe, borrowed from Old French croupe, crope, from a Frankish word (compare Old High German kropf swelling on a bird's throat; see CROP).

croupier n. 1707, person who stands behind and assists a game player; borrowed from French, from croupe, originally, one who rides behind on the CROUP² (of a horse, etc.). The meaning of attendant at a gambling table, is first recorded in 1731.

crouton n. 1806, borrowing of French croûton small piece of toasted or fried bread, from croûte crust, from Old French cruste; see CRUST.

crow¹ v. cry. About 1250 crowen, developed from Old English (about 1000) crāwan make the cry of a rooster; cognate with Old High German krāen to crow (modern German krähen), of imitative origin; see CRANE. The figurative sense show one's happiness and pride, is first recorded in English in 1522. —n. Probably before 1200 crau; later crowe, from crowen to crow.

crow² n. bird. About 1250 crowe; earlier, as a surname (1188); developed from Old English (before 700) crāwe; cognate with Old High German krāwa crow (modern German Krāhe), Old Saxon krāia, and Old Icelandic krāka crow, krāker raven (Danish krage, Norwegian kråke, and Swedish kråka crow). —crowbar n. 1748, in American English; formed from English crow bar of iron used as a lever (before 1400) + bar. —crow's-feet n. (about 1385) —crow's-nest n. 1818, a small lookout near the top of a ship's mast; earlier, the nest of a crow (probably before 1300).

crowd v. About 1380 crowden to push, jostle, crowd; earlier, to press on, hurry (probably about 1225); developed from Old English crūdan to press, drive, hasten (937); cognate with Middle Dutch crūden to press, push, Middle High German krotten to press, oppress, and Norwegian kryda to crowd. —n. 1567, from the verb, and replacing earlier press.

crown n. 1111 coronan royal crown; later crune wreath placed on the head of a victor, diadem, royal crown (probably before 1200), and coroune (1300); borrowed through Anglo-French coroune, from Old North French curune (Old French corone), from Latin corōna wreath, garland, crown, from Greek korōnē anything curved, kind of crown. The two forms crune, coroune existed together in Middle English but only crune, crown survived after the 1500's. —v. Probably before 1200 crunen place a crown on the head; borrowed through Anglo-French corouner, from Old French coroner, from Latin corōnāre, from corōna crown. —crowning adj. 1611, that crowns; later, that makes perfect or complete (1651).

crucial adj. 1706, cross-shaped, as of an incision in the body; borrowing of French crucial (used as a medical term), from Latin crux (genitive crucis) CROSS; for suffix see -AL¹. The sense of decisive, critical, is first recorded in 1830 a translation of instantia crucis crucial instance (1620), crucis referring to the cross-signpost at a fork in a road.

crucible n. Probably before 1425 crusible; borrowed from Medieval Latin crucibulum melting pot for metals, originally a night lamp, possibly Latinization of a Romance word like Old French croisuel. The figurative sense of a severe test or trial, is first recorded about 1645.

crucify v. Before 1325 crucifien, borrowed from Old French crucifier, from Vulgar Latin crucificāre* replacing Late Latin crucifigere, literally, fasten to a cross (crucifigere, dative of Latin crux CROSS + figere fasten); for suffix see -FY.

The figurative sense of to torment is first recorded in English in 1621. —crucifix n. Probably before 1200, borrowed through Old French crucifix, and directly from Late Latin crucifixus, from past participle of crucifigere crucify. —crucifixion n. Before 1410, borrowed from Late Latin crucifixionem (nominative crucifixio), from crucifigere crucify; for suffix see -ION.

crude adj. About 1395, in a raw state, unrefined; borrowed from Latin crūdus rough, RAW. The extended sense of rude, lacking grace or refinement, is first recorded in English in 1650. —crudity n. Probably before 1325 crudite, borrowed through Middle French crudité and directly from Latin crū- ditātem (nominative crūdītās), from crūdus crude; for suffix see -ITY.

cruel adj. Probably before 1200, severe, strict; later pitiless, heartless (about 1300); borrowed from Old French cruel, from Latin crūdēlem unfeeling, cruel, related to crūdus rough, RAW. —cruelty n. Probably before 1200 cruelte; borrowed from Old French cruelté, from Latin crūdēlitātem (nominative crūdēlitās), from crūdēlem cruel; for suffix see -TY².

cruet n. About 1300, a church vessel to hold wine or water; borrowed possibly through Anglo-French cruet, or directly from Old French cruet, diminutive of crue pot, from a Frankish word (compare Middle High German krüche pot, CROCK).

cruise v. 1651, borrowed from Dutch kruisen to cross, sail crossing to and fro, from kruis cross, from Latin crux CROSS. —n. 1706, from the verb. —cruiser n. 1695, ship that cruises, privateer; borrowed from Dutch kruiser, from kruisen to cruise; for suffix see -ER¹. An earlier use croisier, croiser (1679) refers to pirates, perhaps from French croiseur ship and captain, which may have influenced the noun use in English.

cruller n. 1805, American English; borrowed apparently from Dutch kruller, from krullen to curl, from Middle Dutch crullen; see CURL.

crumb n. About 1150 crume a small bit of bread; developed from Old English cruma (about 975); cognate with Middle Dutch crūme crumb (modern Dutch kruim), Middle Low German krōme, Middle High German krume (modern German Krume).

The final b began to appear about 1450, by analogy with Old English words such as dumb. —crumby or crummy adj. 1767 crumby like crumbs; 1579 crummy like crumbs; earlier, easily crumbled (1567); formed from English crum(b) + -y¹. The slang sense of inferior, disagreeable, is first recorded in 1859.

crumble v. 1577, variant (probably influenced by the new spelling crumb) of earlier kremelen (about 1475); developed from Old English crymēlan*, a frequentative form of gescrymman to break into crumbs, from cruma crumb; for suffix see -LE³.

crumpet n. 1694, a thin griddlecake; perhaps developed from crompid cake wafer, literally, curled-up cake (1382), from crompid, past participle of crumpen curl up.

crumple v. Before 1325 crumplen, apparently a frequentative form of crumpen to curl up; developed from Old English (before 800) crump bent, crooked; cognate with Old Icelandic keropna draw together, krappr narrow (-pp- from -mp-); for suffix see -LE³.

crunch v. 1814, alteration of earlier craunch (1631), probably of imitative origin, but perhaps influenced by crush, munch. —n. 1836, from the verb. The sense of a critical point or crisis was popularized by Winston Churchill, whose use of it was first recorded in 1939. —crunchy adj. 1892, formed from English crunch, v. + -y¹.

crusade n. 1706, alteration of earlier croisade (1577), influenced by the stem cruz- of Spanish cruzada. In the 1500's early modern English croisade was borrowed from Middle French croisade, alteration of Old French croisee crusade, also influenced by Spanish cruzada in adapting the suffix -ada to Middle French -ade. Old French croisee from crois cross, derived from Latin crux; Spanish cruzada, literally, a marking with the cross, derived from the feminine past participle of cruzar, from Medieval Latin cruciare, from Latin crux (genitive crucis) CROSS.

The Middle English forms croiserie, creiserie (about 1300) were borrowed from Old French croiserie and were replaced by croisade in the 1500's.

The figurative sense of an aggressive movement or campaign against some public evil, is first recorded in 1786. —v. 1732, from the noun. —crusader n. 1743, formed from English crusade + *-er*¹, and replacing earlier croisader, borrowed from, or imitative of, French croisadeur.

crush v. Before 1349 crowsen; later, cruschen (probably before 1400); borrowed from Old French croissir, cuissir to crash, smash, from a Frankish word (compare Gothic kriustan, Old Swedish krýsta to gnash). —n. 1599, act of crushing; earlier, crusche a crash (before 1338); from the verb.

crust n. Probably before 1325, hard outer part of bread; borrowed through Old French crouste, or directly from Latin crusta rind, crust, shell. The geological sense of the outer portion of the earth, is first recorded in English in 1555. —v. Before 1382, borrowed from Old French crouster, from crouste crust. —crusty adj. Before 1400, formed from English crust, n. + *-y*¹.

crustacean n. 1835, water animals with hard shells, jointed bodies and appendages, from New Latin Crustacea the name of this class of animals, from neuter plural of crustaceus having a hard shell (from Latin crusta shell, CRUST) + English -an. —adj. 1858, from the noun; earlier crustaceous (1646).

crutch n. Probably before 1200 cruche, developed from Old English (about 900) cryc, cognate with Old Saxon krucka crutch, Middle Dutch crucke, Old High German krucka (modern German Krücke), from Proto-Germanic krukjō*. The figurative sense of a prop or support is first recorded in English in 1602. —v. 1642, from the noun.

crux n. 1718, a difficulty, riddle, puzzling question, probably shortened from the Medieval Latin phrase crux interpretum interpreters' cross, torment of interpreters, from Latin crux (genitive crucis) cross. The extended sense of the critical or central point is first recorded in 1888.

cry v. Probably before 1200 crien beg, implore; borrowed from Old French crier, from Vulgar Latin crītāre*, from Latin quiritāre cry out, wail, of uncertain origin.

The meaning of make a noise of grief or pain is first recorded about 1280. In this sense cry has replaced weep in everyday speech. —n. About 1280, borrowed from Old French cri, from Vulgar Latin crītum*, from crītāre* to cry. —crier n. 1221, as a surname Criur; later crior, criour an officer who makes public announcements, town crier (probably about 1350); and crier (before 1387); borrowed from Old French criere, from crier, v. —crybaby n. (1851, American English) cryo- a combining form meaning very cold, freezing, very low temperature, as in cryobiology (study of the effects of freezing on living things). Borrowed from Greek kryo-, combining form of krýos icy cold, related to kryerós chilling.

cryogenic adj. 1902, formed from English cryo- freezing + -genic having to do with production.

crypt n. 1667, borrowed through French crypte, and directly from Latin crypta vault, cavern, from Greek kryptē, feminine of kryptós hidden, from kryptein to hide. —cryptic adj. Before 1638, borrowed from Late Latin crypticus, from Greek kryptikós, from kryptós hidden; for suffix see -ic.

crypto- or crypt- (before vowels) a combining form meaning: 1 hidden, secret, as in cryptogram = secret writing, or cryptology = the study of secret writing. 2 secretly, disguised, not open or acknowledged, as in crypto-fascist = secretly fascist. Borrowed from Greek kryptós secret, hidden; see CRYPT.

cryptography n. 1658, borrowed from French cryptographie (from Greek kryptós hidden + -graphiā writing, -graphy). —cryptogram n. 1880, probably formed from English crypto + -gram.

crystal n. Old English cristal clear ice, transparent mineral (about 1000); borrowed from Old French cristal, learned borrowing from Latin crystallum ice, crystal, from Greek krýstallós ice, rock crystal. Between the 1400's and 1600's the English spelling gradually adopted the Latin form crystal. —adj. Probably about 1380, composed of crystal; from the noun. —crystalline adj. Before 1398 cristalline, borrowed from Old French cristalin like crystal, learned borrowing from Latin crystallinus, from Greek krýstállinos of crystal, from krýstallós. —crystallization n. 1665, formed from English crystallize + -ation. —crystallize v. 1598, formed from English crystal + -ize.

cub n. 1530 cube young fox, of unknown origin, but perhaps cognate with Old Icelandic kobbi seal, -kubbi block, lump; see *COB*¹ and possibly related to Old Irish cuib cup, whelp, cū dog. The native English word for cub is whelp.

cubbyhole n. 1825, of uncertain origin; possibly formed from English cub pen (1546) + *-y*² + hole, and perhaps related to, or influenced by, cuddy small room, cupboard (1793); earlier, small cabin on a boat (1660).

cube n. 1551, borrowed through Middle French cube, or directly from (and replacing) Latin cubeus, from Greek kýbos cube, a hollow above the hips of cattle. The mathematical sense of the third power of a quantity, is first recorded in 1557. —v. 1588, raise to the third power, find the cube of; borrowed from Middle French cuver, from cube, n., and replacing earlier cuicen (before 1500), from earlier cuik, adj. (before 1500). The sense of cut into cubes, is first recorded in 1947. —cubic adj. Before 1500, borrowed from Middle French cuibique, from Latin cuibicus, from Greek kybikós, from kýbos cube; for suffix see -ic. —cubical adj. Before 1500, probably formed from English cubic + *-al*¹. —cubism n. 1911, borrowed from French cuisme (coined in 1908), from French cube cube + -isme -ism.

cubicle n. About 1450, bedroom, borrowed from Latin cubiculum, from cubare to lie down, (originally) bend oneself. The word in its original sense of "bedroom" became obsolete in the 1500's, but it was reintroduced in the 1800's, especially in English public schools, for a small sleeping compartment in a dormitory; from this evolved the current sense (attested since 1926) of any small compartment or partitioned space.

cuckold n. About 1250 kukeweld, apparently borrowed from Old French cucuault cuckold, from cucu CUCKOO + pejorative suffix -ault; supposedly so called either because the female cuckoo changes mates frequently or because she lays her eggs in the nests of other birds. —v. 1589, from the noun.

cuckoo n. Before 1300 cuccu; earlier, as a surname Kuku (1191); borrowed from or influenced by Old French cucu, which is of imitative origin. —adj. 1627, from the noun. The slang sense of crazy, silly, is first recorded in 1918 in American English, from the earlier noun meaning of a foolish or stupid person (1581).

cucumber n. About 1384 cucumer; later cucumber (probably 1440); borrowed from Old French cocombre, coucombre, from Latin cucumerem, accusative of cucumis cucumber.

cud n. Probably about 1200 cude food that cattle and similar animals return to the mouth to rechew; earlier, gum or resin; developed from Old English (about 1000) cudu, earlier cwidu, cwudu cud or tree resin.

cuddle v. About 1520 culde, implied in culdylng in a song but not found again until 1719; apparently a dialectal word of nursery origin. —cuddly adj. 1863, formed from English cuddle + *-y*¹.

cudgel n. Probably before 1200 cuggel, earlier as a surname (1187); developed from Old English cygel (about 897). —v. 1596, beat with a cudgel.

cue¹ n. hint. 1553 q, letter said to have been used to mark the point at which an actor was to enter or begin a speech, and explained as an abbreviation of Latin quando when. In 1565 it was spelled out quew; in the context of speeches in Shakespeare's works it is found both as Q in Richard III and as cue in Hamlet and Midsummer Night's Dream. —v. 1928, from the noun.

cue² n. stick. 1731, pigtail, variant of queue (1592); borrowed from French queue, literally, tail, from Old French; see QUEUE. The sense of a billiard cue is first recorded in 1749.

cuff¹ n. band of the sleeve. Before 1376 coffe mitten, glove; later, cuffe (1410); of uncertain origin. The sense of a band around the sleeve, is first recorded in 1522, and that of turned-up hems on the legs of trousers, about 1911. —cuff links (1897) cuff² v. hit. 1530 cuffe, of uncertain origin; perhaps borrowed from Swedish kuffa to thrust, push. —n. 1570 cuffe a blow with the hand, buffet, apparently from the verb.

cuirass n. 1464, armor for the chest and the back; borrowed from Middle French cuirasse, from Late Latin coriacea vestis garment of leather, from Latin corium leather, hide. The word is traditionally thought to have been borrowed into Middle French from Italian corazza, but that is impossible because of the age of the French word.

cuisine n. 1786, borrowing of French cuisine, literally, kitchen, from Vulgar Latin cocina*, variant of Latin coquina cookery, kitchen, from coquere to COOK.

cul-de-sac n. 1738, vessel closed at one end, borrowing of French cul-de-sac, literally, bottom of the sack (cul bottom, from Latin cūlus bottom and sac sack, from Latin saccus SACK¹). The meaning of a blind alley, especially in its figurative sense, is first recorded in 1800.

culinary adj. 1638, borrowed perhaps through French culinaire (1546), from Latin culinārius, from culina kitchen, of uncertain origin; for suffix see -ARY.

cul v. About 1225 culen choose, select; earlier cullen put through a strainer (probably before 1200); borrowed from Old French cueill-, stem of cuillir, coillir collect, gather, select, from Latin colligere COLLECT. The sense of gather, pluck (flowers, fruits, etc.), is first recorded in 1634. —n. Before 1618; from the verb.

culminate v. 1647, borrowed from Late Latin culminātus, past participle of culmināre to crown, from Latin culmen (genitive culminis) top, related to celsus high; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. Also possibly a back formation of culmination. —culmination n. 1633, probably borrowed from French culmination, from Late Latin culmināre culminate; for suffix see -ATION.

culottes n.pl. 1911, American English, borrowed from French culottes knee breeches, from cul bottom, backside.

culpable adj. Before 1338; earlier coupable (about 1280); borrowing of Old French coupable, culpable, from Latin culpābilis, from culpāre to blame, from culpa fault, crime, blame; for suffix see -ABLE.

culprit n. 1678, used in the formula "Culprit, how will you be tried?" Apparently this word was formed by the accidental running together of two words (a fusion facilitated by the use of abbreviations in legal writing): Anglo-French culpable guilty, abbreviated cul., and prit or prist, variant of Old French prest ready, from Latin praestō ready. The original unabbreviated phrase had been Culpable: prest d'averrer (nostre bille) Guilty: ready to aver (our indictment). The abbreviated form, Cul. prit, was later mistaken for an appellation addressed to the accused, so that by 1700 Dryden used it in the sense of "the accused" and by 1769 it was used (partly by influence of Latin culpa fault, offense) to mean "an offender."

cult n. 1617, worship or homage; later, system of religious worship (1679); borrowed through French culte, learned borrowing from Latin, and directly from Latin cultus (genitive cultūs) cultivation, care, worship, from cult-, stem of colere to till, cultivate, attend to.

cultivate v. 1620–55, formed (probably through influence of French cultiver and Spanish cultivar) from Medieval Latin cultivat-, past participle stem of cultivare, from cultivus under tillage, from Latin cultus, past participle of colere to till; for suffix see -ATE¹. The figurative sense of train, refine, is first recorded in English in 1681–86. —cultivation n. Before 1700, formed from English cultivate + -ion. Though cited as a borrowing from French, no record of cultivation appears in French before 1700.

culture n. Probably 1440, tillage; borrowed from Middle French culture, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin cultura a tending, care, cultivation, from cult-, the past participle stem of colere to till; for suffix see -URE.

The figurative sense of cultivation of the mind or body through education or training, is first recorded about 1510. —cultural adj. 1868, relating to the cultivation of plants, etc.; probably formed from English culture + *-al*¹, possibly by influence of earlier French cultural (1863). The sense relating to culture of the mind, manners, etc., is first recorded in English in 1875.

culvert n. 1773, of uncertain origin. The word is possibly of English dialectal origin. A connection with French couloir passage, corridor, track, from couler to flow, has not been established.

cumber v. About 1300 cumberen, also comberen (1348); borrowed probably from Old French combrer prevent, impede, from combre barrier, especially of a river, from Gallo-Latin comboros* that which is carried together (com- together + -boros, related to the source of Latin ferre to carry), and Old English beran BEAR² carry. Related to ENCUMBER. —cumbersome, cumbrous adj. Both forms: 1375, formed from English cumber + *-some*¹, and + -ous.

cum laude 1893 (but used at Harvard University as early as 1872), American English, borrowed from New Latin or Medieval Latin cum laude, literally with praise (Latin cum with + laude, ablative of laus, genitive laudis praise). The phrase probably came into American usage from the academic Latin of Germany (as at the University of Heidelberg).

cummerbund n. 1616, borrowed from Hindi kamarband, from Persian (kamar waist, loins + band, bandh band, tie).

cumulate v. 1534, borrowed perhaps through Middle French cumuler, or directly from Latin cumulātus, past participle of cumulāre heap up, from cumulus heap; for suffix see -ATE¹. —cumulative adj. 1605, formed in English from Latin cumulātus (past participle of cumulāre to heap) + English -ive. cumulus n. 1659, heap or pile; borrowed from Latin cumulus heap. The meteorological use is first recorded in 1803.

cuneiform adj. 1677, borrowed from French cunéiforme (from Latin cuneus wedge, of unknown source, + French -forme -form). In 1818 the word is first recorded in English as applied to the wedge-shaped characters of the ancient inscriptions of Persia, Assyria, etc., perhaps influenced by the same meaning found in French cunéiforme (1813). —n. 1862, cuneiform character or writing; from the adjective.

cunning adj. Before 1338 konnyng, konnyng skillful, clever, present participle of connen to know, developed from Old English cunnan to know (how); for suffix see -ING².

The pejorative sense of sly, sharp, crafty, developed probably before 1402. The informal sense of attractive, cute, is first recorded in 1844 in American English. —n. Probably about 1300 kunning knowledge; later konnyng cleverness, shrewdness (before 1375); from gerund of connen to know.

cup n. Old English cuppe drinking vessel (about 1000); borrowed from Late Latin cuppa cup, a variant of Latin cūpa tub, cask. The Late Latin word is also the source of Old Frisian kopp cup, head, Middle Low German kopp cup, Middle Dutch coppe (modern Dutch kopje cup, head), Old High German kopf, chupf cup (modern German Kopf head). In the Romance languages, Late Latin cuppa was the source of Italian coppa, Provençal, Spanish, and Portuguese copa, and Old French coupe, all meaning cup. —v. Before 1398, to draw blood by applying a glass cup ("cupping glass") to the skin; from the noun. The sense of form a cup, become cup-shaped, is first recorded in 1830. —cupboard n. (1375) —cupcake n. (1828, American English) —cupful n. (about 1150) cupid or Cupid n. 1380 Cupid, borrowed, perhaps by influence of Old French Cupidon, from Latin Cupīdō, personification of cupīdō desire or love, from cupere to desire or long for, COVET.

The sense of a sculptured figure or representation of Cupid is first recorded in 1611. —cupidity n. 1436 cupidite, borrowed from Middle French cupidité, learned borrowing from Latin cupīditatem (nominative cupīditās) passionate desire, from cupīdus desirous, from cupere to desire; for suffix see -ITY.

cupola n. 1549, borrowing of Italian cupola, + from Late Latin cūpula little cask, small vault, diminutive of Latin cūpa cask, barrel.

cupreous adj. 1666, borrowed from Late Latin cupreus, from cuprum, alteration of Latin cyprum COPPER; for suffix see -OUS. —cupric adj. 1799, formed from English cupr(eous) + -ic, or from Late Latin cuprum copper + English -ic.

cur n. Probably before 1200, both curre vicious dog, cowardly dog, and cur-dogge the Devil (in later Middle English use, both terms could mean either a bad dog or a good dog); perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare dialectal Swedish kurre house dog, related to Old Icelandic kurra to grumble); cognate with Middle Dutch corre house dog, literally, grumbling animal, and Middle High German kurren to growl, grunt, probably ultimately of imitative origin.

The figurative sense of contemptible person, is first recorded in 1590.

curate n. Probably 1382, spiritual guide, one who cures; borrowed from Medieval Latin curatus person having the cure of souls, from cura cure (of souls), from Latin cūra care. The meaning of a clergyman who assists a pastor was first recorded in 1557.

curator n. Probably about 1375 curature person having the care of souls; borrowed from Anglo-French curatour, Old French curateur, learned borrowing from Latin cūrātorēm (nominative cūrātor) overseer, guardian, from cūrāre care for, from cūra care; for suffix see -OR².

The general meaning of a manager (borrowed directly from Latin cūrator) is first recorded in English in 1632, later, the specialized sense of a person in charge of a museum, library, etc., is found in 1661.

curb n. a fusion of two related words: 1) 1477 corbe strap used to restrain a horse, from earlier verb courben to bow down, make stop (about 1378); borrowed from Old French corber, courber, from Latin curvāre, from curvus curved. The figurative sense of a check or restraint is first recorded in 1613, probably from the verb. 2) 1511 corbe curved border, as of a well; earlier curb a curved piece of timber (1324); borrowed from Old French corbe, courbe curved object, curve, from corp, corbe, adj., curved, from Latin curvus curved. The extended sense of a border, as of a sidewalk, is implied in curbstone (1791). —v. 1530, put a curb on a horse; from the noun (corbe strap). The figurative sense of to check, restrain, is first recorded in 1588.

curd n. Before 1500 curd, alteration (by metathesis of u and r) of earlier crud (before 1376); probably related to Old English crūdan to press, drive. —v. 1471 curden make into curd, curdle, alteration of earlier crudden (before 1382); from crud, n., curd. —curdle v. 1627–47, alteration of earlier crudle (1590); frequentative form of crud curd; for suffix see -LE³.

cure n. Probably before 1300 coure, and cure, care, heed, charge; borrowed through Old French cure, or directly from Latin cūra care, concern, attention, management, from Old Latin coīrā-. The sense of medical care or treatment, healing, restoration to health, is first recorded in English about 1380. —v. About 1378 curen take care of; later, to restore to health, heal (about 1384); borrowed from Old French curer, from Latin cūrāre take care, care for, attend, manage, from cūra care. —curable adj. Before 1398, borrowed through Old French curable, or directly from Latin cūrābilis, from cūrāre take care; for suffix see -ABLE. —cure-all n. (1821, in American English) —curative adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Old French curatif, curative, from Latin cūrāt-, past participle stem of cūrāre.

curette or curet n. 1753, borrowing of French curette (curer to cleanse, heal, CURE + -ette -ette). —curettage n. scraping or cleaning by means of a curette. 1897, borrowing of French curettage (curette curette + -age -age).

curfew n. About 1330 corfu the ringing of a bell at a fixed hour in the evening (originally, as a signal to cover or put out fires); borrowed through Anglo-French coeverfu, Old French covefeuf, literally, cover fire (covrir to COVER + feu fire, from Latin focus hearth).

The practice of ringing a bell at a fixed hour in the evening continued long after the original purpose of putting out fires and lights became obsolete. In time the signal was used to regulate the movements of inhabitants after dark, especially in periods of political disorder and war. By the 1800's the word meant an official regulation to keep off the streets at fixed hours.

curie n. 1910, unit for measuring the intensity of radioactivity; named for Pierre Curie who, with his wife Marie, discovered the element radium.

curio n. 1851, American English, informally shortened form of curiosity.

curious adj. About 1340 curiose eager to know, inquisitive; borrowed from Old French curios, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin cūriōsus full of care, taking pains, curious, from cūra care; for suffix see -OUS. The sense of exciting curiosity, singular, odd, queer, is first recorded in 1715. —curiosity n. Probably about 1378 curiosite inquisitiveness; borrowed from Old French curiosité, learned borrowing from Latin cūriōsitätē (nominative cūriōsītās), from cūriōsus curious; for suffix see -ITY. The meaning of an object of interest is first recorded in English about 1645.

curium n. 1946, New Latin, formed after Pierre Curie and his wife Marie, discoverers of radium, + -ium.

curl v. 1440 curlen, alteration (by metathesis of u or o and r) of earlier crollen (about 1380), from crolle, crul, adj., curly (probably before 1300), and earlier Cnrl (1191, as surname); probably developed from an unrecorded Old English word. Early Middle English forms are cognate with Frisian krull, krulle lock of hair, curl, Middle Dutch crulle curl, Middle High German krol, krolle, Norwegian krull, and Danish krølle, all meaning curl. —n. 1602, from the verb. —curler n. 1748 (hair); 1638 (game). —curling n. 1440, action of curling the hair. —curly adj. 1772–84, formed from English curl, n. + -y¹.

curlew n. About 1340 curlu a quail; later, corlue a wading bird (about 1378); borrowed from Old French corlieu, corlue, perhaps in the meaning runner, messenger (from corre to run), since this bird is a good runner.

curlicue n. 1843 curlycue, formed in American English from curly + *cue*², as corresponding to French queue + tail; possibly also influenced by the name and form of the letter Q.

curmudgeon n. 1577 curmudgen, of unknown origin. It has been suggested that the first syllable is the word cur dog; the ending is similar to those of bludgeon and dudgeon, also of unknown origin. Another suggestion is to associate -mudgeon with Middle English margin (later mudgeon) dirt, refuse, dregs, but there is no known evidence for this connection.

currant n. 1540 currante, shortened from earlier Raysyn of Curans raisin of Corinth (1391), the -s ending probably mistaken for the plural inflection. The Middle English was borrowed through Anglo-French raisin de Corauntz raisin of Corinth, from Old French Corinthe, from Latin Corinthus, from Greek Kórinthos; so called because currants were produced chiefly in Greece and probably exported from Corinth.

currency n. 1657, a flow or course; probably developed from obsolete currence, modeled on Medieval Latin currentia* a current of a stream, from Latin currentem, present participle of currere to run; for suffix see -ENCY; or from current, on the pattern of decent, decency. The sense of circulation of money is first recorded in 1699, suggested by earlier meaning of in circulation as a medium of exchange (1481).

current adj. Probably before 1300 curraunt running, flowing; borrowed from Old French corant, curant running, present participle of corre, curre to run, from Latin currere to run; for suffix see -ENT. The sense of in general circulation, prevalent, is first recorded in 1563, and that of occurring in the present, in 1608. —n. Before 1425, borrowed from Middle French corant, curant, from Old French corant, curant, present participle of corre, curre to run.

curriculum n. 1824, borrowing of New Latin (1633), from Latin curriculum a running, course, career, from curre to run. —curricular adj. 1798, pertaining to driving carriages; formed from Latin curriculum (race) course + English -ar. The sense pertaining to a school's curriculum, is first recorded about 1909.

curry¹ v. rub. About 1300 coureyen, borrowed probably through Anglo-French curreier, curreier, from Old French correier, originally conreier put in order, prepare, curry a horse (con-intensive + reier arrange, make ready, from rei order, preparation, from Germanic; compare Old English ræde READY). —curry favor About 1510, alteration by folk etymology of earlier curry favel (probably about 1400), apparently borrowed from Old French correier favel to be false, be hypocritical (about 1310); literally, to curry the fallow-colored horse (in medieval allegories a symbol of cunning or deceit). Middle English favel, fauvel (before 1338) was borrowed from Old French fauvel, of Germanic origin (ultimately from the same source as English fallow), but was confused with favel flattery or guile; borrowed from Old French favele lying, deception, from Latin fābella diminutive of fābula FABLE. —currycomb n. (1678, in American English) curry² n. sauce. 1681, borrowed from Tamil kari sauce, relish for rice. An earlier form carriel (1598) came through Portuguese caril from Kannada (a Dravidian language of India) karil. —v. 1839, from the noun. —curry powder (1810) curse n. Late Old English (before 1050) curs a prayer or wish that evil or harm befall one, of uncertain origin; possibly a borrowing from Latin cursus COURSE in the medieval church sense of the set of daily liturgical prayers, applied to "the set of imprecations," especially in the grete curse, a formula read in churches four times a year setting forth the offenses which entailed excommunication. —v. Probably before 1160 cursen; developed from late Old English (about 1050) cursian to utter a curse or curses, blasphemy; apparently from the noun. —cursed adj. Probably before 1200, condemned; later, "damned" as an expression (about 1386) or deserving a curse (before 1300).

cursive adj. 1784, borrowed from French cursif, cursive, from Medieval Latin cursivus, from Latin cursus (genitive cursūs) a running, from past participle of curre to run; for suffix see -IVE.

cursor n. movable indicator on the display screen of an electronic computer, typesetter, etc. (1972), extended sense of a sliding part of any instrument (such as a slide rule or, later, a filter on a radar screen) that facilitates computing or sighting (1594), a use probably influenced by Middle French curseur (1562); earlier, a runner or messenger (1305); borrowed from Latin cursor runner, see CURSORY; for suffix see -OR².

cursor adj. 1601, probably borrowed from Middle French cursoire rapid (used of boats, winds, rumors), from Late Latin cursorius of a race or running, from Latin cursor runner, from cursum, past participle of curre to run; for suffix see -ORY.

curt adj. 1425; earlier, Courteuse (1366, in a surname); borrowed through Old French court, cort, or directly from Latin curtus (cut) short, shortened; cognate with Old English sc(e)ort SHORT, from Proto-Germanic skurtās*, and scieran to cut, SHEAR. The meaning of concise, brief, condensed, terse, is first recorded in 1630, and the extended sense of so brief as to be impolite or rude (1831).

curtail v. Probably about 1471 curtaylen to restrict, limit, apparently an alteration (influenced by taylen to cut, from Old French tailler; see TAILOR) of Middle French courtault made short (court short, from Latin curtus CURT + -ault, pejorative suffix of Germanic origin). The meaning of shortened by cutting off a part appeared in 1553, followed by the sense of diminish, lessen, in 1589.

curtain n. About 1303 curteyn piece of hanging cloth (enclosing a bed); borrowed from Old French curtine, cortine, from Late Latin cōrtina a curtain, from Latin cōrtem, earlier cohortem enclosure, courtyard, COURT. Late Latin cōrtina was a loan translation in the Vulgate, perhaps misapplied to render Greek aulāi curtain (from aulē court, courtyard), used in the Septuagint (Exodus 26:1, etc.). —v. Probably before 1300 curtynen surround or cover with a curtain; from the noun.

curtsy n. 1546, expression of respect by action or gesture, variant of COURTESY. The specific reference to a bow made by bending the knees is first recorded in 1575. —v. Before 1553, make a curtsy, show courtesy to; from the noun.

curve v. Probably before 1425 curved, past participle form of unrecorded verb, from curve, adj., bent (also probably before 1425); borrowed from Latin curvus curved, crooked, bent. The unrecorded Middle English verb was probably also borrowed from Latin curvare to bend, from curvus curved. —n. 1696, probably from the earlier adjective curve bent, curved. —curvaceous adj. 1936, American English, formed from curve, n. + -aceous (adjective suffix chiefly used in botany, from Latin -āceus, but here used facetiously). —curvature n. Probably before 1425, perhaps later reinforced by Middle French curvature, both the Middle English and Middle French from Latin curvātūra bending, from curvātus, past participle of curvare to curve; for suffix see -URE.

cushion n. 1302–03 quissin; later, quyschen (before 1350) and cushoon (1397); borrowed from Old French coissin, coussin seat cushion, probably variants from Vulgar Latin coxīnum*, from Latin coxa hip, thigh. —v. 1735–38, from the noun.

cushy adj. 1915, easy, comfortable, Anglo-Indian, formed from Hindi khūsh pleasant, healthy, happy (from Persian khūsh) + English -*y*¹.

cusp n. 1585, entrance to an astrological house or division of the heavens; later, peak, apex or pointed ornament; borrowed from Latin cusps a point, spear, pointed end of anything.

cuspid n. 1743, geometrical point; borrowed from Latin cuspidem (nominative cuspidis) point. The sense of a tooth with a point, canine tooth, is first recorded in English in 1878.

cuspidor n. spittoon. 1871 cuspador, American English, borrowing of Portuguese cuspidor spittoon, from cuspir to spit, from Latin cōspuere spit on (con- intensive + spuere to spit; see SPEW).

cuss n. 1775, American English, troublesome person or animal, an alteration of curse, but often used without consciousness of the origin; in some dialects the alteration may represent a regular phonetic development, as ass from arse. The literal sense of a curse has been recorded since 1843. —v. to curse. 1815, American English, alteration of curse. —cussed adj. 1840, American English, alteration of cursed.

custard n. About 1353 custadis, pl.; later crustarde meat or fruit pie (1399); borrowed probably from Old Provençal croustado, from crosta crust, from Latin crusta CRUST. The spelling custard appeared about 1450, and the sense of a baked or boiled pudding (about 1600).

custody n. Before 1449 custodye, borrowed from Latin custodia guarding or keeping, from custōs (genitive custōdis) guardian, keeper; for suffix see -Y³. —custodial adj. 1772, formed from Latin custodia + English -al¹. —custodian n. 1781, formed from English custody + -an, replacing custode custodian of a friary (about 1400); borrowed through Old French custode from Latin custōdem, accusative of custōs.

custom n. Probably before 1200 custume, borrowed from Old French costume, custume, from Vulgar Latin cōnsuētūmen*, corresponding to Latin cōnsuētūdinem, accusative of cōnsuētūdo habit or usage, from cōnsuētus, past participle of cōnsuēscere accustom (con- intensive + suēscere become used to, accustom oneself, related to suī of oneself). Customs taxes on imports was originally a tax levied on goods on their way to the market (about 1390). The singular, costome an exaction of a tax or tribute (about 1330) gradually replaced the Old English term toll. —customary adj. 1523, held by custom rather than law; borrowed through Anglo-Latin customarius subject to tax, from custuma, from Anglo-French custume CUSTOM; for suffix see -ARY. The general sense of usual or habitual, is first recorded in 1607. —customer n. Before 1399, customs official; formed from custom + -er¹. The meaning of a buyer appears in 1409 and the sense of a fellow or chap (usually with some pejorative qualifier, such as tough, ugly, strange) in 1589.

cut v. Probably before 1300 either as cutten, or kitten; of uncertain origin (possibly borrowed from a Scandinavian source; compare Swedish dialect kuta, kata to cut, kuta knife, and Icelandic kuti knife). —n. 1530, gash, wound; from the verb. The sense of a stroke or blow with a knife, sword, etc., is first recorded in 1601. —cutoff n. (1647) —cutout n. (1851) —cutter n. (1177) —cutthroat n. (1535); adj. (1567) cutaneous adj. 1578, borrowed from New Latin cutaneus, from Latin cutis skin, HIDE²; for suffix see -OUS.

cute adj. 1731, acute, clever, shortened from ACUTE. The informal sense of attractive, pleasing, is first recorded in 1834, in American English students' slang.

cuticle n. 1615, borrowed from Latin cuticula, diminutive of cutis skin. The specific sense of skin at the base of a nail, is first recorded in 1907. Earlier cuticles (before 1475) probably refers to membranes of the intestines.

cutlass or cutlas n. 1594 coutelace, borrowed from Middle French coutelas, probably from Italian coltellaccio large knife, from coltello knife, from Latin cultellus small knife, diminutive of culter knife, plowshare.

cutler n. Before 1400 coteler, earlier, in an Anglo-French surname Cuteler (1207); borrowed from Old French coutelier, from coutel knife, from Latin cultellus, see CUTLASS; for suffix see -ER¹. —cutlery n. 1340 cotellerie, borrowed from Old French coutellerie cutting utensils, from coutel knife; for suffix see -ERY.

cutlet n. 1706, borrowed from French côtelette, from Old French costelette cutlet, little rib; diminutive with -ette of original diminutive costele with -el, diminutive of coste rib, side, from Latin costa; see COAST. The English spelling has been influenced by cut and the diminutive form -let, as if cutlet = a small cut (of meat).

cuttlefish or cuttle n. Probably before 1425 cutyl, variant of codel (before 1425); developed from Old English (about 1000) cudele the cuttlefish. In form the Old English is sometimes associated with Middle Low German küdel container, pocket, Old High German kiot bag, pocket, Old Icelandic koddi cushion, testicle, and with Old English codd.

-cy a suffix forming abstract nouns and meaning: 1 office, position, or rank, as in chaplaincy = office or position of a chaplain; 2 quality, condition, or fact of being, as in delicacy = quality of being delicate, bankruptcy = condition of being bankrupt. Borrowed from Latin -cia, -tia (often through French -cie, -tie), from the stem endings -c- or -t- and the suffix -ia, equivalent to English -y³; or from Greek -klā, -keia, -tlā, -teia, from the stem endings -k- or -t- and the suffix -lā, -cia, equivalent to English -y³. The suffix occurs in English chiefly in the forms -acy, -ancy, and -ency.

cyanide n. 1826, formed from English cyan-, cyano- combining forms for carbon and nitrogen compounds (from Greek kýanos dark-blue enamel, lapis lazuli) + -ide; so called because the compound radical (cyanogen) enters into the composition of a dark-blue pigment.

cybernetics n. 1948, American English, formed from Greek kybernētēs steersman, pilot (from kybernán to steer) + English -ics; coined by Norbert Wiener, American mathematician. —cybernetic adj. 1951, back formation from cybernetics. —cybernation n. 1962, formed as a blend of English cybernetics + (autom)ation.

cycle n. Before 1387 cicle recurrent period of time; borrowed through Old French cycle, or directly from Late Latin cyclus, from Greek kýklos circle, ring, WHEEL. —v. 1842, revolve in cycles, from the noun. The meaning of ride a bicycle is first recorded in 1883. —cyclic adj. 1794, borrowed through French cyclique, or directly from Latin cyclicus, from Greek kyklíkōs, from kýklos circle; for suffix see -IC. —cyclist n. 1882, one who rides a bicycle; formed from English cycle, v. + -ist.

cyclo-, before vowels cycl-, a combining form meaning: 1 circle, ring, used especially with reference to rotation, as in cyclometer = instrument that measures arc of a circle or rotation of a wheel. 2 cycle, alternation, as in cyclothymia = alternation of liveliness and depression. 3 in chemistry, arrangement of atoms in a ring, cyclic, as in cyclohexane = form of hexane considered as a ring of six bivalent radicals. Borrowed from Greek kyklo-, combining form of kýklos ring, circle.

cyclone n. 1848, borrowed from Greek kyklōn moving in a circle, whirling around, present participle of kykloōn move in a circle, whirl, from kýklos circle; so called because the cyclone's winds move in a circular course. —cyclonic adj. 1860, formed from English cyclone + -ic.

cyclopedia n. 1636 cyclopaedia, shortened form of encyclopaedia ENCYCLOPEDIA; later, book on all branches of one subject (1728). —cyclopedic adj. Before 1843, formed from English cyclopedia + -ic.

cyclorama n. 1840, formed from English cyclo- circle, ring + (pan)orama; probably influenced by the earlier diorama.

cyclotron n. Before 1935, American English, formed from cyclo- + -tron, as if from Greek kýklōtron*, from kykloōn to whirl, from the path of the accelerated particles.

cygnet n. 1400 cignet, borrowed from Anglo-French diminutive of Old French cisne, cigne swan, from Latin cygnus, variant of cynus, from Greek kýknos; for suffix see -ET. The spelling signet prevailed in English until the 1600's, when it was replaced by cygnet, after French and Latin forms.

cylinder n. 1570, borrowed probably through Middle French cylindre, from Latin cylindrus roller, cylinder, from Greek kýlindros a cylinder, roller, roll, from kylindein to roll. —cylindrical adj. 1646, formed in English from French cylindrique + English -al; for suffix see also -ICAL.

cymbal n. About 1340, partly developed from Old English cimbal (about 825); and partly borrowed from Old French cymbale. Both the Old English and Old French derived from Latin cymbalum, from Greek kýmbalon a cymbal, from kýmbe bowl, drinking cup.

cyme n. 1725 cime sprout of a plant, such as cabbage; borrowed from French cime shoot or sprout of cabbage, and directly from Latin cýma a sprout, from Greek kýma young sprout, anything swollen, from kyetn become pregnant.

cynic n. 1547–64, one of a group of ancient Greek philosophers who sneered at wealth and personal comfort; borrowed through Middle French cynique, or directly from Latin Cynicus, from Greek Kynikós, literally, doglike, from kýōn (genitive kynós) dog. The sense of a sneering, sarcastic person is first recorded in English in 1596, but was already implicit in the name of the philosophical sect associated with its principles of asceticism. —cynical adj. 1588, formed from English cynic + -al. —cynicism n. 1672, formed from English cynic + -ism.

cynosure n. 1601, center of attraction or attention; earlier, guiding star (1596); borrowed from Middle French cynosure, from Latin Cynosūra Ursa Minor, a constellation containing the North Star, formerly used as a guide by sailors, from Greek kynósoura, literally, dog's tail (kýōn, genitive kynós dog; ourá tail).

cypress n. About 1175, borrowed from Old French cipres, learned borrowing from Latin cyparissus, from Greek kypárisos, which was apparently a borrowing, like earlier Latin cupressus cypress, from a language of the Mediterranean region.

cyst n. 1713, saclike growth, shortened form of New Latin cystis (the form cited in English from 1543 to 1758), from Greek kýstis bladder, pouch. —cystic adj. 1634, borrowed from French cystique, from New Latin cysticus, from cystis cyst; for suffix see -IC.

cyt- the form of cyto- before vowels, as in cytaster (star-shaped structure of a cell).

-cyte a combining form meaning cell of an organism, as in leucocyte (white blood cell). Borrowed from Greek kýtos a hollow space or container.

cyto- a combining form meaning cell or cells of organisms, as in cytology = study of cells and cytoplasm = protoplasm of a cell. Borrowed from Greek kyto-, combining form of kýtos a hollow space or container.

cytology n. 1889, possibly borrowed from French cytologie (cyto- cell + -logie -logy). —cytologist n. (1895) cytosine n. 1894, formed in English from cyto- cell + (rib)ose ribose (a sugar), + -ine².

czar n. 1555, borrowed through earlier Polish czar, from Russian tsar', from Old Slavic tsěsar', from Gothic kaisar, from Greek Kaisar, from Latin Caesar.

The transferred sense of a person with dictatorial power, such as a baseball czar, is first recorded in 1866 in American English, when the word was applied to President Andrew Johnson. —czarina n. 1717, borrowed from Italian czarina, from German Zarin (earlier Czarín), feminine of Zar, from Russian tsar'. The feminine form in Russian is tsaritsa. —czarist adj. (1954) dab n. Probably before 1300, heavy blow with a weapon. —v. Before 1307, deliver a heavy blow with a weapon. Both noun and verb are of uncertain origin. The meaning of strike lightly appeared 1532, and that of pat with something soft or moist, in 1562.

D

dabble v. 1557, wet by splashing; probably a frequentative form of DAB. Middle English dable in the surname Dablewife (1336) is of uncertain meaning, perhaps meddler, dabbler. The modern sense of do superficially is first recorded in 1625. —dabbler n. 1611, formed from English dabble, v. + *-er*¹.

dachshund n. About 1881, borrowing of German Dachshund (Dachs badger + Hund hound); perhaps so called for its use in hunting badgers.

dactyl n. metrical foot of three syllables. Before 1382, borrowed from Latin dactylus, from Greek dáktylos finger, dactyl, of unknown origin; so called from its three parts, suggesting the three joints of the finger.

dad or daddy n. Before 1529 dadye and 1553 dad, of uncertain origin, but probably from children's speech. —daddy-longlegs n. (before 1814).

Dada n. 1920, borrowed from French dada hobbyhorse (a child's word), from the title of a literary periodical, être sur son dada to be on (that is, ride) one's hobbyhorse, founded in Zürich in 1916 by Tristan Tzara, a Rumanian poet, and Jean Arp, a French artist and poet.

dado n. 1664, borrowing of Italian dado cube or pedestal. The meaning of a wood rail or paneling on the lower part of the walls of a room, is first recorded in 1787.

daffodil n. 1548, variant of (obsolete) affodill (before 1400); borrowing of Medieval Latin affodillus, from Latin asphodelus, from Greek asphódēlos, of unknown origin. The initial d has not been explained.

daffy adj. 1884, perhaps formed from DAFT, or from daff, daffe a halfwit, simpleton (about 1330, earlier as a surname Daf, 1253; of unknown origin) + *-y*¹.

daft adj. Probably about 1200 daffte mild, gentle, meek, developed from Old English (about 1000) gedæfte gentle, becoming, from Proto-Germanic gadafijaz*.

About 1300 the meaning of dull appeared, perhaps because a person who is mild or gentle might be taken as dull or stupid, a development that parallels SILLY. The later sense of foolish, silly (1440), probably developed from analogy with daffe, n. a halfwit and daffish, adj. dull-witted.

dagger n. Before 1375 dagare, apparently altered form of Old French dague dagger, from Old Provençal dague or Italian daga, of uncertain origin.

daguerreotype n. 1839, borrowing of French daguerreotype, from the name of Louis Daguerre, its inventor + French type type.

dahlia n. 1804, New Latin, named (in 1791) after Anders Dahl, a Swedish botanist, who found the plant in Mexico in 1788.

daily adj. 1421 daly, also dayly (1423), and daily (1447), found in Old English dæglic (in compounds, such as twādæglic once in two days); cognate with Old High German tagalīh (modern German täglich) and Old Icelandic dagligr; for suffix see *-LY*².

dainty adj. About 1300 deinte delightful, pleasing, developed from a noun meaning esteem, affection (before 1250), and found as a surname Deintie (1199); borrowed from Old French daintie, daintié price, value, delicacy, pleasure, from Latin dignitatem (nominative dignitas) worthiness, worth, beauty, from dignus worthy. The noun sense of a choice bit of food, a delicacy, is first recorded about 1300.

dairy n. About 1300 deierie, formed with Anglo-French -erie -ery from deie, daie maid, dairymaid, corresponding to Old English dæge kneader of bread, which is cognate with Old Icelandic deigja housekeeper, female servant from Proto-Germanic daijō*.

dais n. Probably before 1300 deys, and deis (about 1300); borrowed from Anglo-French deis, in Old French dais table, platform, canopy, from Latin discus disk-shaped object, discus, from Greek dískos quoit, dish, disk. The word died out in English about 1600, but was revived after 1800.

daisy n. Before 1300 daiseie; earlier, as surname Dayeseye (1281); developed from Old English dægesege (about 1000), and dægesege ēage day's eye, in allusion to closing of the petals in the evening.

dale n. Probably before 1200 dale, developed from Old English dæl (before 899). Old English dæl (from Proto-Germanic dalan*) is cognate with Old Saxon, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch dal valley, Old High German tal (modern German Tal), Old Icelandic dall, Gothic dal valley.

dally v. Probably before 1300 daylen to talk, converse; later, to chat, converse idly (probably about 1390); possibly borrowed from Anglo-French daliere to amuse oneself, of uncertain origin. The meaning of act in a frivolous manner, is first recorded about 1440. — dalliance n. Before 1349, formed from English dally + -ance.

dam¹ n. wall to hold back water. Probably before 1400; earlier, body of water (about 1340, and as a surname Dam, 1230), cognate with Old Frisian damm dam, Middle High German tam, tamm (modern German Damm), Old Icelandic damm, from Proto-Germanic dammaz*. — v. Probably before 1475 dammen to stop up or block, from the noun.

dam² n. female parent of animals. Before 1325 dame; earlier dam mother, mother superior (probably before 1200), see DAME. Originally dam was used in all the senses of dame (i.e. lady, female ruler, housewife, schoolmistress, mother), but in the 1500's the sense of mother was differentiated to dam.

damage n. Probably before 1300, borrowed from Old French damage loss caused by injury (dam damage, from Latin damnum loss, hurt, damage + -age -age); see DAMN. — v. About 1330, borrowed from Old French damagier, from Old French damage, n.

damask n. 1378, silk woven with an elaborate pattern; earlier, name for Damascus (about 1250); borrowed from Medieval Latin damascus, from Latin Damascus the ancient city and capital of Syria, famous for its steel and silk fabrics, from Greek Damaskós Damascus.

dame n. Probably before 1200, mother superior; about 1200, lady or female ruler; later, housewife (before 1338); borrowed from Old French dame, from Late Latin domna, Latin domina lady, mistress of the house, from domus house; compare MADAM. In Old French dame the a developed from o in Latin domina when the word was unaccented before the next word. The slang sense of woman is attested in American English since 1902.

damn v. About 1280 dampnen to condemn; borrowed from Old French damner, from Latin damnāre, from damnum damage, loss, hurt. Latin damnum is related to daps sacrificial meal, possibly from an ancient religious term. — n. 1619, from the verb. — adj. 1775, shortened from damned (probably before 1405); earlier, dampned (about 1378) from the past participle of damn, v. — damnable adj. Before 1333 dampnable deserving punishment; borrowed from Old French damnable, from Latin damnābilis, from damnāre; for suffix see -ABLE. — damnation n. Before 1300 dampnacioun consignment to hell; borrowed from Old French dampnation, from Latin damnātiōnem (nominative damnātiō), from damnāre; for suffix see -TION.

damp n. 1316, noxious vapor; possibly found in Old English damp*; cognate with Middle Dutch or Middle Low German damp vapor and with Old High German damp vapor, steam (modern German Dampf), Middle High German dimpfen to steam, smoke, and Old Icelandic dumba dust, dimma darkness, dimmr dark; see DIM. Old High German damp derives from Proto-Germanic dampaz*. The meaning of dampness, humidity, moisture, is not recorded in English until 1706, with a single possible, but ambiguous use, in 1586. — v. 1380, to suffocate; from the noun. The meaning of moisten is first recorded in English in 1671, though a sense of deaden, depress, "wet down" spirits or zeal is recorded in 1548. — adj. 1590, dazed or stupefied; from the noun. The meaning of moist or slightly wet is first recorded in 1706. — dampen v. (1380) surviving Middle English form of damp, v. — dampener n. 1887, formed from English dampen + *-er*¹.

damsel n. Probably about 1225, borrowed from Old French dameisele, from Gallo-Romance domnicella*, diminutive of Latin domina lady, mistress of the house; see DAME.

damson n. Before 1475 damson, developed from earlier dam-esene plum tree (about 1390); borrowed from Latin prunum damascēnum plum of Damascus, from Greek Damaskēnōn, neuter of Damaskēnós of Damascus, from Damaskós Damascus.

dance v. Probably before 1300 dauncer, borrowed from Old French dancier, of uncertain origin. — n. Probably before 1300 daunce, borrowed from Old French daunce, from dancier to dance. — dancer n. 1440 dauncere; earlier as a surname Dancere (1130); borrowed from Old French dauncier*, or formed from Middle English dauncen + *-er*¹.

dandelion n. Probably about 1425 dandelyon; developed from earlier dent-de-lyon (1373) and Daundelyon (1363, as a surname); borrowed from Middle French dent de lion, literally, lion's tooth (from its toothed leaves), a translation of Medieval Latin dens leonis (Latin dēns tooth + leōnis, genitive of leō lion).

dander n. 1832, possibly a figurative use of dander, variant of dunder dregs of cane juice used to ferment rum; borrowed from Spanish redunder to overflow.

dandle v. 1530 dandyll, move up and down playfully, of uncertain origin; compare Italian dandolare, variant of dondolare to rock, swing, dangle.

dandruff n. 1545; the origin of the first element, dand-, is unknown; the second element probably came from Northumbrian or East Anglian dialect huff, hurf scab, from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic hrūfa scab, hrjūfi scabby, leprosy). The word is cognate with Old English hrēof rough, scabby, leprosy, Old High German hruf scab, riob leprosy from Proto-Germanic Hreufaz/Hrufaz*.

dandy n. About 1780, fop, fashionable person, of uncertain origin; possibly shortened from Jack O'Dandy, with the same meaning (1632). The usage originated in Scotland, where Dandy is a diminutive of the name Andrew. — adj. 1792, fine, superior, in American English; probably from the noun.

danger n. Before 1250 daunger arrogance, insolence, later dagere (before 1338); borrowed through Anglo-French daunger, from Old French dangier power to harm, mastery, alteration (influenced by dam damage; see DAMAGE) of dongier, from Vulgar Latin domniārium* or dominiārium* power, from Latin dominium sovereignty; see DOMINION. The meaning of something that causes harm, a risk or peril, appeared about 1378; — dangerous adj. Before 1200 dangerus difficult to deal with, haughty or aloof; borrowed through Anglo-French dangerous, from Old French dangeros, dangerous, from danger; for suffix see -OUS.

dangle v. About 1590, probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Norwegian and Danish dingle, Swedish and Icelandic dingla, hang loosely).

Danish adj. Before 1387 Danysche, formed from Danes, pl., people of Denmark (before 1338) + -ische -ish¹; borrowed from Old Icelandic Danir, also in Late Latin Danī. Middle English also had earlier Densce (probably before 1200) and Denescæ (1070), Old English Denisc. The phrase Danish pastry is first recorded 1934 and the clipped form Danish in 1963.

dank adj. Probably before 1400, borrowed probably from a Scandinavian source (compare Swedish dank marshy spot, related to Old Icelandic dǫkk pool).

dapper adj. About 1440 dapyr elegant; borrowed from Middle Dutch dapper agile, strong, sturdy; cognate with Middle Low German dapper heavy, stout, Old High German tapfar heavy, Middle High German tapfer, dapper firm, full, weighty, bold (modern German tapfer brave), Old Icelandic dapr sad, dreary, from Proto-Germanic dapraz*.

dapple adj. 1551, marked with round spots. —n. 1580. —v. 1599, both noun and verb apparently from the participial adjective dappled (about 1400) and dapple, adj. (1551); of uncertain origin.

dare v. Old English (about 950) darr, dear, originally the 1st and 3rd person singular present indicative of duran to dare; the form dearst 2nd person singular is recorded about 725. Old English duran is cognate with Old High German gitaran to dare, Gothic gaders I dare, from Proto-Germanic ders-/dars-/durs-*. —n. 1594, from the verb. —daredevil n. (1794); adj. (1832). —daring n. About 1385, from the verb.

dark adj. Probably about 1200 dork; later derk (about 1280); developed from Old English deorc (about 725, in Beowulf), from Proto-Germanic derkaz*; cognate with Old High German tarchannen to hide something (in a dark place). —n. About 1225 from the verb. —Dark Ages (1876; earlier dark ages, 1748). —darken v. About 1300, found in Old English deorcan.

darling n. Probably about 1150 derling; later darlyng (before 1450); developed from Old English dēorling (before 899), formed from dēor, dēore DEAR + -ling, noun suffix. —adj. 1509, from the noun.

darn¹ v. mend. About 1600, borrowed from Middle French dialect darnier mend, from darne piece, from Breton darn, related to Welsh darn piece, fragment, part. It is possible that some connection exists between darn and dern to conceal, hide. —n. 1720, from the verb.

darn² v. curse. 1781, American English, euphemism for damn; probably influenced by tarnal (shortened variant of eternal). —darned adj. 1815, confounded (used as an expletive, 1808); adv. 1806, extremely.

dart n. Probably before 1300, borrowed from Old French dart, from a Germanic source (compare Old English daroth dart, from Proto-Germanic darōthuz*, Old High German tart dart or javelin, and Old Icelandic darradhr dart, javelin, or peg). —v. About 1385, pierce with a dart, from the noun.

dash v. Probably before 1300, of uncertain origin, but probably formed like other verbs, such as clash, bash, smash, etc., from some imitative notion of sound of striking or motion (compare Swedish daska to slap, strike, Danish daske to drub, Dutch daske to beat, strike). —n. About 1390, from the verb. —dashboard n. (1846) —dashing n. (about 1450, splash-ing).

dastard n. About 1440, coward, dullard (stupid person), apparently formed from dast* dazed, past participle of dasen to daze + -ard; see DAZE. —dastardly adj. (1567) data n.pl. of datum, which see.

date¹ n. time. About 1330, borrowed from Old French date, probably a learned borrowing from Medieval Latin data, noun use of the feminine singular form of Latin datus given, past participle of dare give. In Latin data, agreeing with the unexpressed or omitted epistula letter, was abstracted from such a phrase as the following, found in Cicero: d. pr. K. Iūn. Athēnīs, abbreviated form of data pridie Kalendās Iūniās Athēnīs, with the meaning (letter) given (to a messenger) the day before the calends of June at (or from) Athens. Since such a formula was employed so often, usually at the close of a letter, the first word of the formula, data, became the term for the time stated.

The meaning of an appointment or engagement, is first recorded in 1885 in American English. —v. Apparently before 1400 daten to mark (a letter, etc.) with a date, fix the date or time of (an event, etc.); from date, n. The meaning of mark as old-fashioned or outdated, is first recorded in 1895.

date² n. fruit. About 1300, borrowed from Old French date, from Old Provençal datil, from Latin dactylus, from Greek dáktylos date; originally, finger. The leaves and fruit of the date palm are shaped somewhat like fingers.

dativ n. About 1434 datif, borrowed from Latin dativus cāsus case of giving, from datus, past participle of dare to give (translation of Greek dotikē ptōsis, from dotikós related to giving, from dotós given); for suffix see -IVE.

datum n., pl. data. information or fact. 1646, in plural data, borrowing of Latin datum (thing) given, past participle (neuter) of dare give; see DATE¹ time.

daub v. Probably about 1380, borrowed from Old French dauber, originally, to whitewash, plaster, probably from Latin dealbare (dē- thoroughly + albāre whiten, from albus white; see ALB). —n. 1446, from the verb. —dauber n. Before 1382 daubere; earlier, as a surname Daubour (1263).

daughter n. About 1385 doughter, earlier dohter (1110); developed from Old English dohtor (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon dohtar daughter, Old Frisian dochter, Old and Middle High German tohter (modern German Tochter), Old Icelandic dóttir (with -tt- for -ht-), and Gothic daúhtar, from daunt v. Before 1325 danten frighten or discourage; earlier, overcome, vanquish (before 1300); borrowed from Old French danter, variant of donter, from Latin domitāre, frequentative form of domāre to tame; see TAME. —dauntless adj. (1593).

Proto-Germanic dohtēr*, earlier dhuktēr*. —daughter-in-law n. (before 1382)

dauphin n. 1418, Middle French dauphin, from Old French daufin, originally, a family name, from Medieval Latin Dalpinus, for Latin delphinus, literally, DOLPHIN (because their banners bore a dolphin as their symbol). The last lord of Dauphiné (a province ruled by the family Delphinus) wished the title to be perpetuated, and upon ceding the province to Philip of Valois in 1349, made it a condition that the title be borne by the oldest son of the French king.

davenport n. 1902 Davenport Bed Couch, earlier, a small ornamental writing table (1853); apparently the name of its manufacturer.

davit n. 1373 daviot, borrowed from Anglo-French daviot, in Old French daviet, originally, a diminutive of the name Davi David. In English this device was also called a dauid in the 1600's.

Davy Jones 1751, the spirit of the sea; also Davy Jones's locker bottom of the sea (1803); nautical slang of unknown origin.

daw n. small bird. Probably before 1425 dawe; cognate with Old High German taha, from Proto-Germanic dāHwō*.

dawdle v. Before 1656, origin uncertain; perhaps variant of daddle slow in motion. —dawdler n. (1818) dawn v. 1499, a back formation from dawninge (about 1250); probably from a Scandinavian source (compare Danish dagning, from daga to dawn). Middle English dawninge was a replacement of Old English dagung (also in Middle English daweing dawn), from dagian to become day, derived from the root of dæg DAY, and cognate with Old High German tagēn and Old Icelandic daga to dawn. —n. 1599, from the verb dawn.

day n. Probably before 1200 dai, developed from Old English dæg (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch dag day, Old Frisian dei, dī, Old High German tag (modern German Tag), and Gothic dags, from Proto-Germanic daǵaz*, and also cognate with Gothic fidur-dōgs of four days, Old Icelandic dagr day and dagn day, half-day.

English day is not related to Latin diēs day. —daybreak n. (1530) —daydream n. (1685); v. (1820). —daylight n. Probably about 1150 daies liht; later, dæi-liht (probably before 1200) and dailigt (about 1300). —daytime n. (1533) daze v. Probably about 1380 dasen; borrowed probably from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic dasa*, dasask become exhausted, related to dāsi blunderer); cognate with Middle Dutch dasen act silly. —n. 1825, from the verb; earlier, an old name for mica, from its glitter (1671).

dazzle v. 1481 dasel, dasle, frequentative form of Middle English dasen DAZE. —n. 1627, from the verb. —dazzler n. (before 1800) —dazzling adj. (1571)

D-day n. 1918, the date set for the beginning of a military operation, D being an abbreviation for day, probably on the pattern of (1918) H-hour.

de- a prefix derived mainly from Latin dē- (from preposition dē down, down from, away from) or the French equivalent de-, dé-, in words borrowed from Latin or French, and meaning: 1 down, lower, as in depress = press down. 2 off, away, as in derail = off the rails. 3 thoroughly, completely, as in despoil = spoil completely, or some other extended meaning, as in deceive, delay, deride.

In a few words English de- and French dé- are from Old French des- representing Latin dis- (also meaning away), as in debauch (Old French desbaucher), or apart, as in deploy (French déployer, Old French desploier, Latin displicāre).

In English, de- is productive especially in the meaning of undoing or doing the opposite of an underlying verb, as in depopulate, decentralize, and forming verbs from nouns to mean get rid of, as in debug, defog, or to move from, as in deplane, detrain.

deacon n. Old English dēacon, dīacon (before 899); learned borrowing from Latin diāconus, from Greek diákonos servant of the church, religious official.

dead adj. Old English dēad (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian dād dead, Old Saxon dōd, Middle Dutch doot, dood (modern Dutch dood), Old High German tōt (modern German tot), Old Icelandic daudhr, and Gothic dauths, from Proto-Germanic daudās*; related to DIE become dead. —adv. completely, absolutely. Before 1393, a figurative extension of the primary adverbial meaning of in the manner characteristic of death. —n. Old English (about 950), from the adjective by absolute use. —deaden v. 1720; formed from English dead, adj. + *-en*¹.

deaf adj. Old English dēaf (about 750); cognate with Old Frisian dāf deaf, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch doof, Middle Low German dōf, Old High German toup, toub deaf (modern German taub), Old Icelandic daufi, Gothic daufs unperceptive, from Proto-Germanic daubaz*. —deafen v. (1597).

deal n. Old English (before 700) dāel; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon dēl part, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch deel, Old High German teil (modern German Teil), Old Icelandic deile, and Gothic dails. Related to DOLE

The meaning of an act of dealing in business, a transaction, bargain (as in a fair deal, make a deal), derived from the verb and is first found in 1837. —v. Old English (about 725) dēalan; cognate with Old High German teilan distribute (modern German teilen), Old Icelandic deila, and Gothic dailjan. The sense of "deal with" is first recorded about 1200. —dealer n. (about 1000) —dealing n. (1378)

dean n. About 1330 den head of a chapter of canons; earlier, in a surname Denesclerk (1285); borrowed from Old French deien, from Late Latin decānus master, commander of ten soldiers, monks, etc., from Latin decem TEN.

The meaning of head of a college division is first recorded in English in 1524, although its usage is found in the Medieval Latin of England and Scotland from the 1200's.

dear adj. About 1250 dere, later deere (about 1380); developed from Old English (about 725) dēore precious, valuable, costly; cognate with Old High German tiuri and Old Icelandic dýrr, costly from Proto-Germanic deurijaz*. In polite forms of address, dear (as in "Dear Sir") is first recorded about 1450. The modern spelling dear appeared in the 1500's. —adv. Old English (about 1000) dēore; cognate with Old High German tiuro; see the adjective. —n. Before 1375, probably shortened from dear one, my dear, originally as a term of address, and then a noun; possibly by influence of similar use of Old French chier and Latin cānus. —dearly adv. Probably about 1300 dere, later deere (about 1385); developed from Old English dēorlice (about 750).

dearth n. Probably about 1300 derthe, scarcity, with the likely original meaning of costliness; formed from the root of Old English dēore DEAR. Middle English derthe is cognate with Old Saxon diuritha splendor, glory, love, Middle Dutch dierte (modern Dutch duurte), Old High German tiurida, diurida glory, Middle High German tiurde great value, and Old Icelandic dýrdh glory, from Proto-Germanic deurithō*. The original sense of the Middle English word referred to a famine, when food is scarce and costly, but the word was extended to the meaning of scarcity of anything, about 1330.

death n. Old English dēath (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian dāth death, Old Saxon dōth, Middle Dutch doot, dood (modern Dutch dood), Old High German tōd death (modern German Tod), Old Icelandic daudhi, and Gothic dauthus, from Proto-Germanic dauthuz*; related to DIE¹ become dead. —deathbed n. (about 725, in Beowulf, meaning the grave; later, the bed on which one dies, about 1300). —deathless adj. (1589) debacle n. 1848, disaster; originally, breaking up of ice in a river (1802); borrowed from French débâcle breaking up of ice, disaster, from débâcler to free, from Middle French desbacler to unbar (dé- off, un-, from Latin dis- + bâcler to bar, from Old Provençal baclar from Vulgar Latin bacculāre*, from baculum* bar, staff, variant of Latin baculum stick; see BACILLUS).

debark v. 1654, disembark, borrowed from French débarquer (dé- off, from Latin dis- + barque BARK³ ship).

debase v. 1568, formed in English from de- down + BASE² low, on the analogy of abase.

debate n. Before 1325 debat quarrel, dispute; borrowed from Old French debat, from débatre to fight, contend (de- down, completely + batre to beat). —v. About 1380 debaten to fight, oppose; borrowed from Old French débatre to fight. —debatable adj. (1536) debauch v. Before 1595, borrowed from Middle French débaucher entice from work or duty; earlier, split or separate; originally, trim (wood) to make a beam; from Old French desbaucher (des- de- + bauch beam, earlier balc, from Frankish balk*; compare Old High German balko beam; see BALK). —n. 1603, borrowed from French débauche, from ébaucher to debauch. —debauchery n. 1642, formed from English debauch, v. + -ery.

debenture n. 1437 debentur, written acknowledgment of a debt borrowed from Latin dēbentur they are owing (occurring at the head of a list of sums owed), 3rd person plural present passive of dēbere to owe; see DEBT.

debility n. Probably before 1425 debilitate, borrowed from Middle French débilité, from Latin dēbilitātem (nominative dēbilitās), from dēbilis weak (dē- from, away + -bilis strength); for suffix see -ITY. —debilitate v. 1533, borrowed from Latin dēbilitātus, past participle of dēbilitāre weaken, from dēbilis weak; for suffix see -ATE¹.

debit n. Before 1455 dubete debt, later debyte (before 1475); borrowed through Middle French débet, or directly from Latin dēbitum thing owed, neuter past participle of dēbere to owe; see DEBT. —v. 1682, from the noun.

debonair or debonaire adj. Probably before 1200 debonere, borrowed from Old French debonaire, from the phrase de bon aire of good disposition.

debouch v. 1745, borrowed from French déboucher emerge from, issue, open, from Old French desbouchier open out (dé- away, off + bouche opening, mouth, from Latin bucca mouth).

debris or débris n. 1708, borrowing of French débris, from obsolete French débriser break down, crush, from Old French debrisier (de- away, down + brisier to break, from Vulgar Latin brisiāre*, from Late Latin brisāre, possibly of Gaulish origin; compare Old Irish brissim I break (-ss- for -st-).

debt n. About 1280 dette; earlier, deatte (probably before 1200); borrowed from Old French dete, from Latin dēbitum thing owed, neuter past participle of dēbere to owe, originally, keep something from someone (dē- away + habēre to have). About 1405 the spelling debtes, pl., appeared in imitation of the Latin. —debtor n. Probably before 1200 dettour; borrowed possibly through Anglo-French detour, in Old French detor, dettor, detour, etc., from Latin dēbitor a debtor, from dēbitus, past participle of dēbere.

debut or début n. 1751, borrowing of French début, from débiter make the first appearance, play first (dé- from + but starting point, goal, from Old French bot, boul end). —v. 1830, from the noun, or from French débiter to debut. —debutante or débutante n. 1801, borrowing of French débutante, present participle of débiter.

deca- or dec- a combining form meaning ten, as in decasyllable, decathlon; and in the terminology of the metric system, ten times a basic unit, as in decaliter, decameter. Borrowed from Greek déka TEN.

decade n. Probably about 1451, a group of ten things; borrowed from Middle French décade, learned borrowing from decadence n. 1549, borrowed from Middle French décadence, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin decadentia decay, from decadentem (nominative decadens) decaying, present participle of decadere to decay (Latin dē- apart, down + cadere to fall); for suffix see -ENCE. —decadent adj. 1837, borrowed from French décadent, back formation from décadence; for suffix see -ENT.

Late Latin decas (accusative decadem), from Greek dekás (accusative dekáda) group of ten, from déka TEN. The meaning of a period of ten years is first recorded in English in 1605.

decagon n. 1613–39, borrowed from New Latin decagonum, from Greek dekágōnon (déka TEN + gōnā angle).

decalcomania n. 1864, borrowed from French décalcomanie, from décalquer transfer a tracing (dē- off + calquer to press, from Italian calcare, from Latin calcāre tread on, press + -manie craze). It was so called because the practice was much in vogue in France during the 1840's, and in England some twenty years later. —decal n. 1937, a shortening formed from decalcomania.

decamp v. 1676, break camp, borrowed from French décamper (dē- away, off + camp CAMP). The meaning of abscond is first recorded in English in 1792.

decant v. 1633, perhaps borrowed from Medieval Latin decantare (de- down + Latin canthus, cantus in transferred sense of lip of a jug). —decanter n. 1712, a container, formed from English *decant*¹ + *-er*¹. —v. 1825, from the noun.

decapitate v. 1611, borrowed through French décapiter, from Late Latin dēcapitātus, past participle of dēcapitāre (Latin dē- off + caput, genitive capitis HEAD); for suffix see -ATE. —decapitation n. 1650, borrowed from French décapitation, from Medieval Latin decapitationem (nominative decapitatio), from Late Latin dēcapitāre decapitate; for suffix see -ION.

decathlon n. 1912, from deca- ten, + Greek áthlon (earlier áethlon) contest, prize. —decathlete n. 1968, blend of decathlon and athlete.

decay v. 1475 decayen to decrease, borrowed from Middle French decāir, from Old French decāir fall away or decline, apparently from Old Provençal or Norman dialect (dē- off, away + cāir fall, from Vulgar Latin cadere*, from Latin cadere to fall). The meaning of decline or deteriorate, is first recorded before 1500, followed by decompose or rot, in 1580. —n. 1442, from the verb.

decease n. Before 1338 desces, later, deces (before 1393); borrowed from Old French decès, from Latin dēcessus (genitive dēcessus) death, departure, from the past participle stem of dēcedere die (dē- away + cēdere go). —v. 1433, from the noun. —deceased adj. 1489, from decesed, past participle (1458); n., the deceased (1625). —decendent n. 1599, borrowed from Latin dēcēdentem (nominative dēcēdēns), present participle of dēcedere to die.

deceit n. Probably before 1300 disceyte; later deceyte (about 1325); borrowed from Old French deceite, past participle of deceivre DECEIVE. —deceitful adj. (about 1450) deceive v. About 1300 deceiven, borrowed from Old French deceiv-, stem of deceivre, from Vulgar Latin dēcipēre*, corresponding to Latin dēcipere ensnare (dē- away + capere take). —deceiver n. About 1384, borrowed from Old French deceveur (with influence of stem deceiv- in Middle English deceiven) + *-er*¹.

deceleration n. 1897, formed from English de- do the opposite of + acceleration a speeding up. —decelerate v. 1899, back formation of deceleration.

December n. 1122, borrowed from Old French decembre, from Latin December, from decem TEN, this being originally the tenth month of the early Roman calendar (which began with March). The ending -ber from -bris in a form such as decemembris*, is an adjective form.

decent adj. 1539, borrowed through Middle French décent, or directly from Latin decentem (nominative decēns), present participle of decēre be fitting, proper, or suitable. Related to DECORATE, DEXTER, DIGNITY, and DOCILE. —decency n. 1567; borrowed, perhaps by influence of earlier French décece, from Latin decentia, from decentem, present participle of decēre; for suffix see -CY.

deception n. About 1412 decepcioun; borrowed through Middle French déception and directly from Late Latin dēceptionem (nominative dēceptiō), from Latin dēceptus, past participle of dēcipere DECEIVE; for suffix see -TION. —deceptive adj. 1611, borrowed from obsolete French déceptif, déceptive, from Late Latin dēceptivus, from Latin dēcept-, past participle stem of dēcipere; for suffix see -IVE.

deci- a combining form meaning tenth, especially in the terminology of the metric system a tenth part of a basic unit, as in decigram, decimeter. Coined by abbreviation of Latin decimus tenth, from decem TEN.

decibel n. 1928, formed from English deci- tenth, + bel unit of sound equal to 10 decibels, from the name of Alexander Graham Bell.

decide v. Before 1393 deciden, borrowed through Old French decider, and directly from Latin dēcidere to decide; literally, cut off, terminate (dē- off + cadere to cut). Another form of the verb existed in Middle English, decisen (recorded probably before 1425), borrowed from Latin dēcīsus, past participle of dēcidere, but it was displaced by deciden. —decided adj. (1790) —decidedly adv. (1790) deciduous adj. 1688, borrowed from Latin dēciduus that falls off or down, from dēcidere fall off (dē- away, off + cadere to fall); for suffix see -OUS.

decimal adj. 1608, borrowed from Medieval Latin decimalis of tithes or tenths, from Latin decima pars tenth part; Latin decima, feminine of decimus tenth, from decem TEN; for suffix see -AL¹. —n. 1641, from the adjective. —decimal point (1873, but cited in use as early as 1704).

decimation n. Before 1449, the demanding and paying of tithes; later, the killing of every tenth man as punishment of mutiny (1580), and destruction on a large scale (1682); borrowed probably through Middle French décimation, from Late Latin decimatiōnem (nominative decimatiō) the taking of a tenth or tithing, from Latin decimāre to take the tenth, from decimus tenth, from decem TEN; for suffix see -TION. —decimate v. 1600, probably a back formation of decimation, for suffix see -ATE¹.

decipher v. 1528 discipher to discover, 1529 decypher to reveal; later decipher to decode (1545); formed from English dis-, de- + cipher, probably as a loan translation of Middle French déchiffrer, deschiffrer to decode or reveal (de-, des- de- + chiffre CIPHER).

decision n. About 1454, borrowed from Middle French décision, from Latin dēcisiōnem (nominative dēcisiō), from dēcidere DECIDE; for suffix see -SION. —decisive adj. 1611, borrowed from French décisif, décisive, from Medieval Latin decisivus, from Latin dēcis-, past participle stem of dēcidere; for suffix see -IVE.

deck n. 1466 dekke a covering over part of a boat; the meaning may have developed in English from the general sense of a covering, borrowed probably from Middle Dutch dec roof, covering, cloak, from decken to cover. The sense of a deck on a boat, is not recorded in Dutch until 160 years after its appearance in English. By 1513 the sense was extended in English to the platform of a ship, and later to a pack of cards (about 1593). —v. 1513, to cover, 1514 to clothe, adorn; borrowed from Dutch dekken, from Middle Dutch decken to cover. Deck replaced Old English theccan to cover. The slang sense of knock down, is first recorded about 1953. —deckhand n. (1844, in American English) declaim v. About 1385 declamen, borrowed through Middle French déclamer, or directly from Latin dēclāmāre (dē- away, out + clāmāre to cry, call, shout). The form declaim replaced the earlier spelling in the 1600's by influence of claim. —declamation n. Before 1387, borrowed perhaps through Middle French déclamation, or directly from Latin dēclāmātiōnem (nominative dēclāmātiō), from dēclāmāre declaim; for suffix see -TION.

declare v. Before 1338 declaren decide a legal question; borrowed perhaps through Old French declarer, or directly from Latin dēclārāre make clear (dē- thoroughly + clārāre make clear, from clārus CLEAR). The meaning of proclaim or state appeared in 1399. —declaration n. About 1380, borrowed probably through Old French declaration, from Latin dēclārātiōnem (nominative dēclārātiō), from dēclārāre; for suffix see -ATION. —declarative adj. About 1445, borrowed perhaps through Middle French déclaratif, déclarative, or directly from Late Latin dēclārātīvus, from Latin dēclārāt-, past participle stem of dēclārāre for suffix see -IVE. —declaratory adj. 1440, borrowed from Medieval Latin declaratorius, from Latin dēclārator a declarer, from dēclārāre for suffix see -ORY.

declension n. About 1434 declension, an irregular formation borrowed (through Old French declinaison, learned borrowing from Latin), from Latin dēclīnātiōnem (nominative dēclīnātiō) grammatical variation, inflection, a turning away, from dēclīnāre DECLINE; for suffix see -SION.

decline v. Before 1376 declinen, borrowed from Old French decliner turn aside, from Latin dēclīnāre to bend, turn aside, inflect, decline (dē- from + clīnāre to bend). The sense of turn or bend downward is first recorded in English before 1420; and that of refuse politely or turn down, about 1631. —n. Before 1325, borrowed from Old French declin, from decliner decline, from Latin dēclīnāre. —declination n. 1395, borrowed from Old French declination, from Latin dēclīnātiōnem (nominative dēclīnātiō), from dēclīnāre decline; for suffix see -ATION.

declivity n. 1612, borrowed probably through influence of French déclivité, from Latin dēclīvitātem (nominative dēclīvitās), from dēclīvis sloping downward (dē- down + clīvus slope, related to clīnāre to bend); for suffix see -ITY.

decompose v. Before 1751, formed from English de- + compose, v., possibly by influence of earlier French décomposer, from parallel constituents in French. —decomposition n. 1762, as if formed from English decompose + -tion but distinct from earlier use of decomposition (1659) "a further compounding of already composite things" from decomposite (1622, borrowed from Late Latin dēcompositus, loan translation of Greek parasynthetos formed or derived from a compound word de- in the Latin use meaning formed or derived from).

decor n. 1897, scenery or furnishing of a theater stage, surroundings; borrowing of French décor, from décorer to ornament, from Latin decorāre; see DECORATE. The sense of decoration, furnishings, etc. of a room, is first recorded in 1926. v.

decorate v. 1530, originally, a past participle and adjective (probably before 1425); borrowed from Latin decorātus, past participle of decorāre to ornament, from decus (genitive decoris) adornment, related to decere be fitting or suitable, for suffix see -ATE¹. Development of the verb in English was also influenced by earlier Middle French décorer to ornament. —decoration n. Probably before 1425 decoracioun, borrowed through Middle French and directly from Late Latin dēcorātiōnem (nominative dēcorātiō), from Latin decorāre; for suffix see -ATION. —decorative adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Middle French décoratif, décorative from Latin decorāt-, past participle stem of decorāre; for suffix see -IVE. —decorator n. 1755, borrowed from Latin decorāre; for suffix see -OR².

decorum n. Before 1568, borrowing of Latin decōrum that which is proper or seemly, noun use of the adjective decōrus seemly, from decor (genitive decōris) grace, related to decere be proper; see DECENT. —decorous adj. 1664, from Latin decōrus proper or seemly.

decoy n. 1625, place for luring wild ducks, but recorded earlier in prison slang with the meaning of swindler (1618), though the connection is doubtful. It is possible that decoy was formed from earlier coy (1621) place for luring ducks, (appearing first in the combination coy-duck), from Dutch kooi cage, from Latin cavea enclosure, cavity; see CAGE. The origin of de- is uncertain. —v. 1660 duckoy, from the noun.

decrepit adj. Before 1439, borrowed from Middle French décrépit, from Latin dēcrepitus (dē- down + crepitus*, past participle ple of crepāre crack, break). —decrepitude n. 1603, borrowed from French décrepitude, ultimately from Latin dēcrepitus decrepit; for suffix see -TUDE. Modern English decrepitude replaced decrepitus (about 1433), borrowed directly from the Latin.

decry v. 1617, denounce, borrowed from French décrier, from Old French descrier cry out, announce (des- down, out, from Latin dis- + crier to CRY). Related to DESCRY.

dedicate v. Probably before 1425 dedicaten, developed from earlier dedicat adjective and past participle meaning of consecrated or hallowed (about 1390); borrowed from Latin dēdicātus, past participle of dēdicāre consecrate, proclaim, affirm (dē- away + dicāre proclaim, related to dicere speak, say; see DICATION); for suffix see -ATE. —dedication n. Before 1382 dedicacioun, in the Wycliffe Bible; borrowed through Old French dedicacion, or directly from Latin dēdicōtionem (nominative dēdicātiō), from dēdicāre consecrate, proclaim; for suffix see -TION. —dedicatory adj. 1565, formed in English as if from Late Latin dēdicatōrius*, from Latin dēdicatōr dedicatōr + English -y¹.

deduce v. 1410 deducen demonstrate, argue or infer from a text; borrowed from Latin dēducere lead down, derive; later, in Medieval Latin with the meaning of infer logically (dē- down + ducere to lead).

deduct v. 1419, borrowed from Latin dēductus, past participle of dēducere lead down, derive; see DEDUCE. From the 1400's deduct and deduce had nearly all senses in common, but gradually during the 1600's deduct became restricted to the sense of subtract, which is now obsolete for deduce. —deduction n. Probably before 1425 deducioun, borrowed through Middle French dédution, or directly from Latin dēductiōnem (nominative dēductiō), from dēducere; for suffix see -TION. Deduction serves as the agent noun for both deduce and deduct in all their senses. —deductive adj. 1646, possibly formed from English deduct + -ive; or borrowed through French déductif, déductive, or directly from Late Latin dēductivus, from dēduct-, past participle stem of dēducere. —deductible adj. 1856, formed from English deduct + -ible.

deed n. Before 1200 dēde, developed from Old English dēd a doing, act (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian dēd, dēde deed, Old Saxon dād, Middle Dutch daet (modern Dutch daad), Old High German tāt (modern German Tat), Old Icelandic dādh, Gothic ga-dēths, from Proto-Germanic dēdāls*, related to DO¹ act. The meaning of a written document containing a contract is first recorded before 1338. —v. 1806, in American English, from the noun.

deep adj. Before 1150 dep; earlier, in place name Depehill (1119), developed from Old English dēop (about 725); cognate with Old Frisian diap deep, Old Saxon diop, diap, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch diep, Old High German tiuf, tiof (modern German tief), Old Icelandic djúpr, and Gothic diups, from Proto-Germanic deupaz*. —adv. Probably about 1200 depe, developed from Old English (before 1000) dēope deeply. —n. About 1250 depe, developed from Old English (before 1000) dēop deep water, especially of the sea, a meaning now known in the phrase the deep (before 1333). —deepen v. Before 1605, formed from English deep, adj. + *-en*¹. —deep-sea adj. (1626) —deep-seated adj. (1741).

deer n. Probably about 1200 der animal, beast, developed from Old English dēor (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian diar, dier animal, beast, Old Saxon, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch dier, Old High German tior (modern German Tier), Old Icelandic dýr, and Gothic dius* (dative plural diuzam), from Proto-Germanic deuzán*.

During the Middle English period, specific application to the deer family became distinct, and by the 1400's it became the usual sense of the word in English. —deerskin n. (1396) deface v. 1340 defacen to blot out, obliterate; later, to mar or make ugly (about 1385); borrowed from Old French defacier, desfacier (de-, des- away from + face FACE). —defacement n. 1561, formed from English deface, v. + -ment.

defame v. About 1303 defamen, borrowed from Old French defamer, difamer, from Medieval Latin defamare, from Latin difamāre to spread abroad by ill report (dif-, variant of dis- before f + fama a report, rumor). —defamation n. 1303 dyffamacyun; borrowed from Old French difamacion, from Medieval Latin defamatio, from Latin diffamatiōnem (nominative diffamatiō), from diffamāre; for suffix see -ATION. —defamatory adj. 1592, borrowed probably from Middle French difamatoire, from Medieval Latin diffamatorius, from Latin diffamāre; for suffix see -ORY. —defamer n. About 1340, formed from English defame, v. + *-er*¹, perhaps by influence of Old French difameur and Medieval Latin diffamator, defamator.

default n. 1250 defaute an offense, crime or sin, later, failure (about 1280); borrowed from Old French defaute, from defaillir (by influence of faute and faillir), and from Medieval Latin defalta a deficiency or failure, possibly a form of defallere*, defallire* fail (Latin dē-, dis- away + fallere to be wanting). —v. Before 1382 defauten to be lacking, from the noun, possibly by influence of Old French defaut, defalt, 3rd person singular present tense of Old French defaillir.

defeat v. About 1380 deffeten overcome, borrowed from Old French defait, desfait, past participle of defaire, desfaire, from Vulgar Latin diffacere* undo, destroy (from Latin dis- un-, not + facere to DO¹ perform). —n. 1590, from the verb. —defeatism, n. 1918, borrowed from French défaitisme, from défaite defeat; for suffix see -ISM. —defeatist n. 1918, borrowed from French défaitiste (applied to the Russians), from défaite a defeat; for suffix see -IST.

defecate v. 1575, to clear of impurities; earlier defecate purified (1533), past participle; borrowed from Latin dēfaecātus, past participle of dēfaecāre (re-formed from dēficāre) cleanse from dregs, purify, from the phrase dē faece from dregs, plural faeces, the Latin original of FECES; for suffix see -ATE. The English verb was influenced by Middle French défequer to defecate. The sense of excrete, was first recorded in the 1860's in the United States. —defecation n. 1623, a clearing of impurities; borrowed from Late Latin dēfaecatiōnem (nominative dēfaecatiō), from Latin dēfaecāre cleanse from dregs; for suffix see defect n. Probably before 1425, a lack; later, a flaw or fault (about 1450); borrowed from Middle French defect, and directly from Latin dēfectus (genitive dēfectūs) failure, revolt, from past participle of dēficere to fail, desert, be DEFICIENT. —v. 1579, to damage; later to rebel or desert; borrowed from Latin dēfectus, past participle of dēficere. —defection n. 1544, borrowed from Latin dēfectionem (nominative dēfectiō), from dēficere; for suffix see -TION. —defective adj. 1345–46, borrowed from Middle French dēfectife dēfective, and directly from Late Latin dēfectivus, from dēfec-, stem of Latin dēficere; for suffix see -IVE. —defector n. 1662, perhaps borrowed from Latin dēfector revolter, from dēficere, or more likely, formed from English defect, v. + -or².

-TION. The sense of discharge of feces appeared in 1830, in a textbook of anatomy translated from French.

defend v. About 1250 defenden, from Old French defendre, and directly from Latin dēfendere ward off, protect (dē- from, away + -fendere to strike, push). Related to FEND and OFFEND. —defendant n. Before 1400, person defending himself in a lawsuit; earlier, defense (about 1390), and as an adjective (probably about 1300); borrowed from Old French defendant, present participle of defendre defend; for suffix see -ANT. —defender n. About 1300 defendour; earlier in a surname Defendur (1222); borrowed through Anglo-French, from Old French defendeor, from defendre; for suffix see -ER¹.

defense n. Probably before 1300, fusion of: 1) defens, defence a fortified place; borrowed from Old French defens, from Latin dēfensum thing protected or forbidden, from neuter past participle of dēfendere ward off, protect, and 2) defense act of defending oneself; borrowed from Old French defense defense, prohibition, from Latin dēfensa defense, vengeance, from feminine past participle of dēfendere ward off, DEFEND. —defenseless adj. (about 1530) —defensible adj. About 1300 defensable ready to fight; borrowed from Old French defensable, from Late Latin dēfensābilem, from Latin dēfensāre to ward off, frequentative form of dēfendere to defend. After the 1450's defensable was replaced by defensible, borrowed from Late Latin dēfensibilem, from dēfens-, past participle stem of Latin dēfendere; for suffix see -ABLE and -IBLE. —defensive adj., n. Before 1400, borrowed from Old French defensif, defensive, and directly from Medieval Latin defensivus, from defens-, past participle stem of Latin dēfendere; for suffix see -IVE.

defer¹ v. delay. About 1375 differren; later deferren (about 1382); borrowed from Old French differer, learned borrowing from Latin differre set apart, put off, delay; (also) be different, differ (dif- apart, + ferre carry). Originally defer was the same word as DIFFER but the two separated in meaning, and the spelling with def- developed as the stress shifted to the second syllable, and as confusion arose by association with *defer*².

defer² v. yield. Before 1447 differren to refer; borrowed from Middle French déferer, learned borrowing from Latin dēferre carry away, refer (matter) to anyone, transfer, grant (dē- down, away + ferre carry). —deference n. Before 1660, a respectful yielding; borrowed from French déférence, from déferer defer. —deferential adj. 1880, formed from English deference, as if from Medieval Latin deferentia + -ial; or possibly from English deferent, adj. + -ial.

defiance n. Probably before 1300, borrowed from Old French defiance, challenge, from defiant, present participle of dēfier, DEFY. —defiant adj. Before 1837, borrowed from French défiant, present participle of dēfier defy, from Old French desfier, desfier.

deficient adj. 1581, borrowed from Latin dēficiētem (nominative dēficiēns), present participle of dēficere to desert, fail (dē- down, away + facere to DO¹ perform); for suffix see -ENT. —deficiency n. 1634, either formed from English deficiency + -cy, or formed as if borrowed from Late Latin dēficiētia, from Latin dēficiētem, present participle; for suffix see -ENCY.

deficit n. 1782, borrowing of French déficit, from Latin dēficit it is wanting, 3rd person singular present indicative of dēficere to be DEFICIENT.

defile¹ v. make filthy. Before 1400 defilen, alteration of earlier defoulen (about 1280); borrowed from Old French dēfouler trample down, violate (dē- down + fouler to tread, thicken cloth, from Vulgar Latin fullāre*, from Latin fullō FULLER). English defoulen was probably re-formed as defile by analogy with the synonymous pairs filen (Old English fyllan, from fūl foul) and foulen to FOUL, for which a parallel synonymous pair is found in befilen, befoulen to pollute. The association of defoulen with foul contributed to the sense of pollute materially or morally, a meaning not inherent in the Old French word. —defilement n. 1571, formed from English defile + -ment.

defile² n. narrow passage. 1685, borrowed from French défilé, noun use of past participle of défiler march by files (dé- off + file FILE² row). —v. march in a line or by files. 1705, borrowed from French défiler.

define v. About 1380 diffynen to specify; to end, behave at the end; borrowed through Anglo-French, from Old French definir, diffinir to end, terminate, determine, and borrowed directly from Latin dēfinire to limit, determine, explain (dē- completely + finire to bound, limit, from finis boundary). —definite adj. Before 1500 diffinyte defined; borrowed from Latin dēfinitus, past participle of dēfinire to limit. —definition n. About 1384 diffinicioun decision; borrowed from Old French deffinition, and directly from Latin dēfinitionem (nominative dēfinitioniō), from dēfinire; for suffix see -TION. —definitive adj. About 1390 diffynytyf decisive, conclusive; borrowed from Old French definitif, definitive, from Latin dēfinitivus, from dēfini-, past participle stem of dēfinire; for suffix see -IVE.

deflect v. About 1555, borrowed from Latin dēflectere to bend aside or downward (dē- away, aside + flectere to bend). —deflection n. 1603 deflexion modification of the meaning or form of a word, later, deviation from a usual course (1605), originally formed in British English as deflexion, rendered after Latin as deflex- + -ion; or borrowed from Late Latin dēflexiōnem (nominative dēflexiō) from dēflectere deflect; for suffix see -TION.

defoliate v. 1793, a back formation of defoliation, or possibly borrowed from Late Latin dēfoliātus, past participle of dēfoliāre shed leaves (Latin dē- from, away + folium leaf; see BLADE). —defoliant n. 1943, formed from English defoliate + -ant. —defoliation n. 1659, formed in English from Late Latin dēfoliāre defoliate + English -tion.

deform v. About 1400 difform mar or disfigure; borrowed from Old French deformer, desformer, a blend of Latin dēformāre put out of shape, disfigure, and the variant disformāre*, and Medieval Latin difformare. —deformation n. Before 1449, transformation; borrowed from Old French deformation, and directly from Latin dēformātiōnem (nominative dēformātiō), from dēformāre deform; for suffix see -ATION. —deformity n. 1413, borrowed from Old French deformité, from Latin dēformitās deformity, from dēformis deformed, from dēformāre disfigure.

defray v. 1543, borrowed from Middle French defraier, desfraier (de-, des- out + fraier spend, from Old French frāis, costs, damages caused by breakage, from Latin frāctum, neuter of past participle of frangere BREAK).

deft adj. Before 1450 defte adept, apt; earlier, mild or gentle (before 1250), from daffte (probably before 1200); see DAFT. Deft and daft developed from Old English gedæfte mild, gentle, but differentiated in later development: daft meek and gentle, later, dull, foolish, and deft apt, adept, skillful.

defunct adj. 1599, earlier the defunct, as a noun (1548); borrowed through Old French defunct, or directly from Latin dēfūctus dead, deceased, discharged, from past participle of dēfungi to discharge, finish (dē- off, completely + fungi perform or discharge a duty).

defy v. Probably before 1300 defyen renounce faithfulness to, reject, borrowed from Old French defier, from Vulgar Latin disfidāre* (Latin dis- away + fidus faithful). The meaning challenge is first recorded before 1338.

degenerate adj. 1494, borrowed (perhaps through influence of Middle French dégénérer), from Latin dēgenerātus, past participle of dēgenerāre depart from one's kind, fall from ancestral quality, from the phrase dē genere down from one's noble descent (dē and genus, genitive generis birth or descent); for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —n. 1555, from the adjective. —v. 1545, from the adjective, probably by influence of Latin dēgenerāre, and also directly Latin dēgenerāt-, past participle stem of dēgenerāre + English *-ate*¹. —degeneration n. 1607, borrowed through French dégénération, or directly from Late Latin dēgenerātiōnem (nominative dēgenerātiō), from Latin dēgenerāre; for suffix see -ATION.

degree n. Probably about 1200, borrowed from Old French degre a degree, step, rank, earlier degret, from Vulgar Latin dēgradus* a step, from Late Latin dēgradāre used in the unrecorded meaning of step down (Latin dē down + gradus, genitive gradūs step).

deify v. About 1340, make godlike; borrowed from Old French deifier, from Late Latin deificāre, from deificus making godlike, divine, from Latin deus god, DEITY; for suffix see -FY. —deification n. Before 1393 deificacion, borrowed from Late deign v. About 1300 deignen, deinen consider something fit or worthy; borrowed from Old French deignier, from Latin dignārī to deem worthy or fit, from dignus; see DIGNITY. The meaning of condescend appeared in 1589, developing from take or accept graciously (1576).

Latin deificātiōnem (nominative deificātiō), from deificāre deify; for suffix see -ATION.

deism n. 1682, formed from English de(ist) + -ism, by influence of French déisme, from Latin deus god, DEITY; for suffix see -ISM. —deist n. 1621, borrowed from French déiste, from Latin deus god; for suffix see -IST.

deity n. About 1300 deite, divine nature or divinity; borrowed from Old French deité, learned borrowing from Late Latin deitātem (nominative deitās) divine nature, coined by St. Augustine, from Latin deus god; for suffix see -ITY.

deject v. Before 1420 deiecten throw or cast down, borrowed, probably by influence of Old French degeter, dejeter, dejecter, from Latin dējectus, past participle of dēicere to cast down (dē- down + -icere, combining form of jacere to throw). The sense of depress or dispirit is first recorded before 1500. —dejection n. About 1420 deieccion unhappiness or humiliation, borrowed from Old French dejection, and directly from Latin dējectionem (nominative dējectiō), from dējec-, stem of dēicere; for suffix see -TION. The sense of depression of spirits is first recorded before 1500.

delay v. Probably before 1300 deleien, from Old French delaier (de- from, away + laier leave, let). —n. Before 1250, borrowed from Old French delai, from delaier, v.

delectable adj. Before 1396, borrowed from Old French delectable, learned borrowing from Latin dēlectābilis, from dēlectāre to DELIGHT.

delegate n. Before 1475, borrowed through Old French delegat, or directly from Latin dēlēgātus, past participle of dēlēgāre to send as a representative (dē- from, away + lēgāre send with a commission; see LEGATE); for suffix see *-ATE*³. —v. 1530, possibly developed in English from delegate, n. (or, obsolete, adj.); or borrowed, by influence of Middle French déléguer, from Latin dēlēgātus, past participle of dēlēgāre; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —delegation n. 1611, possibly formed from English delegate, v. + -ion, replacing earlier delegacie (recorded about 1460); or borrowed through French délégation, or directly from Latin dēlēgātiōnem (nominative dēlēgātiō), from dēlēgāre to delegate; for suffix see -TION. The meaning of a group or body of delegates appeared in 1818.

delete v. 1534 (possibly 1495) destroy, eradicate; later, erase, as printed matter (about 1605); borrowed from Latin dēlētus, past participle of dēlēre destroy, blot out, efface, back formation from dēlēvi, originally perfect tense of dēlinere to daub, erase by smudging (dē- from, away + linere to smear; wipe). —deletion n. 1590, from Latin dēletīōnem (nominative dēletīō), from dēlēre destroy; for suffix see -TION.

deleterious adj. 1643, borrowed from New Latin deleterius, from Greek dēlērios, from dēlēēr destroyer, from dēlēsthai to hurt, injure; for suffix see -OUS.

deliberate adj. Probably before 1425; borrowed from Latin dēliberātus, past participle of dēliberāre weigh, consider well (dē-entirely + -liberāre, apparently an alteration, perhaps influenced by liberāre liberate, of librāre to balance, weigh, from libra scale). —v. 1550, borrowed from Latin dēliberātus, past participle of dēliberāre; replacing earlier deliberen, borrowed through Old French deliberer, or directly from Latin dēliberāre; for suffix see -ATE¹. —deliberation n. About 1385 deliberacioun, borrowed through Old French deliberation, or directly from Latin dēliberatiōnem (nominative dēliberatiō), from dēliberāre; for suffix see -TION. —deliberative adj. 1553, borrowed through Middle French dēlibératif, dēlibérative, or from Latin dēliberātivus, from dēliberāt-, past participle stem of dēliberāre; for suffix see -IVE.

delicate adj. About 1375, self-indulgent, loving ease; borrowed through Old French delicat, or directly from Latin dēlicātus alluring, delightful, dainty, probably related (at least by folk etymology) to dēliciae a pet, and dēlicere to allure, entice, DELIGHT.

The meaning of fine, soft (applied to cloth) is recorded in Middle English probably before 1425, and that of sensitive, feeble, (about 1390). —delicacy n. About 1375, pleasure, gratification, formed from English delicate + -cy. The meaning of something that pleases the palate, a fine food, appeared before 1450. The meaning of fineness of texture, substance, etc., occurs before 1586.

delicatessen n. 1889, American English, borrowing of German Delikatessen, plural of Delikatesse a delicacy, fine type of food, from French délicatesse, from délicat delicate, fine, from Latin dēlicātus DELICATE.

delicious adj. Probably before 1300 delicious, borrowed from Old French delicieux, from Late Latin dēliciōsus delicious, delicate, from Latin dēliciae, pl., a delight, from dēlicere to allure, entice, DELIGHT.

delight n. Probably before 1200 delit, borrowed from Old French delit, from delitier please greatly, charm, from Latin dēlectāre to allure, delight, charm, frequentative form of dēlicere entice (dē- away + lacere entice). —v. Probably before 1200 deliten, from Old French delitier please greatly, from Latin dēlectāre. —delightful adj. Before 1400, formed from Middle English delite + -ful. The spelling delight came into use in the late 1500's under the influence of such words as light, flight, etc.

delineate v. 1559, borrowed from Latin dēlineātus, past participle of dēlineāre (dē- completely + lineāre draw lines, from linea LINE); for suffix see -ATE¹. —delineation n. 1570, formed from English delineate + -ion, and borrowed from Latin dēlineatiōnem (nominative dēlineatiō) sketch, description, from dēlineāre to outline, sketch; for suffix see -ATION.

delinquent n. 1484 delinquaunt, borrowed from Middle French dēlinquant, from present participle of dēlinquer be at fault, fail, offend, and directly from Latin dēlinquentem (nominative dēlinquēns), present participle of dēlinquere be at fault, fail, offend (dē- off + linquere to leave); for suffix see -ENT. —adj. 1603, borrowed from Latin dēlinquentem (nominative dēlinquēns), present participle of dēlinquere —delinquency n. 1636, borrowed from Latin dēlinquentia, from dēlinquentem, present participle of dēlinquere; for suffix see -ENCY.

delirium n. 1599, borrowing of Latin dēlirium madness, from dēlirāre be crazy, rave; literally, go off the furrow, from the phrase dē līrā (dē off, away and līrā furrow). —delirious adj. 1703, formed from English de-liri(um) + -ous.

deliver v. Probably before 1200 delivren set free, liberate, borrowed from Old French delivrer, from Late Latin dēliberāre (Latin dē- away + liberāre to free, LIBERATE). The sense of hand over, transfer, convey, is first recorded about 1280; that of bring (a woman) to childbirth (that is, unburdened or set free), about 1300; and to give forth, project, throw, in 1597. —deliverance n. About 1300, borrowed from Old French delivrance (delivrer set free + -ance). —delivery n. 1425 delevrey, and delyvere (1442); noun use in Middle English of Middle French delivree, feminine past participle of delivrer deliver, from Old French delivrer.

dell n. Before 1250 dele; earlier, in place name Brixisdelle (1225); developed from Old English dell; cognate with Middle Dutch delle dell, Middle High German telle (modern German Delle dent, depression), and Gothic ib-dalja slope of mountain, from Proto-Germanic daljō*. Related to DALE.

delta n. Probably about 1200, the fourth letter of the Greek alphabet, shaped like a triangle (Δ), later as a place name Delta, (1555); both senses borrowed from Greek dēlta, from Semitic (compare Hebrew dāleth fourth letter of the Hebrew alphabet).

delude v. About 1408 delluden, borrowed from Latin dēludere (dē- down, to one's detriment + ludere to play). —delusion n. About 1421 dilusioun, borrowed from Latin dēlusiōnem (nominative dēlusiō), from dēlūs-, past participle stem of dēludere delude; for suffix see -SION. —delusive adj. 1605, formed from English delus(ion) + -ive; or from Latin dēlūs-, past participle stem of dēludere + English suffix -ive.

deluge n. About 1380, later Deluge the great Biblical flood (probably before 1430); borrowed from Old French deluge (earlier deluve), and from Latin diluvium, from diluvare wash away (dis- away + -luere, combining form of lavare to wash). —v. 1593, from the noun.

deluxe adj. 1819, borrowing of French de luxe, literally, of luxury (de of + luxe luxury, from Latin luxus, genitive luxūs excess, abundance, LUXURY).

delve v. Probably before 1200 delven, developed from Old English (before 830) delfan to dig.

demagogue n. 1648, borrowed from Greek dēmagōgós leader of the people, popular leader, (also) demagogue (dēmos people + agōgós leader, from agein to lead). The earliest English sense was pejorative. Borrowing of this word into English was influenced by Old French demagogue, 1361. —demagogic adj. 1831, borrowed from Greek dēmagōgikós, from dēmagōgós demagogue; for suffix see -IC. —demagoguery n. 1855, American English, formed from demagogue + -ery.

demand v. Before 1382 demaunden ask, make an inquiry; borrowed from Old French demandier to request, from Latin dēmandāre entrust, charge, with a commission (dē- completely + mandāre to order). The English sense of ask for as a right (1434) arose from an Anglo-French legal sense and may have been influenced by the Medieval Latin sense of demand, request. —n. About 1280 demaunde, borrowed from Old French demande, from demandier.

demarkation n. 1727–52, borrowed (perhaps through French démarchation) from Spanish demarkación, from demarkar to delimit, mark out the bounds of (de- off + marcar to mark); for suffix see -TION. The Spanish demarkación was first used in 1493 in the phrase línea de demarcación, a boundary laid down by Pope Alexander VI to divide the New World between the Spanish and Portuguese. —demarkate v. 1816, back formation from demarkation.

demean¹ v. lower in dignity. 1601, formed from de- down + MEAN² low in quality or social position; probably patterned on DEBASE, and perhaps developing also out of occasional confusion with *demean*².

demean² v. behave in a certain way. Probably before 1300 demaynen to handle, manage, conduct, borrowed from Old French demener (de- completely + mener to lead, direct, from Late Latin mināre to drive, from Latin minārī threaten, drive with shouts). The sense of behave in a certain way evolved (before 1420) from the now obsolete meaning of conduct, manage. —demeanor n. Probably before 1472 demenure, formed from Middle English demenen, demaynen behave + -*or*¹.

demented adj. 1644, from now archaic dement drive mad + -*ed*² (1545). The verb dement was borrowed probably through Middle French démenter, from Late Latin dēmentāre, from Latin dēmentem out of one's mind, from the phrase dē mente (dē out of and mēns, ablative mente MIND). —dementia n. mental deterioration. 1806, borrowing of Latin dēmentia (dēmentem out of one's mind + -ia abstract noun suffix).

desmerit n. 1421, blameworthy act, offense; earlier, worthiness of punishment (1399); borrowed from Old French desmerite (des- not, opposite of + merite MERIT), and from Latin dēmeritum, from past participle stem of dēmerēre to merit, deserve (dē- thoroughly + merēre to merit). The Latin prefix dē- was mistaken for meaning not, opposite, and so in Old French desmerite has both the sense of merit and of fault.

demesne n. 1491, respelling of earlier demeyne (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French demeine, demaïne, from Latin dominicus, from dominus lord. The respelling is a borrowing from Anglo-French legal scribes.

demi- a prefix meaning: 1 half, half-sized, or partial, as in demigod = half god. 2 smaller than usual, as in demitasse = smaller than the usual cupful. Borrowed from Middle French, from Old French demi half, from Late Latin dīmedius, reformed for Latin dīmīdius (dis- apart + medius MIDDLE).

demijohn n. 1769, a partial loan translation, a play on words of French dame-jeanne Lady Jane, its popular fanciful name.

demimonde n. 1855, borrowing of French demi-monde (demi- half, DEMI- + monde, learned borrowing from Latin mundus world). The term was popularized in the title of a successful play by Alexandre Dumas fils.

demise n. 1442 dimisse transfer of an estate by will, borrowed from Middle French demise, feminine past participle of demettre dismiss, put away (des- away, from Latin dis- + Middle French mettre put, from Latin mittere let go, send). The meaning of death is first recorded about 1754 because a person's estate is transferred upon his death.

democracy n. 1574, borrowed through Middle French démocratie, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin democratia, from Greek dēmokratīā, from dēmos common people, district + krátos rule, strength; for suffix see -CRACY. —democrat n. 1790, a republican of the French Revolution, as opposed to an aristocrat; borrowed from French démocrate, from démocratie democracy. The use of Democrat for a member of a principal U.S. political party is first recorded in 1839. —democratic adj. 1602, borrowed from French démocratique, from Medieval Latin democraticus, from Greek dēmokratikós, from dēmokratīā democracy; for suffix see -IC. The use of Democratic for a U.S. political party is first recorded in 1829.

demolish v. 1570–76, borrowed from Middle French démoliss-, stem of démolir to destroy, tear down, learned borrowing from Latin dēmōliri tear down (dē- down + mōliri build, construct, from mōlēs, genitive mōlis massive structure); for suffix see -ISH². —demolition n. 1549, borrowed from Middle French démolition destruction, from Latin dēmōlitiōnem (nominative dēmōlitiō), from dēmōliri; for suffix see -TION.

demon n. Probably before 1200, borrowed from Late Latin daemōn, dēmōn evil spirit, from Latin daemōn spirit, from Greek daimōn (genitive daímonos) lesser god, good or bad spirit. —demoniac adj. About 1405 demonyak; earlier, as a noun (about 1395), borrowed from Late Latin daemoniacus, as if from Greek daimoniakós*, for which only daimonikós exists; see DEMONIC. —demonic adj. 1662, borrowed from Late Latin daemonicus, from Greek daimonikós, from daimōn god, spirit; for suffix see -IC.

demonstrate v. 1552, borrowed, possibly by influence of Middle French démonstrer, from Latin dēmōnstrāre, past participle of dēmōnstrāre (dē- entirely + mōnstrāre to point out, show, from mōnstrum divine omen, wonder); for suffix see -ATE¹. Also, demonstrate may be a back formation of demonstration. —demonstration n. About 1380, borrowed from Old French demonstration, or directly from Latin dēmōnstrātiōnem (nominative dēmōnstrātiō), from dēmōnstrāre; for suffix see -TION. —demonstrative adj., n. About 1395, borrowed from Old French demonstratif, demonstrative, from Latin dēmōnstrātīvus, from past participle stem of dēmōnstrāre; for suffix see -IVE. —demonstrator n. 1611, probably formed from English demonstrate, v. + -*or*².

demoralize v. About 1793, to corrupt the morals of; borrowing of French démoraliser, and Anglicized after de- remove, take + moral, adj. + -iser -ize. The sense of lower the morale of, is first recorded in 1848.

demote v. About 1891, American English, from de- down + (pro)move. —demotion n. 1901, American English, from de- down + (pro)motion.

demotic adj. 1822, of or relating to the simplified, popular form of ancient Egyptian writing; borrowed from Greek dē-motikós of or for the common people, from dēmos common people; for suffix see -ic. The sense of relating to the popular written or spoken form of Modern Greek, is first recorded in English in 1927.

demur v. Probably before 1200 demeorien linger or wait, borrowed from Old French demorer, demourer delay or retard, from Latin dēmōrārī (dē- + mōrārī to delay, from mora a pause, delay). The meaning of object appeared about 1639. —n. About 1250 demure a delay, objection; borrowed from Old French demor, demore, demoure, from demorer, demourer. —demurrer n. 1523, pause; borrowed through Anglo-French, as a noun use of the Old French infinitive demorer, demourer to linger.

demure adj. 1377 dimuir; later demure calm, still (before 1420); probably formed in English from di-, de- (origin and meaning uncertain) + Old French meür discreet, from Latin mātūrus MATURE; or borrowed from Anglo-French demuré (Old French demoré), past participle of demorer stay, influenced by Old French meür. See DEMUR.

den n. Old English denn (about 725, in Beowulf), from Proto-Germanic danjan*; related to denu valley; cognate with Middle Low German denne lair, depression, valley, and Old Dutch denne cave, den. The sense of a small, cozy room is first recorded in 1771, developed from denne a private chamber (about 1340). —v. Before 1250, to seek shelter; from the noun.

denature v. 1685, to make unnatural; later, to make unfit for eating or drinking (1878); borrowed from French dénaturer, from Old French desnaturer (des-, dé- do the opposite of + nature). —denatured adj. 1878, from past participle of English denature, v.

dendrite n. 1727–51, treelike marking on stones, borrowed from Greek dendritēs of a tree, from déndron tree, related to drýs TREE. The anatomical sense of a branching part of a nerve cell, is first recorded in 1893.

dengue n. 1828, American English, borrowed from West Indian Spanish dengue (1827), from an African source (compare Swahili kidingapopo dengue; and possibly Giryama, an East African language, kidhindhido fever).

denial n. See under DENY.

denigrate v. 1526, probably from earlier past participle denigrate blackened, discolored (before 1425); borrowed possibly by influence of Old French denigrer, from Latin dēnigrātus, past participle of dēnigrāre to blacken (dē- completely + nigr-, stem of niger black); for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —denigration n. Probably before 1425 denigracioun, borrowed from Late Latin dēnigrā- tiōnem (nominative dēnigrātiō) a blackening, from Latin dēnigrāre to blacken; for suffix see -ATION.

denim n. 1695, a type of serge; a borrowing of French (serge) de Nîmes, (serge) from Nîmes, town in France where it was manufactured. The meaning of a coarse cotton cloth is probably first recorded in 1850 in American English, and the plural denims, overalls or trousers made of denim, is first recorded in 1868. Compare JEANS and BLUE JEANS.

denizen n. 1419 densyn; later denizeine (1433); borrowed from Anglo-French deinzein (deinz within or inside, from Late Latin deintus, from Latin dē from, and intus within + -ein, from Latin -ānus -an).

denomination n. Before 1398 denominacioun a mentioning by name; borrowed from Old French denomination, and directly from Latin dēnōminātiōnem (nominative dēnōminātiō) a calling by other than the proper name, metonymy, from dēnōmināre to name (dē- completely + nōmināre to name, NOMINATE); for suffix see -TION. The sense of a value or kind of money, is first recorded in 1660; that of a religious sect or group, before 1716. —denominational adj. 1838, formed from English denomination + *-al*¹. —denominator n. 1542, borrowed, possibly by influence of Middle French dénominateur, from Medieval Latin denominator, from Latin dēnōmināre to name; for suffix see *-OR*².

denote v. 1592, borrowed from Middle French dénoter, learned borrowing from Latin dēnotāre denote, mark out (dē- completely + notāre to mark). —denotation n. About 1532, indication; borrowed through Middle French dénotation, or directly from Latin dēnotātiōnem (nominative dēnotātiō), from dēnotāre; for suffix see -ATION. The sense of exact, literal meaning (contrasted with connotation) appeared in 1843.

denouement n. 1752, outcome; borrowing of French dénouement an untying, from dénouer untie, from Old French desnouer (des- un-, out, from Latin dis- + nouer to tie, knot, from Latin nōdāre, from nōdus a knot, NODE).

denounce v. Before 1325 denuncen proclaim someone to be something bad, later denounce to inform (probably about 1380); borrowed through Old French denoncier, denuntier, from Latin dēnūntiāre (dē- down + nūntiāre proclaim, announce, from nūntius messenger). Two forms exist in English denounce and denunciate, both borrowed ultimately from Latin dēnūntiāre, but denunciate is not widely used and only its noun form denunciation is generally found to complement the verb denounce. —denunciation n. Probably before 1425, public proclamation, borrowed, perhaps by influence of Old French denonciation, from Latin dēnūntiātiōnem (nominative dēnūntiātiō), from dēnūntiāre denounce; for suffix see -TION.

dense adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Middle French dense, and directly from Latin dēnsus thick, crowded. The sense of stupid, thick-headed, is first recorded in English in 1822. —density n. 1603, borrowed from French densité, from Latin dēnsitatem (nominative dēnsitās) thickness, from dēnsus thick; for suffix see -ITY.

dent n. Probably about 1225, stroke or blow, dialectal variant of DINT, n. The meaning of an indentation, is first recorded in 1565, apparently influenced by INDENT, v., make a dent in. —v. About 1395, dentén (implied in dentyng) dialectal variant of dinten to beat with blows (about 1225), from dint, n.

dental adj. 1594, borrowed through Middle French dental of or for teeth, from Late Latin dentālis, from Latin dēns (genitive dentis) TOOTH; for suffix see -AL¹. —dentifrice n. Probably before 1425 dentifricie, borrowed from Latin dentifricium (dēns, genitive dentis tooth + fricāre to rub; see FRICTION). —dentist n. 1759, borrowed from French dentiste, from dent tooth, from Latin dentem (nominative dēns) tooth; for suffix see -IST. —dentistry n. 1838, formed from English dentist + -ry.

denture n. 1874, borrowed from French denture set of teeth, from Middle French denteüre.

denude v. Probably before 1425 denuden, borrowed through Middle French dénuder, from Latin dēnūdāre (dē- away + nūdāre to strip, from nūdus bare, NUDE).

denunciate v. 1593, to make a denunciation against. For denunciation see DENOUNCE.

deny v. Before 1325 denyen, borrowed from Old French denier, denoier, from Latin dēnegāre (dē- away + negāre refuse, say no, NEGATE). —denial n. 1528, formed from English deny + -al²; replacing denyance (1468); for suffix see -ANCE.

deodorant n. 1869, formed in English, as if from Latin deodorantem*, present participle of deodorāre* to remove the smell, from odōrem smell or odor. —deodorize v. 1858, formed in English from de- take away + Latin odōrem smell + -ize.

depart v. About 1250 departen part from each other; borrowed from Old French departir, from Late Latin departīre divide (Latin dē- from + partīre, partīrī to part, divide, from pars, genitive partis, PART). —departure n. 1441, borrowed from Middle French departeüre, desparteüre, from Old French departeüre, (departir + -ure -ure).

department n. 1450 departement departure; borrowed from Middle French département, despartement, from departir; for suffix see -MENT. The Middle and Old French words also had the meaning of a group of people, from which English later borrowed the sense of a separate division or part (before 1735). —departmental adj. 1791, borrowed from French départemental, from departement + -al¹. —department store (1887, from an earlier concept of specialized departments in a large store, 1847).

depend v. 1410 dependen be conditioned on, be because of; borrowed from Middle French dependre to hang from, hang down, from Vulgar Latin dēpendere*, from Latin dēpendere (dē- from, down + pendere to hang, be suspended). —dependable adj. 1735; formed from English depend + -able. —dependence n. 1414 dependance, borrowed from Middle French dépendance, from dēpendre; for suffix see -ANCE. Respelling of the ending -ence, which was established by the early 1800's, was influenced by the Latin. —dependency n. 1594, formed from English dependence, dependance + -cy. —dependent adj. Before 1398 dependaunt, borrowed from Old French dependant, present participle of dependre. From the 1400's on, the spelling dependent gradually became dominant, after Latin. —n. 1425, from the adjective, generally spelled -ent, especially in American English.

depict v. Before 1420 depicten to disguise, later, to portray, paint, draw (probably about 1430); borrowed from Latin dēpictus, past participle of dēpingere (dē- down + pingere to PAINT). —depiction n. 1688, borrowed from French depiction, from Latin dēpictiōnem (nominative dēpictiō), from dēpic-, stem of dēpingere; for suffix see -TION.

depilatory adj. 1601 depilatorie, borrowed from French dépilatoire, adj., from Latin dēpilātus having one's hair plucked (dē- completely + pilātus, past participle of pilāre deprive of hair, from pilus hair); for suffix see -ORY. English depilatory replaced earlier depilative, adj. (1562, formed in English from Latin dēpilāt-, past participle stem of dēpilāre + English suffix -ive). —n. 1606 depilatorie, borrowed from French dépilatoire, n.

deplete v. 1807, back formation of depletion. —depletion n. 1656, from Late Latin dēplētiōnem (nominative dēplētiō) blood-letting, from Latin dēplēre to empty (dē- off, away + plēre to fill); for suffix see -TION.

deplore v. 1559, to give up as hopeless; later, to regret deeply (1567); borrowed from Middle French deplorer, or directly from Latin dēplōrāre deplore, bewail (dē- entirely + plōrāre weep, cry out). —deplorable adj. 1612, borrowed through French déplorable, or directly from Late Latin dēplōrābilis mournful, lamentable, from dēplōrāre; for suffix see -ABLE.

deploy v. 1786, borrowed from French déployer unroll, unfold, from Old French desployer unfold (earlier despleier, from Latin displicāre unfold, scatter, from dis- + plicāre to fold) —deployment n. 1796, borrowed from French déploiement, from déployer deploy; for suffix see -MENT.

deponent adj. About 1450, (of verbs) passive in form but active in meaning; borrowed from Latin dēpōnentem, present participle of dēpōnere put off or aside (dē- off, aside + pōnere to put, place). The term was used by Latin grammarians for verbs which, though passive in form, had "put aside" their passive meanings. —n. 1548, one who gives a sworn testimony or deposition; earlier, a deponent verb (1530); borrowed from Medieval Latin deponentem (nominative deponens), present participle of deponere to testify, (also) to lay aside, from Latin dēpōnere to put down, deposit.

deport v. 1474, behave or conduct oneself in a certain way, borrowed from Middle French deporter (de- thoroughly, formally, + porter to carry, bear oneself). The sense of banish, is first recorded before 1641; borrowed from French déporter, from Latin dēportāre carry off, transport, banish (dē- off, away + portāre carry). —deportation n. 1595, borrowed from Middle French déportation, from Latin dēportātiōnem (nominative dēportātiō), from dēportāre; for suffix see -TION. —deportment n. 1601, borrowed from French déportement, from déporter behave; for suffix see -MENT.

depose v. Probably before 1300 deposen, borrowed from Old French deposer (de- down + poser put, place). —deposition n.

1399, borrowed from Latin and Late Latin dēpositiōnem (nominative dēpositiō) a putting down, removal, testimony, from dēposi-, past participle stem of dēponere put down, deposit; for suffix see -TION. The sense of sworn testimony in writing, is first recorded in 1425; see DEPENDENT, n.

deposit v. 1624, borrowed from Latin dēpositus, past participle of dēponere lay aside, put down, deposit (dē- away + pōnere to put; see POSITION). —n. 1624, borrowed from Latin dēpositum, neuter past participle of dēponere. —depositor n. 1565, borrowed from Latin dēpositor one who deposits. 1624, borrowed from French dépositeur one who deposits. —depository n. 1656, borrowed from or patterned on Medieval Latin depositorium, from Latin dēposi-, past participle stem of dēponere; for suffix see -ORY.

depot n. 1794, a depositing; 1795, warehouse; borrowing of French dépôt a deposit or place of deposit, from Middle French, from Old French depost a deposit or pledge, learned borrowing from Latin dēpositum a deposit, neuter past participle of dēponere lay aside, deposit.

deprave v. Before 1376 depraven vilify, later, corrupt (before 1382); borrowed through Old French depraver, or directly from Latin dēprāvare corrupt (dē- completely + prāvus crooked). —depravity n. 1641, formed from English deprave + -ity.

deprecate v. 1624, supplicate, pray; back formation from deprecation (1566), or borrowed from Latin dēprecātus, past participle of dēprecārī plead in excuse, avert by prayer (dē- away + precārī PRAY); for suffix see -ATE¹. The sense of show disapproval of, is first recorded in 1641. —deprecation n. 1566, prayer; borrowed from Middle French deprécation, from Latin dēprecātiōnem (nominative dēprecātiō), from dēprecārī avert by prayer; for suffix see -TION. The sense of a strong expression of disapproval, is first recorded in 1612–15.

depreciate v. 1564 depreciaten, borrowed from Latin dēpretiātus, past participle of dēpretiāre (dē- down + pretium PRICE); for suffix see -ATE¹. —depreciation n. 1767, formed from English depreciate + -ion.

depredation n. 1483, borrowed through Middle French dēprédation, or directly from Late Latin dēpraedātiōnem (nominative dēpraedātiō), from Latin dēpraedārī to pillage; for suffix see -TION. —depredate v. 1626, either a back formation from earlier depredation (1483), or borrowed from Latin dēpraedātus, past participle of dēpraedārī to pillage (dē- thoroughly + praedārī to plunder); for suffix see -ATE¹.

depress v. Probably about 1380, depressen put down by force, overcome; borrowed from Old French depresser, learned borrowing from Late Latin dēpressāre, frequentative form of Latin dēprimere press down (dē- down + primere to press). The literal sense of push down, is first recorded about 1425; that of deject, make gloomy, in 1621, and the economic sense of lower in value, about 1878. —depressant n. 1876, formed from English depress + -ant. —depression n. About 1391, angular distance of a celestial body below the horizon, borrowed through Old French depression, or directly from Medieval Latin depressionem, from Latin dēpressiōnem (nominative dēpressiō) a pressing down, from dēpress-, past participle stem of dēprimere; for suffix see -ION. The sense of a state of dejection is first recorded about 1425, but the formal sense of psychology did not appear until 1905. The sense of a downturn in business, is first recorded in 1793.

deprive v. Before 1338 depriven force to give up, rob, divest, exclude, dismiss; borrowed from Medieval Latin deprivare (Latin dē- entirely + privāre release from, deprive). —deprivation n. 1445 deprivacion, borrowed from Medieval Latin deprivationem (nominative deprivatio), from deprivare deprive; for suffix see -TION.

depth n. Before 1382 depthe, cognate with Old Saxon diupitha depth, Middle Dutch diepde (modern Dutch diepte), Middle Low German dēpede, Middle High German tiufede, Old Icelandic dýpt, and Gothic diupitha, from Proto-Germanic deupithō*; derived from the root of Old English dēop DEEP.

depute v. Probably about 1350 deputen to appoint, assign, select; borrowed from Middle French deputer, learned borrowing from Late Latin dēputāre to destine, allot, from Latin dēputāre consider as (dē- away + putāre to think, count, consider). —deputation n. Before 1393, borrowed from Medieval Latin deputationem (nominative deputatio), from Latin dēputāre; for suffix see -ATION. —deputize v. 1730–36, formed from English deputy + -ize. —deputy n. 1406 depute, borrowed through Anglo-French deputé, noun use of the past participle of Middle French deputer appoint, assign; for suffix see -Y⁴.

derange v. 1776, throw into confusion, borrowed, possibly by influence of earlier English derangement, from French déranger, from Old French desrengier disarrange (des- do the opposite of + reng, renc line, row, RANK). The sense of disorder the mind, make insane, is first recorded in 1825. —derangement n. 1737, borrowed from French dérangement, from déranger; for suffix see -MENT.

derby n. stiff hat first manufactured in the U.S. in 1850, but not recorded in American English until 1870; derived from the Derby a horse race run annually in England, at which this type of hat was frequently worn, apparently after the fashion of the Earl of Derby. The general sense of any important race, is first recorded in 1875, in American English, for the Kentucky Derby. The original Derby horse race was founded by the twelfth earl of Derby in 1780, whose title is from the name of a county in central England, called in Old English (959) Dēorbȳ deer village or homestead (dēor DEER + bȳ habitation, homestead, from a Scandinavian source, and found in Old English names of places where Scandinavians settled; see also BYLAW).

derelict adj. 1649, borrowed perhaps through obsolete French derelict, or directly from Latin dērelictus, past participle of dērelinquere abandon (dē- entirely + relinquere leave behind, RELINQUISH). —n. 1670, from Latin dērelictus. —dereliction n. 1597, borrowed perhaps through obsolete French dereliction, or directly from Latin dērelictionem (nominative dērelictio), from dērelic-, past participle stem of dērelinquere; for suffix see -TION.

deride n. 1530, borrowed from Middle French derider, learned borrowing from Latin dēridere ridicule (dē- down + ridere to laugh). —derision n. Probably about 1408, borrowed from Old French derision, learned borrowing from Latin dērisiōnem (nominative dērisiō) from dēridere; for suffix see -SION.

derive v. About 1385, borrowed from Old French deriver, learned borrowing from Latin dērivāre lead or draw off (a stream of water), from the phrase dē rīvō (dē from and rīvus the stream). The sense of trace the origin of (a word) is first recorded in 1559. —derivation n. Probably before 1425, a draining off; later, the tracing of the origin of a word (1447); borrowed from Middle French dérivation, from Latin dērivātiōnem (nominative dērivātiō), from dērivāre; for suffix see -TION. —derivative adj. Probably before 1425 derivatif drawing off (blood) —n. About 1450 derivative a derived word or form. Both noun and adjective borrowed from Middle French derivatif, dérivative, from Late Latin dērivātīvus, from Latin dērivāre; for suffix see -IVE.

derma n. 1706, layer of skin beneath the epidermis; borrowed, possibly by influence of French derme, from Greek dérma (genitive dérmatos) skin. —dermatologist n. (1861) —dermatology n. 1819, formed from English dermat-, dermato-, combining form, borrowed from Greek dérma (genitive dérmatos) skin + -ology.

derogatory adj. 1502–03 derogatorie; perhaps borrowed through Middle French dérógatoire, or directly from Latin dērogātōrius, from dērogāre detract from; for suffix see -ORY. —derogate v. Before 1420 derogaten, borrowed from Latin dērogātus, past participle of dērogāre repeal in part, detract from (dē- away from + rogāre ask, question, propose); for suffix see -ATE¹.

derrick n. 1727, originally, a gallows, a hanging, or a hangman (early 1600's); formed from Derick surname of a hangman at the Tyburn gallows, London, during the reign of Elizabeth I (often referred to in contemporary theatrical productions).

derring-do n. The phrase appeared originally about 1385 as dorryng don, literally, daring to do, from durriung daring, present participle of durren to DARE, and don (infinitive) to do. In the 1500's, by misspelling it became derring do and developed as a compound noun with the meaning of daring deeds, desperate courage.

derringer n. 1853, American English, in allusion to Henry Deringer, American gunsmith who invented and manufactured this pistol in the 1840's. Its popularity spawned many imitations that often bore the misspelled name "Derringer" on their locks.

dervish n. 1585 dervis, Muslim religious mendicant; borrowed from Turkish derviş, from Persian darvēš, darvīš beggar, poor. The spelling dervish appeared in 1847.

descant n. About 1400 dyscant, deschaunt, counterpoint; borrowed from Anglo-French deschaunt; later descant (before 1450), from Old North French descant. Both forms in French, and some uses of descant in English, were borrowed from Medieval Latin discantus (Latin dis- asunder, apart + cantus song). —v. Before 1450 discanten to sing in counterpoint; probably borrowed from Medieval Latin descantare, discantare to play or sing a descant, from discantus, n. The meaning of talk or discuss at length is first recorded in English before 1661.

descend v. Probably before 1300 decenden, later descenden about 1375; borrowed from Old French descendre, learned borrowing from Latin dēscendere (dē- down + scandere to climb). The sense of spring from, originate, is first recorded about 1375. —descendant n. 1600, borrowed from French descendant, from Old French, present participle of descendre descend. —adj. About 1460, borrowed from Middle French descendant (see noun). —descent n. Probably before 1300 decente, borrowed from Old French descente, from descendre.

describe v. Probably before 1425 describen, borrowed from Latin dēscribere write down, transcribe, copy, sketch. The later Middle English describen replaced earlier descriven (before 1250); borrowed from Old French descrire, from Latin dēscribere (dē- down, out + scribere write). —description n. About 1380, borrowed from Old French description, and directly from Latin dēscriptiōnem, from dēscript-, stem of dēscribere; for suffix see -TION. —descriptive adj. 1751, borrowed from Late Latin dēscriptīvus containing a description, from Latin dēscript-, stem of dēscribere; for suffix see -IVE.

descri¹ v. see; discern. Probably about 1300 discrien see, discover; later descrien (1375); borrowed from Old French descrire, descrire describe, make visible, from Latin dēscribere DESCRIBE.

descri² v. proclaim. About 1350 discrien announce; earlier descrien to challenge (before 1338); borrowed from Old French decrier, descrier call out, proclaim; see DECRY.

desecrate v. Before 1677, destroy the sacredness of; earlier, to dismiss from holy orders, (1674); formed from English de- do the opposite of + -secrate, in consecrate, perhaps influenced by Old French dessacer to profane, violate (des-, from Latin dis- + sacer consecrate). —desecration n. Before 1717, formed from English desecrate + -ion.

desegregate v. 1953, in American English, formed from de- do the opposite of + segregate; or possibly a back formation from desegregation. —desegregation n. 1952, in American English, formed from English de- do the opposite of + segregation separation of blacks from white society or institutions (1903, American English).

desert¹ n. Probably before 1200, borrowed from Old French desert, from Late Latin dēsertum, literally, thing abandoned, noun use of neuter past participle of Latin dēserere forsake, DESERT². —desertification n. 1973, formed from English desert + -ification causing to become (as in calcification).

desert² v. leave, forsake. About 1380, borrowed from Old French deserter to abandon, from Late Latin dēsertāre, frequentative form of dēserere leave, literally, undo or sever connection (dē- undo + serere join). —deserter n. 1635, formed from English *desert*², v. + -er¹. —desertion n. 1591, borrowed from Middle French désertion, from Late Latin dēsertiōnem (nominative dēsertiō), from Latin dēserere leave; for suffix see -TION.

desert³ n. suitable reward or punishment. About 1300, borrowed from Old French deserte, past participle of deservir be worthy to have, from Latin dēservire serve well, see DESERVE. The plural deserts, as found in one's just deserts, is first recorded about 1380.

deserve v. About 1225 deserven, borrowed from Old French deservir, from Latin dēservire serve well (dē- completely + servire to SERVE). —deserving n. Probably about 1300, from deserve, v. —adj. 1576, from noun.

desiccate v. 1575, from earlier desiccatt dried up (1425, past participle and adjective); borrowed from Latin dēsiccātus, past participle of dēsiccāre (dē- thoroughly + siccāre to dry); for suffix see -ATE¹. —desiccation n. Probably before 1425 desiccacioun a drying up, borrowed through Middle French dessication, or directly from Late Latin dēsiccātiōnem (nominative dēsiccātiō), from Latin dēsiccāre; for suffix see -TION.

design v. Before 1398 designen design or shape (something); borrowed from Latin dēsīgnāre mark out, devise (dē- out + signāre to mark, from signum a mark, SIGN). —n. 1588, borrowed from Middle French desseign purpose, project, design, from Italian disegno, from disegnare to mark out, from Latin dēsīgnāre mark out, devise. —designer n. 1649, a plotter or schemer; later, one who makes artistic designs (1662); formed from English design, v. + -*er*¹.

designation n. 1398, act of marking or pointing out; borrowed through Old French designation, and directly from Latin dēsīgnātiōnem (nominative dēsīgnātiō), from dēsīgnāre mark out, devise, appoint; for suffix see -TION. The sense of appointing or nominating for office or duty, is first recorded in English in 1605. —designate adj. 1646, appointed, selected; borrowed from Latin dēsīgnātus, past participle of dēsīgnāre appoint for office. —v. 1791, appoint for duty or office, either from the adjective in English, or a back formation from designation.

desire v. Probably about 1200, borrowed from Old French desirer, from Latin dēsīderāre long for, wish for, (originally) await what the stars will bring, from the phrase dē sidere from the stars or constellation (dē- from + sidus, genitive sīderis heavenly body, star, constellation; see SIDERIAL). —n. Probably before 1300, borrowed from Old French desir, from desirer to desire. —desirable adj. Before 1382, borrowed from Old French, from desirer to desire; for suffix see -ABLE. —desirous adj. Before 1300, borrowed through Anglo-French desirous, from Old French desireus, desidros, from Vulgar Latin dēsīderōsus*, from the stem of Latin dēsīderāre; for suffix see -OUS.

desist v. 1459 desisten, borrowed from Middle French dēsister, learned borrowing from Latin dēsistere (dē- off + sistere stop, come to a stand).

desk n. 1363–64 deske a reading desk, lectern, or study desk; borrowed from Medieval Latin desca table, from Italian desco table, desk, from Latin discus quoit, platter, dish, from Greek dískos.

desolate adj. Probably about 1350 desolat, borrowed from Latin dēsōlātus, past participle of dēsōlāre leave alone, desert, (dē- completely + sōlāre make lonely); for suffix see -ATE¹. —v. 1384 desolaten, borrowed, perhaps by influence of Old French desoler, from Latin dēsōlātus, past participle of dēsōlāre leave alone; for suffix see -ATE¹. —desolation n. Before 1382, borrowed from Old French desolation, from Late Latin dēsōlātiōnem (nominative dēsōlātiō), from Latin dēsōlāre; for suffix see -TION.

despair n. About 1300 dyspayr; borrowed probably from Old French despeir*, earlier form of despoir (perhaps on the pattern of Old French espeir hope, earlier form of espoir), from desperer lose hope, despair, from Latin dēspērāre (dē- without, + spērāre to hope). —v. About 1340, borrowed from Old French despeir, accented stem of desperer, from Latin dēspērāre.

desperado n. 1647, reckless criminal; person in despair or in a desperate condition (1610); apparently a refashioning of earlier, and now obsolete desperate a desperate person (1563), or a reckless criminal (1611), from DESPERATE, adj. The ending -ado is suggestive of Spanish, and is found in Old Spanish desperado, but what prompted its use in English is unknown.

desperate adj. Probably about 1400 desperat filled with despair, hopeless; borrowed from Latin dēspērātus, past participle of dēspērāre lose hope, DESPAIR; for suffix see -ATE¹. —desperation n. About 1370, borrowed through Middle French desperacion, or directly from Latin dēspērātiōnem (nominative dēspērātiō), from dēspērāre; for suffix see -TION.

despicable adj. 1553, borrowed from Late Latin dēspicābilis, from Latin dēspicārī look down on; for suffix see -ABLE.

despise v. Probably before 1300 despisen, from Old French despis-, stem of despire, from Latin dēspicere look down on, scorn (dē- down + specere look at).

despite n. Probably before 1300 despit, despite, borrowed from Old French despit, from Latin dēspēctus (genitive dēspēctūs) a looking down on, from dēspicere DESPISE. —prep. in spite of. Before 1420, a shortening of in despite of (about 1300), loan translation of Old French en despit de.

despoil v. About 1300 despoilen, borrowed from Old French despoillier, from Latin dēspoliāre (dē- entirely + spoliāre to strip of clothing, rob, from spolium armor, booty, SPOIL).

despond v. 1655, borrowed from Latin dēspondēre to give up, lose, lose heart (sometimes rendered dēspondēre animum), resign, from the sense of promise (a woman) in marriage (dē- away + spondēre to promise). —despondence n. (1676) —despondency n. (1653) —despondent adj. (1699) —despondently adv. (before 1677) despot n. 1585, title of a Christian ruler of a province in the Turkish Empire, from Middle French despot, despote, and Italian dispoto a lord or lordlike governor; borrowings from modern Greek, from Greek despótēs master of a household, lord, absolute ruler. The pejorative or hostile sense of the word already existed to some extent in Greek, especially in reference to the Roman emperors, but it became established during the French Revolution, when it was applied by the revolutionaries to Louis XVI. —despotic adj. 1650, borrowed from French despotique, from Greek despotikós, from despótēs master; for suffix see -IC. —despotism n. 1727, borrowed from French despotisme, from despote despot; for suffix see -ISM.

dessert n. 1600 desert; later dessert (1666); borrowing of Middle French dessert last course, literally, removal of what has been served, from desservir to remove what has been served (des- remove, undo, + Old French servir to SERVE).

destine v. Before 1300, (implied in destininge, gerund); borrowed from Old French destiner, from Latin destinare determine, appoint, choose, make firm or fast (dē- completely, formally + -stināre, earlier -stanāre*, related to stāre to STAND). —destination n. Before 1400 destynacyone destroy; later intention (before 1656), and place where a person or thing is destined (1787); borrowed from Old French destination, and directly from Latin destinātiōnem (nominative destinātiō), from destināre; for suffix see -TION. —destiny n. About 1350 destene, borrowed from Old French destinée (feminine past participle of destiner), from Latin destinātus, past participle of destināre.

destitute adj. About 1384, abandoned, forsaken; borrowed from Latin destitūtus, past participle of destituere forsake (dē- away + statuere put, place, causative of stāre to STAND). The sense of lacking necessities, needy, is first recorded in 1539. —destitution n. About 1425, deprivation or loss; borrowed from Old French destitution, and directly from Latin destitutiōnem (nominative destitutiō) forsaking, from destituere.

destroy v. Probably before 1200 destruēn, later destruēn (before 1300); borrowed from Old French destruire from Vulgar Latin destrūgere*, a refashioning (influenced by the Latin past participle destrūctus) of Latin destruere tear down, demolish (dē- un-, down + struere to pile, build). —destroyer n. Before 1382 destruyer, formed from Middle English destruēn + -er, and also borrowed from Old French destruere, destruieour; see DESTROY.

destruction n. Probably about 1300 destruicioun, borrowed from Old French destruction and directly from Latin destruītiōnem (nominative destruītiō), from destruī-, stem of destruere tear down; see DESTROY; for suffix see -TION. —destruct v. 1957, back formation from destruction; first used in self-destruct but now used in the science community. —destructible adj. 1755, probably formed in English from destruct(ion) + -ible on the model of Late Latin indestruībilis, destruī-, past participle stem of Latin destruere; for suffix see -IBLE. —destructive adj. 1490, borrowed from Old French destruīf, destruīf, from Late Latin destruīfivus, from destruī-, past participle stem of Latin destruere; for suffix see -IVE.

desuetude n. Before 1460 dissuetude, disuse; borrowed from Middle French désuétude, learned borrowing from Latin dēsuetūdō (genitive dēsuetūdinis), from dēsuetus, past participle of dēsuescere become unaccustomed to (dē- away, from + suēscere become used to); for suffix see -TUDE.

desultory adj. 1581, borrowed from Latin dēsultōrius pertaining to a dēsultor (a rider in a circus who jumped from one horse to another), hasty or casual, superficial, from dēsul-, stem of dēsilire jump down (dē- down + salire to jump, leap); for suffix see -ORY. The extended sense of without aim or method is first recorded in 1740, but the sense of unconnected is recorded even earlier, before 1704.

detach v. 1684, borrowed from French détacher, from Old French destachier (des- apart + attachier ATTACH). —detachable adj. 1818, formed from English detach, v. + -able. —detachment n. 1669, borrowed from French détachement, from détacher detach; for suffix see -MENT.

detail n. 1603, borrowed from French détail, from Old French detail small piece or quantity, from detaillier cut in pieces (dē- entirely, from Latin dē- + taillier to cut in pieces). The word was first used in the phrase “in detail,” from French en détail retail. From the sense of a retail, item by item sale, the meaning developed into dealing with matters item by item. —v. 1637–50, borrowed from French détailler cut up in pieces, retail, narrate in particular, from Old French detaillier. —detailed adj. (1740) detain v. About 1425 deteynen hold back; borrowed from Middle French detenir, from Old French detenir to hold off, keep back, from Gallo-Romance dētenire*, replacing Latin dētinēre hold off, keep back, detain (dē- from, away + tenere to hold). The spelling detain was gradually established in the 1600's, in association with words such as contain, maintain, retain.

detect v. Probably before 1425 detecten expose, uncover; borrowed from Latin dētēctus, past participle of dētegere uncover, disclose (dē- un, off + tegere to cover). —detection n. 1427, exposure, accusation; probably borrowed from Latin dētēctiōnem, from dētegere uncover; for suffix see -TION. —detective n. 1856, probably shortened form of earlier detective police (1843); formed from English detect + -ive.

détente n. 1908, easing of strained relations; borrowing of French détente, literally, a loosening, slackening, from Old French, from Vulgar Latin dētēndita, feminine of the past participle of dētēndere loosen (dē- from, away + tēndere stretch). An earlier Anglicized use detent, borrowed from French détente, had the meaning of the catch which regulates the strike in a clock (1688).

detention n. 1443 detencion, borrowed from Middle French détention, from Late Latin dētēntiōnem (nominative dētēntiō), from Latin dētēnere DETAIN; for suffix see -TION. The sense of confinement appeared about 1570, in a reference to Queen Mary of Scotland's confinement.

deter v. 1579, borrowed from Latin dēterrēre (dē- away + terrēre frighten; see TERROR). —deterrent adj., n. 1829, borrowed from Latin dēterrentem (nominative dēterrens), present participle of dēterrēre; for suffix see -ENT.

detergent adj. 1616, borrowed, perhaps through French détergent, from Latin dētergentem, present participle of dētergere wipe away (dē- off, away + tergere to rub, polish, wipe). —n. 1676, from the adjective.

deteriorate v. 1644, borrowed (probably through influence of French détériorer, learned borrowing from Latin dēteriōrāre), and directly from Late Latin dēteriōrātus, past participle of dēteriōrāre, from Latin dēterior worse, a contrastive form of an earlier adjective dēter* lower, from dē down; for suffix see -ATE¹. —deterioration n. 1658, borrowed from French détérioration, from Late Latin deterioratiōnem (nominative deterioratiō), from deteriorare deteriorate; for suffix see -TION. It is also possible that deterioration was formed in English.

determinate adj. 1391, borrowed from Latin determinātus, past participle of determināre DETERMINE; for suffix see -ATE¹.

determine v. 1350–54 determinen to decide a case; later, to ascertain or interpret (about 1380) borrowed from Old French determiner, or as a learned borrowing directly from Latin determināre set limits to (dē- off + termināre to mark the end + boundary, from terminus end, limit; see TERM). —determination n. 1350–54 determination, borrowed from Old French determination, or directly from Latin determinatiōnem (nominative determinatiō), from determināre; for suffix see -ATION.

detest v. Before 1535, borrowed from Middle French détester, learned borrowing from Latin dētestārī express abhorrence for, literally, denounce with one's testimony (dē- from, down + testārī be a witness, from testis witness; see TESTAMENT). —detestable adj. 1415, borrowed from Middle French détestable, and directly from Latin dētestābilis, from dētestārī; for suffix see -ABLE.

detonate v. 1729, a back formation from English detonation, or possibly borrowed (through influence of French détoner, learned borrowing from Latin dētonāre), from Latin dētonātus, past participle of dētonāre to release one's thunder, roar out (dē- down + tonāre to THUNDER); for suffix see -ATE¹. —detonation n. 1677–86, borrowed from French détonation, probably from Medieval Latin dētonationem (nominative dētonatio), from Latin dētonāre; for suffix see -ATION.

detour n. 1738, borrowing of French détour, from Old French destour, from destourner turn aside (des- aside + tourner to TURN). —v. 1836, from the noun.

detract v. Probably before 1425, disparage; borrowed through Middle French détracter, or directly from Latin dētractus, past participle of dētrahere take down, pull down, disparage (dē- down + trahere to pull; see TRACT). English detract is probably also back formation of detractio. —detractio n. 1340, in Ayenbite of Inwynt; borrowed from Old French detractiūm, from Latin detractiōnem (nominative detractiō), from dētrahere. —detractor n. About 1384, borrowed through Anglo-French detractour, from Old French detracteur, and directly from Latin detractor, from dētrahere; for suffix see -OR².

detriment n. About 1425, borrowed through Middle French détriment, or directly from Latin dētrimentum, from stem dētrī- of dēterere impair, wear away (dē- away + terere to rub, wear). —detrimental adj. 1656, formed from English detriment + -al¹.

detritus n. 1795, a wearing away, decomposition; borrowed from Latin dētritus (genitive dētrītūs) a wearing away, from stem dētrī- of dēterere wear away; see DETRIMENT. The sense of matter produced by wearing away (1802) is probably borrowed from French détritus, from Latin dētrītus.

deuce n. two (in dice and card games). About 1475 deus two-spot in a game of dice; later, a throw in dice which turns up as two, the lowest and unluckiest throw (1519); borrowed from Middle French deus, from Latin duōs (nominative duo) TWO. The meaning in tennis (1598), was influenced by French à deux de jeu at two from the game.

deuterium n. 1933, borrowed from Greek deutérion (neuter of deutérios) having second place, from deúteros second, see DEUTERONOMY + -ium. Coined by American chemist Harold C. Urey because the isotope (H^2) has twice the mass of H^1 or protium.

Deuteronomy n. About 1395 Deuteronomye, in the Wycliffe Bible, borrowed from Late Latin Deuteronomium, from Greek Deuteronómion, literally, second law (deúteros second + nómos law; see NIMBLE). The book was so called because it contains a repetition of the Decalogue and parts of Exodus, but the name is based on a mistranslation into Greek (to deuteronómion tolto this second law) of the Hebrew phrase in the Septuagint mishneh hattōrah hazzōth a copy of this law.

devastate v. 1634, possibly a reformation of earlier devast (1537); borrowed from Middle French dévaster, from Latin dēvastāre; also, by traditional pattern, borrowed from Latin dēvastātus, past participle of dēvastāre lay waste completely (dē- completely + vastāre lay waste, from vastus empty, desolate, WASTE). In some uses, devastate may be a back formation from earlier devastation. —devastation n. 1461, borrowed probably through Middle French dévastation, from Late Latin dēvastatiōnem (nominative dēvastatiō), from Latin dēvastāre lay waste; for suffix see -TION.

develop v. 1656, unfold, unwrap; borrowed from French développer, and replacing earlier English disvelop (1592, borrowed from Middle French desveloper). Both French and Middle French forms derive from Old French desveloper, desvoloper (des- undo, + veloper, voloper wrap up, ENVELOP). —development n. 1756, formed from English develop + -ment, on the pattern of French développement.

deviate v. Before 1633, borrowed from Late Latin dēviātum, past participle of dēviāre turn aside, from Latin dēvius out of the way, remote; see DEVIOUS. —deviant adj. that deviates. Probably before 1400 deviaunt; borrowed from Late Latin dēviantem (nominative dēviāns), present participle of dēviāre deviate; for suffix see -ANT. —n. one that deviates. 1471, from the adjective. —deviation n. About 1385 deviation; borrowed from Medieval Latin deviationem (nominative deviatio), from Late Latin dēviāre deviate; for suffix see -TION. —devious adj. 1599, out of the way; borrowed from Latin dēvius, from the prepositional phrase dē viā (dē off, viā way); for suffix see -OUS. The figurative sense of erring, deceitful, appeared in 1633.

device n. Probably before 1300 devise intent, desire; also something devised, arrangement or contrivance (about 1300); borrowed from Old French devis division, separation, disposition, wish, desire, and devise division, separation, plan, design, will, wish, desire, from Latin dīvīsus, dīvīsa, past participle of dividere to DIVIDE.

devil n. 1 Satan. Before 1295 devel Satan; earlier, deovel (probably before 1200). 2 any evil spirit or devil. Probably before 1200 devel (often plural devels). The Middle English forms developed from Old English dēofol (before 1000) and (about 725, in Beowulf) dēofla evil spirits; also diobul (before 800), diābul, diavol; borrowed from Late Latin diabolus, from Greek (New Testament) diábolos (in Jewish and Christian use, Devil, Satan; in broad use, accuser, slanderer), from diaballein to slander, attack, literally, throw across, (dia- across, through + ballein to throw; see BALL² dance). Greek diábolos is a loan translation of Hebrew sātān in the Old Testament. The English spelling with dev-, div- is a shortening of Old English dēofol, diobul, etc., and in some dialects where the v was lost, produced shortened forms such as Scottish deil. —v. 1593, to play the devil; from the noun. —devilish adj. Probably before 1439 develish fiendish, wicked, formed from Middle English devel devil + *-ish*¹.

devious adj. See under DEVIATE.

devise v. Probably about 1225 devisen to form, fashion; later, to plan, contrive (about 1300); borrowed from Old French deviser dispose in portions, arrange, plan, contrive, from Vulgar Latin dīvisāre*, frequentative form of Latin dividere to DIVIDE.

devoid adj. Probably before 1400, a shortening or variant of devoided, past participle of earlier devoiden remove, void, vacate (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French devoidier, desvoidier (des- out, away, from Latin dis- + voidier to empty, from voide empty, VOID).

devote v. 1586, associated in meaning and form with devout and possibly developed from earlier devote, devot, adj. devoted, dedicated, faithful (about 1449), the forms being early variants of devout; borrowed from Latin dēvōtus, past participle of dēvovēre dedicate by a vow (dē- down, away + vovēre to vow). —devotion n. Probably before 1200 devociun, borrowed from Old French devotion, from Latin dēvōtiōnem (nominative dēvōtiō), from dēvō-, stem of dēvovēre; for suffix see -TION.

devour v. Before 1333 devouren, borrowed from Old French devorer, learned borrowing from Latin dēvorāre swallow down (dē- down + vorāre swallow).

devout adj. Probably before 1200 devot pious, later devout (about 1300); borrowed from Old French devot, devout devoted, learned borrowing from Latin dēvōtus given up by vow, devoted, past participle of dēvovēre dedicate by vow.

dew n. Probably before 1200 deu, developed from Old English dēaw (about 725); cognate with Old Frisian dāw dew, Old Saxon dau, Middle Dutch dau (modern Dutch dauw), Old High German tou, touwes (modern German Tau), from Proto-Germanic dauwaz*, and related to Old Icelandic dogg (genitive doggar). —dewdrop n. Probably before 1200. —dewy adj. Before 1387 dewy, developed from Old English dēawig (before 1000).

dewlap n. About 1350 dewe lappe (dewe, origin and meaning uncertain + lappe LAP¹ loose piece).

dexterity n. 1527 dexterite, borrowed from Middle French dexterité, from Latin dexteritatem (nominative dexteritās), from dexter skillful, dexter; for suffix see -ITY. It is also found in Middle English dexter the right hand. —dexterous adj. 1622, skillful, clever; earlier convenient, suitable (1605, replacing earlier dexterious, 1597); formed in English, from earlier English dexter skillful (1597) or directly from Latin dexter skillful + English suffix -ous.

dextrose n. 1869, formed from English dextr- to the right, from Latin dexter right + -ose, chemical suffix denoting a sugar. The substance was so called from its polarization of light to the right in spectroscopy.

di-¹ a prefix meaning: 1 double, twofold, as in dicotyledon; or two, having two, as in digraph. 2 having two radicals, atoms, etc., as in dioxide. Borrowed from Latin di-, from Greek di- (earlier dwi-*), related to dýo TWO.

di-² a form of the prefix dis- before b, d, l, m, n, r, v, sometimes g and j in words borrowed from Latin (often through Old French), such as digest, dilute, direct; formed as Latin dī- before most voiced consonants.

di-³ a form of the prefix dia- before vowels, as in dielectric, diorama.

dia- a prefix, mainly in words borrowed from Greek (directly or through Latin or Old French), meaning through, across, apart, by, thoroughly, as in diagonal, diagnosis, diaphanous, diaphragm. Borrowed from Greek dia-, from the preposition diá through, across, by, related to Latin dis- apart, DIS-.

diabetes n. Probably before 1425 diabete, disease characterized by excessive discharge of urine containing glucose; borrowed from Middle French diabète, and from Latin diabētēs, from Greek diabētēs excessive discharge of urine, literally, a passer-through, siphon, from diabainein go through (dia- through + bainein to go).

diabolic adj. About 1399 deabolik, borrowed from Old French diabolique, and from Late Latin diabolicus, from Greek diabolikós devilish, from diábolos DEVIL; for suffix see -IC. —diabolical adj. 1503, formed from English diabolic + -al¹.

diacritic adj. 1699, serving to distinguish (different sounds represented by the same letter); earlier, critical (1677); borrowed from Greek diakritikós that separates or distinguishes, from diakrínein to separate, distinguish (dia- apart + krínein distinguish, separate). —n. diacritic mark. 1866, from the adjective.

diadem n. About 1300 diademe, borrowed from Old French diademe, and directly from Latin diadēma cloth band worn around the head as a sign of royalty, from Greek diádēma, from diadēin to bind across (dia- across + dēin to bind, related to desmós band).

diagnosis n. 1681, New Latin, from Greek diagnōsis a discerning, distinguishing, from diagignōskein discern, distinguish (dia- apart + gignōskein learn, to KNOW). —diagnostic adj. 1625 diagnosticke, borrowed from French diagnostique, from Greek diagnōstikós able to distinguish, from diagnōstós to be distinguished, from diagignōskein distinguish; for suffix see -IC. —diagnose v. 1861, back formation from diagnosis.

diagonal adj. 1563 diagonal; earlier implied in diagonally, adv. (1541), and also in Middle English diagonally, adv. (probably before 1425); borrowed from Middle French diagonal, from Latin diagonalis, from diagōnus slanting line, from Greek diagōnios from angle to angle (diá across + gōnīa angle, related to gōny KNEE); for suffix see -AL¹.

diagram n. 1619, borrowed from French diagramme, learned borrowing from Latin diagramma, from Greek diágramma (genitive diágrammatos) that which is marked out by lines, from diagráphein mark out by lines, delineate (dia- across, out + gráphein write, mark, draw). —v. 1840, from the noun.

dial n. Before 1420, sundial; earlier, the dial of a compass (1338); apparently borrowed from Medieval Latin dialis daily, from Latin diēs day; see DEITY. Medieval Latin dialis was probably abstracted from a phrase such as rota dialis daily wheel. A single use is cited in Old French dial time piece, clockwork, and could be the source in Middle English, —v. 1653, from the noun.

dialect n. 1577, form of speech of a region or group; earlier, critical examination (1551); borrowed from Middle French dialecte, from Latin dialectus local language, way of speaking, conversation, from Greek diálekto, from diálēgesthai converse with each other (dia- across, between + lēgein speak).

dialectic n. 1586, borrowed from Latin dialectica; replacing earlier dialatik logic, metaphysics (before 1382); borrowed from Old French dialetique, dialectique, from Latin dialectica, from Greek diálektikē téchnē art of discussion or discourse, from feminine of diálektikós skilled in discourse, from diálekto discourse, conversation, see DIALECT; for suffix see -IC. —dialectical adj. 1 argumentative, logical (1548). 2 of or belonging to a speech dialect (1750). Both uses formed from English dialectic + -AL.

dialogue n. Probably before 1200 dyaloge; borrowed from Old French dialoge, from Latin dialogus, from Greek diálogos, related to diálēgesthai converse (dia- across, between + lēgein speak; see LEGEND).

dialysis n. 1861, borrowed from Greek diálýsis dissolution, separation, from diályein dissolve, separate (dia- apart + lýein loosen; see LOSE).

The term was used in logic about 1550, and was reintroduced by Thomas Graham, 1805–69, Scottish chemist who discovered the process. The sense of separation of waste matter from the blood by a machine is first recorded in 1914.

diameter n. Before 1387, borrowed from Old French diame, learned borrowing from Latin diameter, from Greek diámetros diagonal of a circle or parallelogram (dia- across, through + metron a MEASURE). —diametric adj. 1802, shortening of diametrical (1553), formed on English diameter + -ic. English diametrical was formed from English diameter + -ical patterned on Greek diámetrikós, from diámetros.

diamond n. About 1325 diamand; borrowed from Old French diamant, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin diamantem (nominative diamas), alteration (influenced by Greek words in dia-) of Vulgar Latin adimantem*, from Latin ada- mantem (nominative adamās) the hardest metal, (later) diamond. The sense of a baseball infield area appeared in American English in 1875.

diaper n. About 1330 diapre a fabric with a repeated pattern of figures; borrowed from Old French diapre, earlier diaspre ornamental cloth, from Medieval Latin diaspnum, from Medieval Greek diaspros (dia- entirely, very + aspros white; earlier, rough, from Latin asper rough). Shakespeare used the word in 1596 with the meaning of towel, napkin, cloth. The meaning of a folded cloth used as underpants for a baby to absorb waste matter, is first recorded in 1837.

diaphanous adj. 1614, borrowed from Medieval Latin diaphanus, from Greek diaphanēs (dia- through + phainesthai, middle voice, representing the subject as acting upon itself, to phainein to show, see FANTASY); for suffix see -OUS.

An earlier form, diaphane, adj. (1561, perhaps suggested by diaphanite transparency, about 1477), was borrowed from Middle French diaphane, from Greek diaphanēs.

diaphragm n. 1398 difragma; borrowed, perhaps by influence of Old French diaphragme, from Late Latin diaphragma, from Greek diáphragma (genitive diáphragmatos) partition, barrier, from diáphrassein to barricade (dia- across + phrassein to fence or hedge in).

diarrhea n. Before 1398 diarria, borrowed, probably through Old French diarrie, from Latin diarrhoea, from Greek diárrhoia diarrhea, literally, a flowing through, from diárrhein to flow through (dia- through + rhein to flow). The word was respelled on the Latin model in the 1500's.

diary n. 1581, a daily record of events, a journal; borrowed from Latin diarium, from diēs day, formed in Latin as a nominative to diem; for suffix see -ARY.

The sense of a book specially for keeping a daily record is first recorded in Ben Jonson's Volpone (1605).

diaspora n. 1876, borrowing of Greek diasporá, from diásperein to scatter about, disperse (dia- about, across + sperein to scatter). An earlier form diaspore (1805) is used as a term for aluminum hydrate, in reference to its dispersion when heated.

diastase n. 1838, borrowing of French diastase, from Greek diástasis separation (dia- apart + stásis a standing, from sta-, stem of histánai cause to STAND).

diastole n. 1578, normal rhythmical dilation of the heart; borrowed probably through Middle French diastole, from Late Latin diastolē, from Greek diastolē dilation, from diastéllein expand, dilate (dia- apart + stéllein to send).

diatonic adj. 1603 diatonique of the ancient Greek musical scale; later, of a standard major or minor musical scale (1694); borrowed from French diatonique, and, probably also influenced by Italian diatonico, from Latin diatonicus, from Greek diatōnikós (dia- through + tōnos tone, from telnein to stretch).

diatribe n. 1643 diatribe discourse, critical dissertation; earlier diatriba (1581); borrowed from French diatribe and directly from Latin diatriba learned discussion, from Greek diatribē discourse, study, literally, a wearing away of time (dia- away + tribein to wear, rub).

The meaning of bitter and violent criticism, invective, is found in 1804; apparently borrowed from this use in French.

dice n. pl. Probably before 1300 dys, in plural of dy DIE² cube. The form dys was altered before 1399 to dyse, dyce and by 1479 to dice. Dice was sometimes used as a singular (with plural dices) between 1400 and 1700. —v. Before 1399 dyce to cut into cubes; later to play with dice (about 1415); from dyce, n., dice.

dichotomy n. 1610, borrowed from Greek dichotomía a cutting in half (dícha in two + témnein to cut).

dicker v. 1802, American English, perhaps related to earlier dicker, n., a unit or package of ten items, especially hides (1799); developed from Middle English diker, with the same meaning (1275); earlier dyker (1266), suggesting Old English dicor* (compare German Decher bale of ten hides); ultimately an early borrowing from Latin decuria parcel of ten, from decem TEN.

dicotyledon n. 1727, New Latin dicotyledones, formed from Greek di- twice + kotylēdōn cup-shaped, hollow, from kotylē cup, hollow.

dictate v. 1592, say aloud for another to write down; borrowed from Latin dictātus, past participle of dictāre say often, prescribe, frequentative form of dicere tell, say; for suffix see -ATE¹. The sense of to command, is first recorded in 1621. —n. 1594, order that must be obeyed; borrowed from Latin dictātum, noun use of dictātus, past participle of dictāre; see verb. —dictation n. Before 1656, authoritative utterance; borrowed from Late Latin dictationem (nominative dictatiō), from dictāre dictate; for suffix see -TION. —dictator n. Before 1387, Roman judge invested with absolute power; borrowed, perhaps by influence of Old French dictateur, from Latin dictātor, from dictāre dictate; for suffix see OR². —dictatorship n. (1586) diction n. 1700; earlier, a word (1542); borrowed through Middle French diction, or directly from Late Latin dictiōnem (nominative dictiō), from Latin, a saying, expression, word, from dic-, stem of dicere speak, tell, say; related to Latin dicāre proclaim, dedicate; for suffix see -TION.

dictionary n. 1526, borrowed from Medieval Latin dictionarium collection of words and phrases, from Latin dictiōnem (nominative dictiō) word, see DICTION; for suffix see -ARY.

dictum n. 1706, formal statement, saying; earlier, edict (1670); replacing earlier dite (probably before 1400). Both English words borrowed from Latin dictum thing said, from neuter of dictus, past participle of dicere say; see DICTION.

didactic adj. 1658, borrowed, probably through French didactique, from Greek didaktikós apt at teaching, from didaktós taught (from didáskein teach); for suffix see -IC.

die¹ v. stop living. About 1300 dien, alteration of earlier deien (probably about 1200), corresponding to, and possibly borrowed from Old Icelandic deyja; cognate with Old Saxon dōian to die, Old High German touwen (from Proto-Germanic daujanan*). The word die was not recorded in Old English, though the related words DEAD and DEATH were, and some scholars have posited an Old English diegan*, dēgan*. In Old English the meaning of die was expressed by steorfan (see STARVE), sweltan die of heat (see SWELTER), and wesan deað be dead. —die-hard n. (1844); adj. (1871) die² n. one of a pair of dice. Probably before 1300 dy (plural dys dice); later de (before 1338); borrowed from Old French de, of uncertain origin; but represented widely in Romance languages, as in Spanish, Portuguese, and Italian dado, and in Provençal dat and Catalan dau. Some scholars trace these words to Latin datum given, in the sense of that which is given or decreed, especially by lot or fortune. In English, dice is by far the more frequent word in referring to the game; die usually refers to a stamping block or tool, a sense that is first recorded in 1699.

diesel or Diesel n. 1894, in allusion to Rudolf Diesel, German mechanical engineer, who designed this engine in the 1890's —v. 1971, American English, from the noun.

diet¹ n. food or special selection of food. Probably before 1200 diète, borrowed from Old French diète, from Medieval Latin dieta, from Latin diaeta prescribed way of life, from Greek diāita, originally, way of life, regimen, dwelling, from di-aitasthai lead one's life, live, and from diaitân, originally, separate, select (food and drink), frequentative form of di-ainysthai* take apart (dia- apart + ainysthai take). —v. Before 1376 diēten, borrowed from Old French diēter, from diète, n. —dietary adj. 1614, adjective use of earlier dietary, n. (about 1450); borrowed from Medieval Latin dietarius, adj., n., from Latin diaetārius, from diaeta, see diet, n.; for suffix see -ARY. —dietetic adj. 1579, borrowed through Middle French diététique, from Greek diaitētikós, from diaitēsis way of life, from diaitasthai lead one's life, live; for suffix see -IC. —dietitian n. 1846, formed from English diet, n. + -itian (alteration of -ician, as in physician), replacing earlier dietist (1607).

diet² n. formal assembly. About 1450; later, a national law-making body (1565); borrowed from Medieval Latin dieta, variant of the commoner diaeta daily office, of the Church, daily duty, assembly, meeting of councilors. But this word dieta, though from Greek diāita course of life (and therefore from the same source as DIET¹), came to be associated in a peculiar way with Latin diēs day; see DIARY.

dif- a form of the prefix dis- before f in a few words borrowed from Latin, as in differ, diffract, diffuse; formed in Latin by assimilation of the s to the following consonant (f).

differ v. About 1380 differen be different; earlier differen put off, defer (about 1375); borrowed from Old French diferer, learned borrowing from Latin and borrowed directly from Latin differre to set apart, differ (dif- + ferre carry; see BEAR). The distinction in form in modern English (defer, differ) comes from a variation in stress, the transitive senses becoming defer and the intransitive senses becoming differ.

difference n. 1340, borrowed from Old French différence, learned borrowing from Latin differentia, from differentem (nominative differēns), present participle of differre to set apart, DIFFER. —different adj. About 1384, borrowed from Old French different, from Latin differentem (nominative differēns), present participle of differre DIFFER. —differential adj. 1647, borrowed from Medieval Latin differentialis, from Latin differentia, see DIFFERENCE; for suffix see -IAL. —differentiate v. 1816, formed in English on the model of French différencier, from différent different, from Old French different, from Latin differentem; for suffix see -ATE¹.

difficulty n. 1380, borrowed from Old French difficulté, from Latin difficultātem (nominative difficultās), from difficilis hard (dis- not, away from + facilis easy, FACILE); for suffix see -TY². —difficult adj. Before 1400, back formation from Middle English difficulte difficulty.

diffident adj. Before 1460, borrowed from Latin diffidentem (nominative diffidens), present participle of diffidere to mistrust, lack confidence (dis- away + fidere to trust). —diffidence n. Before 1400, borrowed from Latin diffidentia lack of confidence, distrust, from diffidentem, present participle of diffidere.

diffract v. 1803, probably a back formation from earlier diffraction; but analyzed as borrowed from Latin diffract-, stem of diffRACTUS, past participle of diffRINGERE break in pieces, shatter (dis- apart + frangere to BREAK). —diffraction n. 1671, borrowed from French diffraction, from New Latin diffractionem (nominative diffractione), from Latin diffRACT-, stem of diffRINGERE break in pieces; for suffix see -TION.

diffuse adj. 1413, confused, obscure; implying the concrete sense of scattered, unrecorded before 1475; borrowed from Latin diffusus, past participle of diffundere scatter, pour out (dis- apart, in every direction + fundere pour). —v. Before 1400, from the adjective. —diffusion n. About 1385, from Latin diffusionem (nominative diffusiō), from diffūd-, stem of diffundere scatter; for suffix see -SION.

dig v. Probably before 1200 diggen, of uncertain origin; perhaps ultimately related to DIKE and DITCH. The slang sense of understand, appreciate, is first recorded in American English in 1936. —n. 1674–91, tool for digging; from the verb. —digger n. 1440, formed from English dig, v. + -er¹.

digest n. Before 1387, a collection of laws; borrowed from Latin digesta collection of writings, from neuter plural of digerere, past participle of digerere to separate, divide, arrange (dis- apart + gerere to carry). —v. Before 1398 digesten arrange in the mind or in a treatise; assimilate food in the stomach and intestines, borrowed from Latin digestus, past participle of digerere to separate, arrange (dis- apart + gerere to carry). —digestible adj. About 1387–95, borrowed from Old French digestible, from Latin digestibilis, from digest-, past participle stem of digerere; for suffix see -IBLE. —digestion n. About 1395, borrowed from Old French digestion, from Latin digestiōnem (nominative digestiō) a dividing or dissolving of food, digestion, from diges-, stem of digerere; for suffix see -TION. —digestive adj. 1425; earlier, as a noun; borrowed from Old French digestif, digestive, from Latin digestivus, from past participle stem of digerere; for suffix see -IVE.

digit n. Probably before 1400, borrowed from Latin digitus finger (because the numerals below ten were originally supposed to be counted on the fingers), from earlier dicitus*, originally meaning pointer, related to Latin dicere tell, say, indicāre point out. —digital adj. Probably about 1425, of a number below ten; borrowed from Latin digitalis, from digitus finger; for suffix see -AL¹.

digitalis n. 1664, the foxglove plant (from which the medicine is derived), New Latin digitalis, possibly adopted by influence of Middle French digitale, from Latin digitalis pertaining to the finger, from digitus finger. The name was coined in 1542 by Leonhard Fuchs, German physician and botanist, in allusion to its German name Fingerhut thimble (after Medieval Latin digitale thimble), so called from the shape of the plant's corolla.

dignify v. About 1449 dignifien to honor, exalt; earlier, to judge something worthwhile to do (probably before 1425); borrowed from Middle French dignifier, learned borrowing from Late Latin dignificāre make worthy, from Latin dignus worthy, see DIGNITY; for suffix see -FY. —dignified adj. (1667) dignity n. Probably before 1200 dignete, borrowed from Old French digneté, learned borrowing from Latin dignitatem (nominative dignitās) worthiness, from dignus worthy, proper, fitting, related to Latin decēre be proper or decent; for suffix see -ITY. —dignitary n. (1672) digress v. 1529, turn aside; get off the main subject; earlier, to translate, depart from the language of an original; borrowed from Latin digressus, past participle of digredī to deviate (dis- apart, aside + gradī to step, go). Alternatively, digress may be a back formation from digression. —digression n. About 1385, borrowed from Old French digression, or directly from Latin digressiōnem (nominative digressiō), from digredī to deviate; for suffix see -SION.

dike n. About 1250 dik a ditch, wall; developed from Old English (847) dīc narrow place dug in the earth, trench, DITCH; cognate with Old Saxon and Old Frisian dik mound, dam, Middle Dutch dijk (modern Dutch dijk), Middle High German tīch pond (modern German Teich), Old Icelandic dīki marsh, ditch, from Proto-Germanic dīk-*. —v. About 1300 diken to make a ditch or a dike, developed from Old English dician, from the noun.

dilapidate v. 1570, probably a back formation of dilapidation, but usually analyzed as a borrowing, perhaps influenced by Middle French dilapider, from Latin dilapidāus, past participle of dilapidāre. —dilapidation n. About 1425 (Scottish); borrowed from Late Latin dilapidatiōnem (nominative dilapidatiō), from Latin dilapidāre pelt with stones, ruin, destroy (dis- asunder + lapidāre throw stones at, from lapis, genitive lapidis stone); for suffix see -TION.

dilate v. Before 1393, describe at length, borrowed from Old French dilater, learned borrowing from Latin dilatāre make wider, enlarge (dis- apart + lātus wide). The sense of make wider or larger, is first recorded in English probably before 1400. —dilation n. 1598, formed from English dilate (on the erroneous assumption that the ending is the suffix -ate) + -ion. This form has largely replaced earlier dilatation, n. (about 1390); borrowed from Middle French dilatation.

dilatory adj. Probably before 1450 delatarye; later dilatory (before 1475); borrowed through Middle French dilatatoire and directly from Latin dilatātorius, from dilatōr a procrastinator, from dilatāus, a form serving as past participle of differre delay, DEFER¹; for suffix see -ORY.

dilemma n. 1523, borrowed from Late Latin dilemma, from Greek dilēmma (genitive dilēmματος) double proposition (di-two + lēmma, genitive lēmmatos premise, anything taken, from a stem lēph-, originally lāph-, which figures in some of the forms of lambánein to take, but was once part of an entirely different verb).

dilettante n. About 1733, one delighted by or fond of the fine arts, Italian dilettante a lover of music or painting, from dilettare to delight, from Latin dēlectāre DELIGHT.

diligence n. 1340, borrowed from Old French diligence attention, care, learned borrowing from Latin diligentia attentiveness, carefulness, from diligentem (nominative diligēns) attentive, assiduous, careful, originally the present participle of diligere value highly, love, choose (dis- apart + legere choose, gather); for suffix see -ENCE. —diligent adj. 1340, borrowed from Old French diligent, learned borrowing from Latin diligentem (nominative diligēns), present participle of diligere value highly; for suffix see -ENT.

dill n. 1373 dill; earlier dile (about 1150), found in Old English (before 700) dile; cognate with Old Saxon dilli dill, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch dille, Old High German tilli (modern German Dill with D- from Low German), Danish dild, and Swedish dill.

dilly n. 1935, American English, from earlier English dilly (1909), adj., delightful, delicious, of unknown origin.

dilute v. About 1555, borrowed from Latin dilūtus, past participle of dilūere dissolve, wash away, dilute (dis- apart + -luere, combining form of lavare to wash, LAVE); see DELUGE. —adj. 1605, borrowed from Latin dilūtus, past participle of dilūere; see verb. —dilution n. 1646, formed from English dilute + -ion. Late Latin dilūtōnem (in St. Jerome) had a special sense of refutation, and was probably not the source of the English word, which had the literal sense of act of making thinner or watering down when it appeared.

dim adj. Old English dimm dark, gloomy (before 1000); cognate with Old Frisian dimm dark, dusky, dim, Old Icelandic dimmr, from Proto-Germanic dimbaz*, and, Old High German timber; related to DAMP. —v. Before 1200, from the adjective.

dime n. 1786, American English, silver coin worth ten cents; found in Middle English dime a tenth, tithe (about 1378); borrowed from Old French dime, earlier disme, from Latin decima (pars) tenth (part), from decem TEN.

dimension n. Before 1398 dimencioun measurement, size, borrowed from Latin dimēnsionem (nominative dimēnsiō), from stem of dimētiri to measure out (dī-, dis- + mētiri to MEASURE); for suffix see -SION.

diminish v. 1417 deminishen, a blend of two verbs of similar meaning: 1) About 1384 diminuen detract, disparage; later, reduce, lessen (1410); borrowed from Old French diminuer make small, learned borrowing from Latin diminuere break into small pieces, variant of dēminuere lessen, diminish (dē- completely + minuere make small); and 2) Before 1382 myrushen make small, diminish; earlier, menusen (probably before 1350); borrowed from Old French menuisier, from Vulgar Latin minūtiāre*, altered (by influence of Late Latin minūtiae small pieces) from Late Latin minūtāre, frequentative form of Latin minuere make small, from minus smaller, (originally) small. Related to MINCE, MINOR, and MINUTE² small; for suffix see *-ISH*².

diminution n. About 1303 dymynucyun a lessening or decrease, borrowed from Old French diminution, learned borrowing from Latin diminūtiōnem, variant of dēminūtiōnem (nominative dēminūtiō), from dēminuere DIMINISH; for suffix see -TION.

diminutive n. Before 1398 dymynutyf; borrowed from Old French diminutif (feminine diminutive), from Latin diminūtivum, variant of dēminūtivum*, from dēminūtivus* small, from dēminuere DIMINISH; for suffix see -IVE. —adj. Before 1398, borrowed from Old French diminutif (feminine diminutive), from Latin dēminūtivus*, variant of dēminūtivus small.

dimity n. 1440 demyt; later dimite; borrowed probably directly from Late Greek dimitos of double thread (Greek di- double + mitos warp thread), possibly reinforced by later Italian dimiti plural of dimito (1454).

dimple n. Probably before 1400 dympull; earlier in a place name Kerlingdimpil (1200–10); of uncertain origin, but perhaps cognate with Old High German tumphilō whirlpool (modern German Tümpel pool), from Proto-Germanic dumpilaz* and tupfen to wash, see DIP; for suffix see *-LE*¹.

din n. Probably before 1200 dine, developed from Old English (before 1000) dyne; cognate with Old High German tuni din, Old Icelandic dynr, from Proto-Germanic duniz*. —v. Probably before 1200, dialectal dunien; later dinen (about 1250); developed from Old English dynnan to resound (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon dunnian sound forth, Middle High German tünen to roar, and Old Icelandic dynja to rumble; related to the noun.

dine v. About 1300 dinen, borrowed from Old French disner, dīner, originally, take the first meal of the day, from unaccented stem of Gallo-Romance disjūnāre*, from disjejunāre* to break one's fast (Latin dis- undo + Late Latin jejunāre to fast, from Latin jejunus fasting, hungry). n. 1815; earlier, in diner out (1807–08); formed from English dine, v. + *-er*¹. —dining room (1601) ding v. 1819, possibly abstracted from ding-dong, n. (1659), of imitative origin. —n. 1749; possibly earlier (though it is ad-verbal in use); possibly abstracted from ding-dong, v. (about 1560).

dinghy or dingey n. 1810, borrowed from Hindi ḍirigī, variant of ḍirigī small boat, perhaps from Sanskrit drōṇa-m wooden trough, related to drū-s wood, TREE.

dingy adj. 1736, (Kentish dialect), dirty; of uncertain origin; for suffix see -Y¹. A figurative sense, shabby or squalid, is found in 1854.

dinky adj. 1858, earlier, neat or trim (1788), from Scottish dialect dink finely dressed, trim (1508); of unknown origin; for suffix see -Y¹.

dinner n. About 1300 diner midday meal; borrowed from Old French disner, dîner, noun use of the infinitive disner, dîner, to DINE; for suffix see -ER³.

dinosaur n. 1841, borrowed from New Latin dinosaurius, from Greek deinós terrible + saúros lizard, of unknown origin.

dint n. Probably about 1200 dint; earlier dialectal dunt (probably before 1200); developed from Old English dynt, blow dealt in fighting (before 900); cognate with Old Icelandic dynt blow, kick (modern Icelandic dintur dint), dytt, from Proto-Germanic duntiz*. The phrase by dint of by force of or by means of, is first recorded probably before 1400.

diocese n. Before 1338 dyocise, borrowed from Old French diocese, learned borrowing from Late Latin diocēsis, variant of diocēsis, from Greek diolkēsis diocese, province; originally, economy, housekeeping, from diokēin manage a house, administer (dia- thoroughly + oikein live in, manage, from oikos house, dialectal wōikos).

dip v. About 1150 dipen immerse in liquid; later dippen to baptize (probably about 1200); developed from Old English (about 975) dyppan baptize by immersion (from Proto-Germanic dupjanan*), related to diepan immerse, dip, from Proto-Germanic daupijanan*; see DEEP. —n. 1599, from the verb. —dipper n. About 1395 dippere a diving waterfowl; earlier, in a surname Dypere (1310, and dypere, 1296–97); formed from Middle English dipere, v. + -er¹. The meaning of a utensil for dipping up water, etc., is recorded in American English about 1783.

diphtheria n. 1857, New Latin diphtheria, from French diphthérie, from Greek diphthērā hide, leather (of unknown origin); from the tough membrane developed in the throat. The French word replaced earlier diphthērite (1821).

diphthong n. Probably about 1475 dypon; later diptonge (1483); borrowed from Middle French diptongue, from Late Latin diphthongus, variant of Latin diphthongus, from Greek diphthongos (di- double + phthóngos sound, voice; related to phthēn-gesthai utter, speak loudly).

diploma n. About 1645, official state document, charter; borrowed from Latin diplōma, from Greek diplōma (genitive diplōmātos) license, chart, paper folded double, from diplōn to double, fold over, from diplōs double, from di- two + -plo-s, fold. The meaning “an academic diploma” appears in English in 1682.

diplomacy n. 1796, borrowed from French diplomatie, from diplomate diplomat, on the pattern of aristocratie aristocracy, aristocrate aristocrat; for suffix see -CY. —diplomat n. 1813, either a back formation from English diplomatic, or borrowed from French diplomate, back formation from diplomatique diplomatic. —diplomatic adj. 1711, pertaining to official documents; borrowed from New Latin diplomaticus (1695), from Latin diplōma (genitive diplōmātis) official document conferring a privilege, see DIPLOMA; for suffix see -IC. In the 1780’s diplomatic referred to official documents exchanged between countries. The sense of tactful appeared in 1826.

dipterous adj. 1773, borrowed from New Latin dipterus two-winged, after French diptère, from Greek dípteros (di- two + pterón wing); for suffix see -OUS.

dire adj. 1567, borrowed from Latin dirus fearful, awful, boding ill, from Oscan and Umbrian; cognate with Greek deinós fearful, terrible, deós fear.

direct v. About 1385 directen to address or direct (a letter, document, spoken words); borrowed from Latin directus straight, past participle of dirigere set straight (di-, from dis- apart + regere to guide). —adj. 1391, borrowed, possibly through Old French direct, and from Latin directus, past participle of dirigere set straight. —direction n. About 1385, guidance, regulation; borrowed through Old French direction and directly from Latin directiōnem (nominative directiō), from dirēg-, stem of dirigere set straight; for suffix see -TION. —directive adj. About 1454, borrowed through Middle French directif, directive and from Medieval Latin directivus, from direct-, past participle stem of Latin dirigere. —n. 1642, from the adjective. For suffix see -IVE. —director n. About 1454, a guide; formed from Middle English directen + -or², and probably borrowed from Anglo-French directour, from Late Latin director, from dirigere; for suffix see -OR². —directory n. Before 1449, a guide; borrowed from Late Latin directōrium, from Latin directōrius that directs, from direct-, past participle stem of Latin dirigere; for suffix see -ORY.

dirge n. Probably before 1200 dirige memorial service; borrowed from Latin dirige direct! (imperative of dirigere to DIRECT); probably from its use in the Latin antiphon Dirige, Domine, Deus Meus, “Direct, O Lord, my God,” taken from Psalm 5:9 to open the Matins service in the Office of the Dead. The contracted form dirge is first recorded in 1430, though earlier derge exists (1389).

dirigible n. 1885, probably by influence of French dirigeable, from the adjective, meaning capable of being directed or guided (1581, formed in English from Latin dirigere DIRECT + English -ible, as if from a Latin word dirigibilis*).

dirt n. 1434 dyrt something worthless or degrading; probably before 1425 dird, dert, alteration by transposition of r and i, of earlier drit, drytt mud, dirt, dung (before 1300); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic drit excrement, related to drīta defecate; cognate with Old English drītan, Middle Dutch drieten, modern Dutch drijten, and Old High German trīzan, from Proto-Germanic drītanan*). —dirty adj. Probably before 1425 dyrtty, alteration of earlier dritty (before 1398), formed from Middle English drit dirt + *-y*¹. —v. 1591, from the adjective.

dis- a prefix meaning: 1 opposite of, lack of, not, as in dishonest = not honest. 2 do the opposite of, as in disallow = do the opposite of allow. 3 apart, away, as in discard. Middle English dis- (earlier des-); borrowed from Old French des-, from Latin dis- apart, or directly from Latin dis-, cognate with Old English, Old Frisian, and Old Saxon te- apart, Old High German zi-, ze-, Greek diá through.

In Latin dis- became dif- before f and dī- before most of the voiced consonants (b, d, l, m, n, r, v and sometimes g and j); these changes are reflected in words taken from Latin and preserving the Latin form, such as differ, digest, dilute, divert.

disabled adj. 1444, formed from Middle English dis- + abled, past participle of ablen, v. make able or fit.

disagree v. 1473–74, borrowed from Middle French désagréer (dés- dis- + agréer to AGREE). —disagreeable adj. Probably before 1400, borrowed from Old French desagréable (des- dis- + agréable, see AGREEABLE).

disappoint v. 1494 disapointen frustrate the expectation of; earlier, dispossess of appointed office (1434); borrowed from Middle French desappointer undo the appointment of (des- dis- + appointer APPOINT). —disappointment n. 1614, formed from English disappoint + -ment; possibly by influence of French désappointement.

disarm v. About 1380, borrowed from Old French desarmer (des- dis- + armer to ARM²). —disarmament n. 1795, formed from English dis- + armament, possibly influenced by French désarmement.

disarray v. Before 1387; formed from English dis- + array, v.; probably modeled on Old French desareer to put in disorder. —n. About 1415, from the verb, perhaps by influence of Old French desarei*.

disaster n. 1591, borrowed from Middle French désastre, from Italian disastro (dis- away, without, + astro star, because an unfavorable position of a star or planet was thought to cause such mishaps or calamities). —disastrous adj. 1586 desastrous ill-starred; later, calamitous (1603); borrowed from Middle French désastreux, from earlier Italian disastroso, from disastro disaster; for suffix see -OUS.

disburse v. 1530 disbourse, borrowed from Middle French desbourser (des-, apart + bourse; see BURSAR). —disbursement n. 1596, formed from English disburse + -ment, after Middle French déboursement.

disc n. variant of DISK, modeled on Latin discus.

discard v. Before 1586, discharge, dismiss; later, reject a playing card from the hand (1591), and cast aside (1598); formed from English dis- away + *card*¹, n. —n. 1742, from the verb.

discern v. About 1380 discernen perceive, distinguish; borrowed from Old French discerner distinguish, separate, and directly as a learned borrowing in English from Latin discernere (dis- off, away + cernere distinguish, separate). —discernible adj. 1586 discernable, borrowed from Middle French discernable, from Old French discerner; for suffix see -IBLE. The early spelling in English with -able gradually changed to -ible in imitation of Latin (found in Late Latin discernibilis) after 1650. —discernment n. 1586, formed from English discern + -ment.

discharge v. Before 1338, borrowed from Old French deschargier unload, from Late Latin discarricare (dis- do the opposite of + caricare load). —n. 1390, borrowed from Old French descharge act of unloading, from the Old French verb.

disciple n. Probably before 1200 deciple; later disciple (before 1225); developed from Old English (about 900); borrowed from Latin discipulus pupil. As capulus handle, was formed from capere take hold of, so discipulus was formed from a lost compound discipere* to grasp intellectually, analyze thoroughly (dis- apart + capere take; compare its frequentative form discipitare debate; see CAPTIVE). Middle English deciple, disciple was influenced by Old French deciple, disciple. —disciplinary n. 1593, formed in English from Medieval Latin disciplinarius + English -AN. —disciplinary adj. 1593, borrowed from Medieval Latin disciplinarius pertaining to discipline, from Latin disciplina instruction. —discipline n. Probably before 1200; borrowed through Old French descepline, and directly from Latin disciplina instruction given to a disciple, from discipulus DISCIPLE. —v. About 1300, probably borrowed through Old French descepliner and directly from Medieval Latin disciplinare chastise, from Latin disciplina instruction.

disclaim v. 1434, borrowed through Anglo-French disclaimer, Old French desclamer (des- dis- + clamer CLAIM); and through Anglo-Latin disclamare renounce (Latin dis- dis- + clāmāre cry out, CLAIM). —disclaimer n. About 1436, borrowing of Anglo-French disclaimer, the infinitive used as a noun.

disclose v. Before 1393 desclosen, disclosen, borrowed from Old French desclos, past participle of desclore (des- dis- + clōre to CLOSE). —disclosure n. Before 1598, formed from English disclose + -ure, on the model of closure.

disco n. 1964, American English, shortened form of DISCOTHEQUE. In 1975 disco was applied to a kind of music played in discotheques.

discolor v. About 1380 discolouren, borrowed from Old French discolourer (des- dis- + colourer to color, from Latin colōrāre to COLOR). —discoloration n. 1642, formed from English discolorate (probably before 1425, borrowed from Medieval Latin discolorat-, past participle stem of discolorare, supplanting Latin dēcolōrāre) + -ation.

discomfit v. Probably before 1200 descumfit defeated, overthrown, borrowed from Old French desconfit, past participle of desconfire to defeat, destroy (des- not, + confire make, prepare, accomplish). The Old French word desconfit was borrowed into English as a participle ("he was desconfit") but subsequently (about 1300) was considered as the stem of a verb, desconfiten, and a new past participle and past tense, disconfited, developed in the 1300's.

The sense of disconcert is first recorded in English in 1530, probably by association with discomfort, both words having the same pronunciation in some speech areas. —discomfiture n. Probably before 1350 discomfitoure act of being overthrown; borrowed from Old French desconfiture, from desconfit; for suffix see -URE.

disconnection n. 1735 disconnexion, British variant of disconnection (1875, English dis- + connection, British connexion). —disconnect v. 1770, possibly a back formation from disconnection, disconnexion, or formed from English dis- + connect.

disconsolate adj. About 1385 disconsolat cheerless, depressing, borrowed, perhaps by influence of Old French desconseillé discouraged, from Medieval Latin disconsolatus comfortless (Latin dis- away + cōsolātus, past participle of cōsolārī CONSOLE). The meaning of unhappy, forlorn, appeared probably before 1400.

discord n. About 1230 descorde, later discord, (1325); borrowed from Old French discorde disagreement, learned borrowing from Latin discordia discord, from discors (genitive discordis) disagreeing, discordant; and borrowed from Old French descord, discord disagreement, discord, from descorder, discorder to disagree, learned borrowing from Latin discordāre, from discors (genitive discordis) disagreeing, discordant (dis- apart + cor, genitive cordis HEART). The musical sense of dissonance is first recorded before 1398. —discordant adj. About 1380, borrowed from Old French discordant, discordant, present participle of descorder, discorder.

discotheque n. 1954, borrowing of French discothèque nightclub with recorded music for dancing, record library (1932), from Italian discoteca (1927) record collection, record library (disco phonograph record, -teca collection, as in biblioteca book collection, library).

discount n. 1622 discount deduction, alteration (influenced by English dis- + count) of French décompte, from Old French descont, from desconter count out (des- away + conter to COUNT). —v. 1629 discompt, alteration (influenced by English dis-) of French décompter, from Old French desconter count out.

discourage v. 1437 discoragen dishearten; borrowed from Middle French descourager, from Old French descoragier (des- away + corage COURAGE).

discourse n. About 1380, process of understanding or reasoning; alteration (influenced by English course) of Latin discursus (genitive discursūs) a running about, in Late Latin conversation, from the stem of discurrere run about (dis- apart + currere to run). The sense of a discussion, conversation is first recorded in English in 1559, and a formal speech or writing, in 1581. —v. Before 1547, run or travel over a region (the literal sense of Latin discurrere), from discourse, n. The sense of hold discourse, converse, is first recorded in 1559.

discourtesy n. 1555, formed from English dis- + courtesy, probably by influence of Middle French descourtoisie, and possibly Italian discortesia. —discourteous adj. 1578, perhaps formed from English discourtesy + -ous, or independently from dis- + courteous, probably by influence of Middle French descortese, and possibly Italian discortese.

discover v. Before 1325, reveal, disclose, uncover, borrowed from Old French descovrir, from Late Latin discooperire (Latin dis- opposite of + cooperire to cover up). —discoverer n. Before 1325, an informer, borrowed from Old French descovrèor, from descovrir. —discovery n. 1553, probably formed in English on analogy with recover, recovery, deliver, delivery.

discredit v. 1559, formed from English dis- + credit, probably by influence of Middle French discréditer, and possibly Italian discreditare.

discreet adj. About 1385 discret, borrowed from Old French discret, learned borrowing from Latin discrētus separated, distinct (in Medieval Latin, discerning, careful), from past participle of discernere distinguish, DISCERN. During the 1400's discret, discrete, and discreet were variant spellings for all senses of discreet and discrete, but in the late 1500's discreet was associated primarily with careful, prudent, and discrete remained the spelling of the meanings in music, philosophy, medicine, etc., where knowledge of Latin discrētus was more widely known.

discrepancy n. About 1425, borrowed from Latin discrepantia (probably influenced by earlier discrepant, adj.; 1450, and by Old French discrepance), from discrepantem, present participle of discrepare sound differently, differ (dis- apart, off + crepare to rattle, crack); for suffix see -ANCY.

discrete adj. About 1385, borrowed from Old French discrete, learned borrowing from Latin discrētus separated, past participle of discernere distinguish, DISCERN. Although the word is first recorded in English in the sense of separate, distinct, about 1385, it did not come into general use until the late 1500's.

discretion n. About 1303 dyscrecyun, borrowed through Old French discretion, or directly from Late Latin discrētiōnem (nominative discrētiō) discernment, from Latin discrētiōnem separation, distinction, from discrē-, stem of discernere to separate, distinguish; for suffix see -TION.

discriminate + v. 1628, borrowed from Latin discriminātus, past participle of discrimināre to divide, separate, distinguish, from discrimen (genitive discriminis) separation, formed as the noun to discernere distinguish, DISCERN for suffix see -ATE¹. The sense of make distinctions of race or color is first recorded in American English in 1866. —discrimination n. 1646, distinction, 1866, racial distinction; borrowed from Latin discriminātiōnem (nominative discriminātiō), from discrimināre discriminate; for suffix see -TION.

discursive + adj. 1599, borrowed through Middle French discursif, discursive, from Medieval Latin discursivus, from Latin discursus (genitive discursūs), a running about; see DISCOURSE; for suffix see -IVE.

discus n. 1656, borrowed from Latin discus discus, disk, from Greek diskos disk, quoit, platter.

discuss v. About 1380 discussen examine, investigate; borrowed from Latin discussus, past participle of discutere strike asunder, break up (dis- apart + quater to shake). The meaning talk over, debate, is first recorded in 1448. —discussion n. About 1340, examination, judicial decision; borrowed from Old French discussion, from Late Latin discussio examination, discussion, from Latin discussio a shaking, from discuss-, stem of discutere strike asunder; for suffix see -sion.

disdain v. About 1380 disdaignen, probably borrowed from Old French desdeignier (des- do the opposite of + deignier treat as worthy, DEIGN). —n. Before 1338 desdegne, alteration of earlier dedeyne (about 1300); borrowed from Old French desdeign, desdaign, from desdeignier to disdain.

disease n. Before 1338 deses absence of ease, discomfort, borrowed from Old French desaise (des- without, away, + aise EASE). The sense of sickness (first recorded as desese before 1393) often had to be inferred from the context, with reference to a specific “dis-ease” or discomfort. —diseased adj. Before 1398 desesed, formed from the past participle of Middle English disesen, v., afflict with hardship, vex, injure.

disfigure v. Probably about 1375, disguise; later, deform, borrowed from Old French desfigurer, from Medieval Latin diffigūre, from Latin dis- + figūra figure, from figūrāre to figure.

disgrace v. About 1549, disfigure, borrowed from Middle French disgracier, from Italian disgraziare, from disgrazia misfortune, deformity (dis- + grazia grace). The meaning of bring shame upon is first recorded in 1593. —n. 1581, borrowed from Middle French disgrace misfortune, deformity, from Italian disgrazia. —disgraceful adj. (1591) disgruntle v. 1682, from dis- entirely, very + obsolete gruntle to grunt, grumble (Middle English gruntelen, probably before 1425), frequentative form of GRUNT; for suffix see -LE³.

disguise v. Probably before 1300 degysen change appearance to hide identity, also dysgysen dress up in an elaborate way (about 1303); both forms borrowed from Old French desguisier (des- away, off + guise style, appearance, GUISE). —n. Before 1400, from the verb.

disgust n. 1598, borrowed from Middle French desgoust strong dislike, repugnance (literally) distaste, from desgouster have a distaste for (des- opposite of + gouster to taste). —v. 1601, to dislike; later, offend the taste or smell of (1650); borrowed from Middle French desgouster to dislike.

dish n. Probably before 1200 disch, developed from Old English (about 700) disc plate, bowl, platter, corresponding to, and possibly borrowed through, a West Germanic word, represented by Old Saxon disk table, and Old High German tisc dish, table (modern German Tisch table); all borrowed from Latin discus dish, platter, quoit, from Greek diskos disk, platter. The meaning of a particular variety of food served, is first recorded about 1450. —v. 1381 dischen serve food; from the noun. —dishcloth n. (1828, earlier dish clout, before 1529).

dishearten v. 1599, formed from English dis- + hearten.

disheveled adj. About 1410 discheveled, alteration of earlier dischevele (about 1380) having disarranged or unkempt hair; borrowed from Old French deschevelé, past participle of descheveler to disarrange the hair (des- apart, + chevel hair).

dishonest adj. 1390, borrowed from Old French deshoneste, desoneste, perhaps from Medieval Latin dishonestus* (Latin dis- not + honestus honorable, HONEST). —dishonor v. About 1250, borrowed from Old French deshonorer, desonorer, from Latin dis- not + honōrem honor. —dishonorable adj. About 1533, formed from English dis- + honorable.

disinherit v. About 1450, formed from English dis- + inherit and replacing disherein. Borrowed from Middle French before 1400.

disinterested adj. Before 1612, having no feeling of wanting to know, see, do, etc., unconcerned, in Donne's writings, perhaps replacing his earlier use of disinterested (1610) though Donne may have considered this a different word because he uses disinterested to mean “impartial”; both words formed from English dis- not, without + interested and interested, the latter alternatively formed possibly from disinterest (in spite of its date 1622), borrowed from French désintéresser to rid of interest in. First recorded use of the spelling disinterested to mean “impartial” is 1659; earlier use meant “unconcerned” (before 1612). First recorded use of disinterested to mean “impartial” is 1610; earlier use meant “unconcerned” (1603).

disjoint v. Probably 1440, to disrupt or destroy; from English disjoint, n., a dilemma, distress (about 1385), a use of the noun probably influenced by Old French desjoint, past participle of desjoindre to disjoint.

disk or disc n. 1664 disk a round, flat surface like that which the sun or moon presents; later disc a discus or quoit (about 1727); borrowed from Latin discus quoit, discus, dish, from Greek diskos; see DISH.

The meaning phonograph record is first recorded in 1888, a year after Emile Berliner patented the Gramophone, which, unlike Edison's phonograph (1877), used a flat disk instead of a cylinder. —diskette n. floppy disk (flexible magnetic disk for storing information electronically). 1975, formed from English disk + -ette (diminutive suffix).

dislocate v. 1605, from earlier adjective or past participle dislocate out of joint (before 1408); borrowed from Medieval Latin dislocatus, past participle of dislocare put out of place (Latin dis- away + locare to place, LOCATE); for suffix see -ATE¹. —dislocation n. Before 1400, borrowed through Old French dislocation, and directly from Medieval Latin dislocationem (nominative dislocatio), from dislocare dislocate; for suffix see -TION.

dislodge v. Probably about 1408 disloggen, borrowed from Old French desloger to leave or cause to leave a lodging place (des- do the opposite of + loger to LODGE).

disloyalty n. About 1410 disloyalte unfaithful or sinful behavior; borrowed from Middle French desloyaulte, Old French desloialteit (des- not + loial loyal); for suffix see -TY². —disloyal adj. 1417 (inferred from disloyally); borrowed from dismal adj. Probably about 1400, unlucky, unpropitious, developed from earlier dismale, n., evil days, unlucky days (about 1300, originally in reference to the unpropitious days of the medieval calendar); borrowed from Anglo-French dismal (1250), corresponding to Old French (li) dis mals (the) bad days, from Medieval Latin dies mali evil or unlucky days (Latin dies days + mali, plural of malus bad). Calendars of the Middle Ages marked two days of each month as unlucky days.

Middle French desloyal, Old French desloial (des- not + loial loyal). An obsolete form disleal appears in 1590, borrowed from Italian disleale.

The meaning of gloomy, dreary, is first recorded in English in 1593, relating to a dreary or woeful sound.

dismantle v. 1579, to tear down fortifications or the like; later, to take apart (1601); borrowed from Middle French desmanteler to tear down the walls of a fortress, (literally) divest of a mantle or cloak (des- off, away + manteler to cloak, MANTLE).

dismay v. About 1300 demayen; earlier dismaien (probably before 1300); apparently borrowed from Anglo-French, Old French demaier*, desmaier* (from Latin intensive dē- + Old French esmaier to trouble, disturb, from Vulgar Latin exmagāre* divest of power or ability, probably from Latin ex- from, out of, and the Germanic stem mag-; compare Old High German magan have strength, be able). —n. Probably before 1300 desmay consternation, fear, uneasiness, from the verb.

dismember v. About 1300, borrowed from Old French desmembrer, from Medieval Latin dismembrare, demembrare (Latin dis-, dē- take away + membrum member).

dismiss v. About 1432 dismissen, apparently borrowed from Latin dīmissus, past participle of dīmītere send away, with the prefix altered in English to dis- by analogy with numerous Middle English verbs in dis- (dī- apart, away + mittere send, let go). —dismissal n. Before 1806, formed from English dismiss + -al, replacing earlier dismission (1547).

disobey v. About 1390, borrowed from Old French desobēir, a re-formation with dis- of Late Latin inoboedire, a back formation from in-oboediēns not obeying (Latin in- not + present participle of oboedire obey). —disobedience n. Probably before 1400 dysobediāunce; later Middle English disobedience (probably before 1439); borrowed from Old French desobedience, a re-formation with dis- of Late Latin inoboedientia (Latin in- not + oboedientia OBEDIENCE); for suffix see -ENCE. —disobedient adj. About 1412; borrowed from Middle French desobedient, a re-formation with dis- of Late Latin inoboedientem (Latin in- not + oboedientem OBEDIENT); for suffix see -ENT. The form disobedient displaced disobeissant (about 1380), disobeiaunt (1422), in the 1500's.

disorder v. 1503, formed from dis- + the verb ORDER, replacing earlier disordeine (about 1300); borrowed from Old French desordainer, variant of desordener, from Medieval Latin disordinare throw into disorder, from Latin dis- take away + ordinare to order, regulate. —n. 1530, from the verb.

disorganize v. 1793, borrowed from French désorganiser (dés- not + organiser organize).

disparage v. Before 1375 desparagen degrade socially, as for marrying below rank; borrowed from Old French desparagier (literally) lower in rank, degrade (des- away + parage rank, lineage); for suffix see -AGE. The sense of belittle is first recorded in 1536, extended from the meaning of dishonor, discredit (about 1390).

disparate adj. 1608, borrowed from Latin disparātus, past participle of disparāre divide, separate (dis- apart + parāre get ready, prepare). The meaning of unlike, different was apparently influenced by association with Latin dispār unequal, unlike, different.

disparity n. About 1555, borrowed from Middle French disparité learned borrowing from Late Latin disparitatem (nominative disparitās) inequality (Latin dis- not + Late Latin paritās, genitive paritātis PARITY); for suffix see -ITY.

dispatch v. 1517, borrowed from Italian dispacciare to send off, hasten, or from Spanish despachar to send off (Italian dis- not + -pacciare in impacciare impede, trouble; Spanish des- not + -pachar in empachar impede, trouble; both the Italian and Spanish probably from Old Provençal empachar impede, from Gallo-Romance impāciare*, frequentative form of Latin impingere dash against). —n. 1550, dismissal, borrowed from Italian dispaccio, from dispacciare, or from Spanish despacho, from despachar; see verb.

dispel v. Probably before 1400 dispelen; borrowed from Latin dispellere (dis- away + pellere to drive, push).

dispende v. Probably about 1350 dispençen; later dispençen (1380); borrowed from Old French dispenser give out, learned borrowing from Latin dispensāre disburse, administer, distribute (by weight), frequentative form of dispendere pay out (dis- out + pendere to pay, weigh). In Medieval Latin dispensare had the meaning of grant a person remission from punishment or exemption from a law. By 1382 this usage was translated directly into English dispende to exempt, which evolved into the meaning of do away with (1576), forgo, do without (1607).

—dispensation n. About 1380 dispensacion divine ordering of events, Providence; borrowed through Old French dispensation, or directly from Latin dispensātiōnem (nominative dispensātiō) distribution, management, regulation (in Medieval Latin, pardon, exemption), from dispensāre dispende; for suffix see -TION. —dispensary n. 1699, formed in English, probably by influence of French dispensaire book of pharmaceutical composition, from Medieval Latin dispensarium (for suffix see -ARY).

disperse v. Probably before 1425 dispersen, borrowed from Middle French disperser scatter, learned borrowing from Latin dispersus. An earlier dispers, adj., (1393) was borrowed directly from Latin dispersus, past participle of dispergere to scatter (dis- apart, in every direction + spargere to scatter). —dispersal n. 1821, formed from English disperse + -al. —dispersion n. About 1384, dispersion of Jews among the Gentiles, DIASPORA, borrowed through Old French dispersion and directly from Latin dispersionem (nominative dispersio), from the stem of dispergere; for suffix see -SION.

display v. Probably before 1300 desplayen unfurl or display (a banner), later displayen (1338); borrowed from Old French despleier unfold, spread out, from Latin displicare to scatter (dis- un-, apart + plicare to fold). The meaning of reveal or exhibit developed probably about 1380. —n. 1583, a description; later, an exhibition or show (1665); from the verb.

displease v. Probably about 1350 (implied in displeyng) later displezen (about 1378); borrowed from Old French desplais-, present tense stem of desplaisir to displease, represented in Anglo-French despleser*, and refashioned in Vulgar Latin displacere* for Latin displicere displease (dis- not + placere to please). —displeasure n. 1427 displeser; borrowed from noun use of Old French desplaisir to displease.

disport v. About 1380, borrowed through Anglo-French disporter divert, amuse, from Old French desporter, literally, carry away, as of the attention from serious matters (des- away + porter carry).

dispose v. 1373 disposen tend toward; borrowed from Old French disposer, replacement (influenced by poser to place) of Old French despondere, from Latin disponere put in order, arrange (dis- apart + ponere to put, place; see POSITION). —disposition n. About 1380, borrowed from Old French disposicion, and from Latin dispositionem, from the stem disposi- of disponere arrange; for suffix see -TION.

disproportionate adj. 1555, formed from English dis- not + proportionate, perhaps after Middle French disproportionné (1534).

dispute v. About 1300 desputen, also disputen; borrowed from Old French desputer, disputer, from Latin disputare examine, discuss, argue (dis- separately + putare to count, consider). —n. 1594, borrowed from Middle French dispute, from Old French disputer, v. An earlier form disput action of disputing (before 1325), was perhaps merely the infinitive used as a noun. —disputation n. Before 1387 disputacioun, borrowed through Old French disputation and directly from Latin disputatio (nominative disputatio) an argument, dispute, from disputare; for suffix see -ATION.

disquisition n. 1605, subject for writing; also, investigation (1608–11); borrowed from Latin disquisitionem (nominative disquisitio), from the stem of disquirere inquire (dis- apart + quaerere seek, ask); for suffix see -TION. The meaning of long speech or formal writing about a subject, is first recorded in 1647.

disrupt v. 1657, break up; earlier disrupt torn, severed, past participle (probably before 1425); borrowed from Latin disruptus, past participle of disrumpere (variant of dirumpere) break apart, split (dis- apart + rumpere to break). —disruption n. Probably before 1425 disruption laceration or tearing (of tissue); borrowed from Latin disruptionem (nominative disruptio), from the stem of disrumpere; for suffix see -TION. —disruptive adj. 1842–43, formed from English disrupt + -ive.

dissect v. 1607, to cut in pieces, divide by cutting; later, to cut apart (an animal or plant) to examine or study (1611); borrowed from Latin dissectus, past participle of dissecare cut in pieces (dis- apart + secare to cut). Also the verb may be a back formation from dissection. The figurative sense of analyze, is first recorded before 1631. —dissection n. 1581, borrowed through Middle French dissection, from Medieval Latin dissectionem (nominative dissectio), from the stem of Latin dissecare; for suffix see -TION.

dissemble v. Before 1420, alteration (influenced by Middle French dessembler be unlike) of earlier dissimule to disguise, make believe (1380); borrowed through Middle French dissimuler, and directly from Latin dissimulare to disguise, conceal (dis- completely + simulare pretend).

disseminate v. 1603, earlier disseminate, adj., scattered widely (probably before 1425); borrowed from Latin dissēminātus, past participle of dissēminare (dis- in every direction + seminare to plant, propagate, from sēmen, genitive sēminis seed, SEMEN); for suffix see -ATE¹. The borrowing of Middle English disseminate, adj., was probably influenced by earlier Middle English dissem to scatter (about 1410). —dissemination n. 1646, either borrowed from Latin dissēminātiōnem (nominative dissēminātiō), from dissēminare; for suffix see -ATION; or formed from English disseminate + -ion.

dissension n. Before 1325, borrowed from Old French dissen- sion, and from Latin dissensionem (nominative dissensio) disagreement, from dissēns-, stem of dissentire disagree, DISSENT; for suffix see -SION.

dissent v. About 1425 (Scottish), borrowed possibly through Middle French dissentir, from Latin dissentire differ in sentiment (dis- differently + sentire think, feel). —n. 1585, from the verb.

dissertation n. 1611, discussion or debate; borrowed from Latin dissertatiōnem (nominative dissertatio) discourse, from dissertare debate or argue, frequentative form of disserere discuss, examine (dis- apart + serere to arrange words); for suffix see -ATION. The sense of a formal, written treatise appeared in English in 1651.

dissident adj. About 1534, borrowed from Latin dissidentem (nominative dissidēs), present participle of dissidere to sit apart, be remote, disagree (dis- apart + sedere to sit). —n. 1766, in allusion to Protestants; from the adjective (translation of New Latin dissidentes, pl., from Latin dissidentem, present participle). —dissidence n. 1658, perhaps formed from English dissident + -ence, after Latin dissidentia, from dissidēs, see DISSIDENT; for suffix see -ENCE.

dissimulate v. Probably before 1425, in part, borrowed from Latin dissimulatus, past participle of dissimulare conceal, disguise (dis- completely + simulare pretend, SIMULATE); for suffix see -ATE¹. The verbs dissimulate and dissemble gradually replaced earlier dissimulen (1380). By the 1600's use of dissimulate became widespread, in part, as a back formation of the earlier dissimulation. —dissimulation n. About 1380, borrowed from Old French dissimulation, from Latin dissimulatiōnem (nominative dissimulatio), from dissimulare; for suffix see -ATION.

dissipate v. About 1425, probably borrowed from Latin dissipātus, past participle of dissipāre 'disperse, squander, disintegrate' (dis- apart + supāre to throw, scatter); for suffix see -ATE¹. Dissipate, in some instances may be a back formation from dissipation. — dissipation n. Probably before 1425 dissipacioun 'disintegration, dissolution'; borrowed from Latin dissipatiōnem (nominative dissipatiō), from dissipāre; for suffix see -ATION.

dissociate v. 1623, verb use of earlier dissociate, adj., separated (1548); borrowed from Latin dissociātus, past participle of dissociāre to separate from companionship (dis- apart + sociāre to join, from socius companion); for suffix see -ATE¹. — dissociation n. 1611, borrowed probably through French dissociation, from Latin dissociatiōnem (nominative dissociatiō), from dissociāre for suffix see -ATION. Possibly also formed from English dissociate + -ion.

dissolute adj. Before 1382 dissolut morally loose, lax, negligent; borrowed from Latin dissolutus, past participle of dissolvere 'loosen up, DISSOLVE'. — dissolution n. 1348 dissolucioun laxity, frivolity, later, dissipation (1398); borrowed from Old French dissolution and directly from Latin dissolutiōnem (nominative dissolutiō), from dissolū-, stem of dissolvere DISSOLVE; for suffix see -TION.

dissolve v. About 1380, borrowed from Latin dissolvere to loosen up, break apart (dis- apart + solvere to loose, loosen).

dissonance n. Probably before 1425 dissonaunce, borrowed through Middle French dissonance and directly from Late Latin dissonantia, from Latin dissonantem (nominative dissonans), present participle of dissonāre 'differ in sound' (dis- apart + sonāre to SOUND); for suffix see -ANCE. — dissonant adj. Probably before 1425 dissonaunte, borrowed through Middle French dissonant and directly from Latin dissonantem (nominative dissonans), present participle of dissonāre; for suffix see -ANT.

dissuade v. 1513 borrowed from Middle French dissuader and directly from Latin dissuādere (dis- off, against + suādere to urge). — dissuasion n. Before 1420, borrowed from Middle French dissuasion and directly from Latin dissuāsiōnem (nominative dissuāsiō), from dissuādere dissuade; for suffix see -SION.

distaff n. Before 1325 distaf, stick that holds flax, etc. for spinning; developed from Old English distæf, about 1000, (dis- bunch of flax + stæf stick, STAFF). Probably because spinning was typically done by women in the Middle Ages, distaff is recorded in English, by the late 1400's, as a synonym for the female sex, female authority and the female side of a family. In other European languages a similar development occurred.

distant adj. About 1391, borrowed from Old French distant, learned borrowing from Latin distāntem (nominative distāns) 'standing apart, separate, distant, present participle of distāre stand apart (dis- apart, off + stāre to STAND); for suffix see -ANT. — distance n. About 1300 destaunce quarrel, estrangement; earlier, a dispute (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French distance, distance, and directly from Latin distāntia a standing apart, from distāntem distant; for suffix see -ANCE. The sense of intervening space, remoteness, is first recorded in distend v. Before 1400, borrowed from Latin distendere to swell or stretch out, extend (dis- apart + tendere to stretch). — distention n. Probably before 1425 distension, borrowed through Middle French distension and directly from Latin distensiōnem, distentiōnem (nominative distensiō, distentiō), from distent-, stem of distendere; for suffix see -TION.

1391. Senses of disagreement or strife were borrowed from Old French, and senses of distance or difference were borrowed chiefly from Latin.

distill v. Probably about 1378 distillen produce (an essence) by condensation given off in drops; borrowed from Old French distiller, from Latin distillāre 'trickle down in minute drops, as rain or tears' (dis- apart + stillāre to drip, drop, from stilla, drop). — distillation n. Before 1393 distillacion, borrowed perhaps through Old French distillation or directly from Latin distillatiōnem (nominative distillatiō), from distillāre; for suffix see -ATION. Also distillation may have been formed from English distill + -ation. — distillery n. 1677, the act or art of distilling, later, a place for distilling (1759); formed from English distill + -ery or possibly formed from English distiller (1777) + -y³.

distinct adj. About 1390, developed from past participle of earlier verb distincten to distinguish (about 1303); borrowed from Old French distincter, from distinct, adj., from Latin distinctus, past participle of distinguere DISTINGUISH. — distinction n. Probably before 1200 distinction, distinction division or section, borrowed through Old French distinction, and directly from Latin distinctionem (nominative distinctioniō), from distinct-, stem of distinguere for suffix see -TION. — distinctive adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed through Old French distinctif and directly from Medieval Latin distinctivus, from Latin distinctus, past participle of distinguere; for suffix see -IVE.

distinguish v. 1561, borrowed from Middle French distinguis-, stem of distinguer, replacing earlier Middle English distinguen (about 1340), also borrowed from Old French distinguer, learned borrowing from Latin distinguere to separate between (dis- apart + -stingere to prick); for suffix see -ISH². — distinguishable adj. 1594, formed from English distinguish + -able. — distinguished adj. 1609, distinct; later, famous or celebrated (1714), developed as a special use of the past participle.

distort v. About 1586, borrowed from Latin distortus, past participle of distorquere to twist different ways, distort (dis- completely + torquere to twist). — distortion n. 1581, borrowed, possibly in part by influence of Middle French distorsion, from Latin distortiōnem (nominative distortiō), from distort-, stem of distorquere; for suffix see -TION.

distract v. About 1340; borrowed from Latin distractus, past participle of distrahere draw in different directions (dis- away + trahere to draw). — distract n. 1447, borrowed from Old French distractio, or directly from Latin distractiōnem (nominative distractiō), from distract-, stem of distrahere; for suffix see -TION. Possibly distractio was also, formed from English distract + -ion.

distraught adj. Before 1393 distraght, alteration in spelling and pronunciation of earlier distract, adj., perplexed, confused (about 1340), past participle of distracten DISTRACT. The alteration of distract to distraght and to distraught may be by an association with past participial forms in -ght (caught, bought, taught), and perhaps immediately influenced by straght, straught, forms of strecchen to stretch.

distress n. About 1280 destresse, borrowed from Old French destresse, destresce, from Gallo-Romance districtia* restraint, affliction, from Latin districtus, past participle of distringere draw apart, hinder, also, in Medieval Latin, compel, coerce (dis- apart + stringere draw tight, press together). —v. Probably about 1380, borrowed from Old French destresser, destresser restrain, afflict, from destresse, destresce, n., distress.

distribute v. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Latin distribūtus, past participle of distribuere deal out in portions (dis- individually + tribuere assign, allot). —distribution n. About 1350 distribucioun, borrowed through Old French distribution, and directly from Latin distribūtōnem (nominative distribūtō), from distribuere; for suffix see -TION. —distributive adj. 1450, borrowed from French distributif, distributive, from Late Latin distribūtīvus, from Latin distribūtus, past participle of distribuere; for suffix see -IVE. —distributor n. 1526, formed from English distribute + *-er*¹, later, respelled after Late Latin distribūtor (1752).

district n. 1611, borrowed from French district, also Middle French, from Medieval Latin districtus (genitive districtūs) restraining of offenders, jurisdiction, area of jurisdiction, from past participle stem of Latin distringere hinder, detain; see DISTRESS. —district attorney, American English (1789) disturb v. Probably before 1200 disturben to prevent, stop, hinder, later, to stir up, agitate, trouble (about 1300); borrowed from Old North French distourber, and directly from Latin disturbāre throw into disorder (dis- completely + turbāre to disorder, disturb, from turba turmoil). —disturbance n. About 1280 distourbaunce, borrowed from Old North French distourbaunce, from distourber disturb; for suffix see -ANCE.

disuse n. Probably before 1408, from disuse, v., (1375); borrowed from Old French desuser (des- not + user use).

ditch n. Probably about 1175 dich, developed from Old English (847) dīc ditch, dike; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon dīk ditch, dike, Old Icelandic díki; see DIKE. —v. About 1385 dichen surround with a ditch, build a ditch, from the noun. The sense of abandon, discard, is first recorded in American English in 1899.

dither v. 1649, tremble, quake, vibrate, apparently a phonetic variation of earlier diðderēn (about 1375), of uncertain origin. —n. 1819, tremulous, confused excitement; figurative extension from the verb.

ditto n. 1625, (in) the said (month or year), use of dialectal Italian ditto. The word developed from Standard Italian detto (literally) said, past participle of dire to say; the past participle in Italian parallels Latin dictus, past participle of dicere say. The meaning of the same or exactly the same as appeared before, is first recorded in English in 1678. —v. 1837–40, from the noun.

ditty n. Probably before 1325 ditee, borrowed from Old French ditié, dité composition, poem, treatise, from Latin dictātum thing dictated, from neuter past participle of dictāre DICTATE.

diuretic adj., n. Before 1400 duretik; later diuretic (probably before 1425), borrowed from Old French diuretique, from Late Latin diūrēticus, from Greek diourētikós prompting urine, from dioureîn urinate (dia- through + oureîn URINATE).

diurnal adj. About 1390, borrowed from Late Latin diurnālis, from diurnum day, from Latin diurnus daily (modeled on nocturnus by night), from diēs day.

diva n. 1883, borrowed from Italian diva goddess (in Dante), fine lady, from Latin diva goddess, feminine of divus divine (one); see DIVINE.

dive v. About 1250 diven; earlier dialectal duven (probably before 1200); developed by confusion of synonymous forms in a transitive use of Old English dūfan (originally v.i.) to dive, duck, sink, with Old English dýfan (v.t.) to dip, submerge. Vestiges of the Old English strong verb dūfan died out in the 1200's, so that diven carried the meaning to dive. Old English dýfan is cognate with Old Icelandic dýfa to dip, from Proto-Germanic dūbijanan*; dūfan is cognate with Middle Low German bedoven covered over, Old High German tobal gorge. It is also possible that Old English dýfan, and dyppan to dip, are related. —n. 1700, a plunge; from the verb. The sense of a disreputable tavern or saloon, is first recorded in American English about 1871. —diver n. 1506, formed from English dive, v. + *-er*¹.

diverge v. 1665, borrowed from Latin divergere go in different directions (di-, from dis- apart + vergere to bend, turn). —divergence n. 1656, borrowed from Latin divergentem (nominative divergēs), present participle of divergere; for suffix see -ENCE. —divergent adj. 1696, borrowed through French divergent, from Latin divergentem (nominative divergēs), present participle of divergere; for suffix see -ENT. Also divergent may be a back formation of earlier divergence.

divers adj. About 1275, separate, distinct; borrowed from Old French divers different or odd, learned borrowing from Latin diversus turned different ways (in Late Latin, various), past participle of divertere DIVERT. The meaning of various is first recorded in English probably before 1300, and that of several, numerous, before 1400.

diverse adj. About 1300 diverse separate, distinct; later, various, varied (before 1333); a variant of divers. The final -e may have been added by analogy with converse, traverse, etc. —diversify v. 1481, borrowed from Middle French diversifier, from Medieval Latin diversificare to render unlike, from diversus; for suffix see -FY. —diversity n. About 1340 diversite, borrowed from Old French diversité, learned borrowing from Latin diversitatem (nominative diversitās), from diversus diverse; for suffix see -ITY.

diversion n. Probably before 1425, act of diverting; borrowed from Middle French diversion, from Late Latin diversionem (nominative diversio), from Latin divertere DIVERT; for suffix see -SION. The meaning of amusement, entertainment is first recorded in English in 1648.

divert v. Before 1420 diverten, borrowed from Middle French divertir, from Old French, learned borrowing from Latin divertere turn in different directions, and blended with devertere turn aside (dī-, variant of dis- aside, and dē- from + vertere to turn).

divest v. 1605, alteration of earlier devest to strip of possessions, rights, etc. (1563); borrowed from Middle French devestir, devestir, from Old French desvestir (des-, away, + vestir to clothe). The respelling of English devest to divest was influenced by Medieval Latin divestire undress, remove privileges. —divestiture n. 1601, formed in English from Medieval Latin divestit- (stem of divestire remove privileges, from Latin dī-, away + vestire to clothe) + English -ure.

divide v. Probably before 1325, borrowed from Latin dividere to force apart, cleave, distribute (dī- apart, from dis- + -videre to separate). —n. 1642, from the verb. —divider n. About 1526, formed from English divide + *-er*¹.

dividend n. 1557, number divided by another; later, share or portion (1600); borrowed from Middle French dividende, from Latin dividendum thing to be divided, neuter gerundive of dividere to DIVIDE.

By the late 1600's dividend had replaced the form divident a divider or barrier (before 1425; borrowed from Latin dividentem, nominative dividēns, present participle of dividere to divide).

divine adj. About 1380 devyne of God or a god; godlike; borrowed from Old French divin, divin, learned borrowing from Latin divinus of a god, from divus a god, related to deus god, DEITY; for suffix see -INE¹. —n. Probably before 1300 devine soothsayer; later theologian (about 1387); borrowed from Old French divin, from Medieval Latin divinus theologian, from Latin divinus soothsayer, from the adjective in Latin. —v. About 1378 devinen to conjecture, guess; also devynen to foretell, prophesy (before 1376); borrowed through Old French diviner, diviner, and directly from Latin divinare foretell, predict, from divinus soothsayer, from the adjective in Latin. —divination n. Before 1384 dyvynacioun foretelling, borrowed from Old French divination, learned borrowing from Latin divinātiōnem (nominative divinātiō), from divināre; for suffix see -ATION. —divinity n. About 1300 divinite theology; borrowed from Old French devinité, divinité, from Latin divinitātem (nominative divinitās) godhead, divination, from divinus of a deity; for suffix see -ITY.

division n. Probably about 1350, borrowed from Old French division, devisiun, from Latin divisiōnem (nominative divisiō), from divid-, stem of dividere DIVIDE; for suffix see -SION. —divisible adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Old French divisible, from Late Latin divisibilis, from divis-, stem of Latin dividere; for suffix see -IBLE. —divisor n. Before 1500, borrowed from Middle French diviseur, and directly from Latin divisorum, from dividere; for suffix see -OR².

divorce n. About 1378, devose, devorse, borrowed from Old French divorce, from early and legal Latin divortium (later divertium) separation, dissolution of marriage, from divertere to separate, leave one's husband, turn aside, DIVERT. Divorce as spelled in Old French and meaning deprivation, is recorded once in Middle English in 1357 and does not reappear until about 1425. —v. Before 1400 devorsen, borrowed from Old French divorcer, from divorce, n.

divulge v. About 1450, borrowed through Middle French divulguer and directly from Latin divulgare publish, make common (dis- apart + vulgare make common property, from vulgus common people).

Dixie n. a name for the Southern States of the U.S.; of uncertain origin, first recorded in 1859.

Among the sources advanced: 1) Dixie is a modification of Dixon abstracted from Mason and Dixon's line (1779). 2) Dixie is an allusion to Dixies, pl. (unrecorded), said to be applied to bank notes issued by the Citizens Bank of Louisiana before the Civil War, bearing the French dix on the ten-dollar bill. 3) that Dixie was formed in allusion to a Mr. Dixy or Dixie, a slave owner on Manhattan Island in New York City (forced to move South) whose slaves were unhappy in the South, and remembering their contentment, referred to Dixy's or Dixie's land as a place of contentment. —Dixieland n. 1917, abstracted from the Original Dixieland Jass (Jazz) Band (the first group to make commercial jazz recordings); perhaps earlier, Dixieland a style of jazz developed in New Orleans, beginning about 1910.

dizzy adj. Probably about 1150 (dialectal) dusi; later dysy (before 1400); developed from Old English dysig foolish, stupid (before 830); cognate with Old Frisian disig foolish, stupid, from Proto-Germanic disiŋaz*; modern Dutch duizelig dizzy, giddy; Old High German tusig stupid, modern German Tor fool, with r from z, Middle Low German dūsich stunned, dizzy, dwās foolish, stupid, and Old Icelandic dūs calm, lull, dūsa to doze; see DOZE.

do¹ v. Probably before 1200 do, earlier dou (before 1121) found in Old English dōn (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian duā to do, Old Saxon dūan, Middle Dutch duon (modern Dutch doen), Old and Middle High German tuon to do (modern German tun).

Originally do was the first person singular of the indicative mood of Middle English don; the form does was an adoption of north English does (from Old English, about 950) and gradually replaced earlier doth, doeth between the 1500's and 1600s.

Past tense did, also found in Middle English, developed from Old English dide, dyde, cognate with Old Saxon deda, Old High German teta, and Middle High German tete. This past tense form, being a reduplication of the present stem, is the only form in modern Germanic that retains visible traces of that way of indicating past tense. (In earliest Germanic the past tense represented by did, was used as a suffix to form the past tense of other verbs and was then reduced to -de in Old English, and to -d in English, usually regarded as -ed).

The past participle done, in Middle English don, doon, developed from Old English gedōn. Middle English retained an altered form of the prefix in ido, ydo, but finally dropped the -n. A vestige of the prefix is still evident in ado. —doer n. About 1380 doere, formed from Middle English do, don do + *-er*¹. —doings n.pl. About 1378 *doynge*s, from the gerund doung in Middle English (about 1325); for suffix see *-ING*².

do² n. the first and last note of the musical scale. 1754, possibly about 1670; borrowing of Italian do, used as a substitute for ut in the GAMUT.

dobbin n. 1596, a slow, gentle, plodding horse, familiar use of Dobbin, personal name, diminutive of Dob; alteration of Robin.

docile adj. 1483, easily taught, probably borrowed through Italian docile, as a learned borrowing from Latin docilis easily taught, from docēre teach, related to doctor teacher; see DOCTOR. The meaning of obedient, submissive, is first recorded in English in 1774.

dock¹ n. wharf. 1513, hollow made by a ship run aground, borrowed from Middle Dutch or Middle Low German docke, of unknown origin. The meaning of an artificial basin built for ships is first recorded in English in 1552. —dockyard n. (1704) —dry dock (1627); dry-dock v. 1514, from the noun.

dock² n. fleshy part of an animal's tail. Probably about 1390 dok, developed possibly from Old English -docca, as in finger-docca finger muscle (before 750), from Proto-Germanic dokkō*, apparently meaning "something round"; cognate with Frisian dok bundle, bunch, Middle Low German docke bundle, doll (modern German Docke), Old High German tocka doll, and Old Icelandic dokka doll, of unknown origin. —v. Probably about 1378 dokken to abridge, reduce, later, to cut (hair) short (1387–95), and to curtail (probably before 1400); probably from earlier unrecorded use of dok dock, n. The meaning of deduct from one's pay is first recorded in 1822.

dock³ n. place where accused person stands in court. 1586, borrowed from Flemish dok, earlier docke pen or cage for animals, of unknown origin.

dock⁴ n. any of various large weeds. Probably before 1300 docke, developed from Old English docce (about 1000), from Proto-Germanic dokkōn*; cognate with Middle Dutch and Middle Low German docke dock, and Old Danish dokka.

docket n. Before 1483 doggette a summary or abstract; of uncertain origin. A common spelling in the 1500's was docquet, perhaps echoing the diminutive ending -et or -ette. The meaning of a list of lawsuits to be tried, is first recorded in 1709, in American English.

doctor n. About 1303 doctour early teacher or father of the Christian Church, borrowed from Old French doctour, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin doctor religious teacher, adviser, scholar, from Latin doctor (genitive doctoris) teacher, from doct-, stem of docēre to show, teach; originally, make to appear right, causative form of decēre be seemly, fitting, DECENT; for suffix see *-OR*². The meanings of a person having the highest degree from a university and doctor of medicine are first recorded in English probably before 1378. —v. 1599, to confer a degree on; later to treat as a doctor (1712, in American doctrine n. About 1380, teaching or offering advice; later, theories, principles, dogma (about 1384); borrowed from Old French doctrine, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin doctrina, teaching, body of teachings, learning, from doctor teacher; see DOCTOR. —doctrinaire adj. 1834, borrowed from French doctrinaire referring to a French political party whose doctrines were deemed impractical; borrowing of French doctrinaire, n. from doctrine doctrine; for suffix see -ARY. The meaning of impractical or stubbornly theoretical, is first recorded in English in 1873. —doctrinal adj. About 1449, through Middle French doctrinal, and directly from Late Latin doctrinālis theoretical, from Latin doctrina; see DOCTRINE; for suffix see *-AL*¹.

English); from the noun. The sense of alter the appearance, disguise, or falsify is first recorded in 1774. —doctorate n. degree of doctor of philosophy. 1676, borrowed from Medieval Latin doctoratus, from doctorare take a doctor's degree; from doctor, n.

document n. Probably before 1425, teaching or instruction; borrowed from Middle French document lesson or written evidence, from Latin documentum example, proof, lesson, (in Medieval Latin, official written instrument, from docēre to show, teach; see DOCTOR); for suffix see -MENT. The meaning of something written which gives information or evidence, is first recorded in English in 1727. —v. 1648, to teach; from the noun. The meaning to prove by means of documents is first recorded in English in 1711. —documentary adj. 1802–12, formed from document + -ary. The sense of a motion picture, based on actual events is first recorded in English in 1930–32; probably borrowed from French film documentaire (1924) and documentaire, n. (1929). —documentation n. 1754, formed from English document, v. + -ation.

dodder v. 1617, shake, totter, perhaps a variant of dadder (1500's), developed from Middle English daderen (about 1353), apparently a frequentative form similar to patter, totter, etc.

dodge v. 1568, move so as to avoid; of uncertain origin, perhaps related to Scottish dialectal dodd to jog; as sled is related to sledge. —n. 1575, from the verb. —dodger n. 1568, apparently from dodge, v. + *-er*¹.

dodo n. 1628, borrowed from Portuguese doudo, literally, a fool or simpleton, and as an adjective, foolish or silly, the name being applied to the awkward appearance of the bird.

doe n. Before 1200 do the fallow deer; later the female of the fallow deer (about 1300); developed from Old English dā (about 1000); of unknown origin. The meaning of a female rabbit or other animal is first recorded in English in 1607. —doeskin n. (1425–26) doff v. Before 1375 doffen (imperative dof) take off; remove; contraction of do off. Compare *DON*² put on.

dog n. Probably before 1200 dogge, developed from Old English dogga (about 1050), specifically the name of a powerful breed of dog. Dogga was apparently an English word which the Continental languages borrowed (often with the attributive English), and is found in French dogue mastiff, Spanish dogo terrier, Dutch dog mastiff, German Dogge Great Dane. In Old English, the nonspecific name for dog was hund HOUND. —v. 1519, to pursue, track, follow like a dog; from the noun. —dogfight n. Middle English dogg feghttyng (probably before 1500). —dogged adj. (about 1300) —doggerel n. (1277); adj. (about 1390) —doghouse n. (1611) —dog tag (1918) dogma n. 1638, authoritative opinion, doctrine; used earlier in the plural form dogmata (before 1600); borrowed, probably by influence of Middle French dogme, from Latin dogma philosophical tenet, from Greek dōgma (genitive dōgmatos) opinion, tenet, from dokein to seem good, think; see DECENT. —dogmatic adj. 1678; shortening of earlier dogmatical (1605); borrowed probably through French dogmatique, from Latin dogmaticus, from Greek dogmatikós, from dōgma for suffix see —IC. —dogmatism n. 1603, borrowed from French dogmatisme teaching of new doctrine, from Medieval Latin dogmatismus, after Late Greek dogmatismós; from dōgma; for suffix see —ISM.

doily n. 1785–95, small ornamental mat, from doiley-napkin (1711), from doily a thin woolen fabric (1678), supposedly from Doiley surname of a dry goods dealer in London in the 1600's.

doldrums n.pl. 1811, perhaps formed from earlier dold dull, foolish, inactive because of age, cold, etc. (before 1460; earlier dulled, about 1390, past participle of dullen, dollen, v., developed from Old English dol foolish, (DULL), and the ending -rum, perhaps patterned on tantrum.

dole n. About 1200 dol part allotted, developed from Old-English (before 1000) dāl, shortened from gedāl (about 725) and cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon dēl, Middle Dutch deil (modern Dutch deel), Old High German teil (modern German Teil), Old English dēl portion, from Proto-Germanic dailiz*. —v. give out alms, charity. 1465, from the noun. —doleful adj. Probably before 1300 diolful, developed from diol, dol dole (about 1225, borrowed from Old French doel, duel, from Late Latin dolus grief, from Latin dolēre suffer, grieve) + -ful full.

doll n. Before 1700, a child's toy, a particular application of earlier doll, a name of affection for a person, a female pet or a mistress (1560); originally a shortened nickname or endearing form of the name Dorothy (as the l in Hal is a replacement of r in Harold, the l in Moll for the r in Mary). —v. 1906 doll up, from the noun. —dollhouse n. 1873, in American English; earlier doll's house (1783). —dolly n. 1790, a name of affection for a child's doll; earlier, a name of affection for Dorothy (1610).

dollar n. 1553, use in correspondence of Low German daler, name for the German Taler, Joachimstaler, a coin of the 1500's made of silver from a mine in Joachimstal St. Joachim's valley (town in northwestern Bohemia, where this coin was minted beginning in 1519). By 1581 use of dollar was recorded in English for the Spanish peso or piece of eight, a coin commonly found in North America at the time of the Revolutionary War. At the suggestion of Jefferson (1782) the Continental Congress established the dollar as the currency of the United States in 1785.

dollop n. 1812, dash or splash of something; portion or serving of food; from earlier dallopp patch, tuft, or clump of grass (1573); of uncertain origin.

dolmen n. 1859, prehistoric tomb, borrowed from French dolmen, probably a misapplication by French archaeologists of Cornish tolmen hole of stone (compare Welsh twll hole, maen stone).

dolorous adj. Probably before 1400, causing pain, suffering, or hardship; later, sorrowful (about 1450); borrowed from Old French doloros, from Late Latin dolōrōsus, from Latin dolor pain, grief; for suffix see —OUS. —dolor n. Probably before 1300 dolour, borrowed from Old French dolour, from Latin dolōrem (nominative dolor) pain, grief, from dolēre suffer pain or grief.

dolphin n. About 1350 dolfin sea mammal; borrowed from Old French daulphin, dalphin, daufin, through Medieval Latin dalfinus, for Latin delphinus dolphin, from Greek delphis (genitive delphinos) dolphin. Compare DAUPHIN.

dolt n. 1543 (implied in doltish); apparently a variant of dold dull, foolish, and perhaps influenced by dulte, dolte, past participle forms of dullen, v. to dull, make or become dazed or stupid; see DOLDRUMS.

—dom, + a suffix forming abstract and collective nouns. 1 added to adjectives to show state or condition, as in freedom = state or condition of being free. 2 added to nouns to show: a position, rank, or realm of, as in kingdom = realm of a king. b all of those who are, as in Christendom = all those who are Christian. In Old English -dōm is related to dōm judgment, DOOM, and cognate with Old Saxon -dōm -dom, Old High German -tuom (modern German -tum), and Old Icelandic -dōmr.

domain n. About 1425 (Scottish), landed property, demesne; borrowed from Middle French domaine (alteration after Medieval Latin dominium), from Old French demaine, demeine, learned borrowing from Latin dominium property, dominion, from dominus lord, master, owner, from domus house.

dome n. 1656, rounded roof, borrowed from French dôme, from Provençal doma, from Greek dōma house, housetop (a type of roof that came from the East), related to dōmos house.

An earlier and completely distinct English use of dome house, home, building, was borrowed directly from Latin domus and is first recorded in 1513. A later and equally distinct use meaning a cathedral church (1691) came into English from French dôme, which borrowed the word from Italian duomo, also from Latin domus house.

domestic adj. Probably before 1425, made or prepared in the home; borrowed from Middle French domestique, learned borrowing from Latin domesticus belonging to the household, and directly from Latin domesticus, from domus house; for suffix see —IC. —n. 1539, member of household, from the English adjective. —domesticate v. Before 1639, from domestic, adj. + *-ate*¹.

domicile n. 1442 domicylie residence, dwelling; borrowed from Middle French domicile, learned borrowing from Latin domicilium, and directly from Latin domicilium, probably from earlier domo-colyom* house-dwelling (domus house + colere dwell).

domination n. About 1375, rule, control; earlier, an angel of the fourth order (probably about 1343); borrowed from Old French domination, from Latin dominātiōnem (nominative dominātiō), from dominārī to rule, have dominion over, from dominus lord, master, from domus home; for suffix see -TION. —dominant adj. Before 1460 domynaunt, borrowed from Middle French dominant, from Latin dominantem (nominative domināns), present participle of dominārī; for suffix see -ANT. —dominate v. 1611, back formation from English domination; and borrowed from Latin dominatus, past participle of dominārī to rule, possibly influenced by Middle French dominer dominate.

domineer v. 1588, rule or govern arbitrarily, tyrannize; borrowed apparently from Dutch domineren to rule, from Middle French dominer, learned borrowing from Latin dominārī to rule. —domineering adj. (1588) dominion n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Middle French dominion, from Medieval Latin dominionem (nominative dominio), from Latin dominium ownership; for suffix see -ION.

domino¹ n. 1694, a hood with a cloak worn by canons or priests, also a mourning veil worn by women; borrowed from French domino, apparently from Latin dominō, dative form of dominus lord, master.

domino² n. 1801, usually dominoes, game played with flat, oblong tiles marked with dots; borrowed from French domino (1771), probably an extended sense of *domino*¹ (in allusion to the black-colored back of the tiles that resemble the cloak).

don¹ n. title. 1523 Don (prefixed to a man's Christian name), from Spanish don, from Latin dominus lord, master. The word was later used in the sense of any distinguished man (before 1634). From 1660, in English universities, a don is the head, fellow, or tutor of a college. The head of an underworld syndicate appears in general use before 1963, as a borrowing of Italian don, shortening of donno master, from Late Latin domnus, from Latin dominus.

don² v. put on (clothing, etc.). Probably before 1350, contraction of do on. Compare DOFF (from do off).

donation n. About 1425 (Scottish), borrowed through Middle French donation from Latin donātiōnem (nominative donātiō), from dōnāre give as a gift, from dōnum gift; for suffix see -TION. —donate v. 1785, American English, back formation from donation.

donjon n. Before 1325 dunjon large tower of a castle; an early form of DUNGEON.

donkey n. 1785, of uncertain slang origin, perhaps from English DUN² dull grayish-brown + -key, a probable diminutive form, possibly parallel to monkey.

donor n. About 1439 donour, borrowed from Anglo-French donour, in Old French doneur, from Latin dōnātōrem (accusative of dōnātor), from dōnāre give as a gift; for suffix see -OR².

doodle¹ n. 1937, aimless scrawl, apparently from dialectal English doodle, dudle fritter away time, trifle, or from association with dawdle. —v. 1937, from the noun. —doodler n. (1937) doodle² n. a silly or foolish person. 1628, of uncertain origin; compare Low German Dudeltopf simpleton.

doom n. Before 1325 dome, developed from Old English (about 725) dōm law, judgment, condemnation; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon dōm statute, law, judgment, Old High German tuom, Old Icelandic dōmr judgment, decree (Swedish and Danish dom), and Gothic dōms honor, fame, decree, from Proto-Germanic dōmaz*. The extended meaning of final fate, destruction, ruin, death is first recorded in English about 1600. —v. 1382 domen pronounce judgment on, from the noun. —doomsday n. Before 1200 domes dai, developed from Old English (about 975) dōmes dæg judgment day, from dōmes (genitive of dōm judgment) + dæg DAY.

door n. Probably before 1200 dore, earlier dure (about 1150). Middle English dore developed from Old English (about 1000) dor (pl. donu) large door, gate; Middle English dure developed from Old English duru (feminine) door (first recorded about 725, in Beowulf), from Proto-Germanic stem dur-*. The Old English forms are cognate with Old Saxon dur gate, duri, pl., door, Old High German tor gate (modern German Tor), turi, pl., door (modern German Tür), Old Icelandic dyrr (feminine pl.) door, and Gothic daúr gate, from Proto-Germanic duran*. —doorbell n. (about 1815) —doorknob n. (1846, in American English) —doorway n. (1799) dope n. 1807, American English, sauce, gravy, borrowed from Dutch doop thick dipping sauce, from dopen to dip. The concept of thick consistency or thickness connects many senses, as in thick liquid preparation (1800's), thick-headed person (1851), and preparation of opium, a thick, viscous substance when used for smoking (1889), extended to any stupefying narcotic drug, and a preparation of drugs to influence a racehorse's performance (1900). Perhaps because the knowledge of which horse had been dosed with dope would be an advantage to a bettor, the sense of inside knowledge, tip, information developed by 1901. —v. 1868, smear, lubricate, American English, from the noun. The phrase dope out find out (1906), probably came from dope, n., inside information.

dormant adj. About 1387–95 dormaunt fixed in place, later, in a resting position (about 1500); borrowed from Old French dormant, present participle of dormir to sleep, from Latin dormire to sleep.

dormer n. 1592, window of a sleeping room; later, the sleeping room itself (1605); borrowed from Middle French dormeor sleeping room, formed from dormir to sleep, with -eor suffix from Latin -ātōrem.

dormitory n. 1440 dormytorye, borrowed, possibly by influence of Old French dormitoire, from Latin dormitōrium, from dormire to sleep; for suffix see -ORY.

dormouse n. About 1425 dormouse, possibly from Anglo-French dormouse* tending to be dormant, mistaken as a blend of Middle French dormir to sleep and *-mouse thought to be equivalent to mouse mouse; because this small rodent is inactive in winter.

dorsal adj. Probably before 1425 dorsale back, rear; borrowed through Middle French dorsal from Late Latin dorsālis, alteration of Latin dorsuālis of the back, from Latin dorsum back, of uncertain origin.

dory n. 1709, small boat, American English; of uncertain origin, compare Miskito (an Indian language of Honduras and Nicaragua) dóri.

dose n. Probably about 1425, borrowed from Middle French dose, learned borrowing from Late Latin dos, from Greek dosis a portion prescribed, literally, a giving, from didónai to give. —v. 1654, from the noun, or borrowed from French doser, from dose, n. —dosage n. 1867 doseage, dosage, formed from English dose + -age, possibly by influence of French dosage (1812); for suffix see -AGE.

dossier n. 1880, collection of documents or papers about a subject; borrowed from French dossier bundle of papers, from dos back (said to be because the bundle of papers had a label on the back), from Latin dossus, a variant of dorsum back.

dot n. Old English dott speck, head of a boil (about 1000); cognate with Old High German tutta nipple, Dutch dot knot, tuft, Norwegian dott wad, wisp, and Old Icelandic dytta to stop up. Dot is not found in Middle English and appears only after 1530 meaning a small lump or a clot. The meaning of a minute spot is first recorded in 1674. —v. mark with a dot. 1740, from the noun.

dote v. Probably about 1200 doten behave foolishly; earlier, be feeble-minded (probably before 1200 dotien behave foolishly); borrowed probably from Middle Low German doten be foolish, related to Middle Dutch doten be childish, of unknown origin. The sense as in dote upon, is first recorded in 1477. —dotage n. Probably about 1380, folly, foolish behavior; formed from Middle English doten to behave foolishly + -age. The sense of senility or a second childhood is first recorded about 1390.

double adj. Probably before 1200 duble twice, twofold, borrowed from Old French duble, doble, from Latin duplus twofold (du-, from duo TWO + -plus -FOLD). —v. Probably before 1300 dublen make double, borrowed from Old French dobler, doubler, from Latin duplāre to double, fold up, from duplus double. —n. Before 1325, from the adjective; the meaning of a fold or a sharp turn was taken from the verb. —double cross (1834); double-cross, v. (1903, in American English) —double-take n. (1938, in American English) doublet n. 1326, close-fitting garment; borrowed from Old French doublet, literally, something folded or doubled, from double, doble DOUBLE + -et.

doubloon n. 1622 doblon Spanish gold coin; borrowed from Spanish doblón; 1719 doubloon, borrowed from French doublon (1594), also from Spanish doblón, an augmentative form of doble double, from Latin duplus double; for suffix see -OON. The doubloon was so called because its worth was double the value of a pistole, another Spanish gold coin.

doubt v. Probably before 1200 duten, later douten be afraid of, dread (probably about 1280); borrowed from Old French douter doubt, fear, from Latin dubitāre hesitate, waver in opinion, related to dubius doubtful, DUBIOUS. The b in imitation of the Latin is recorded as early as 1393. —n. Probably before 1200 dute, later doute (about 1300); borrowed from Old French doute, from douter to doubt. —doubtful adj. About 1395 douteiful, formed from doute + -ful. —doubtless adj. About 1380 douteles, formed from English doute + -les -less.

douche n. 1766, jet of water; borrowed from French douche, from Italian doccia shower, conduit, from dociare to spray, probably from doccione conduit, from Latin ductiōnem (nominative ductiō) a leading, from duc-, stem of ducere to lead. —v. 1838, probably borrowed from French doucher, from douche, n., or from the English noun.

dough n. About 1150 doh dough for bread or pastry; later dogh (1303); developed from Old English (about 1000) dæg; cognate with Middle Low German dēch dough, Middle Dutch deech (modern Dutch deeg), Old High German teic (modern German Teig), Old Icelandic deig (Swedish deg, Danish dej), and Gothic daigs dough, from Proto-Germanic daizaz*. —doughnut n. (1809, American English) doughty adj. Probably before 1200 duhti brave, strong, later douhti (probably before 1300); developed from Old English (1030) dohtig, and dyhtig able, strong, valiant (about 725, in Beowulf). The later dohtig is probably an alteration (influenced by dohte, past tense of dugan be worthy) of earlier dyhtig, cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch duchtich doughty (modern Dutch duchtig), Middle High German tuhtec able, useful (modern German tüchtig capable), from Proto-Germanic duhtizās*, adjective to the noun duhtiz* (Old High German tuht ability, strength), and with Old High German tugan be worthy.

dour adj. Before 1350 (in northern dialect) severe; later, 1375 (Scottish) stern, fierce; possibly borrowed from Latin dūrus hard; related to ENDURE. Dour meaning stubborn, gloomy, sullen, is first recorded in English about 1470.

douse v. 1600, to plunge in water; 1606, to throw water over; perhaps from douse to strike, punch (1559); probably related to Middle Dutch dossen or early modern Dutch doessen beat with force and noise.

dove n. 1150 in the place name Duvebrigge; probably developed from Old English dūfe, in dūfe-doppa dabchick, a water bird; cognate with Old Saxon dūba dove, Middle Dutch dūve (modern Dutch duif), Old High German tūba (modern German Taube dove, pigeon), Old Icelandic dūfa (Swedish duva, Danish due), and Gothic -dūbō (in hraiwa-dūbō turtledove), from Proto-Germanic dūbōn*. —v. 1657, to fit together.

dowager n. 1530 douagier, later dowager (1542); borrowed from Middle French douagere, douagiere, from douage dowry, from

douer endow, from Latin dōtāre, from dōs (genitive dōtis) DOWRY; for suffix see -ER¹.

dowdy n. 1581, probably a diminutive form of earlier doue poorly dressed woman (about 1338); of uncertain origin. —adj. 1676, from the noun.

dowel n. 1296–97 dule rim or a section of a wheel, later doule (1313–14); of uncertain origin, but perhaps connected with Middle Low German dovel plug, tap (of a cask), related to Old High German tubili plug (modern German Döbel, Dübel peg, plug, dowel). The meaning of a headless peg, pin, or bolt is first recorded in English in 1794.

down¹ adv. to a lower place. Before 1275 doun, developed from an Old English word element -dūne- (before 830), as in of dūne, adv., downwards, ic dūnestīgu I go down; from dūne, dative form of dūn hill, DOWN³. —prep. Before 1382, from the adverb. —v. 1562, from the adverb. —adj. About 1565, from the adverb. The meaning of depressing is first recorded about 1967. —n. 1611, used with an indeterminate meaning as a word to fill out a ballad refrain; later, a descent (1710); from an earlier such use as an adverb. —downcast adj. (about 1303) —downfall n. (about 1325) —downhill adv. (before 1398); adj. (1727) —downpour n. (1811, earlier dounshedyn, probably before 1425) —downright adv. (probably before 1200); adj. (1530) —downward adv. (probably before 1200, developed from Old English adunweard); adj. (before 1325).

down² n. 1345–49 doune soft feathers; from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic dunn down).

down³ n. rolling, grassy land. About 1300 doune hill, (earlier 1254, in surname); developed from Old English dūn hill (661); cognate with Old Irish dūn citadel, fortress, Old Welsh din fortress, hill fort. English town (Old English tūn fort, enclosure, town, with t for Celtic d) and related words are based on very early borrowing from this Celtic group. In other Germanic languages Old English dūn is cognate with words meaning dune or sandbank, including Old Frisian dūne, Old Saxon dūna, Middle Dutch dūnen (modern Dutch duin), and Middle Low German dūne; see DUNE.

dowry n. Before 1338 dowarye widow's share of her husband's property, later, dowarie property a bride brings to her marriage (before 1387); borrowed from Anglo-French dowarie, Old French douaire, from Medieval Latin dotarium, from Latin dōs (genitive dōtis) dowry, related to dōnum a giving, gift; for suffix see -RY.

dowse v. 1691 deusing rod; later dowse (1838), of uncertain origin; perhaps a dialect term, from south England.

doxology n. 1649, borrowed through French doxologie, or directly from Medieval Latin doxologia, from Greek doxologiā, from doxolōgos praising, glorifying, from dōxa glory, praise, from dokēin to seem good, seem, think; for suffix see -LOGY.

doyen n. 1422, leader of ten; borrowed from Middle French doyen, from Old French deien; see DEAN. The meaning of the senior member of a group is first recorded in 1670 and may have been a reborrowing from French. —doyenne n. 1905, female doyen, borrowed from French doyenne, doyen, from Middle French, from Old French deien.

doze v. 1647, make drowsy, stupefy, bewilder; probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic dūsa be quiet, doze, also Middle High German dōsen be quiet, slumber, doesen to scatter); see DIZZY. —n. 1731, from the verb.

dozen n. Probably before 1300 doseyn group of twelve borrowed from Old French dozeine, dozaine a dozen, twelve (douze, doze twelve + -ain, from Latin -ānus). Old French douze is from Latin duodecim, altered from earlier duodicem* by influence of decem, (duo TWO + decem TEN).

drab adj. 1775, dull brown; earlier drapp-colour (1686), the color of drap or drab cloth (1541); borrowed from Middle French drap, from Old French; see DRAPE. The figurative sense of colorlessness is first recorded in English in 1880.

draft n. 1552, possibly 1543, a privy; later, extract of distillation (1576), and plan, sketch (1579); spelling variant of earlier draught from drahte (probably before 1200); developed probably from Old English draht*, draht* (compare Old English dragan, v., to DRAW, and the cognates, Old High German traht a carrying, Old Icelandic dráttir a pulling, a drawing, and Middle Dutch dracht, from Proto-Germanic drahtiz-*). The meaning of the action of pulling is first recorded probably before 1200 in reference to drawing in of nets for fishing or catching birds. The sense of the act of drinking in one swallow is also first recorded probably before 1200. Later meanings include a rough copy of a writing (before 1382) and the flow of a current of air (1768–74). —v. 1714, select for some special purpose; from the noun. The sense of writing a rough copy of a letter, etc., is first recorded in 1828. —draft n. 1866, American English, formed from English draft + -ee.

The form draft is a spelling reflecting the shift in pronunciation of gh (like the ch in Scottish loch) to the modern English sound represented by f in fat. See the note under LAUGH, v.

drag v. 1440 dragen draw or pull; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic draga) or perhaps a dialectal variant of drawen (Old English dragan) to DRAW. —n. 1300 a dragnet; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Swedish dragg grapnel, Icelandic drag-net dragnet), or perhaps developed from Old English (about 1000) dræge dragnet; related to dragan DRAW. The slang sense of an annoying, boring person or thing, is first recorded in 1813, probably an extension of the earlier meaning of something heavy as an impediment (1708).

draggle v. 1513, make or become wet or dirty, as by dragging through mud or water; apparently a frequentative form of DRAG; for suffix see -LE³.

dragon n. Before 1250 dragun huge serpent; about 1250, mythical fire-breathing monster, and as a surname Dragun (1165–66); borrowed from Old French dragon, learned borrowing from Latin dracōnem (nominative dracō) serpent, dragon, from Greek drákon (genitive drákontos) serpent, seafish; literally, the one with the (deadly) glance. —dragonfly n. (1626) dragoon n. 1622, borrowed from French dragon carbine or musket, dragoon; literally, dragon, from Old French; see DRAGON; for suffix see -OON. The soldier was so called because the carbine or musket he carried "breathed fire" like a dragon. —v. 1689, from the noun.

drain v. Before 1398 dreyen, strain or filter (a liquid); later dreyen to draw off a liquid (1440); developed from Old English (about 1000) drēahnian, apparently from the Proto-Germanic root drauz-* related to drýge DRY. The word disappeared shortly after the Old English period, reappearing later in the 1500's. The figurative sense of to exhaust is recorded about 1660. —n. 1372, from the verb; earlier as a surname Drene (1327). —drainage n. 1652, formed from English drain + -age.

drake n. About 1300, male duck, corresponding to Low German drake male duck, German dialect drache, and the second element in Old High German anutrehho (from anut-trahho*), Middle High German antrech (modern German Enten-ich), apparently from West Germanic drako*. The first element anut-, ant-, -ent derives from Old High German anut, enit duck (modern German Ente), which is cognate with Middle Dutch aent (modern Dutch eend), and Old English ænid, ened duck, from Proto-Germanic anidis*.

dram n. About 1373 dram and before 1398 dragme small weight of apothecary's measure; borrowed through Anglo-Latin dragma, drama, and from Middle French drame, dragme, both Anglo-Latin and Middle French from Late Latin dragma, from Latin drachma drachma, from Greek drachmē, literally, handful (of six obols).

drama n. 1515 drame; later drama, (1616); borrowed from Late Latin drāma play, drama, and from Greek drāma (genitive drāmātos) play, action, deed, from drān to do, act, perform. —dramatic adj. 1589 drammatick, borrowed through Middle French dramatique, or directly from Late Latin drāmaticus, from Greek drāmatikós of or pertaining to plays, from drāma; for suffix see -IC. —dramatist n. 1678, formed in English from Greek drāma + English -ist. —dramatize v. 1780–83, formed in English from Greek drāma + English -ize.

drape v. Probably before 1400 draperen to decorate with cloth hangings; 1436 drapen to weave into cloth; borrowed from Old French draper, from drap cloth. —n. 1665, cloth or hangings; in some instances borrowed from French drap cloth, from Old French drap, from Late Latin drappus cloth, and in other instances, from the English drape, v. —drapery n. Probably before 1325 draperie cloth, fabric; borrowed from Old French draperie, from drap cloth; for suffix see -ERY.

drastic adj. Before 1691, (of medicines) acting with force, borrowed from Greek drastikós effective, from drástēon (thing) to be done, from drān to do, act; for suffix see -IC. The meaning of extreme, severe, is first recorded in English in 1808, possibly suggested by the noun meaning of a severe purgative (1783), or borrowed from the French meaning of drastique (1741).

draw v. Probably before 1200 drawen, and drahen; developed from Old English dragan (before 900); cognate with Old Saxon dragan, Old Frisian draga, drega, Old High German tragen (modern German tragen) to carry, bear, with Old Icelandic draga to pull, draw, Gothic gadragan to pull or carry together, from Proto-Germanic drazanan*. Though there are many constructions and uses that reflect Latin trahere to pull or draw, there is no etymological connection between Latin and Old English.

The meaning of make (a line or figure) drawing with a pencil or pen is first recorded in English probably about 1200.

The spelling change from g to w occurred with alteration of the sound of the vowel into the diphthong. —n. Probably before 1300, in the compound drawebriige; 1255, as a surname Draespere; from the verb. —drawer n. About 1385, person who draws (a sword); earlier, as a surname Drahere (1327); formed from drawen to draw + *-er*¹. The sense of a box that can be drawn out of a cabinet, desk, etc., is first recorded in 1580. —drawing n. Probably before 1300, the pulling of a sword or bowstring, the meaning of the act of making pictures, sketches, etc., is first recorded in 1467, and of the picture itself, in 1688–89.

drawl v. 1597, crawl or draw along; 1598, speak slowly, draw out words, borrowed probably from Middle Dutch dralen to linger, delay (also in Low German and East Frisian), apparently an intensive form derived from the root of DRAW, v. —n. 1760, from the verb.

dray n. 1370 dreye wheelless sled for logs; later drey a little cart (1565–73); a derivative form of Old English dragan to DRAW; related to Old Icelandic draga (pl. dragur) timber trailed along the ground. —drayman n. 1581, formed from English dray + man.

dread v. Probably before 1200 dreden fear greatly, shortened form of adreden; developed from Old English (about 1000) adrēdan, a contraction of earlier ondrēdan counsel or advise against, fear (900); cognate with Old Saxon antdrādan and Old High German intrātan fear, dread. —n. Probably before 1200 dred, from dreden, v.

dream n. About 1250 drem, probably developed from Old English drēam joy, music (influenced in meaning by Old Icelandic draumr dream); cognate with Old Saxon drōm meriment, noise, Old Frisian drām dream, Old High German troum (modern German Traum), from Proto-Germanic draumaz*, earlier drauzmas*.

Though dream is not recorded in Old English with the meaning of a vision, the number of Germanic cognates of the same meaning strongly suggests that the meaning existed in Old English. The meaning of a vision was swefn. —v. Probably before 1200 dremen, probably developed from Old English drēmen, drīman rejoice, play music (influenced in meaning by Old Icelandic dreyma to dream); cognate with Old High German troumen (modern German träumen) to dream.

dreary adj. Probably about 1150 dreri sad, doleful; developed from Old English drēorig sorrowful, gory, bloody (about 725, in Beowulf), from drēor gore, falling blood, from Proto-Germanic dreuzás*; for suffix see -Y¹. The Old English is cognate with Middle High German trürec sorrowful, sad (modern German traurig), Old High German trüren be sad (modern German trauern mourn), Middle High German trör dripping fluid, Old Icelandic dreyri blood, gore. Dismal, gloomy, is first recorded in 1667, in Milton's Paradise Lost.

dredge n. 1471 (Scottish) dreg-, found in dreg-boat boat for dredging, apparently a derivative form from the root of DRAG, v. —v. 1508 (Scottish) dreg, from the noun.

dregs n. pl. About 1378 dregges sediment of liquors, (earlier in the surname Dryngedregges, 1309); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic dregg sediment, from Proto-Germanic drag-*). Middle English dregges replaced Old English dræst, dærst dregs, and is cognate with Old High German trestir, pl., skins, husks, grounds.

drench v. Probably before 1200 drenchen submerge in water, drown, and about 1200, to soak, saturate; earlier, to poison with a drink (probably about 1175); developed from Old-English (about 1000) drencan, causative form of drincan to DRINK.

Old English drencan is cognate with Old High German trenken cause to drink (modern German tränken), Old Icelandic drekka drench, drown, and Gothic drankjan cause to drink, from Proto-Germanic drankjanan*.

dress v. Probably before 1300 dressen to direct, guide, control, also, to arrange, adjust, and to stand up, sit up; borrowed from Old French dresser, earlier drecier arrange, prepare, from Vulgar Latin directiare*, from Latin directus straight, DIRECT. The general meaning of decorate, adorn is recorded in Middle English in 1381 and the specific sense of put on clothing, about 1395. —n. 1606, clothing, especially clothing appropriate to rank or a specific ceremony; from the verb. The meaning of a woman's garment is first recorded in English in 1638. —dresser¹ n. person who prepares or finishes something. 1300, in a surname Dresceour (probably Anglo-French); from dressen, v. + *-er*¹. —dresser² n. table, sideboard. Probably 1393 dressor, borrowed from Old French dresseur, dreceur table to prepare food, from dresser to prepare, DRESS; for suffix see *-ER*¹. The meaning of a chest, dressing bureau with drawers appeared in 1895. —dressing n. About 1350, from English dress, v. + *-ing*¹. The meaning of a bandage is first recorded in 1713.

dribble v. About 1589, flow in drops, trickle, a frequentative form of obsolete English drib, variant of DRIP. The meaning to move (a ball) along with short bounces or kicks, first applied to soccer in 1863, was extended to basketball in the early 1900's, in American English. —n. About 1680, from the verb.

drift n. Probably before 1325, movement as of falling rain or snow, snowdrift. Though not recorded in Old English, the Middle English drift is cognate with Middle Dutch and modern Dutch drift drove, Middle High German trift (modern German Trift), and Old Icelandic drift snowdrift (Norwegian driv drift of snow or sand); from Proto-Germanic driftiz*, related to drībanan* to DRIVE. English drift is related to drive as thrift is to thrive, etc. —v. 1584, to delay; later, move as driven by a current (probably before 1600); from the noun. —drifter n. (1864) —driftwood n. (1633) drill¹ n. instrument for boring holes. 1611, borrowed from Dutch dril, drille a hole, instrument for boring holes, from drillen to bore (a hole), turn around, whirl, from Middle Dutch drillen to bore, turn in a circle; cognate with Middle High German drillen to turn, round off, bore (modern German drillen), from Proto-Germanic threljanan*.

Before 1637 drill also meant a military exercise (probably from the sense turn around as in maneuvers), and by 1815 its meaning was extended to any rigorous training or strict instruction; probably from the verb. —v. 1622, train by or as if with military precision; borrowed from Dutch drillen. The meaning of bore a hole is first recorded in English in 1649.

drill² n. twilled cotton or linen cloth. 1743, shortened form of drilling (1640), alteration of German Drillich a heavy, coarse cotton or linen fabric, from Middle High German drilich threefold, in reference to the three-threaded method of weaving this fabric, from Old High German drilūh, which is itself an alteration of Latin trilix (genitive trilicis) woven with three sets of threads.

drill³ n. baboon of western Africa. 1644, from the baboon's West African name; see MANDRILL.

drink v. Probably about 1150 drinken, developed from Old English drincan (about 725); cognate with Old Frisian drinka to drink, Old Saxon drinkan, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch drinken, Old High German trinkan (modern German trinken), Old Icelandic drekka (with kk from nk), Swedish dricka, Danish drikke, and Gothic drinkan, from Proto-Germanic drinkanān*. —n. Probably before 1200 drinke, developed from Old English (about 888) drinc beverage, from drincan to drink.

drip v. Probably about 1300 dripen drop down; later, fall in drops (1440), probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Danish dryppe to drip, Old Icelandic dreyppa let fall in drops). No clear evidence exists for an Old English source for Middle English dripen. However, Old English had other related verbs: drypan to let drop, dropian fall in drops, and drēopan to drop. —n. 1440 dryppe, from the verb.

drive v. Probably about 1175 driven to chase, drive; developed from Old English (about 725) drīfan; cognate with Old Frisian drīva to drive, Old Saxon drīban, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch driven (modern Dutch drijven), Old High German trīban (modern German treiben), Old Icelandic drīfa (Swedish driva, Danish drive), from Proto-Germanic drībanan*. —n. 1697, from the verb. The meaning of an excursion in a vehicle is first recorded in 1785. —driveway n. (1875) drivel v. Probably about 1350 dravelen dribble (saliva), speak nonsense; 1378 dryvelen; developed from Old English (about 1000) dreftian (earlier dræftian*) to dribble or run at the nose, from Proto-Germanic drablōjanan*.

drizzle v. 1543 drysling shedding a fine spray of drops; possibly an alteration of earlier drysning a falling of dew, etc. (probably before 1400), from drysnen to fall; developed from Old English -drysian (about 950), related to drēosan to fall; for the possible suffix see *-LE*³. —n. 1554, from the verb.

droll adj. 1623, borrowed from French drôle odd, comical, funny, originally (in Middle French) a noun meaning a merry fellow, possibly from Middle Dutch drol fat little fellow, goblin.

dromedary n. Probably about 1280, a fleet camel bred for riding; borrowed through Old French dromadaire, from Late Latin dromedarius kind of camel, for Latin dromas (genitive dromados), from Greek dromās kāmēlos running camel, from dromos a race course, for suffix see -ARY.

drone n. 1127 drane male honeybee; developed from Old English dran (about 1000), dræn (about 1050), from Proto-Germanic dran-*; cognate with (possible Old Saxon dran, dreno drone, though perhaps a dictionary word) Middle Low German drane, drone, Old High German treno drone, Norwegian drynja to roar, Gothic drunjus sound. The form drone appeared in 1475 and later in 1508, dron bee. The sense of a deep continuous humming sound, apparently from the verb, is first recorded between 1500 and 1520. The figurative meaning of a lazy worker (because the male bee is a nonworker) is first recorded in English before 1529. —v. 1500–20, probably from the noun.

drool v. 1802 drule, dreul; later drool (1867–69); apparently a dialectal variant or contraction of DRIVEL. —n. 1867–69, from the verb.

droop v. Before 1300 drupen to sag or hang down, to be downcast, grieve; later, about 1333–52, droupen; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic drūpa hang the head; droop); related to Old English dropian to DROP. —n. 1647, from the verb.

drop n. About 1150 drope disease characterized by spots; later, smallest quantity of a liquid (before 1200); developed from Old English dropa (about 725), from Proto-Germanic drupōn*. Old English dropa is cognate with Old Saxon dropo drop, Middle Dutch droppe (modern Dutch drop), Old High German tröpfō (modern German Tropfen), Old Icelandic dropi drop (Swedish droppe), drjūpa to drop, drip, Old High German triofan (modern German triefen). —v. About 1300 droppen, developed from Old English (about 1000) dropian fall in drops, related to drēopan to drop, drip, dropa a drop. —droplet n. 1607, formed from English drop, n. + -let. —dropper n. 1700, a distiller; later, small glass tube from which liquid may be made to fall in drops (1889); formed from drop, v. + *-er*¹.

dropsy n. About 1250 dropesie condition in which watery fluid collects in body tissues, shortened form of idropesie; borrowed from Old French idropisie, from Latin hydrōpisis; also, a shortened form of English hydropsy, borrowed from Latin hydrōpisis, from Greek hýdrōps (genitive hýdrōpos) dropsy.

dross n. About 1384 drosse, earlier dros (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (about 1050) drōs dirt, dregs, which is most closely related to Middle Low German drōs, and Middle Dutch droes; also to the longer form Old English drōsna (genitive plural dregs), which is cognate with Old High German truosana lees, dregs (modern German Drusen, pl.), Middle Dutch droesen lees, dregs. Old English drōs and its Middle Low drought n. About 1380 droughte dryness, long period of dryness; earlier drught (before 1325, Northern dialect); developed from Old English (before 1100) drūgath, drūgoth, from Proto-Germanic drūgōthuz*, related to drūgian dry up, wither, from drūg-, the base of drýge DRY. The Old English drūgath, drūgoth also developed into drouth, drowth and the forms with -th and -t have varied as also found in highth and height.

German and Middle Dutch cognates are from Proto-Germanic drōhs-*.

drove n. About 1250 drof, earlier, in a place name Bradedrave (1220); developed from Old English (971) drāf act of driving, from drīfan to DRIVE. —drover n. 1393–94, person who drives livestock; earlier, as a surname Drovere (1287–93).

drown v. About 1325 drounen, drunen die by submersion in water, perhaps developed from Old English drūnian* (compare Middle English druncnen to drown, probably before 1200; developed from Old English druncnian, about 950; cognate with Old Icelandic drúkn to drown, be swallowed up by water; from the base of Old English drincan to DRINK).

drowsy adj. Before 1529 drowsie; probably adapted from Old English drūsan (about 725, in Beowulf), drūsan sink, become low, slow, or inactive (related to drōsan to fall) + *-y*¹. —drowse v. 1596, to be drowsy; earlier, be inactive or sluggish (1573); probably a back formation of drowsy, as there is a gap of almost 600 years between the use of drowse in Old English and its appearance in early Modern English.

drub v. 1634, used in an Eastern context to describe a bastinado (a kind of beating with a stick), of uncertain origin; perhaps from Arabic daraba he beat up.

drudge v. About 1385 druggen do menial or monotonous work; earlier drugunge, gerund (before 1250); apparently related to Old English drēogan to work, suffer, endure; cognate with Old Icelandic drýgja do, carry out, accomplish, and Gothic drīgan serve as a soldier. The spelling drudge, first recorded in 1494, 1549 suggests drygean* in Old English, but no such form is known. Such an assertion is based upon the fact that in early Middle English, or perhaps late Old English, the sounds represented by -cg in Old English brycg, ecg, wecg, and later -gg in Middle English brigge, egge, wegge, developed into the sound represented by -dge or -ge in bridge, edge, wedge. The spelling change took place for the most part from the 1400's to the 1600's. —n. 1494, from the verb. —drudgery n. 1550, from English drudge + -ery.

drug n. About 1387–95 drogge medicinal substance, borrowed from Old French drogue, of uncertain origin; perhaps from Middle Dutch droge, or Middle Low German droge- in droge-fate dry-barrels, with droge- taken as the name of the barrels' contents; see DRY. In the 1300's and 1400's, there was confusion between drogge drug and dragge spice mixture. The specific application to narcotics and opiates is first recorded in the 1880's, although the association of drugs with poisons goes back to the 1500's. —v. 1605, mix with a drug, especially a poisonous drug, from the noun. The meaning of give drugs to a person, especially to stupefy or poison, is first recorded in English in 1730. —druggist n. (1611) druid or Druid n. 1509 Druidan, translation of Latin Druidae, pl.; later Druid (1563), borrowed from Old French druide, learned borrowing of Latin Druidae, pl., from Gaulish Druides (compare Old Irish drui wizard).

drum n. 1427–30 dromme, probably borrowed from Middle Dutch tromme drum; compare Middle High German and Middle Low German trumme, trummel drum (modern German Trommel), Danish and Norwegian tromme, Swedish trumma, all probably of imitative origin. —v. 1578, from the noun. To drum up business, to solicit orders, canvass, originated in American English and is first recorded in 1839. —drummer n. 1573–78, formed probably from English drum, v. + *-er*¹. —drumstick n. (1589) drunkard n. 1275, as a surname Druncard, formed from Middle English dronken participial adjective + -ard.

drupe n. 1753, borrowed from New Latin drupa, from Latin druppa very ripe olive, from Greek drýppā, shortened from drypepēs tree-ripened (used of black olives), from dry- (representing dry's TREE) + pépōn ripe; see COOK.

dry adj. About 1250 drie; earlier in a place name Driebi (1130), and dialectal drue (before 1200); developed from Old English drýge (before 900); cognate with Middle Dutch druge, drōge dry (modern Dutch droog), Old High German truochan (modern German trocken), and probably with Old Icelandic draugr dry wood. Related to DROUGHT and DRUG. —v. Before 1325 drien; earlier dialectal druyen (about 1300); developed from Old English drýgan (before 900), from drýge dry. —dryer n. a machine for drying (1874), and drier n. a person or thing that dries (1528); both forms from English dry, v. + *-er*¹.

dual adj. 1607, borrowed from Latin duālis, from duo TWO; for suffix see *-AL*¹. Latin duālis is supposed to have been a translation by Quintilian of Greek dyikós (in arithmōs ho dyikós the dual number). —dualism n. 1794, borrowed from French dualisme, from Latin duālis dual; for suffix see -ISM. —duality n. About 1385 dualite, borrowed from Old French dualité, from Late Latin duālitātem (nominative duālitās), from Latin duālis dual; for suffix see -ITY.

dub¹ v. give a title to, call, name. Probably before 1200 dubben confer knighthood on; developed from Old English dubbian (1085); perhaps borrowed from Old French aduber, adouber equip with arms, adorn, a word of uncertain origin. Before 1338 the sense was extended to invest with a new title, and this, in turn, extended by 1599 to provide with a name, style, nickname.

dub² v. add or alter sounds on film. 1929, alteration and shortening of DOUBLE, v.; so called because it involves re-recording or doubling of voices on the sound track.

dubious adj. 1548, borrowed from Latin dubiōsus doubtful, from dubium doubt, neuter of dubius doubtful from duo TWO (i.e. of two minds, undecided between two things).

ducal adj. 1494, borrowed from Middle French ducal, from Late Latin ducālis, from Latin dux (genitive ducis) leader, in Medieval Latin, governor; for suffix see *-AL*¹.

ducat n. About 1380, Venetian coin; borrowed from Old French ducat, from Italian ducato, from Medieval Latin ducatus duchy, coin, from dux (genitive ducis) duke, so called from the title or effigy of the duke who issued it stamped on the coin.

Traditionally, it is said that the Byzantine Emperor Constantine Ducas had his name stamped on coins. Later, a silver coin was issued by Roger II of Sicily, as Duke of Apulia, in 1140 with the inscription R DX AP (Rogerius Dux Apuliae).

duchess n. Probably before 1300; borrowed from Old French duchesse, from Late or Medieval Latin ducissa, feminine of dux; see DUKE.

duchy n. Before 1338 duche, borrowed from Old French duché, from Medieval Latin ducatus, from dux (genitive ducis) duke, from Latin dux leader; see DUKE.

duck¹ n. swimming bird. Probably before 1300 doke, earlier in a surname Dukeswrd (1216); developed from Old English (967) dūce (found only in the genitive dūcan) a duck; literally, a ducker, possibly from dūcan* to duck, dive; see DUCK². The form duck is first recorded about 1420. —duckling n. Before 1425, (in the erroneous form dukyng) formed from Middle English doke + -ling.

duck² v. dip, plunge. Before 1325 duken, later douken (before 1400); developed possibly from Old English dūcan* to duck, dive (found only in the derivative dūce a duck). Middle English duken is cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch dūken to dip, dive, Old High German tūhhan to dip (modern German tauchen dive, plunge). The sense of bend or stoop quickly, is first recorded in English in 1530. —n. 1554, rapid lowering of head or body; later, quick plunge, dip (1843); from the verb.

duck³ n. cotton cloth. 1640, borrowed from Dutch doek linen cloth or light canvas, from Middle Dutch doec; cognate with Old Saxon and Old Frisian dōk, and Old High German tuoh (modern German Tuch), all meaning cloth, but of unknown origin.

duct n. 1650, course, direction, from Latin ductus (genitive ductūs) a leading, past participle of dūcere to lead. The meaning of a tube, pipe, or channel conveying fluids, is first recorded in 1667.

ductile adj. About 1340 ductil hammered or shaped with a hammer; borrowed through Old French ductile, or directly from Latin ductilis that may be drawn, extended or hammered out thin, from ductus, past participle of dūcere to lead + -ilis an adjective suffix meaning capacity, ability, quality.

dud n. 1307 dudde cloak or mantle, perhaps made of coarse cloth; later duds ragged clothing (1508); of uncertain origin. The meaning was extended in 1825 to a person in ragged clothing, and in 1908 to a useless, inefficient person or thing; in World War I it was applied to a shell which failed to explode; hence, failure.

dude n. 1883, a man who is very fastidious in dress, speech, and manner. The word came into vogue in New York and is of unknown origin. Later it was also applied to a city slicker, especially an Easterner vacationing in the West. The slang sense of any male, is first recorded about 1970. —dude ranch (1921) dudgeon n. anger, resentment (usually in the phrase in high dudgeon). 1573 duggin, of unknown origin.

due adj. Probably about 1350 dewe customary, regular, suitable, owed as a duty; borrowed from Old French deü, past participle of devoir to owe, from Latin dēbēre to owe, see DEBT. —adv. 1597, duly; 1601, directly; from the adjective. —n. 1423–24, from the adjective.

duel n. About 1475 duelle; borrowed from Medieval Latin duellum combat between two persons (a sense developed from association with Latin duo TWO), from Latin duellum war (early form of bellum), a graphic revival from Old Latin duellum (i.e. duellum). —v. About 1645, from the noun. —duelist n. 1592, probably formed from English duel, n. + -ist, on the model of Italian duellista and French duelliste.

duet n. 1740, replacing duetto (1724); borrowed from Italian duetto short musical composition for two voices, diminutive of duo DUO. —v. 1822, from the noun.

duffel or duffle n. 1677, borrowed from Dutch duffel, from Duffel, town near Antwerp, where the cloth was originally sold. The term duffel bag, a cylindrical canvas bag, is first recorded in 1917.

dugout n. 1) 1722, American English, boat made by hollowing out a large log. 2) 1855, a rough shelter. Both formed from dug, v. + out. The sense of a shelter at the side of a baseball field is first recorded in 1914.

duke n. 1129 duc sovereign prince; borrowed from Old French duc, and from Latin dux (genitive ducis) leader, commander (in Late Latin, governor of a province), from dūcere to lead. The meaning of a nobleman of high or highest rank, is first recorded in English probably about 1350.

dulcet adj. About 1450 dulcet sweet or pleasant, to the ear; earlier doucet (probably about 1425); borrowed from Old French doucet, diminutive of doux (earlier dulz) sweet, from Latin dulcis, for suffix see -ET.

dulcimer n. Probably 1474 dousemer, borrowed from Middle French doulce mer, variant of doulcemele and probably doulz de mer, said to represent Latin dulce sweet + melos song, from Greek mélōs MELODY.

dull adj. Probably about 1200 dul not sharp of wit, stupid; later dulle blunt, not sharp (about 1230); apparently related to Old English (about 975) dol dull-witted, foolish (from Proto-Germanic dulaz*) which is cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon dol foolish, Old High German tol (modern German toll mad, wild), and Gothic duvals foolish. The sense of boring is first recorded in 1590. —v. Probably about 1200, to make stupid; from the adjective. —dullard n. About 1440, earlier as a surname (1225).

duly adv. About 1380 duweliche rightly, properly, later duli (before 1395); formed from dewe due + -liche -ly¹.

dumb adj. Old English dumb (about 1000); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon dumb mute, Middle Dutch dom, domp (modern Dutch dom stupid), Old High German tumb, tump mute, stupid, deaf (modern German dumm stupid), Old Icelandic dumbr mute (Swedish dum stupid), and Gothic dumbs mute, speechless. The sense of stupid, foolish, senseless, is first recorded probably before 1200. —dumbbell n. 1711, exercising device. The figurative meaning of a blockhead, is first recorded in 1920, in American English.

dumfound or dumbfound v. 1653, formed from English DUMB + (CON)FOUND.

dummy n. 1598, mute person, formed from English DUMB + *-y*³; by 1796, extended to blockhead and before 1845 to a figure representing a person.

dump v. About 1333–52 dompen to throw down or fall with force; perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Danish dumpe, Norwegian dumpa, Swedish dimpa to fall with a thud). The sense of throw down (rubbish, etc.), unload in a mass, is first recorded in 1784, in American English. —n. 1784 dump(s), American English, place where refuse is dumped; from the verb. The sense of any shabby place, is first recorded in 1899, in American English. —dumps n.pl. 1529 dumpes, low spirits, plural of earlier dumpe a fit of musing, reverie, (1523); of uncertain origin. The form corresponds to Dutch domp haze, mist, from Middle Dutch damp vapor. —dump truck (1930, American English, replacing dump wagon, 1869). —dummy adj. short and fat (1750).

dumpling n. About 1600 dumplin, of uncertain origin; perhaps formed in English from Low German dump damp, moist, heavy + English -ling.

dun¹ v. Before 1626, persistently demand payment of a debt; of uncertain origin, perhaps as an extended sense of an earlier verb dunnen to sound, resound, make a din (probably before 1200); dialectal variant of DIN. —n. 1628, perhaps from the verb.

dun² adj. dull brown. Before 1325 dune, developed from Old English (953) dunn, perhaps from Celtic (compare Old Irish donn dark). —n. About 1390, name for a dun horse; earlier as a surname Dun (1180); from the adjective.

dunce n. 1577 Duns stupid person, from earlier Duns man a follower of John Duns Scotus (1527). Scotus was a Scottish theologian whose teachings were discredited by the humanists, and who ridiculed the Duns men as hairsplitting reasoners and sophists. Later the name meant any student who showed no capacity to learn, in short, a dull-witted person. The spelling Dunce is first recorded in 1530.

dune n. 1790, borrowed from French dune, from Old French dune, from Middle Dutch dūnen (modern Dutch duin) or Middle Low German dūne, perhaps from Gaulish dūnom*; cognate with Old Irish dūn fort, Welsh dinas city, and Old English tūn TOWN, see DOWN³ grassy hill.

dung n. Old English dung manure (about 1000); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon dung manure, Old High German tunga manuring, tung underground room covered with manure (for protection against cold), modern German Dung, and (with vowel change) Icelandic dyngja heap of manure, dung, Swedish dynga dung, muck, and Danish dyng heap, mass, pile. —dunghill n. About 1330 donghel, later dunghil (about 1450).

dungaree n. 1696, coarse cotton cloth; earlier dongerijns (1613); borrowed from Hindi dungrī. —dungarees n.pl. trousers made of dungaree. 1891, from the singular noun.

dungeon n. Before 1325 dunjon great tower of a castle; borrowed from Old French donjon, from Gallo-Romance dominionem*, from Late Latin dominium, from Latin dominus master (of the castle). The variant donjon took on the original meaning of this word; the form dungeon developed the specialized sense of strong close cell, which is first recorded before 1338.

dunk v. 1919, American English; borrowed from Pennsylvania German dunke to dip, from Middle High German dunken, tunken, from Old High German dunkōn, thunkōn. The meaning in basketball is first recorded in 1955.

duo n. 1590, song for two voices; borrowed possibly through French duo, from Italian duo duet, from Latin duo TWO.

duodecimal n. duodecimals, 1714; borrowed from Latin duodecim twelfth, from duodecim twelve; see DOZEN; for suffix see -AL¹. —adj. 1727, from the noun.

duodenum n. Before 1398, earlier duodene (1379); borrowed from Medieval Latin duodenum digitorum space of twelve digits, from Latin duodēni twelve each (from its length, about equal to the breadth of twelve fingers), from duodecim twelve. —duodenal adj. 1817, a formation in English from Latin duodēni twelve each + English -al¹ or borrowed perhaps through French duodénal from New Latin duodenalis.

dupe n. 1681, borrowed from French dupe deceived person, from Middle French duppe, probably from the phrase de huppe of the hoopoe (a reputedly stupid-looking bird). —v. 1704, from the noun in English, or borrowed from French duper, from dupe.

duple adj. 1542–43, borrowed from Latin duplus DOUBLE. Medieval Latin feminine dupla is used earlier as an adjective (two-fold) in a treatise on music (before 1450).

duplex adj. 1817, borrowed from Latin duplex (du-, from duo TWO + -plex; Greek pláx, genitive plakós flat surface). —n. 1922, American English, a house accommodating two families; apartment with rooms on two floors, from the adjective.

duplicate adj. Probably before 1425, double, consisting of two parts, borrowed from Latin uplicātus, past participle of uplicāre to double, (uplicare to fold); for suffix see -ATE¹. The meaning of exactly corresponding to something, is first recorded in 1812. —n. 1532, from the adjective. —v. 1472 uplicaten make a second reply; later, to double (1623); borrowed from Latin uplicātus, past participle of uplicāre; for suffix see -ATE¹. The meaning of make an exact copy of, is first recorded in 1860. —duplication n. Before 1500 uplicacioun; borrowed through Middle French uplicacion, and directly from Latin uplicatiōnem (nominative uplicatiō), from uplicāre; for suffix see -TION. The meaning of a counterpart or copy is first recorded in 1872. An earlier form uplicacioun (probably about 1425) had limited use in English.

duplicity n. About 1433 duplycyte deceitfulness; borrowed from Middle French uplicité, from Late Latin uplicitatem (nominative uplicitās) doubleness (in Medieval Latin, ambiguity), from duplex (genitive uplicis) twofold, DUPLEX; for suffix see -ITY. —uplicitous adj. 1928, formed from English uplicity + -ous.

durable adj. About 1390, borrowed from Old French durable, from Latin dūrābilis lasting, permanent, from dūrāre to last, harden, ENDURE; for suffix see -ABLE. —durability n. About 1380 durablete, borrowed from Old French durabilité, from Late Latin dūrābilitatem (nominative dūrābilitās), from Latin dūrābilis durable; for suffix see -ITY.

duration n. About 1380 duracioun, borrowed from Old French duration, from Medieval Latin durationem (nominative duratio), from Latin dūrāre harden, ENDURE; for suffix see -ATION.

duress n. About 1330 duresse hardship, cruelty, harm, from Old French duresse, from Latin dūritia hardness, from dūrus hard. The sense of confinement, is first recorded in 1414, and that of coercion, before 1420.

during prep. Before 1387, developed from 1) durand (recorded probably before 1350), originally the present participle of duren to last, endure (about 1250); borrowed from Old French durer, from Latin dūrāre ENDURE; and 2) duraunt (recorded as a surname 1206), an adjective and preposition borrowed from Old French durant, participle and preposition, from durer to last, endure.

The prepositional use arose in imitation of the Latin ablative absolute construction; for example, Latin dūrante bellō, literally, while the war endures, (en)during the war. When the participle during started to appear before various nouns, it came to be treated as a preposition of time.

dusk n. 1622, noun use of earlier adjective dosk dark, dim, dusky (probably before 1200), an alteration (by transposition of the sounds k and s represented in x) of Old English dox dark-colored (before 1000), and cognate with Old Saxon dosan chestnut brown, Old High German tusin pale yellow.

Formation of dusk is also explained as the adoption of a Northumbrian form of Old English dox, dosc*. —dusky adj. 1588, formed from English dusk, adj., dark, dim + -y¹.

dust n. Old English dūst (probably about 725); cognate with Old High German tunst, tunist storm, breath (modern German Dunst mist, vapor), from Proto-Germanic dunstu-z*. —v. Probably before 1200 dusten rise as dust, from the noun. —dusty adj. (probably before 1200)

Dutch adj. About 1333–52 Duch of Germany, German; later Duch of Holland and the Netherlands, Dutch (1568); borrowed from Middle Dutch duutsch, dütsch (modern Dutch Duits German). The term corresponds to Old English thēodisc belonging to the people (in particular reference to the popular or national language), Old Saxon thiudisc, Old High German diutisc of the German people (modern German deutsch), and Gothic thiudiskō after the manner of the heathens or gentiles. The Old English thēodisc is from thēod people, race, nation (from Proto-Germanic theudō*) + the suffix -isc -ish.

The original sense of Middle English Duch of Germany, German, survives by coincidence in the name Pennsylvania Dutch a people who came to America from Germany.

duty n. Probably 1383 dewete moral or legal obligation; borrowed from Anglo-French dueté, from du, due, variant of Old French deū DUE; for suffix see *-ty*². The sense of a tax, fee, or other charge owed to a government, church, guild, or municipality, is first recorded probably in 1377. —dutiful adj. 1552, formed from English duty + -ful.

dwarf n. Probably before 1300 dwerew, later dwerif (before 1325) and dwergh (probably before 1350); developed from Old English dweorh (Late West Saxon) and from duerg (early Mercurian, about 700); cognate with Old Frisian dwerch dwarf, Old Saxon dwerig, Old High German tuerg (modern German Zwerg), Old Icelandic dvergr (Swedish dvärg, Danish dverg), and dýrgja female dwarf, from Proto-Germanic dweraz*. —adj. 1597, from the noun. —v. Before 1626, from the noun. —dwarfish adj. 1565–73, formed from English dwarf, adj. + -ish.

dwel v. Probably about 1200 dwellen remain, stay, later, reside or dwell (about 1250); developed from Old English (about 725) dwellan to mislead, deceive; originally, to make a fool of, lead astray. Old English dwellen is cognate with Old High German twellen hinder, delay, Old Icelandic dvelja tarry, delay (from Proto-Germanic dwaljanan*), Middle Low German dwel, dwal senseless, foolish, and Gothic dwal foolish; see DULL. —dweller n. Before 1382, formed from English dwel + *-er*¹. —dwelling n. About 1378, place of residence; earlier, the act or fact of staying (in a place), waiting, (also) delay, lingering (probably before 1300); formed from English dwel + *-ing*¹.

dwindle v. 1596, apparently a diminutive and frequentative form of Middle English duinen waste away, fade, vanish (about 1150); developed from Old English (about 1000) dwīnan; cognate with Middle Dutch dwīnen to vanish, disappear, and Old Icelandic dvīna grow weaker, faint, from Proto-Germanic dwīnanan*; see DIE; for suffix see *-LE*³.

dye n. Before 1300 dehe; earlier deyg (about 1280); developed from Old English dēah, dēag (about 1000), and related to dēagol, dēagol secret, hidden, dark, obscure (from Proto-Germanic dauzilaz*); cognate with Old Saxon dōgol secret, and Old High German tougal dark, hidden, secret. —v. About 1325 deyen; earlier, implied in the agent noun deyer (1260); developed from Old English (about 1000) dēagian, from dēag, n., dyc, from Proto-Germanic dauzō*.

Chaucer used both dyen and deyen, but Trevisa is the first writer of record to use dyen and dyled, the modern form. However, the distinction in spelling between the verbs die and dye is relatively recent. Johnson in his Dictionary, spelled them both die; while Addison, his near contemporary, spelled both dye. —dyer n. 1286, in a surname Dyere; earlier Deghar (1260); from the Middle English deien, v. + *-er*¹. —dyeing n. 1400, the act or process of dyeing; earlier, a dyed cloth (about 1395).

dynamic adj. 1817, borrowed from French dynamique, from New Latin dynamicus or German dynamisch (introduced by the German philosopher Leibniz in 1691); both from Greek dynamikós powerful, from dýnamis power, from dýnasthai be able, have power; for suffix see -ic.

dynamite n. 1867, coined as Swedish dynamit by the inventor Alfred Nobel, from Greek dýnamis power + Swedish -it *-ite*¹; see DYNAMIC.

dynamo n. 1882 short for earlier dynamo-electric machine (1875), invented and named in 1867 as German Dynamo(elektrische)maschine, from Greek dýnamis power; see DYNAMIC.

dynasty n. Before 1464, borrowed from Middle French dynastie, and perhaps directly through Late Latin dynastia, from Greek dynastelā power, lordship, from dýnastēs ruler, chief, from dýnasthai have power. Late Middle English dynastie replaced the earlier dynastia (recorded before 1387), which was probably borrowed directly from Greek dynastelā. —dynast n. 1631, hereditary ruler; one in power; borrowed from Late Latin dynastēs, and directly from Greek dýnastēs ruler. —dynastic adj. 1828, earlier as a noun (1623); formed from English dynasty + -ic, on the model of Greek dýnastikós, from dýnastēs ruler, chief.

dyne n. 1873, unit of force, formed in English from Greek dýnamis power; see DYNAMIC.

French dyne in this sense was borrowed in 1881 from English. In a different sense, dyne was proposed in France as the name of a unit as early as 1842, and this proposal may have influenced the English coinage.

dys- + a prefix meaning bad, abnormal, difficult, as in dysfunction, dystopia. Borrowed from Greek dys- bad, difficult.

dysentery n. About 1384 dissenterie, borrowed from Old French dissenterie, learned borrowing from Latin dysenteria, from Greek dysenteria (dys- + éntera intestines, bowels); for suffix see *-Y*³.

dyslexia n. 1886–88, borrowing through German Dyslexie; (from Greek dys- bad + léx(is) word, from légein speak in reference to reading aloud + -ia, of condition or quality). —dyslexic adj. 1961, formed from English dyslex(ia) + -ic. —n. person with dyslexia. 1961, from the adjective.

dyspepsia n. 1706, possibly a back formation of English dyspeptic, or borrowed from Latin dyspepsia, from Greek dyspepsia (dys- bad + pépsis digestion, from peptein, pésein to digest, + -ia, of condition or quality). —dyspeptic adj. 1694, borrowed from Greek dýsseptos hard to digest (dys- bad + peptós digested, from peptein to digest; see COOK); for suffix see -IC.

dysprosium n. 1886, New Latin, from Greek dysprósiton (neuter of dysprósitos hard to approach, dys- bad, difficult + prósitos approachable, from pros up to + -itos, verbal adjective of iénai to go) + New Latin -ium; so called from its rarity in nature.

E

e- a form of the prefix *ex-*¹, meaning out of, from, out, appearing in words of Latin origin before consonants other than c, f, p, q, s, and t, as in educe, eject, elect, evade. It also appears without restriction in scientific terms in the meaning of not, without, as in the biological term ecarinate without a keel (e- without + carinate, from Latin carīna keel).

each adj. Probably before 1200 elch, æche, also euch and ech; developed from Old English (before 830) ǣlc, originally a compound meaning “ever alike,” (ǣ ever + gelic alike); cognate with Old Frisian ellik, elk each, and Middle Dutch ēlic, elc, modern Dutch elk; see AY¹ and ALIKE. The spelling each began to appear in the late 1500’s.

eager adj. About 1275 egre impatient, eager; later, keen, sharp, fierce, impetuous (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French aigre, from Vulgar Latin ācris*, corresponding to Latin ācer (genitive ācris) keen, sharp; see ACRID. The spelling eager appeared at the end of the 1500’s.

eagle n. Before 1338 egle, borrowed from Old French egle, from Old Provençal aigla, from Latin aquila, originally black eagle, feminine of aquilus dark-colored. The spelling eagle developed in the 1600’s.

ear¹ n. organ of hearing. Probably before 1200 ere, eir, eare; developed from Old English (before 1000) ĕare; cognate with Old Frisian āre ear (modern Frisian ear), Old Saxon ōre, ōra, Middle Dutch ōre (modern Dutch oor), Old High German ōra (modern German Ohr), Old Icelandic eyra (Swedish öra, Danish and Norwegian øre), from Proto-Germanic auzōn*. —ear² n. (1645) —earmark n. (before 1460); v. (1591) —earring n. Before 1382, developed from Old English ĕar-hring (about 1000).

ear² n. part of corn, wheat, etc. containing the grains. Probably before 1200 ear, developed from Old English (before 800) ĕar (West Saxon), eher, æher (Northumbrian); cognate with Old Frisian ār ear of grain, Old Saxon ahar, Middle Dutch aer (modern Dutch aar), Old High German ahir (modern German ähre), Old Icelandic ax, Gothic ahs, ahana chaff, from Proto-Germanic aHaz*, genitive aHizaz*.

earl n. About 1300 erl, developed from Old English (perhaps before 616) eorl man, warrior, nobleman. The Old English eorl may be contrasted with a ceorl CHURL, or ordinary freeman and is cognate with Old Saxon and Old High German erl man, nobleman, Old Icelandic jarl chieftain, nobleman, and Runic Norse erilar designation of a magic-religious function.

early adv. Probably before 1200 erliche; later erli (before 1382); developed from Old English (about 950) ǣrlīce (ǣr soon, ERE + -līce -ly¹); possibly formed in imitation of Old Icelandic ǣrliga early. —adj. Probably before 1200 earliche, from the adverb. The spelling early appeared at the end of the 1500’s.

earn v. Probably before 1200 ernen; developed from Old English earnian get as a reward for labor (before 899), from Proto-Germanic aznōjanan*; related to esne serf, laborer, man, and cognate with Old Frisian esna reward, pay, Old High German asni day laborer, arnōn to reap, aren harvest, crop (modern German Ernte), Old Icelandic qnn harvest, labor, Gothic asans harvest, summer.

The spelling earn is found in earne (1589), and yearne (1591).

earnest¹ n. seriousness. About 1250 ernest, developed from Old English (about 1000) eornost; cognate with Old Saxon ernust seriousness, firmness, struggle, Old High German ernust (modern German Ernst seriousness), Old Icelandic ern able, vigorous, Gothic arniba securely. —adj. Before 1325 ernest, developed from Old English (about 1000) eornoste, from eor-nost, n.

earnest² n. pledge, surety. Probably about 1200 ernesse, apparently an alteration (by association with derivatives in -ness) of Old French erres, plural of erre pledge, from Latin arra, arha, short forms of arabō, arrhabō, from Greek arrhabōn earnest money, pledge, surety.

The spelling with t, which appeared in Middle English before 1400, was influenced by *earnest*¹, with which this word was confused at an early period in the belief that an earnest was so called because a transaction or bargain was supposed to be made “in earnest.”

earth n. 1137 erthe, developed from Old English eorthe ground, soil, earth (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian erthe earth, Old Saxon ertha, Middle Dutch aerde (modern Dutch aarde), Old High German erda (modern German Erde), Old Icelandic jörð (Swedish, Danish, and Norwegian jord), and Gothic airtha, from Proto-Germanic erthō*. —v. Probably before 1400, to bury, from the noun. The spelling earth appeared in the last half of the 1500's. —earthen adj. Before 1325 erthen; earlier eorthene (probably before 1200); formed probably in Middle English from erthe, eorth earth + -en, -ene *-en*². —earthly adj. Probably before 1200 erthlike, formed in Middle English from erthe + -like (-lich) *-ly*¹; and eorthlic, developed from Old English eorthlic earthly. —earthquake n. About 1280 eorthequakyng; later erthe quaque (about 1325).

earwig n. Probably before 1400 herewyck, from erewyge (about 1450); developed from Old English (about 1000) ēarwiga (ēare ear¹ + wiga beetle, worm; so called from the former belief that it crawled into people's ears).

ease n. Probably before 1200 eise comfort, opportunity; later ese (before 1375); borrowed from Old French aise comfort, pleasure, of unknown origin.

Old French aise suggests derivation from a word ending in a vowel, but the connection is not supported by historical phonetics as Vulgar Latin adjacēs*, adjacēns* would give Old French aises* (compare Latin infāns the source of Old French enfes). Moreover, there is a semantic gap between French aise comfort, pleasure, and Latin adjacēns lying near, neighboring, adjacent. —v. About 1300 aisen to help, assist, borrowed from Old French aaisier set at ease. —easement n. About 1390 esement compensation, redress, borrowed probably through Anglo-French aisement, from Old French aaisement (aaisier to put at ease + -ment -ment). The meaning in law of limited right to use something belonging to another is first recorded in English in 1405.

easel n. 1596 eazill, borrowed from Dutch ezel easel, ass, from Middle Dutch esel, an irregular borrowing (compare Gothic asilus) from Latin asinus ASS or possibly from its diminutive form asellus.

east adv. Probably before 1200 esten, developed from Old English ēasten, from the east (about 725), and ēast in or toward the east (before 900); cognate with Old Frisian āst east, āster eastward, from the east, Old Saxon ōst east, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch oost, Old High German ōstan east (modern German Osten), ōstar eastward, and Old Icelandic aust from the east, from Proto-Germanic austa-*, austra-. —adj. Probably before 1200, found in Old English compounds such as ēast-dæl eastern part (the first element regarded as a separate word). —n. About 1225 est, developed from Old English ēast (before 900). —easterly adj. 1548, formed from earlier easter (before 1387 ester) variant of eastern + *-ly*², on the pattern of westerly. —eastern adj. Before 1387 esterne; developed from Old English (about 875) ēasterne (ēast east + -erne, suffix denoting direction); cognate with Old Saxon ōstrōni eastern, Old High German ōstrōni, and Old Icelandic austrōnn. —eastward adv. Before 1200, developed from Old English (959) ēastwærde (ēast + -wærd -ward).

Easter n. 1103 Eastran festival commemorating the resurrection of Christ, and corresponding to the Jewish Passover, to which the name Easter (Middle English Esterne, Ester) was also applied, as recorded before 1387. Easter developed from Old English Eastre (before 899). Originally Eastre was the name of a Germanic goddess whose feast was celebrated at the spring equinox, and is cognate with Old High German ōstarūn, pl., Easter (modern German Ostern). Old English Eastre ultimately derives from ēast east, indicating that it originally referred to the goddess of dawn, corresponding to the Roman goddess Aurōra and the Greek goddess Eōs. —Easter egg (1825, replacing earlier pace egg, paste-egg, 1611) easy adj. Probably before 1200 aisie able, having opportunity; later esi (about 1378); borrowed from Old French aisié (modern French aisé), past participle of aaisier, to put at ease, from aise EASE. The sense of not difficult, is first recorded about 1280, perhaps influenced by ease, n. —adv. Before 1400, from the adjective. —easily adv. About 1290 aisieliche with little effort, formed from aisie + -liche *-ly*¹. —easiness n. Probably before 1425 esynnez, formed from esy, esi (later spellings of aisie) + -nez, -nes -ness.

eat v. Probably 1140 eten, developed from Old English (about 725) etan, past tense æt ate, past participle eten eaten; cognate with Old Frisian īta, eta to eat (modern Frisian ite), Old Saxon etan, Middle Dutch ēten (modern Dutch eten), Old High German ezzan (modern German essen), Old Icelandic eta (Swedish äta), and Gothic itan, from Proto-Germanic etanan*. —eatable adj. About 1384 etable, formed from eten + -able.

eaves n. pl. Probably before 1200 eovese, in Southwest Midland dialect; later evese, singular (before 1325, in Southeast Midland); developed from Old English efes edge of a roof (before 1000); earlier, edge of a woods (894). Old English efes, yfes is cognate with Old Frisian ose eaves, Old High German obasa eaves, porch, Old Icelandic ups eaves, and Gothic ubizwai (dative singular) porch, from Proto-Germanic ubaswa-*, ubiswa-. —eavesdrop v. 1606, probably a back formation from eavesdropper one who listens secretly to conversation (probably about 1450), developed from earlier eavesdrop space on the ground on which rainwater drops from the eaves (1449). Middle English eavesdrop is apparently an alteration (influenced by drop) of Old English yfesdripe the dripping of rainwater from the eaves (efes, yfes eaves + dryppan to DRIP).

ebb n. About 1190 ebbe, developed from Old English (before 1000) ebba; cognate with Old Frisian ebba ebb, Old Saxon ebbiunga, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch ebbe (modern Dutch eb), Old Icelandic efja countercurrent in a stream, from Proto-Germanic abjōn*. The figurative sense of a decline, decay, is first recorded before 1398. —v. Probably before 1200 ebben; developed from Old English ebbian (before 1000), from ebba ebb. —ebb tide (1837).

ebony n. 1597, apparently alteration of earlier hebenyf (about 1384); borrowed perhaps as hebenivus a misreading of Late Latin hebenivus of ebony, from Greek ebēninos, from ēbenos ebony. —adj. 1598, from the noun.

ebullient adj. 1599, boiling, agitated; borrowed from Latin ēbullientem, present participle of ēbullire to spout out, burst out (ē- out, + bullire to bubble, BOIL¹). The figurative sense of enthusiastic, is first recorded in 1664. —ebullience n. 1749, formed from ebullient + -ence, on the analogy of affluent, affluence, etc.

ec- a prefix, form of ex-, meaning from, out of, appearing in words of Greek origin before consonants, as in eclectic, eclipse, ecstasy.

eccentric adj. 1551, (of a circle) not having the same center, possibly from the earlier noun, but more likely borrowed from Medieval Latin eccentricus, from Greek ékcentros out of the center (ek-, ex- out + kéntron CENTER); for suffix see -ic. The figurative sense of odd, whimsical, is first recorded about 1630. —n. Probably before 1430, a circle or orbit not having the earth precisely in its center; borrowed from Middle French excentrique and Medieval Latin eccentricus, both adjectives used as nouns. The meaning of one who behaves in an unusual manner, is first recorded in 1832. —eccentricity n. 1545, formed from eccentric + -ity. The figurative sense of oddity, is first recorded in 1657.

ecclesiastic adj. 1483, possibly a shortening of earlier ecclesiastical (probably before 1425), or borrowed through Middle French ecclésiastique, and directly as a learned borrowing from Late Latin ecclēsiasticus, from Greek ekklēsiastikós of the ancient Athenian assembly, (later) of the church, from ekklēsiastēs speaker in an assembly or church, preacher; for suffix see -ic.

echelon n. 1796, steplike arrangement of troops, borrowing of French échelon level, echelon, literally, round or rung of a ladder, from Old French eschelon, from eschiele ladder, from Late Latin scāla stair, slope, from Latin scālae, pl., ladder, steps.

The sense of a level or subdivision was established in English in World War I, and by World War II the usage was extended to administrative levels or grades in the civil service and other professions.

A related form eschele a troop of soldiers, appears probably before 1300, but not recorded after 1500.

echinoderm n. 1835, borrowed from New Latin Echinodermata, the phylum name, from Greek echínos sea urchin, originally porcupine, hedgehog and dérma (genitive dérmatos) skin. The name refers to the spiny shell of this sea animal.

echo n. 1340 ecko, later echo (probably before 1430); borrowed from Old French echo, and from Latin ēchō, from Greek ēchō. —v. Before 1559, from the noun. —echoic adj. 1880, formed from English echo + -ic.

echovirus n. 1955, acronym formed from e(nteric) c(ytopathogenic) h(uman) o(rphan) *v*irus; originally called "orphan virus" because it was not at first known to cause any of the diseases with which it is associated.

éclair n. 1861, borrowing of French éclair, literally, lightning, from Old French esclair, from esclairer to light up, make shine, from Gallo-Romance exclāriare*, re-formed from Latin exclārare light up, illumine (ex- out + clārus CLEAR).

éclat n. Before 1674, notoriety; borrowing of French éclat splinter, fragment, (also) flash, brilliance, from éclater burst out, splinter, from Old French esclater, of uncertain origin. The extended meaning of brilliant success, fame, is first recorded in English in 1741.

eclectic adj. 1683, designating a group of ancient Greek philosophers who selected doctrines from every system of thought; borrowed, perhaps through French éclectique (1651), from Greek eklektikós literally, picking out, selective, from eklektós selected, from eklégein pick out, select (ek-, ex- out + légein gather, choose); for suffix see -ic. The generalized sense of selecting from various sources, broad in acceptance, is first recorded in 1814. —n. 1817, an adherent of the eclectic method of philosophy, probably from the English adjective.

eclipse n. About 1280, darkening of the sun, moon, etc., by another body; borrowed from Old French eclipse, learned borrowing from Latin eclipsis, from Greek ékēipsis a leaving out, forsaking, an eclipse, from eklepein to forsake its usual place, fail to appear, be eclipsed (ek- out of, out, from ex- + lepein to leave). The figurative sense of loss of brilliance, obscuration, is first recorded about 1385. —v. About 1280 eclipsen cause the eclipse of; from the noun. The figurative sense of obscure, overshadow, is first recorded probably before 1387. —ecliptic n. 1391, great circle which is the apparent path of the sun, abstracted from ecliptik lyne, borrowed from Latin līnea ecliptica ecliptic line, from feminine of eclipticus of an eclipse, from Greek ekleiptikós, from ékēipsis eclipse; so called because eclipses occur on or near this circle.

eclogue n. Probably before 1439, short pastoral poem often written as a dialogue between shepherds, borrowed from Latin ecloga, from Greek eklogē selection, from eklégein to select; see ECLECTIC.

eco- a combining form, corresponding to Latin oeco- and Greek oiko-, of Greek oikos house, in words borrowed from Greek, especially economy (Greek oikonomía household management); and in ecology, a modern coinage, broadened to mean the environment and relation to it; further extended in recent English coinages to mean of the ecology or the environment, as in ecosystem, ecocide.

ecology n. 1858, also with the spelling oecology (1873); borrowed from German Ökologie, and, by influence of the German word, also formed in English from Greek oikos house, habitation + English -logy study of.

economy n. Probably 1440 yconomye management of a household, influenced in its formation by earlier iconomique, n. (before 1393); but ultimately borrowed through Middle French économie, and directly from Latin oeconomia, from Greek oikonomía, from oikónomos manager, steward (oikos house + -nómos managing, from némein manage); for suffix see -y. The sense of management of the resources of a country, etc., is first recorded in 1651. —economic adj. 1592, of household management, a shortening of economical, and borrowed through Middle French économique and directly from Latin oeconomicus, from Greek oikonomikós, from oikonomía economy; for suffix see -ic. The sense of having to do with economics is first recorded in English in 1835. —economical adj. 1577, probably formed from English economy + -ical. The sense of pertaining to the economy of a country, etc., is first recorded in 1781. —economics n. 1586, art of managing a household, perhaps formed from earlier Middle English iconomique, n. + -s, as in physics; but generally considered to be formed in English from Middle French économique + English -s. The sense of the science of managing the resources of a country, etc., is first recorded in 1792. —economist n. 1586, person who manages a household; later, a student of economics (1804); probably borrowed from Middle French économiste, and formed from English economy + -ist, by influence of the Middle French. —economize v. 1648, to manage a household, formed from English economy + -ize. The sense of to spend sparingly, is first recorded in 1790.

ecru or écru adj., n. 1869, borrowing of French écru raw, unbleached, from Old French escru (es- thoroughly, from Latin ex- + crūdus raw, CRUDE).

ecstasy n. About 1384, overwhelming delight, elation, borrowed from Old French extasie, from Late Latin extasis, from Greek ékstasis trance, distraction, from existánai put out of place (ex- out + histánai to place, cause to STAND). —ecstatic adj. 1590, borrowed perhaps through French extatique, and directly from Greek ekstatikós, from ékstasis trance.

ecto- a combining form meaning outside, outer, in scientific and technical coinages, such as ectoderm, ectoplasm (outer portion of the cytoplasm of a cell). Borrowed from Greek ekto-, combining form of ektós outside, from ek-, ex- out, EX-2.

ectoderm n. 1861, formed from English ecto- outer + Greek dérma skin; see DERMA.

-ectomy a combining form designating the surgical removal of a part of the body, as in appendectomy. Borrowed from Greek ektomé a cutting out, excision (ek-, ex- out, EX-2 + -tomía a cutting; see -TOMY).

ecumenical adj. 1563–87 œcumenical representing the entire Christian world, formed in English as if from Latin œcumenicālis*, from Latin œcumenicus general, universal, from Greek oikoumenikós, from oikouménē gē the inhabited world, from oikómenos, present passive participle of oikeîn inhabit, from oikos house, habitation; for suffix see -AL¹.

eczema n. 1753, New Latin, from Greek ékzema, from ekzeîn to boil out (ek-, ex- out + zéma boiling, from zeîn to boil; see YEAST).

-ed¹ an inflectional suffix forming the past tense of many verbs in English, as in wanted, played, tried; dropped. The suffix was reduced in Middle English to -d from earlier -ed and -ede, both forms being a development from Old English -de. The development is evident in such Middle English forms as herd, hered, herede, Old English herede, hierde (modern English heard), and demed, earlier demde, Old English dēmdē (modern English deemed). Old English -de is cognate with Old High German -ta, Old Icelandic -tha, and Gothic -da, from the same Germanic base as -ED².

In modern English the suffix appears as -ed in spite of the pronunciation: 1 after t and d, -ed represents the pronunciation /id/, as expected in wanted, faded, and also in some words, such as blessed, beloved. 2 after voiceless consonants, except t, -ed represents the pronunciation /t/, as in dressed, washed (many written with t from the 1500's to the 1700's, and surviving where a long vowel is shortened in the verb stem, as in crept, slept, swept). 3 after vowels and voiced consonants, except d, -ed represents the pronunciation /d/, as in vowed, lagged.

In other forms the suffix appears without the preceding vowel, either as -d in sold (Old English seald from sellan to sell) or as -t in bought (Old English boht from byegan to buy). This process of contraction that started in Old English was completed in Middle English and Early Modern English where endings in -ded, -ted became d, as in bleded, bled and t, as in seted, set, and even with -ded contracting to t in gilded, gilt.

-ed² a derivational suffix forming the past participle of many verbs in English, as in (has) rented, (have) echoed, and used as if from a verb to form adjectives from nouns with various meanings, especially: a) having, provided with, characterized by, as in toothed, moneyed, cultured, diseased, long-legged; b) having the characteristics of, as in bigoted, crabbed, dogged.

The suffix appeared in Old English as -d, -ed, -ad, or -od, with the vowel marking the inflectional class of the verb, so the actual past participial suffix is -d, cognate with Old High German -t, Old Icelandic -th(r), Gothic -th(s), representing the Proto-Germanic base *-daz.

The formation of adjectives from nouns by adding -ed, is an ancient practice and Old English is noted for such examples as hringed (modern English ringed), hōced (modern English hooked), and ān-ēaged (modern English one-eyed).

eddy n. Before 1455 ydy Scottish form; later eddy (1553); possibly borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic idha eddy).

edema n. Probably before 1425 ydema, borrowed from Greek oidēma (genitive oidēmato) a swelling tumor, from oidēn to swell, from oidos tumor, swelling.

edge n. Probably before 1200 egge, developed from Old English ecg corner, edge, sword (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian egg edge, Old Saxon eggia point, edge, Middle Dutch egghe (modern Dutch eg), Old High German ecka (modern German Ecke), Old Icelandic egg corner, angle, edge, from Proto-Germanic azjō*. —v. About 1300, give an edge; implied in the adjective egged; from the noun. The sense of advance imperceptibly, is first recorded in 1624.

The spelling cg in Old English ecg developed into gg in Middle English and dge in modern English representing a series of sound changes in which the sound represented by g developed into that represented by j, as in judge, because widespread use of Old English brygge, egge, etc. (i.e. in genitive, dative, and accusative case of the noun) led to a new nominative form brigge, egge, etc. in Middle English, hence bridge, edge, etc. in modern English.

edible adj. 1594, borrowed from Late Latin edibilis, from Latin edere EAT; for suffix see -IBLE.

edict n. 1483, borrowed from Latin ēdictum, originally neuter past participle of ēdicere publish, proclaim (ē- out + dicere say). The form edict replaced earlier edit (recorded about 1300), borrowed from Old French edit, from Latin ēdictum.

edifice n. About 1380, borrowed from Old French edifice building, learned borrowing from Latin aedificium building, from aedificāre to build, from a lost adjective aedificus* house-building (aedis, variant of aedēs temple, in the plural meaning dwelling or building, originally, hearth + the root of facere to make).

edify v. Before 1338 edefien to found or establish; about 1340 edifien to build; borrowed from Old French edifier, from Latin aedificāre to build, construct, and in Late Latin, improve spiritually, instruct; see EDIFICE. The sense of improve or instruct, is first recorded in 1340. —edification n. Probably about 1350 edificacioun; borrowed perhaps through Old French edification, and directly from Latin aedificātiōnem (nominative aedificātiō) construction, and in Late Latin spiritual improvement, from aedificāre; for suffix see -ATION.

edit v. 1791, to publish; borrowed possibly through French éditer, and directly from Latin ēditus, past participle of ēdere bring forth, produce (ē- out, e- + -dere, combining form of dare to give). In the sense of prepare for publication, edit is first recorded in 1793, probably as a back formation from editor. —edition n. Probably before 1425 edicion version or translation; borrowed from Latin ēditionem (nominative ēditiō) a bringing forth, producing, from ēdit-, stem of ēdere; for suffix see -TION. —editor n. 1649, publisher; borrowed from Latin ēditor one who puts forth, from ēdit-, stem of ēdere; for suffix see -OR². The sense of a person who prepares written matter for publication is first recorded in English in 1712. —editorial adj. 1744, formed from English editor + -ial (variant of *-al*¹). —n. newspaper article by an editor. 1830, in American English; from the adjective.

educate v. 1447 educaten bring up (children), train; borrowed from Latin educātus, past participle of educāre bring up, rear, educate, related to ēducere bring out, (ē- out + ducere to lead) for suffix see -ATE¹. The specific sense of provide schooling is first recorded in 1588. —education n. 1531, child rearing; borrowed probably through Middle French éducation; learned borrowing from Latin educātiōnem (nominative educātiō), from educāre; for suffix see -ATION. The sense of schooling given to the young, appeared in English in 1616. —educational adj. 1652, formed from English education + *-al*¹. —educator n. 1566, borrowed from Latin educātor, from educāre; for suffix see -OR².

-ee a suffix meaning one who is _____ed, as in appointee, drafter, added to verb stems to form nouns corresponding to agent nouns in -er or -or (as trainer, lessor, whence trainee, and lessee); but also added to intransitive verbs to mean one who _____s, as in escapee, standee. Originally used in technical terms of law, -ee was an adaptation of -é in certain Anglo-French past participles used as nouns, from Old French -é, from Latin -ātus -ATE¹. In the 1700's -ee appeared as a pseudo-legal and humorous suffix, such as in laughee, educatee, sendee.

eel n. Probably about 1200 ele; later eele (before 1398); developed from Old English æel (about 1000); cognate with Old Frisian -ēl eel, Middle Dutch ael (modern Dutch aal), Old Saxon and Old High German āl (modern German Aal), and Old Icelandic áll, from Proto-Germanic ælaz*.

-eer a suffix added to nouns to form nouns and verbs meaning: 1 one who directs or operates, as in auctioneer. 2 one who produces, as in pamphleteer. 3 to be concerned or deal with, as in mountaineer, electioneer. This suffix is an Anglicized form of French -ier, agent noun suffix which normally represents Latin -iarius but in many words replaces French -aire (as in secrétaire, dictionnaire), from Latin -ārius -ARY. See also -IER.

eerie adj. Before 1325 eri fearful, timid, dialectal variant of earlier ergh probably about 1175; developed from Old English (about 885) earg cowardly, fearful; for suffix see -Y¹; cognate with Old Frisian erg evil, bad, Middle Dutch arch, erch bad (modern Dutch erg), Old High German arg cowardly, worthless (modern German arg bad), Old Icelandic argr unmanly (from Proto-Germanic argaz*). The sense of causing fear because of strangeness, appeared in 1792.

ef- a form of the prefix *ex-*¹, meaning out of, from, out, in words of Latin origin before f, as in effect, effluent.

efface v. 1490 effacen, borrowed from Middle French effacer, from Old French esfacier (es- out, from Latin ex- + face appearance, FACE).

effect n. About 1385, earlier, conclusion or realization (probably about 1350); borrowed from Old French effect, from Latin effectus (genitive effectūs), from effec-, stem of efficere work out, accomplish (ef- out + -ficere, combining form of facere to DO¹). —v. bring about, accomplish, 1589, from the noun (earlier forms, 1494 and following are a confusion with affect). —effective adj. Before 1398 effectif producing results, efficient; borrowed from Old French effectif, effective, from Latin effectivus, from effec-, stem of efficere; for suffix see -IVE. —effectual adj. About 1395 effectuel, borrowed from Old French effectuel, from Late Latin effectualis, from Latin effectus effect.

effeminate adj. Before 1393 effeminat, borrowed from Latin effeminātus, past participle of effemināre make a woman of (ef- out + femina woman); for suffix see -ATE¹.

effere adj. 1856 (but probably earlier, perhaps 1839–47); borrowed from Latin effere (nominative effere), present participle of efferre bring out (ef- out, + ferre bring); for suffix see -ENT.

effervescence n. 1651, a boiling up; borrowed probably through French effervescence (1641), from Latin effervescere (ef- out, + fervere begin to boil, from fervere be hot, boil); for suffix see -ENCE. The sense of bubbling, is first recorded in 1684–85, and that of liveliness, in 1748. —effervesce v. 1702, to boil up; borrowed from Latin effervescere. The sense of to bubble, is first recorded in 1784, and that of be lively, in 1850. —effervescent adj. 1684, boiling up; borrowed from Latin effervescens (nominative effervescens), present participle of effervescere; for suffix see -ENT. The figurative sense of exuberant, appeared in 1833.

effete adj. 1621, unproductive, barren; borrowed from Latin effētus unproductive, worn out (chiefly feminine effēta) worn out with bearing offspring, past participle of a lost verb effēri* become worn out by bearing offspring (ef- out + the root of FEMININE and FETUS). The sense of exhausted, is first recorded in 1662, and that of intellectually or morally exhausted in 1790.

efficacy n. 1527, borrowed from Latin efficācia, from efficāx (genitive efficācis) effective, from efficere work out, accomplish, EFFECT; for suffix see -ACY. Efficacy replaced earlier: 1) efficace (recorded probably before 1200); borrowed from Old French efficace, from Latin efficācia, and 2) efficacite (recorded probably before 1425); borrowed from Old French efficacitē, from Latin efficacitatem (nominative efficacitās) effectiveness, from efficāx. —efficacious adj. 1528, formed in English from Latin efficāx (genitive efficācis) + English -ious.

efficient adj. About 1380, producing immediate effect; borrowed through Old French efficient, and directly from Latin efficientem (nominative efficiēs), present participle of efficere work out, accomplish; for suffix see -ENT. —efficiency n. 1593, borrowed from Latin efficientia, from efficientem; for suffix see -ENCY.

effigy n. 1539, borrowed from Middle French effigie image of a person, learned borrowing from Latin effigies copy or imitation of an object, likeness; related to effingere to mold, fashion (cf. out, + fingere to form, shape).

The phrase in effigy appeared in 1617. The expression to burn (hang, etc.) in effigy, appeared in 1678.

effluence n. Before 1398, borrowed from Late Latin effluentia, from Latin effluentem (nominative effluēs), present participle of effluere flow out (cf. out, + fluere to flow); for suffix see -ENCE. —effluent adj. Probably 1440, a back formation of earlier effluence; and borrowed from Latin effluentem; for suffix see -ENT. —n. 1859, from the adjective.

effluvium n. 1646, stream of imperceptible particles, borrowed from Latin effluvium a flowing out, from effluere; see EFFLUENCE.

effort n. About 1489, borrowed from Middle French effort, from Old French esfort, from esforier force out, exert, from Vulgar Latin exfortiāre* (Latin ex- out + fortis strong).

effrontery n. 1715, borrowed from French effronterie, from effronté shameless, from Old French esfronté, possibly from Late Latin effrontem (nominative effrōns) barefaced (cf. out, + Latin frontem, frōns brow, FRONT); for suffix see -ERY.

effulgence n. 1667, borrowed from Late Latin effulgentia, from Latin effulgentem (nominative effulgēs), present participle of effulgere shine forth (cf. out, + fulgere to shine); for suffix see -ENCE. —effulgent adj. shining brightly, radiant. 1738, a back formation from effulgence; and borrowed from Latin effulgentem (nominative effulgēs), present participle of effulgere; for suffix see -ENT.

effusion n. 1402, borrowed through Middle French effusion, and directly from Latin effusio (nominative effusio), from effūd-, stem of effundere pour forth (cf. out, + fundere pour); for suffix see -SION. —effuse v. 1495 effusen; a back formation from effusion; and borrowed from Middle French effuser, from Latin effusus, past participle of effundere.

eft n. Probably about 1175 evete, developed from Old English efete (about 1000); of unknown origin. The unexplained Middle English variant form ewte, appearing before 1398, led to formation of NEWT (before 1425).

egalitarian adj. 1885, formed in English from French égalitaire (from Old French égalité, from Latin aequalitatem EQUALITY) + English -ian.

egg¹ n. bird's egg. About 1340 eg, later egge (1366), originally Northern English; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic egg). The forms eg, egge replaced earlier Middle English eai (recorded probably before 1200), and aei, ei; all developed from Old English (805–31) āeg, which is cognate with Old Icelandic egg, Old Saxon, Middle Dutch, modern Dutch, and Old High German ei (modern German Ei) and Crimean Gothic ada, from Proto-Germanic ajjaz*. —egg² n. About 1775, American English, formed from *egg*¹ + nog (1693) strong ale, of unknown origin. —eggshell n. (1425, egg-shel) ego n. 1789, but probably earlier as suggested by such formations as egotism (1714); borrowed from Latin ego I; see I. The sense of conceit, egotism is first recorded in English in 1891. The psychoanalytic sense of the conscious part of the mind (contrasted with id), appeared in 1910. —egoism n. 1785, borrowed from French égoïsme (1755), probably from New Latin egoismus, from Latin ego I; for suffix see -ISM. The sense of self-interest, is first recorded in English in 1800. —egoist n. 1785, borrowed from French égoïste (1755), probably from New Latin egoista, from Latin ego I; for suffix see -IST. —egotism n. 1714, formed in English from Latin ego I + English -ism, a form of -ism found in dogmatism (1603), etc. The sense of selfishness is first recorded in English in 1800. —egotist n. 1714, formed in English from Latin ego I + English -tist, a form of -ist found in dogmatist (1541). —egotistical adj. 1825, formed from English egotist + -ical. —egotistic adj. About 1860, probably a back formation from English egotistical.

egg² v. urge, incite. Probably before 1200 eggen, borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic eggja to goad, from egg edge).

egregious adj. About 1534, distinguished, eminent; borrowed from Latin ēgregius, from ē grege standing out from the flock (ē out of, + grege, ablative of grex herd, flock); for suffix see -OUS. The ironical use of very great (i.e. outrageous) is first recorded in English in 1573.

egress n. 1538, a going out; either 1) borrowed from Latin ēgressus (genitive ēgressūs), from ēgredi go out (ē- out, + -gredi, combining form of gradī to step, go, related to gradus, genitive gradūs step, GRADE); or 2) a back formation from earlier egression (recorded before 1425); borrowed from Latin ēgressionem (nominative ēgressiō), from ēgredi; for suffix see -SION. The meaning of exit, outlet, is first recorded in 1677.

egret n. About 1353, borrowed from Old French aigrette, from Old Provençal aigreta, from aigron heron, corresponding to Old French hairon HERON.

eider n. 1743, probably borrowed through German Eider or Dutch eider, from Icelandic ædhar, genitive of ædhr eider, from Old Icelandic. The compound eiderdown (1774), was probably a part translation of German Eiderdaunen or Dutch eiderdons.

eight adj. Probably about 1200 ehte, later eyhte (before 1300), and eighte (about 1378); developed from Old English eahta (about 725, in Beowulf), æhta; cognate with Old Frisian achta eight, Old Saxon and Old High German ahto (modern German acht), Old Icelandic átta, and Gothic ahtau; from Proto-Germanic ahtō(u)*. For the modern spelling with gh see FIGHT. —n. Probably about 1200. —eighteen adj. Probably before 1200 ahtene, later ehtene (about 1300), and eightene (before 1398); developed from Old English (about 1000) eahtatene (eahta EIGHT + -tēne -teen, from tēn TEN). —eighth adj. Before 1250 eihtuthe, later eihtthe (about 1385); developed from Old English eahtotha; cognate with Old Frisian achtund eighth, Old Saxon and Old High German ahtodo, etc. —n. Probably before 1200, used as an absolute construction. —eighty adj. About 1300 eighteti, shortened from Old English (before 830) hundehtatig group of eighty (hund- ten; see HUNDRED + eahta EIGHT + -tig group of ten, -TY¹).

einsteinium n. 1955, New Latin; formed from the name of Albert Einstein, German-born physicist, + -ium.

either pron., adj., adv. Probably about 1175 either, aither both (of two things or persons), every; developed from Old English æghther (before 900), contraction of æghwæther each of two, both (ā- always, + ge- collective prefix + hwæther which of two, WHETHER). English either is cognate with German jeder each (originally of two). About 1290 either assumed the sense of one or the other of two, which has prevailed in modern English. —conj. either. . . or About 1250, developed from Old English æghther, contraction of æghwæther.

ejaculate v. 1578, borrowed, perhaps by influence of Middle French éjaculer ejaculate, from Latin ējaculāri, past participle of ējaculārī (ē- out, + jaculārī to throw, dart, from jaculum javelin, from jacere to throw); for suffix see -ATE¹. The sense of exclaim is first recorded in 1666. —ejaculation n. 1603, borrowed from French éjaculation, from éjaculer ejaculate, from Latin ējaculārī; for suffix see -ATION.

eject v. Probably before 1425 ejecten expel, drive out, borrowed from Latin ēiectus, past participle of ēicere throw out (ē- out + -icere, combining form of jacere to throw). The senses of this word are partly derived from Latin ēiectāre cast out, throw up, a frequentative form of ēicere. —ejection n. Probably before 1425 ejection, borrowed probably from Middle French éjection, and directly from Latin ēiectionem (nominative ēiectiō), from ēiec-, stem of ēicere for suffix see -TION.

eke v. eke out Probably about 1200 eken to increase, lengthen, Northern and East Midland variant of earlier echen (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (about 1000) ēcan, ēacan, ēacian, probably from ēaca an increase (894). The Old English is cognate with Old Frisian āka to increase, Old Saxon ōkian, Old High German ouhōn, Old Icelandic auka, and Gothic aukan.

elaboration n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Latin ēlabōrātiōnem (nominative ēlabōrātiō), from ēlabōrāre work out, produce by labor (ē- out, + labōrāre to LABOR); for suffix see -ATION. —elaborate adj. 1592, accomplished by labor; earlier, as a past participle meaning worked out in detail, firmly crafted (1581); borrowed from Latin ēlabōrātus, past participle of ēlabōrāre for suffix see -ATE¹. —v. 1607, to build up (a chemical substance) from simple elements; borrowed from Latin ēlabōrātus, past participle of ēlabōrāre, probably by influence of French élaborer (1534); for suffix see -ATE¹. The sense of work out in detail, appeared in English in 1611.

élan n. 1877, a borrowing of French élan, from élancer to rush, dart, from Old French elancer (ē- out, + Old French lancer to throw a lance, from Late Latin lanceāre, from Latin lancea LANCE).

elapse v. 1644, borrowed from Middle French elapser, from Latin ēlāpsus, past participle of ēlābī slip or glide away (ē- out, away, + lābī to slip; glide). —n. Before 1677, from the verb, possibly influenced by lapse.

elastic adj. 1653, causing expansion; borrowed from New Latin elasticus, from Greek elastós ductile, flexible; related to elaúnein to strike, beat out; of uncertain origin; for suffix see -IC. —n. 1847, in American English, from the adjective. —elasticity n. 1664, formed from English elastic + -ity.

elate v. 1578, raise, elevate; developed from earlier elat, adj. haughty (about 1375); probably borrowed from Latin ēlātus elevated, a form used to make the past participle of ēfferre bring or carry out (ē- out, + ferre carry). Latin ēlātus derives from lātus (compare tulī I have borne). Elate, in its renewed use in the late 1500's, may be a back formation from earlier elation. The sense of raise the spirits of, exalt, stimulate, excite, is first recorded before 1619. —elation n. Probably about 1350, elevation of mind, pride; borrowed from Old French elacion, from Latin ēlātiōnem (nominative ēlātiō), from ēlātus elevated; for suffix see -TION. The sense of elevation of spirits, buoyancy, is first recorded in 1750.

elbow n. Before 1200 elbowe, developed from Old English (about 1000) elnboga (eln ELL¹ length of the forearm + boga BOW² arch); cognate with Middle Dutch ellenböghe elbow (modern Dutch elleboog), Old High German elinbogo elbow (modern German Ellenbogen, Ellbogen), and Old Icelandic glnbogi. —v. 1605, thrust with the elbow; jostle, from the noun.

elder¹ adj. older. Probably about 1175, developed from Old English eldra (Mercian dialect, about 725, in Beowulf), comparative of eald, ald OLD; for suffix see -ER². —n. Probably before 1200 eldre, developed from Old English (971) eldra older person, parent, ancestor; from the adjective. —elderly adv. 1611, related to eldernliche of old time, literally, forefatherly, (eldern, eldren forefathers + -liche -ly¹). —eldest adj. Old English eldest (Mercian dialect, before 900), superlative of eald, ald OLD; for suffix see -EST.

elder² or elderberry n. About 1150 ellen; later eldre (before 1400); developed from Old English ellæn, ellærn elderberry tree (before 800).

elect adj. Probably before 1425, voluntary; later, selected or chosen (1477); borrowed from Latin ēlectus, past participle of ēligere pick out, select (ē- out + -ligere, combining form of legere to choose, read). —v. Probably before 1425 electen choose, possibly from elect, adj., or borrowed from Latin ēlectus, past participle of ēligere. Also, elect, v. may be a back formation from earlier election. —n. Probably before 1425, from the adjective. —election n. About 1300 elecioun; later election a choosing, election (probably before 1405); borrowed through Anglo-French elecioun, Old French election, from Latin ēlectionem (nominative ēlectiō), from ēlē-, stem of ēligere select; for suffix see -TION. —election day (1467) —elective adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Medieval Latin electivus selective, from Latin ēlē-, stem of ēligere for suffix see -IVE. —n. 1701, from the adjective. The meaning of a course taken in school, but not required, is first recorded in 1850 in American English. —elector n. Before 1464, borrowed from Late Latin ēlector chooser, selector, from Latin ēlē-, stem of ēligere; for suffix see -OR². —electoral adj. 1675, formed from English elector + -al¹. —electorate n. 1675, in reference to a German Prince Elector, formed from English elector + -ate¹. The meaning of the persons having the right to vote is first recorded in 1879.

electr- a combining form, a form of electro- before a vowel, as in electron, electrode.

electric adj. 1646, borrowed from New Latin electricus generated from amber, as by friction; from Latin ēlectrum amber, from Greek ēlektron; for suffix see -IC. It is quite possible that popular adoption of electric was largely a shortening of electrical. —electrical adj. 1635, formed in English from New Latin electricus + English -al¹. —electrician n. 1751, American English, formed from electric + -ian, after physician, magician, etc. —electricity n. 1646, formed from English electric + -ity. In early use, the word referred to the properties of such things as amber and glass, which could attract lightweight objects when excited by friction. —electrification n. 1748; formed from English electrify, on the model of magnify, magnification. —electrify v. 1747, in American English, formed from electric + -fy.

electro- a combining form corresponding to Greek ēlektron, combining form of ēlektron amber; its use and meaning in English came from the New Latin form electrum and the adjective electricus in reference to the power of amber to attract lightweight bodies when rubbed. In its compounds electro- has meanings that range from electric, electrically, electricity (electromagnet, electropositive, electromotive) to electrolysis (electroplate), electronics (electromusic), and the electron (electrovalence).

electrocute v. 1889, American English, formed from electro- + (exe)cute. —electrocution n. 1890, formed from English electrocute + -ion, on the pattern of execute, execution.

electrode n. 1834, formed from English electro- + -ode, as in cathode; coined on the pattern of anode and cathode.

electrolysis n. 1834, formed from English electro- + Greek lysis a loosening, from lyein loosen, set free.

electrolyte n. 1834, formed from electro- + -lyte, from Greek lytós loosened, from lyein loosen, set free.

electron n. 1891, formed from English electric + -on (as in ion, anion, etc.), possibly influenced by the earlier English form electron amber (1856) and by Greek ēlektron amber (which, when rubbed, produces a negative charge of static electricity). —electronic adj. 1902, formed from English electron + -ic. —electronics n. 1910, formed from English electron + -ics, as in physics, mechanics, etc.

eleemosynary adj. Before 1616, borrowed from Medieval Latin eleemosynarius pertaining to alms, from Late Latin eleēmosyna alms, from Greek eleēmosynē alms, pity; for suffix see -ARY.

elegant adj. About 1485, tastefully ornate in dress; borrowed from Middle French élégant, learned borrowing from Latin ēlegantem (nominative ēlegāns) choice, fine, tasteful, usually regarded as the present participle of ēlegāre*, a parallel form of ēligere select with care, choose; for suffix see -ANT. In Classical Latin the word expressed the notion of refined grace, which is reproduced in modern English usage. —elegance n. About 1510, borrowed from Middle French élégance, from Latin ēlegantia, from ēlegantem elegant; for suffix see -ANCE. Elegance replaced the earlier form elegancy refinement (recorded probably before 1425).

elegy n. 1514, mournful poem; borrowed from Middle French élegie, learned borrowing from Latin elegia, from Greek elegiā, ultimately from ēlegos mournful poem. —elegiac adj. 1581, borrowed through Middle French élegiaque, from Late Latin elegiacus, from Greek elegeiakós, from elegiā.

element n. About 1300, one of the four simple substances (earth, water, air, fire); borrowed from Old French element, from Latin elementum rudiment, first principle. The modern chemical sense (in which the simple substances are carbon, oxygen, hydrogen, etc.) is first recorded in 1813. The sense of the forces of the atmosphere, is first recorded in the singular probably about 1300, in the plural, probably before 1425. —elemental adj. About 1477, of the four elements, borrowed, possibly through Old French elementel, from Medieval Latin elementalis, from Latin elementum; for suffix see -AL¹. The sense of simple but powerful, is first recorded in English in 1820. —elementary adj. About 1396 elementare material, physical, having the nature of one of the four elements (earth, water, air, fire); borrowed through Middle French elementaire, and directly from Latin elementārius, from elementum element; for suffix see -ARY. The sense of simple, rudimentary, introductory, is first recorded in 1542. —elementary school (1841) elephant n. Probably before 1300 olyfaunt, later elifans, borrowed from Old French olifant, and elefant, learned borrowing from Latin elephantus, from Greek elēphās (genitive elēphantos) elephant, ivory.

The modern spelling was introduced in imitation of Latin elephantus sometime after 1550. —elephantiasis n. 1581, borrowed through Middle French éléphantiasis, and directly from Latin elephantiasis, from Greek elephantiasis (eléphas, genitive eléphantos ELEPHANT + -lasis, diseased condition). —elephantine adj. 1610, formed from English elephant + *-ine*¹; or borrowed, through French éléphantin, and directly from Latin elephantinus, from Greek elephantinos, from eléphantos of an elephant or ivory.

elevate v. Before 1410 elevaten elate or inflate with pride; later, raise or lift up (probably before 1425); developed from elevat high, elevated, past participle and adjective (1391); borrowed from Latin elevātus, past participle of elevāre lift up, raise (-ē- out + levāre lighten, raise, from levis light); for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —elevation n. Before 1398 elevation a rising, elevating, height, borrowed from Old French elevation, and directly from Latin elevātiōnem (nominative elevātiō) a lifting up, from elevāre; for suffix see -ATION. —elevator n. 1646, a muscle which raises a limb or organ; borrowed from Late Latin ēlevātor anything that raises or lifts, from Latin ēlevāre; for suffix see *-OR*². The meaning of a machine that lifts, is first recorded in 1787.

eleven adj. Probably before 1200 elleovene, enleven, developed from Old English endleofan, literally, one left (over ten), before 900, cognate with Old Frisian andlova, elleva eleven, Old Saxon ēlleban, Old High German einlif (modern German elf), Old Icelandic ellifu, and Gothic ainlif. —eleventh adj., n. About 1380 eleventhe, formed from English eleven + *-th*²; replacing ellefte (about 1300) and enlefte (before 1225); developed from Old English endlyfta, endleofa (endleofan eleven + -ta *-th*²). —eleventh hour 1829, in allusion to Matthew 20:1–16.

elf n. About 1390 elf, plural elves, earlier alve (probably before 1200); developed from Old English elf (variant of ielf*), coexisting with ælf (about 725, in Beowulf). Middle English alve is cognate with Old Saxon and Middle Low German alp evil spirit, goblin, Middle High German alp (modern German Alp, Alb), Old Icelandic álfr, of unknown origin. —elfin adj. 1596, possibly fashioned from the earlier phrase elvene lond land of elves (about 1300), or from the name Elphin, in the Arthurian legends, but also possibly formed from Middle English elven, from Old English -elfen, -ælfen (as in wuduelfen wood nymph). —elfish adj. Probably before 1200 alvisc, later elvyssh; formed from Middle English alve elf + -isc -ish.

elicit v. 1641, developed from earlier elicit, adj. (1624); borrowed from Latin ēlicitus, past participle of ēlicere draw forth (-ē- out + -licere, combining form of lacere to entice; see LACE). —elicitation n. 1656, formed in English from Latin ēlicitus (past participle of ēlicere) + English -ation; or formed from English elicit + -ation.

elide v. 1593, destroy, borrowed, perhaps through Middle French élider, from Latin ēlidere strike out (-ē- out, + -lidere, combining form of laedere to strike). The grammatical sense of omit (a vowel or syllable) in pronunciation is first recorded in English in 1796. Compare ELISION.

eligible adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Middle eliminate v. 1568, cast out, expel; borrowed, perhaps through influence of Middle French éliminer, from Latin ēliminātus, past participle of ēlimināre thrust out of doors, expel, from ē limine, off the threshold (ē off out and limine, ablative case of līmen threshold); for suffix see *-ATE*¹. The sense of to exclude, remove, get rid of, is first recorded in 1714. —elimination n. 1601, a casting out, formed from English eliminate + -ion, after such pairs as elevate, elevation, attenuate, attenuation, etc. The sense of expulsion or getting rid of, is first recorded in 1627.

French éligible fit to be chosen, learned borrowing from Late Latin ēligibilis that may be chosen, from Latin ēligere choose, ELECT; for suffix see -IBLE. —eligibility n. 1650, formed from eligible + -ity.

elision n. 1581, borrowed through Middle French élision from Latin ēlisionem (nominative ēlisiō), from the stem of ēlidere ELIDE; for suffix see -SION.

elite n. 1823, borrowing of French élite, from the Old French feminine past participle of elire, eslire pick out, choose, from Vulgar Latin exlegere*, re-formed (with Latin ex- out, + legere choose) from Latin ēligere choose, ELECT. Elite, élite is a re-borrowing of French in modern English. Middle English elit, elite person elected to office, was borrowed before 1398 from Old French elit, eslite, past participle of elire, eslire and was in use in English in 1450, but is unrecorded thereafter. —elitism n. 1951, formed from English elite + -ism. —elitist n. 1950, formed from English elite + -ist.

elixir n. Before 1393, the philosopher's stone believed by alchemists to change metals into gold, cure diseases, and prolong life; borrowed through Old French elixir, or directly from Medieval Latin elixir, from Arabic al-iksīr the elixir (al- the + iksīr elixir, philosopher's stone, probably from Greek xērion powder for drying wounds, from xēros dry). The figurative sense of quintessence of a thing, chief principle, is first recorded in English before 1500.

elk n. Probably before 1437; earlier, as a surname Elk (1297); developed from an alteration probably by sound substitution of k in Anglo-French for h in Old English elh, eolh; cognate with Old High German elaho elk (modern German Elch) from Proto-Germanic elh-*, and Old Icelandic elgr (from Proto-Germanic algis*). Latin alcēs, pl., and Greek álkē appear only as the name of an animal living in northern Europe (apparently the elk) and were probably adopted from Germanic, with sound substitution of g, k, for the Germanic fricative sound represented by German Elch.

ell¹ n. old measure of length (about 45 inches in England). About 1250 elne, later elle (about 1330); developed from Old English (about 1000) eln, (originally) length of the forearm or of the arm. Old English eln is cognate with Old Frisian elne ell, Old Saxon and Old High German elina, Middle High German elle (modern German Elle), Old Icelandic qln (stem aln-), and Gothic aleina.

ell² n. extension of a building at right angles to it. 1773, American English; so called from the resemblance of the structure and that of the capital letter.

ellipse n. a 1753 borrowing of French ellipse, from Latin ellipsis a falling short, defect, ellipse, from Greek élleipsis ELLIPSIS; so called because in the case of a conic section the cutting plane makes a smaller angle with the base than does the side of the cone; thus the idea of falling short of the side of the cone. The earlier term was ellipsis (see below).

ellipsis n. 1570, closed plane curve, ellipse; borrowed from Latin ellipsis, from Greek élleipsis a falling short, defect, ellipse, ellipsin, from ellepein fall short, leave out (el-, assimilated form of en- in + lepein to leave). The meaning in grammar is first recorded in English in 1612.

elliptical adj. 1656, of an ellipse; 1778 (of a sentence) defective; formed in English from Greek elleptikós (from élleipsis) + English -al.

elm n. Old English (about 1000) elm; cognate with Old High German elme, elm elm, Old Icelandic almr, Latin ulmus, and Middle Irish lem. The modern German Ulm and Dutch olm were borrowed from or influenced by Latin ulmus.

elocution n. Probably before 1439 ellocucioun oratorical or literary style, borrowed from Late Latin elocutiōnem (nominative elocutiō) voice production, manner of expression, in Classical Latin, oratorical expression, from elocū-, stem of eloqui speak out; for suffix see -TION. The sense of art of reading or speaking clearly in public is first recorded in 1613.

elongate v. About 1540, set at a distance, probably developed from earlier elongat, past participle (possibly before 1425); borrowed from Late Latin elongātus, past participle of elongāre remove to a distance (Latin ē- out, + longus LONG¹, adj.); for suffix see *-ATE*¹. Also, elongate, v. may be a back formation from elongation. The sense of lengthen, prolong, is first recorded about 1450.

In the 1500's elongate, v. replaced elongen (recorded probably 1440), borrowed from Middle French élonger extend, prolong, from Latin elongāre. —adj. 1828; re-formed in modern English from the verb, or as a shortened form of elongated (1751). —elongation n. About 1391, angular distance of a heavenly body from a fixed point, borrowed from Late Latin elongātiōnem (nominative elongātiō), from elongāre; for suffix see -ATION.

elope v. 1596, run away, escape, found in Anglo-French (1338) aloper run away from a husband with one's lover, perhaps formed from a- away, from Old French es-, + Middle Dutch (out)lopen run away. The sense, usually applied to lovers who run away from their homes to marry secretly, is first recorded in the 1800's. —elopement n. 1598, formed from English elope + -ment; found in Anglo-French alopement (1338).

The span of 250 years between the modern English use and the use in Anglo-French, or the 200 years between the Nottingham Borough Record and the Anglo-French, or the even greater spans for derived forms, such as elopement and eloping, suggests that elope is a direct reborrowing from Dutch.

eloquent adj. Before 1393, graceful and forceful in speech; borrowed from Old French eloquent, from Latin eloquentem else adj., adv. Before 1175 elles, later ells (1325); found in Old English (971) elles other, otherwise, different; also in the compound elsewhere (about 725). Old English elles is cognate with Old Frisian elles else, besides, Old High German elles other, Old Icelandic elliga, elligar otherwise, and Gothic aljis other. —elsewhere adv. Probably before 1200 elles huwer, later elsewher (probably about 1400; found in Old English elles huwer, about 725, in Beowulf). Middle English elles, ells developed into els during the 1400's and into else in the late 1500's and early 1600's.

(nominative eloquēns), present participle of eloqui speak out (ē- out, + loqui speak); for suffix see -ENT. —eloquence n. 1369, borrowed from Old French eloquence, from Latin eloquentia, from eloquentem, present participle; for suffix see -ENCE. By the late 1600's eloquence replaced the earlier eloquency (Middle English eloquencie, about 1350).

elucidate v. Before 1568, borrowed, perhaps through Middle French élucider, from Late Latin elucidātus, past participle of elucidāre make clear (Latin ē- out + lucidus clear, LUCID); for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —elucidation n. 1570, formed from English elucidate + -ion, possibly by influence of Middle French élucidation, from élucider make clear; or formed in English from Late Latin elucidāre + English -ation.

elude v. 1538, to fool, delude; borrowed from Latin eludere escape from, make a fool of, win from at play (ē- out, away, + ludere to play). The sense of slip away from, evade, is first recorded in English in 1612. —elusive adj. 1719, formed in English from Latin elūsus (past participle of eludere) + English -ive.

Elysian adj. 1579, in the phrase Elysian fields, formed in English from Latin Elysium + English -an. —Elysium n. 1590, place or condition of perfect happiness; borrowed through Latin Elysium from Greek Elýsion pedíon Elysian field (place where heroes and the virtuous live after death).

em-¹ a form of the prefix *en-*¹ before b, p, and sometimes m, as in embody, empower, and emmesh.

em-² a form of the prefix *en-*² before b, m, p, and ph, as in emblem, emphasis.

emaciate v. Before 1626 (implied in emaciating); borrowed, probably through influence of French émacié emaciated, from Latin emaciātus, past participle of emaciāre make lean, waste away (ē- out, + maciēs leanness, from macer lean); for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —emaciation n. 1662, formed in English from Latin emaciāre emaciate + English -ation.

emanate v. 1756, borrowed, through influence of French émaner, from Latin emānātum, past participle of emānāre flow out, arise, proceed (ē- out, + mānāre to flow); for suffix see *-ATE*¹. Also a back formation from emanation. —emanation n. 1570, borrowed from Late Latin emānātiōnem (nominative emānātiō), from Latin emānāre emanate; for suffix see -ATION.

emancipate v. 1613, borrowed, possibly through influence of French émanciper, from Latin emancipātus, past participle of emancipāre declare free, give up (ē- out, away, + mancipāre deliver, transfer or sell); for suffix see -ATE¹. —emancipation n. Before 1631, either formed from English emancipate + -ion, or borrowed from French émancipation, from Latin ēmancipātiōnem (nominative ēmancipātiō), from ēmancipāre; for the suffix of this latter borrowing see -ATION. —emancipator n. 1782, probably formed from English emancipate + -or², probably on the model of Late Latin ēmancipātor, from Latin ēmancipāre; for suffix see -OR².

emasculate v. 1607, borrowed, probably through French ēmasculer, from Latin ēmasculātus, past participle of ēmasculāre castrate (ē- out, away, + masculus MALE, MASCULINE); for suffix see -ATE¹. The figurative sense of destroy the force of or weaken has prevailed from the earliest use of this word. —emasculation n. 1623, formed from English emasculate + -ion, as if from Latin ēmasculātiōnem*, from ēmasculāre.

embalm v. About 1386 enbaumen to treat (a corpse) with spices to prevent decay; later enbalmen (1447); borrowed from Old French embaumer (em- + baume balm + -er verbal suffix). The spelling with l became fixed in the 1500's in imitation of Latin balsamum balm and parallel to English balm. —embalmer n. 1587, formed from English embalm + -er¹.

embankment n. 1786, formed from English embank to enclose with a bank (possibly from French embanquer) + -ment.

embargo n. Possibly about 1593; borrowed from Spanish embargo, from embargar restrain, embargo, probably from Vulgar Latin imbarriāre* restrain, impede (im-, from Latin in- into, upon, + Vulgar Latin barra* BAR). —v. 1650, seize, confiscate, from the noun.

embark v. 1550, borrowed from Middle French embarquer (em- + barque BARK³ ship). —embarkation n. About 1645, in part formed from English embark + -ation, and in part borrowed from earlier French embarcation act of embarking, from Spanish embarcación, from embarcar embark (em- + barca BARK³, from Latin).

embarrass v. 1672, throw into doubt or unease, shame, perplex; later, to hamper or hinder (1683); borrowed from French embarrasser, literally, to block, from embarras obstacle, from Italian imbarazzo, from imbarare to bar (im- into, upon, + Vulgar Latin barra* BAR). —embarrassment n. 1676, hindrance; later, feeling of unease (1774); borrowed from obsolete French embarrassement, from embarrasser embarrass; for suffix see -MENT.

embassy n. 1579, the position of ambassador; later, residence of an ambassador (1764); borrowed from Middle French embassée mission, charge, office of an ambassador, from Italian ambasciata, from Old Provençal ambaisada office of ambassador, and Medieval Latin ambactia service, duty, from Gaulish ambactos* dependent, servant.

The form embassy replaced earlier embassade (1480) and ambassade (1417) meaning the position of an ambassador, a diplomatic mission; borrowed from Old French ambassade, from Old Spanish ambaxada, from Vulgar Latin ambactiāta*, a derivation of ambactiāre* to go on a mission.

embattled adj. 1475, past participle of embattle, Middle English embataillen (before 1338); borrowed from Old French embataillier to prepare for battle (em- + bataille BATTLE).

embed v. 1778, imbed; formed from English em-¹, im-² + bed, n.

embellish v. About 1380 embelisen, borrowed from Old French embelliss-, stem of embelir, embellir make beautiful, ornament (em- + bel beautiful); for suffix see -ISH². —embellishment n. 1591, formed from English embellish + -ment.

ember n. Before 1398 emer, later eymbre (1440); developed from Old English (about 1000) æmerge and Old Icelandic eimyrja ember; cognate with Middle Low German ēmere ember and Old High German eimuria, suggesting an earlier Germanic compound aimuzjō*.

embezzle v. Probably about 1425 imbesellen, 1433 embesilen carry off secretly; borrowed from Anglo-French embesiler to steal, dispose of fraudulently (apparently em-, variant of Old French en- + beseler, besiler, in Old French besillier destroy, gouge). —embezzlement n. 1548, probably formed from English embezzle + -ment, re-formed after Anglo-French embesilement. —embezzler n. 1667, formed from English embezzle + -er¹.

emblem n. 1589; borrowed from French emblème symbol, learned borrowing from Latin emblēma inlaid ornamental work, from Greek ēblēmā (genitive ēblēmatos) embossed ornament, literally, insertion, from emballein throw in, insert (em- in + ballein to throw). —emblematic adj. 1645, borrowed from French emblématique, from Greek ēblēmātikós, from ēblēmā; for suffix see -IC.

embolism n. Before 1387, insertion of days in a calendar to correct errors, borrowed through Old French embolisme from Late Latin embolismus intercalary, altered from Greek embólimos, from embolē insertion, or ēmbolos a plug, wedge, from emballein to insert; for suffix see -ISM. The medical sense is first recorded in English in 1855.

emboss v. About 1386 embosen, borrowed from Old French embocer (em- en-¹ + boce BOSS² knoblike mass).

embrace v. About 1350 enbracen encircle, surround; later embracen (about 1380); borrowed from Old French embracer clasp in the arms, enclose (em- in, + brace the arms). The sense of fold in the arms, hug, is first recorded in English about 1385. —n. 1592, from the verb.

embrasure n. 1702, borrowed from French embrasure, probably from Old French embraser to cut at a slant, make a groove or furrow in a door or window (em- + braser to cut at a slant); for suffix see -URE.

embroider v. Before 1393 embroudren, developed from embrouden (about 1380) + -er¹, and also influenced by Old French embroder, from broder, broder, from Frankish brozdōn*, from Proto-Germanic bruzdōjanan*. The earlier Middle English embrouden developed, with em-¹, and some influence of brouden embroidered (1373), from Old English brogden, past participle of bregdan to weave (from Proto-Germanic brezđanan*), and further shows influence of blending with Old French embroïé embroidered, from broder.

The spelling with -oi- became established in the 1600's, and probably developed partly by influence of English broid braid, Middle English broud, but is found occasionally in broiderer, variant of brouderer embroiderer, in broiderie, variant of brouderie embroidery, and broiden, variant of brouden to pull or twist, attested as early as 1300 (perhaps 1230). —embroidery n. Before 1393 embrouderie art of embroidering, developed from embrouden and embrouden embroider (em-¹ + brouden, brouden, from Old French broder, broder); for suffix see -ERY. The form brouderie (browdrye) existed before 1382.

embroil v. 1603, throw into disorder, confuse; borrowed from French embrouiller (em- + brouiller confuse, from Old French brōoillier; see *BROIL*² to fight). The sense of quarrel, appeared in 1610.

embryo n. Before 1398 embrio, borrowed from Medieval Latin embryo, from Greek ēmbryon young animal, embryo, (em-² + brýein to swell, be full). —embryology n. 1859, borrowed from French embryologie; or formed from English embryo + -logy. —embryonic adj. 1849, formed in English from Medieval Latin embryo + English -ic; or formed from English embryon (1592) + -ic.

emend v. Probably before 1425 emenden, borrowed from Latin ēmendāre (ē- out + mendum, menda fault, blemish). —emendation n. Before 1460, borrowed from Latin ēmendātiōnem (nominative ēmendātiō), from ēmendāre emend; for suffix see -ATION.

emerald n. Probably before 1300 emeraude, later emeralde (1413); borrowed from Old French emeraude, esmeralde, and directly from Medieval Latin esmaraldus, esmeraldus, esmeralda, from Latin smaragdus, from Greek smáragdos.

emerge v. 1563—87, borrowed from Middle French émerger, from Latin ēmergere rise out or up (ē- out + mergere to dip, sink, MERGE). —emergence n. 1649, unforeseen occurrence, emergency; borrowed from French émergence, from émerger; for suffix see -ENCE. The sense of act of emerging, is first recorded in 1704. —emergency n. Before 1631, formed from English emerge + -ency. —emergent adj. Before 1460; earlier, probably before 1425, designating the year of the exodus of the Israelites from Egypt; borrowed from Latin ēmergentem (nominative ēmergēns), present participle of ēmergere emerge; for suffix see -ENT.

emeritus adj. 1602, borrowing of Latin ēmeritus, past participle of ēmerēre serve out, complete one's service (ē- out + merēre to serve, earn). The application of this term to retired professors is first recorded in 1794, in American English.

emery n. 1481, borrowed from Middle French émeri, from Old French emmeri, (earlier emeril, esmeril), from Italian smereglio, from Vulgar Latin smyrilium*, from Greek smýris abrasive powder.

emetic n. 1657, borrowed from French émétique, and as a learned borrowing from Greek emetikós causing vomiting, from émesis vomiting, from emeîn to VOMIT. —adj. 1670, learned borrowing from Greek emetikós.

-emia a combining form meaning condition of the blood, as in toxemia poisoned condition of the blood, uremia, leukemia, etc. New Latin -emia, -aemia, as in anemia, anaemia ANEMIA, from Greek anaimiā lack of blood (an- without + haima blood); see HEMO-.

emigration n. 1650, migration or departure from a place; borrowed from Late Latin ēmigrātiōnem (nominative ēmigrātiō) removal from a place, from Latin ēmigrāre move away, depart from a place (ē- out + migrāre to move); for suffix see -ATION.

emigrant n. 1754, borrowed from Latin ēmigrāntem (nominative ēmigrāns), present participle of ēmigrāre emigrate.

emigrate v. 1778, either borrowed from Latin ēmigrātum, past participle of ēmigrāre; or a back formation from English emigration; for suffix see *-ATE*¹.

émigré or emigré n. 1792, borrowing of French émigré, from past participle of émigrer emigrate, learned borrowing from Latin ēmigrāre EMIGRATE. Originally the word was applied to the royalist refugees during the French Revolution. In the 1920's it was particularly applied to refugees of the Russian Revolution and then gradually to any political refugee or exile.

eminent adj. About 1425, borrowed through Middle French éminent, or directly from Latin ēminentem (nominative ēminēns), present participle of ēminēre stand out, project (ē- out + -minēre, related to mōns MOUNT² hill); for suffix see -ENT.

eminence n. Before 1400, projection or protuberance, later, a high or exalted position (before 1425); borrowed through Old French eminence, or directly from Latin ēminentia, from ēminentem (nominative ēminēns), present participle of ēminēre; for suffix see -ENCE. —eminently adv. (about 1425) emir n. 1595, borrowed from French émir, from colloquial pronunciation of Arabic āmīr commander, from āmara he commanded; see ADMIRAL. The earlier emeer may have been a variant spelling of ameer AMIR.

emissary n. 1625, borrowed, probably through French émis-saire, from Latin ēmissārius, literally, that is sent out, from ēmissus, past participle of ēmittere send forth, EMIT; for suffix see -ARY.

emission n. Probably before 1425, something sent forth, produce or fruit, borrowed from Middle French émission, and directly from Latin ēmissiōnem (nominative ēmissiō) a sending out, from ēmiss-, stem of ēmittere send out; for suffix see -ION. The sense of a giving off or emitting, is first recorded in English before 1619. —emit v. 1623, borrowed from Latin ēmittere (ē- out + mittere let go, send).

emollient adj. 1643, borrowed from French émollient, from Latin ēmollientem (nominative ēmolliēns), present participle of ēmolīre soften (ē- thoroughly + mollīre soften, from mollis soft); for suffix see -ENT. —n. 1656, from the adjective.

emolument n. 1435, borrowed through Middle French émolument, and directly from Latin ēmolumentum profit, gain, (originally) payment to a miller for grinding corn, from ēmolere grind out (ē- out + molere to grind); for suffix see -MENT.

emotion n. 1579, agitation or tumult; borrowed from Middle French émotion (perhaps patterned on motion, commotion), from Old French emouvoir stir up, from Latin ēmovere, exmovēre move out, remove, agitate (ē- out + movēre to MOVE); for suffix see -TION. The sense of strong feeling, agitation, appeared in English in 1660. —emote v. 1917, American English, back formation from emotion or emotive. —emotional adj. 1834, formed from English emotion + *-al*¹. —emotive adj. 1735, causing emotion; formed in English from emotion + -ive.

empathy n. 1904, borrowed from Greek empathēia passion (em- in + pathos feeling, PATHOS). Empathy was a translation of German Einfühlung (ein in + Fühlung feeling), a word for the theory that art appreciation depends on the viewer's ability to project his personality into the object. —empathize v. 1924, formed from English empathy + -ize, on the analogy of sympathy, sympathize.

emperor n. Probably before 1200 empereur, later emperour (about 1300); borrowed from Old French (accusative) emper-eor, from Latin imperatorē (nominative imperator) commander, emperor, from the stem of imperāre to command; for suffix see -OR².

emphasis n. 1573, borrowed from Latin emphasis, from Greek ēmpasis significance, indirect meaning, from empha-, root of emphainein to present, show, indicate (*em-*² + phainein to show). —emphasize v. 1828, formed from English emphasis + -ize. —emphatic adj. 1708, shortened form of emphatical (before 1555, from Greek emphatikós forcible, vivid + English *-al*¹).

emphysema n. 1661, New Latin, from Greek emphysēma swelling, from emphysān inflate (*em-*² + physān to blow, from phýsa breath, blast).

empire n. Before 1338 enpyre; 1340 empire, borrowed from Old French empire imperial rule, learned borrowing from Latin imperium rule, command, from imperāre to command (im- in + -perāre, combining form of parāre to order, prepare).

empiric n. 1541, member of a school of ancient physicians who based their practice on experience rather than theory; borrowed from Latin empīricus, from Greek empeirikós experienced, from empeirā experience, from ēmpeiros skilled (*em-*² + peira trial, experiment). The sense of a person who relies on observation and experiment, is first recorded in English in 1578. —adj. = empirical. 1605 emperique, borrowed from French empirique, from Latin empīricus. —empirical adj. 1569, formed from English empiric, n. + *-al*¹.

emplacement n. 1802, borrowing of French emplacement, from Old French emplacier to place; for suffix see -MENT.

employ v. Probably before 1425 emplier devote to, apply; 1429 emploien make use of; borrowed from Middle French employer, emploier, from Old French empleier, from Latin implicāre enfold, involve, be connected with (in- in-² + plicāre to fold). The sense of hire, engage, is first recorded in English in 1584. —n.

1666, borrowed from French emploi, from Middle French, from employer to employ. —employee n. 1850, formed from English employ + -ee. —employer n. 1599, formed from English employ, v. + *-er*¹. —employment n. 1437 employment, formed from Middle English emploien, v. + -ment.

emporium n. 1586, borrowing of Latin emporium, from Greek ēmpōrion, from ēmporos merchant, traveler (*em-*² + pōros passage, voyage, ultimately from pelein to pass through).

empress n. 1140 emperice; later empres (before 1475); borrowed from Old French emperesse, feminine of empereor EMPEROR; for suffix see -ESS.

empty adj. Probably before 1200 empti, (showing a euphonic p between m and t); developed from Old English æmettig at leisure, not occupied (before 899), from æmetta leisure (æ- not + -metta, from mōtan have to); for suffix see -Y¹. The sense of containing nothing, vacant, is first recorded in Old English in 971. —v. 1526, make empty; from the adjective. The modern English verb took the place of obsolete Middle English empen (1380), geæmtegian (probably about 1200) to empty or drain, vacate; developed from Old English (about 1000) æmetian, æmetian be vacant, be at leisure, from æmetta leisure.

emulate v. 1582, and a back formation of earlier emulation, borrowed from Latin aemulātus, past participle of aemulārī to rival, strive to excel, from aemulus striving, rivaling, related to imitārī imitate and imāgō image; for suffix see -ATE¹. —emulation n. 1552, borrowed through Middle French émulation, and directly from Latin aemulātiōnem (nominative aemulatiō), from aemulārī; for suffix see -ATION.

emulsion n. 1612, borrowed from French émulsion, and probably directly from New Latin emulsionem (nominative emulsio), from Latin ēmulsus, past participle of ēmulgēre to milk out (ē- out + mulgēre to milk); for suffix see -SION. —emulsify v. 1859, formed from English emulsion + -fy.

en-¹ a prefix meaning: 1 cause to be, make, as in enable = cause to be able; enfeeble = make feeble. 2 put in, put on, as in encircle = put in a circle; enthroned = put on a throne. 3 other meanings, as in enact, encourage. Borrowed from Old French en- (with variants in-, im-, an-, am-), from Latin in- into, in, prefixal use of the preposition in IN. Also em- before b, p, ph, and m.

In Old French the prevailing use of en- was to form verbs from nouns and adjectives. These verb forms from Old French, and their nouns were borrowed in Middle English in their form in Old French, as for example enchaunten enchant, enchauntement enchantment, etc., and with the variant an-, from Anglo-French, evident in words such as anointen anoint.

The prefix also has an intensive force parallel to Latin in-, and the spelling en- and in- are found in numerous variants, such as encrust, incrusted; enclose. Parallel forms exist in Old French in as- and es- in which little distinction was made in Middle English, leading to assurance, ensurance, insurance, or assemble, ensemble.

en-² a prefix meaning in, on, within, chiefly in combinations already formed in Greek, as endemic, energy, enthusiasm. Borrowed from Greek en-, prefixal use of the preposition en IN. Also em- before b, m, p, and ph.

-en¹ a suffix forming verbs from adjectives and nouns, and meaning: 1 to cause to be, make, as in blacken = to make black. 2 to cause to have, as in strengthen = to cause to have strength. 3 to become, as in flatten = to become flat. 4 to come to have, gain, as in lengthen = to gain length. Chiefly formed in late Middle English or early modern English as -enen, -nen, -en, on the analogy of certain old verbs (fasten, brighten) which developed from Old English -nian, or were borrowed from Old Icelandic -na.

-en² a suffix forming adjectives from nouns, and meaning made of, having the look of, as in wooden, ashen, flaxen; see -INE¹.

In Old English and Middle English this suffix was extensively used, but modern English tends toward an attributive use of nouns, as in gold watch, oak tree, rather than golden watch, oaken tree, though in some cases (earthen, wheaten, wooden, etc.) these adjectives are still in common use.

-en³ a suffix forming the past participle of certain strong verbs, as in broken, fallen, stolen, written. In some of these verbs the suffix takes the form -n, as in blown, torn. Found in Middle English and Old English -en, the regular ending of most classes of strong verbs.

-en⁴ a suffix surviving as the plural ending of a few nouns, as in brethren, children, oxen. Middle English -en, developed from Old English -an (as in oxan, plural of ox; tungan, plural of tunge tongue). In words like children, the -en was added to a -re plural, as in childre (Old English cildru).

enable v. 1415, to make fit; later, to make able to (1443); formed from Middle English en-¹ + able.

enact v. 1414, to enter in the public records, formed from Middle English en-¹ + acte act, probably after Anglo-Latin inacticare, inactitare. — enactment n. 1817, formed from English enact + -ment.

enamel v. 1392 enamelen, borrowed from Anglo-French enamelier, enamailler (en- in + amailler to enamel, variant of Old French esmaillier, from esmail enamel, from Frankish smalt*; compare Middle Dutch smelten to melt). — n. 1421 anamell, literally, a means of enameling, from enamelen to enamel.

enamor v. Before 1338 enamouren fill with love; earlier an-amouren (probably about 1300); borrowed from Old French enamouren (en- cause to + amour love). — enamored adj. Before 1631, from the verb.

-ence a suffix forming nouns meaning: 1 action or fact of (when added to verbs), as in convergence = act or fact of converging. 2 state or quality of (when added to adjectives ending in -ent), as in absence = state of being absent. -ence was formed in English partially by alteration of Old French -ance -ANCE, partially as a borrowing from Old French -ence directly from Latin -entia (-ent-, participial stem, as in emergentem emerging + -ia, suffix corresponding to English -y²). Compare -ANCE.

The varying forms in Latin -entia and -antia were generally leveled in Old French to -ance, especially for nouns showing action or process. Later words were borrowed from Latin usually retaining the vowel found in the Latin word (absence, diligence; elegance, temperance), especially for nouns showing state or quality. Both nouns of action or state were borrowed into Middle English, mostly with their French spellings, though some words in -ance have later (after 1500) been respelled with -ence in imitation of the original Latin spelling. This has produced irregular spelling patterns, such as assistance, existence; attendance, superintendence; appearance, independence; and even a divergence between the participial form apparent, defendant and the noun appearance, (British) defence.

encephalon n. 1741, New Latin, from Greek enkephalos (en- within + kephalē head). — encephalitis n. 1843; formed, probably by influence of French encéphalite, from encephal(on) + -itis.

enchant v. About 1378 enchauten hold spellbound, borrowed from Old French enchanter bewitch, charm, from Latin incantāre, literally, chant a magic formula or incantation upon (in- upon, into + cantāre to sing). Also, enchant may be a back formation from enchantment. — enchantment n. About 1300 enchautment, borrowed from Old French enchantement, from enchanter enchant; for suffix see -MENT.

enchilada n. 1887, American English; borrowed from Mexican Spanish enchilada, from feminine past participle of enchilar season with chili (en- in, from Latin in- + chile CHILI).

enclave n. 1868, borrowed from French enclave, from Middle French, from Old French enclaver enclose, from Vulgar Latin inclāvare* shut in, lock up (Latin in- in + clāvis key). Middle English had a related verbal use enclaved surrounded, as by land owned by someone else (1435), past participle form apparently developed from a borrowing of Middle French enclaver.

enclose v. Before 1338, formed in part from English en-¹ + close,¹ after enclos enclosure (about 1280); borrowed from Old French enclos, past participle of enclore to surround with a barrier. — enclosure n. About 1464, the action of fencing in or enclosing land, probably borrowed from Middle French enclosure, from Old French en- in + closure that which encloses; it is also possible enclosure is a formation in English from en-¹ + closure (about 1390).

encomium n. 1589, borrowed from Late Latin encōmīum, from Greek enkōmion laudatory ode, eulogy (en- + kōmos ode, procession, merrymaking).

encore interj. 1712, borrowed from French encore still, yet, again, probably from Vulgar Latin hinc ad hōram* from then to this hour (Latin hinc from here, hence and ad to and hōram, accusative of hōra HOUR). — n. 1763, from the interjection. — v. 1748, from the interjection.

encounter v. About 1300 encountren meet as an adversary; borrowed from Old French encontrer confront, from encontre, prep., adv., against, counter to, from Late Latin incontrā in front of (Latin in- in + contrā against). The sense of meet, fall in with is first recorded in English in 1520. — n. About 1300 encontre confrontation; borrowed from Old French, originally preposition and adverb, against, counter to.

encourage v. 1429 encoragen inspire with courage borrowed from Middle French encoragier, from Old French (en- + corage COURAGE). —encouragement n. 1568, borrowed from Middle French encouragement, from encoragier; for suffix see -MENT.

encroach v. Probably about 1380 encrochen acquire, get; borrowed from Old French encrochier seize, fasten on, perch (en- + croc hook; see CROCHET). The sense of intrude, trespass, is first recorded about 1534. —encroachment n. Probably 1469 encrochments, pl.; borrowed from Anglo-French encroachment, from encrocher encroach + -ment.

encumber v. Before 1338 encombrer burden, vex, borrowed from Old French encombrer obstruct (en- put in + combre barrier). The sense of hinder or hamper is first recorded in English about 1386. —encumbrance n. Probably before 1300 encombraunce, borrowed from Old French encombrance, from encombrer; for suffix see -ANCE.

-ency a variant form of the suffix -ence, meaning: 1 the act or fact of (when added to verbs), as in dependency = the act or fact of depending. 2 the quality or condition of (when added to adjectives ending in -ent), as in frequency = condition of being frequent. 3 other meanings, as in agency, currency. Borrowed from Latin -entia; see -ENCE.

encyclical adj. 1647, intended for wide circulation; earlier, general (perhaps 1616); formed in English from Late Latin encyclicus, from Greek enkyklios circular, general (en- in + kýklos circle) + English -al¹. —n. 1837, from the adjective.

encyclopedia n. 1531, general course of instruction, borrowed from New Latin encyclopaedia (1508), from Greek enkyklopaideia*, thought to be a false reading for Greek enkyklios paidēia general education (enkyklios general + paidēia education, child rearing, from pais, genitive paidós child). The modern sense of a reference work containing information on all branches of knowledge appeared in English in 1632 or 1630. —encyclopediaic adj. 1824, formed from English encyclopedia + -ic, after French encyclopédique.

end n. Old English (about 725) ende; cognate with Old Frisian ende end, Old Saxon endi, Middle Dutch ende (modern Dutch einde), Old High German enti (modern German Ende), Old Icelandic endir, endi (Danish and Norwegian ende, Swedish ände), and Gothic andei. —v. Probably before 1200 enden, developed from Old English (about 950) endian to finish; complete; cognate with Old Frisian endia to end, Old Saxon endōn, Old High German entōn (modern German enden), and Old Icelandic enda. —ending n. Before 1225 endinge completion; developed from Old English ending, ge-ending (before 1000), formed from Old English endian, ge-endian, v. + -ung -ing. —endless adj. Probably before 1200 endelese, developed from Old English endelēas (before 900), formed from Old English ende, n. + -lēas -less.

endear v. 1580, to enhance the value of, win the affection of; later, to make dear (1647); formed from English en-¹ make + endeavor n. 1417 endeavour, formed from Middle English en-¹ + dever duty, from put (oneself) in dever make it one's duty; hence, endeavor. —v. Before 1450 endoweren, before 1500 indeveren, from the noun.

dear. —endearment n. 1612; formed from English endear + -ment.

endemic adj. 1759, perhaps from the earlier noun (1662, a disease common to a particular locality); also a shortening of endemical (1657), or a borrowing from Greek éndēmos native (en- in + dēmos people, district), possibly through French endémique; for suffix see -IC.

endive n. 1373 endive, borrowed from Old French endive, from Late Latin endivia, feminine singular, from Medieval Greek entýbia (= endivia), plural of entýbion, diminutive form of Greek éntybon.

endo- a combining form meaning inside, within, internal, inner, used in scientific and technical coinages, such as endocrine, endoderm (inner layer of cells in embryos), endoskeleton (internal skeleton). Borrowed from Greek endo-, combining form of éndon within.

endocrine adj. 1914, secreting internally (of glands which secrete hormones), borrowed from French endocrine or Italian endocrina, from Greek endo- within + krínein to separate, distinguish.

endogenous adj. 1830, borrowed from French endogène, from Greek endogēnēs born in the house (endo- within + gēnos birth); for suffix see -OUS.

endorphin n. 1975, formed from English endo- internal + (mo)rphin(e).

endorse v. 1547 indorse, 1581 endorse, alteration (influenced by Medieval Latin indorsare endorse) of earlier endossen (before 1400); borrowed from Old French endosser (en- put on + dos back, from Latin dossum, variant of dorsum). The sense of confirm, approve, is first recorded in English in 1847. —endorsement n. 1547, formed from English endorse + -ment; replacing endosement (probably 1424); borrowed from Anglo-French, Old French endossement, from endosser; for suffix see -MENT.

endow v. 1375 indowen, 1390 endouwen provide an income for; borrowed from Anglo-French endouer (from en- + Old French douer endow, from Latin dōtare bestow). The sense of provide or enrich with a quality, talent, etc., is first recorded in 1402. —endowment n. 1447 indowment, 1450 endowment; borrowed from Anglo-French endouement, from endouer, or formed from English indowen, endouwen + -ment.

endure v. About 1380 enduren; borrowed from Old French endurer, from Latin indurare make hard, in Late Latin, harden (the heart) against (in- in + durare to harden, from durus hard). —endurance n. 1494, borrowed from Middle French endurance, from Old French endurer; for suffix see -ANCE. —enduring adj. 1470, formed from endure, v. + -ing, probably by influence of earlier enduring, n. duration, continued existence (about 1380).

enema n. Probably before 1425, borrowed perhaps through Medieval Latin from Greek énema (genitive enématos) injection, from eniénai to send in, inject (en- in + hiénai send).

enemy n. Probably about 1225 enemi, borrowed from Old French enemi; earlier inimi, from Latin inimicus (in- not + amicus friend).

energy n. 1599, force of expression; borrowed from Middle French énergie, learned borrowing from Late Latin energía, from Greek enérgeia activity, operation, from energós active, working (en- in + érgon WORK).

The general meaning of power, is first recorded in English in 1665, and its application in the scientific sense of the power to do work, as in mechanical energy, is first recorded in 1807. —energetic adj. 1651, powerful in activity or effect; a shortening of energetical (1603), formed in English from Greek energētikós active, energetic (from energeîn to operate, effect, from energós active) + -al; for suffix see -ICAL. The sense pertaining to people as vigorous, is first recorded in 1796. —energize v. 1752, formed from English energy + -ize.

enervate v. 1610, probably developed from earlier enervate, adj. lacking strength in character, spiritless (1603); borrowed from Latin ēnervātus, past participle of ēnervāre weaken, cut the sinews of (ē- out + nervus sinew); for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —enervation n. 1429, borrowed probably through Middle French énervation, from Late Latin ēnervātiōnem (nominative ēnervātiō), from Latin ēnervāre; for suffix see -ATION.

enfilade n. 1706, borrowing of French enfilade, from Old French enfiler to thread on a string, pierce from end to end (en- put on + fil thread + -ade). —v. 1706, from the noun.

enforce v. Probably about 1343, to make an effort; 1350, to force or compel; borrowed from Old French enforcier to exert force, and enforcir to strengthen, from Vulgar Latin infortiāre*, infortire* (Latin in- make + fortis strong).

enfranchise v. 1419, borrowed from Middle French enfranchiss-, extended stem of enfranchir to set or make free (en- make + franchir set free, from Old French franche, feminine of franc free, from Frankish Frank a Frank).

engage v. 1430 engagen to pledge; borrowed from Middle French engagier, from Old French en gage under pledge (en- make and gage pledge). The sense of promise to marry, is first recorded in 1727. The senses of involve (before 1586), attract the attention (1642), or employ (1648), developed from the notion of binding as by a pledge. —engaged adj. (1615, betrothed) —engagement n. 1601, formed from English engage + -ment. —engaging adj. (1651) inferred in engagingly.

engender v. About 1330, beget or procreate; borrowed from Old French engendrér, from Latin ingenerāre (in- in + generāre beget, create). The sense of cause, produce, is first recorded about 1350.

engine n. Probably before 1300 engyne mechanical device, machine used in warfare, also probably about 1300 engyn, enginne skill, cleverness, craft; borrowed from Old French engin skill, cleverness, from Latin ingenium inborn qualities, talent (in- in + gen-, root of gignere to beget, produce).

The early sense of machine survives fire engine and engine of destruction; the specific application to converting energy into mechanical power, is first recorded chiefly in compounds, such as steam engine (1751). —engineer n. Before 1338 engynour builder of military engines; borrowed from Old French engigneor, from engignier, enginier to contrive, build, from engin; for suffix see -EER and *-OR*². —v. 1681, implied in engineering; from the noun.

English adj. Probably before 1200 Englische; also about 1200 English, developed from Old English (about 880) Englisc, from Engle, pl., the Angles (see ANGLO-); for suffix see *-ISH*¹. When the word first occurred in Old English, it had the meaning “of or belonging to the group of Germanic peoples comprising the Angles, Saxons, and Jutes.” By the time of the Norman Conquest (1066) it was applied to the population of England as distinguished from the French or Normans. But within a generation or two that distinction had practically disappeared, except in state documents. —n. the English language. About 1150 Englis; later English (probably about 1200); developed from Old English (about 890) Englisc, noun use of the adjective. Originally applied to the dialects spoken in Britain by the Angles and Saxons, but early in Old English developing the meaning of the aggregate of dialects descended from the language of the Germanic settlers; now called Anglo-Saxon or Old English. —Englishman n. Probably about 1200, developed from Old English Engliscman (about 950). —Englishwoman n. (about 1400) engrave v. Before 1475, implied in ingraved formed from English *en-*¹ make + *grave*³ carve; probably patterned on obsolete French engraver (en- *en-*¹ + graver engrave).

engross v. Before 1400 engrosen buy up the whole stock of, borrowed from Old French en gros in a large quantity, at wholesale. The word was used in 1598, with the meaning of concentrate in one's possession, monopolize, from which evolved the figurative sense of absorb or engage the whole attention of (1709).

enhance v. About 1280 anhaunsen to raise, make higher; later enhauncen raise in station, wealth, fame (about 1300); borrowed from Anglo-French enhauncer, Old French enhaucier, enhalcier make greater, from Vulgar Latin inaltiāre*, alteration of Late Latin inaltāre raise, exalt. It has been suggested that the h in Old French enhaucier, enhalcier was possibly the result of the influence of Frankish hōh* high. —enhancement n. 1577, formed from English enhance + -ment.

enigma n. 1588, earlier, in an Anglicized form enigmat (before 1449); borrowed from Latin aenigma riddle, from Greek ainigma (genitive ainigmatos), from ainissesthai speak obscurely, speak in riddles, from ainos fable, riddle. The spelling with initial e and the borrowing of enigma were influenced by Middle French énigme. —enigmatic adj. 1628–77 aenigmatic; in part a shortening of enigmaticall (1576), and in part borrowed from Late Latin aenigmaticus, from Latin aenigma; for suffix see -IC.

enjoin v. Probably before 1200 engoinen prescribe, impose, borrowed from Old French enjoign-, stem of enjoindre, from Latin injungere to attach, impose (in- on + jungere join).

enjoy v. About 1384 enjoyen rejoice, be glad, borrowed from Old French enjoir to give joy, enjoy (en- make + joir enjoy, from Latin gaudēre rejoice). The sense of have the use or benefit of, is first recorded about 1430. —enjoyment n. 1553, formed from English enjoy + -ment.

enkephalin n. 1975, protein substance in the brain that suppresses pain; formed in English from Greek enkephalos brain + English -in², enlarge v. About 1350 enlargen grow fat, increase (pleasure, kindness, etc.); borrowed from Old French enlargier, enlargir make large (en- make + large large). —enlargement n. 1540, formed from English enlarge + -ment. The meaning of a photograph increased in size, is first recorded in 1866.

enlighten v. About 1384 inligten to bring knowledge, stimulate the mind; formed after inligten to illuminate, from Old English inlihtan (in- make, + lihtan to shine), and lighten to clarify. —enlightenment n. 1669; formed from English *en-*¹ + lighten + -ment, except the historical sense referring to the French philosophers of the 1700's where the Enlightenment is a loan translation of German Aufklärung clarification.

enlist v. 1599, to enroll on the list or roster of a military unit; formed from *en-*¹ + *list*¹, n. or v., possibly suggested by Dutch inlijsten to write on a list. —enlisted man (1724) —enlistment n. 1765, formed from English enlist + -ment.

enmity n. Before 1382 enmyte danger; about 1384 enmytee hostility; borrowed from Old French enemistie, from Vulgar Latin inimicitatem*, from Latin inimicus ENEMY; for suffix see -ITY.

Loss of s in the Middle English forms indicates it was no longer pronounced in French at the time of borrowing.

ennoble v. About 1475, implied in ennobled; borrowed from Middle French ennobler (en- make + noble noble).

ennui n. 1667, developed from Old French enui annoyance, from enuier ANNOY.

enormous adj. 1531, borrowed from Latin ēnormis irregular, extraordinary, very large (ē- out of + norma rule, NORM), with substitution of English -ous for Latin -is, and replacing earlier enormyous very great, monstrous; either formed from English enorme monstrous act (adj. used as a noun before 1464 + -ous); or borrowed from Middle French énorme from Latin ēnormis irregular, extraordinary; for suffix see -OUS. —enormity n. 1475, transgression, crime; either borrowed from Middle French énormité, learned borrowing from Latin ēnormitatem (nominative ēnormitās) irregularity, vastness, from ēnormis; or formed from English enorme + -ity. The sense of extreme wickedness, is first recorded in 1563; that of hugeness, vastness, in 1792.

enough adj., adv. Probably before 1200 inoh, later ynough (about 1303); developed from Old English genōg (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian enōch enough, Old Saxon ginōg, Old High German ginuog, Old Icelandic gnōgr, and Gothic ganōhs enough. All of these Germanic words represent compounds made up of the root of Old English ge- with, together (a perfective prefix also found in Old High German ga-, gi-, modern German ge-, Old Icelandic g-, and Gothic gu-), and the root -nah (as in Old High German ginah, ganah suffixes). For spelling change see COUGH.

enrage v. 1398, to make violent; implied in enraged; borrowed from Old French enrager (en- put in + rage rage, rabies).

enrapture v. 1740, formed from English *en-*¹ put in + rapture, influenced by earlier enrapt enraptured (1606).

enroll v. Before 1400 enrollen to write in an official list, register; borrowed from Old French enroller, enrouler, from Medieval Latin inrotulare write in a roll (from Latin in in + rotulus little wheel). —enrollment n. 1440 enrollement, borrowed through Anglo-French enrollement, from Middle French enrollement, from enroller; for suffix see -MENT.

ensconce v. 1590, to fortify, formed from English *en-*¹ make, put in + sconce small fortification, shelter, probably from Dutch schanse earthwork, brushwood (used as a protective screen), from Middle High German schanze bundle of sticks, of uncertain origin. The sense of to shelter is first recorded in 1598, though use of settle comfortably is not recorded before 1820.

ensemble n. Probably before 1500, a gathering of people; borrowed from Middle French ensemble; 1703 all the parts of a thing considered together; borrowing of French ensemble together, from Late Latin insimul at the same time (in- intensive + simul at the same time). The sense of a group of musicians playing or singing together, is first recorded in English in 1844.

ensign n. 1375 (Scottish), a signal, sign, borrowed from Old French enseigne, from Latin insignia, pl.; see INSIGNIA. The sense of a banner or flag, is first recorded probably before 1400. A soldier who carried the banner was later (1513–75) called an ensign.

ensue v. Before 1400 insuyen pursue; later ensewen follow, result (1426); borrowed from Old French ensivre, ensuivre follow close upon, from Vulgar Latin insequere*, from Latin insequi (in- upon + sequi follow).

ensure v. Before 1376 enseuren to exact a pledge; also ensuren to give assurance, promise on oath (about 1380); borrowed from Anglo-French enseurer (en- make + Old French seür SURE, probably influenced by Old French aseürer ASSURE). The sense of make sure or certain, guarantee, is first recorded in 1440.

-ent a suffix forming adjectives and nouns from verbs, such as absorbent (from absorb), correspondent (from correspond). Borrowed through French -ent, and directly from Latin -entem, present participle ending of verbs in -ēre, -ere, and -īre; often an alteration of Old French -ant -ANT.

Latin present participles -antem and -entem were leveled in Old French to -ant, but later many Latin forms with -ent that had assumed an adjective sense were borrowed into French as adjectives with the spelling -ent. English kept the French spelling in -ent and -ant as it borrowed words from French, but after 1500 some English spellings were changed in imitation of what was considered the appropriate Latin ending. This led to a confusion of arbitrary spellings: attendant, superintendent; secant, tangent; convergent, errant.

entablature n. 1611, part of a building resting on the top of columns; borrowed from obsolete French entablature, from Italian intavolatura, from intavolare put on a board or tablet (in- on + tavola board from Latin tabula board, TABLE); for suffix see -URE.

entail v. Probably before 1400 entailen settle an estate on a line of persons in succession, (en- make + taile limitation of inheritance to a line of heirs; borrowed from Anglo-French taile, Old French taillié, past participle of taillier allot, cut to shape, from Late Latin tālīare). A transferred sense of bestow or confer is first recorded about 1422, from which evolved the sense of bring on as a consequence, involve, necessitate (1829). —n. Probably before 1400, from the verb, probably by influence of Old French en taile under a specific condition.

entangle v. About 1425 entanglen to involve, especially in difficulty, embarrass; formed from Middle English en- intensive + tanglen to involve in complex affairs, often ones that embarrass.

entente n. 1854, agreement between two or more governments; earlier in entente cordiale (1844); borrowed from French entente understanding, from Old French entente intent, from feminine past participle of entendre INTEND.

enter v. About 1275 entren go in; borrowed from Old French entrer, from Latin intrāre, from intrā within, related to inter between; see INTRA- and INTER-.

enterprise n. About 1440, an adventure, expedition; an undertaking, task; borrowed from Middle French entreprise, entreprinse, noun use of feminine past participle of entreprendre undertake, take in hand (entre- between + prendre to take).

entertain v. About 1475 entertien maintain, borrowed from Middle French entretenir, from Old French entretenir hold together, support (entre- among, from Latin inter- INTER- + Old French tenir to hold, from Latin tenēre). The sense of have as a guest, is first recorded in 1490, and that of amuse, in 1626. —entertainment n. 1531, social manners, formed from English entertain + -ment; a re-formation of Middle English entretenelement support (1440); borrowed from Old French entretenement, from entretenir + -ment. The sense of amusement, is first recorded in 1612.

enthusiasm n. 1603 enthousiasme divine inspiration, prophetic or poetic frenzy, and earlier cited in the Greek (1579); borrowed from Middle French enthousiasme from Greek, also borrowed directly from Late Latin enthūsiasmus, and from Greek enthousiasmós, from enthousiázein be inspired, from én-theos inspired, god-possessed (en- in + theós god). The sense of fervor, zeal, is first recorded in English in 1716. —enthusiast n. 1570, one who believes himself divinely inspired; borrowed from French enthousiaste from Greek enthousiastēs, from enthousiázein. The sense of one full of zeal for a cause, etc., is first recorded in English in 1764. —enthusiastic adj. 1603, characterized by divine inspiration, borrowed from Greek en- thousiastikós, from enthousiázein for suffix see -IC. The sense of eager, ardent, is first recorded in 1786. —enthuse v. show or fill with enthusiasm. 1827, American English, back formation from enthusiasm.

entice v. About 1280 entycen incite; borrowed from Old French enticier, perhaps from Vulgar Latin intitiāre* set on fire, (Latin in- in + titiō, genitive titiōnis, firebrand, of uncertain origin). The sense of to allure or attract is first recorded about 1300.

entire adj. About 1390 entere whole or complete, sincere or pure; later entire (1449); borrowed from Old French entier whole, complete, from Latin integer whole, complete (in- not + tag-*, root of tangere to touch). —entirety n. About 1350 enterete, borrowed through Anglo-French entiertie, Old French entiereté, from Latin integritatem (nominative integritās), from integer (genitive integrī) for suffix see -TY².

entity n. 1596, being or existence; borrowed through Middle French entité, and directly from Medieval Latin entitatem (nominative entitas), from Latin ēns (genitive entis), proposed by Caesar as present participle of esse be; see IS; for suffix see -TY².

entomology n. 1766, borrowed from French entomologie, from New Latin entomologia, from Greek éntomon insect + -logia study of. Greek éntomon derives from the neuter of éntomos having a notch or cut at the waist, referring to the segmented division of an insect's body.

entourage n. 1832–34, surroundings, environment, borrowed from French entourage, from Middle French, from entourer surround, from Old French entour that which surrounds (en in + tour a circuit, TOUR); for suffix see -AGE.

The sense of attendants, originally conveying the notion of an assemblage of persons is first recorded in English in 1860.

entrails n. pl. Probably before 1300 entraile inner parts of the body, innards (collective singular); entrailles (plural 1325); borrowed from Old French entrailles, from Late Latin intrālia inward parts, intestines (alteration of Latin interānea, noun plural of interāneus internal, from inter between + -āneus, as in extrāneus external).

entrance¹ n. 1526, act of entering; borrowed from Middle French entrance, from entrer ENTER; for suffix see -ANCE. The sense of door, gate, or similar passage, is first recorded in English in 1535. —entrant n. 1635, borrowed from French entrant, present participle of entrer to enter.

entrance² v. to charm. 1593, to carry away as if in a trance; formed from English en- put in + trance. The sense of delight, is recorded before 1599.

entrap v. 1590–96, (earlier intrap, 1534); borrowed from Old French entrap (en- make, put in + trappe trap).

entreat v. About 1400 entreten deal with; later, to plead with (about 1425); borrowed through Anglo-French entretier, Middle French entraitier, from Old French entraiter, entraitier (en- make, + traiter TREAT). —entreaty n. 1448, treatment, nego-tion, formed from English entreat + *-y*³. The sense of an earnest request, is first recorded in 1573.

entree or entrée n. 1724, a reborrowing of the Old French entree ENTRY with the meaning of the main course of a meal, which developed in English from the sense of a dish served between the main courses (1759). In its original borrowing in Middle English the word was spelled entre meaning act of entering, admittance, access (about 1300).

entrepreneur n. 1828, manager or promoter of a theatrical institution; borrowing of French entrepreneur, from Old French, one who undertakes, manager, from entreprendre undertake + -eur -or²; see ENTERPRISE. The sense of a business manager or promoter appeared in English in 1852. The word originally appeared as entreprennoure in 1475 and enterprenour in 1485, after which it disappeared in recorded English for almost 350 years.

entropy n. Physics. the part of energy that cannot be converted into work. 1868, borrowed from German Entropie, from Greek entropiā, entropē a turning towards (en- in + trōpē a turning); for suffix see *-y*³.

entry n. Probably before 1300 entre act of entering; borrowed from Old French entree, originally, feminine past participle of entrer ENTER.

enumeration n. 1550, the act of listing or counting; borrowed from Middle French enumeration, and directly from Latin enumerātiōnem (nominative enumerātiō), from enumerāre to count out (-ē out + numerāre to count); for suffix see -ATION. —enumerate v. 1616, formed in English on the model of Latin enumerātus, past participle of enumerāre; and borrowed (possibly by influence of French énumérer to count, number) from Latin enumerātus; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. Also enumerate may be a back formation from enumeration.

enunciation n. 1551, declaration; borrowed (possibly by influence of Middle French énonciation) from Latin enūntiātiōnem (nominative enūntiātiō), from enūntiāre enunciate; for suffix see -ATION. The sense of pronunciation or articulation, is first recorded in English in 1750. —enunciate v. 1623, declare or express; borrowed from Latin enūntiātus, past participle of enūntiāre (-ē out + nūntiāre ANNOUNCE); for suffix see *-ATE*¹. The sense of articulate or pronounce, is first recorded in English in 1759. Also enunciate may be a back formation from enunciation.

envelop v. 1590, alteration (influenced by Middle French envelopper) of earlier envolupen be involved in (1390); borrowed from Old French envoluper, envoloper (en- in + voloper wrap up; of uncertain origin). —envelopment n. 1763, formed from English envelop + -ment.

envelope n. 1705, borrowed from French enveloppe, from Middle French, from envelopper to ENVELOP.

environ n. environs, pl. surrounding area; suburbs. 1665, borrowed from French environs, plural of Old French environ compass, circuit, from environ, adv., around (en- in + viron circle, circuit, from vīrer to turn). —environment n. 1603, the act or fact of surrounding; later, the surrounding things and conditions affecting an animal or plant (1827); formed from English environ, v. surround, enclose + -ment. —environmentalism n. 1923, emphasis on environment in the development of an individual or group; formed from English environmental + -ism. The sense of concern with the environment of living things appeared in 1972.

envisage v. 1820, look in the face of; borrowed from French envisager (en- cause to + visage face). The sense of visualize, is first recorded in English in 1837.

envoy n. 1666, alteration of earlier envoyée (1660) and envoyé (1664); borrowed from French envoyé one sent, noun use of past participle of envoyer send, from Old French, from Vulgar Latin inviāre* send on one's way (Latin in on + via road).

envy n. About 1280 envie feeling of ill will at another's good fortune; borrowed from Old French envie, from Latin invidia, from invidus envious, from invidere look with ill will upon, envy (in- upon + videre to see); for suffix see *-y*³. —v. Before 1382 envyen feel envy; borrowed from Old French envier, from Latin invidere. —enviable adj. 1602, possibly borrowed from French enviable (envier to envy + -able); or formed in English from envy, v. + -able. —envious adj. About 1303 envyus, borrowed through Anglo-French envius, Old French envius, envius, from Latin invidiosus, from invidia envy; for suffix see -OUS.

enzyme n. 1881, borrowed from German Enzym, from Medieval Greek énzymos leavened (Greek en- in + zýmē leaven). Appearance of the form in English predates the use in biology by thirty years, as attested in: 1850, the leavened bread of the Greek Orthodox eucharist.

Eocene adj. 1831, of the second epoch of the Tertiary period; formed in English from Greek ēōs dawn + kainós new.

oolithic adj. 1890, designating early human culture using stone instruments; borrowed from French oolithique (from Greek ēōs dawn, + French -lithique, as in néolithique, from Greek lithos stone).

eon n. See AEON.

ep- a form of the prefix epi- before vowels, as in epaxial (situated on the axis of the body), eponym, and before h, as in ephemeral.

epaulet or epaulette n. 1783, borrowing of French épaulette, diminutive form of épaule shoulder, from Old French espaule, espalie, from Latin spatula, flat piece of wood, splint, diminutive form of spatha shoulder blade, from Greek spáthē shoulder blade; for suffix see -ET, -ETTE.

ephemeral adj. 1576, formed in English from Greek ephēmeros subject to what the day may bring + English *-al*¹. Greek ephēmeros comes from ep' hēmērāi (epi subject to and hēmērāi, dative of hēmērā day).

Earliest uses referred to the course of a disease or life span. Before 1639, in the extended sense of transitory, short-lived appeared.

An earlier borrowing appeared as Middle English effimera, effimere a fever lasting a short time (before 1398); borrowed from Medieval Latin ephemera, feminine of ephemerus lasting only a day, from Greek ephēmeros short-lived.

epi- a prefix meaning: 1 on, upon, above, as in epicenter, epigraph. 2 in addition, as in epilogue, episode. 3 toward, among, as in epidemic. Either abstracted from compounds already formed in Greek, or borrowed from Greek epi-, related to epi on, towards, after, besides.

epic adj. 1589, borrowed possibly through Middle French épique, learned borrowing of Latin or directly from Latin epicus, from Greek epikós, from épos word, story, poem; for suffix see -IC. The extended sense of grand in style, heroic, is first recorded in English in 1731. —n. 1706, from the adjective. The sense of any story or account worthy of being an epic, is first recorded in 1831.

epicene adj. About 1450 epycen having a common gender; borrowed from Latin epicoenus common, from Greek epikoinos (epi- on + koinós common). The extended sense of characteristic of both sexes, is first recorded in English in 1601, and that of effeminate followed in 1633.

epicure n. About 1384 Epicure disciple of Epicurus; borrowing of the Latin form Epicūrus, from Greek Epikouros, Greek philosopher who taught that pleasure identified with virtue, is the highest good. The sense of gourmet (1586) coexisted with the pejorative sense of one who gives himself up to sensual pleasure, until the later 1700's when the sense of a glutton gradually receded, existing now chiefly in epicurean. —epicurean n. About 1380 Epicurien follower of Epicurus; possibly borrowed from Old French Epicurien, from Epicure Epicure + -en -an; or formed in English from Epicure + -an. The sense of one who gives himself up to sensual pleasure, appeared in English before 1572. —adj. 1586, from the noun.

epidemic adj. 1603, borrowed from French épidémique, from épidémie an epidemic disease, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin epidemia, from Greek epidēmíā prevalence of an epidemic disease, especially the plague (epi- among, upon + dēmos people, district); for suffix see -IC. The concept was known in the English-speaking world 130 years before, as evidenced by the term epideme epidemic disease, recorded in 1472. —n. 1757, anything like an epidemic disease; from the adjective.

epidermis n. 1626, borrowed from Late Latin epidermis, from Greek epidermís (epi- on + dérma skin).

epiglottis n. 1525, borrowing of Late Latin epiglōttis, from Greek epiglōttis (epi- on + glōttis, from glōtta, variant of glōssa tongue). Epiglottis replaced Middle English epiglote (recorded before 1400); borrowed from Old French epiglote, learned borrowing from Late Latin epiglōttis.

epigram n. Probably before 1439, borrowed from Middle French épigramme, from Latin epigramma, from Greek epigramma an inscription, epitaph, epigram, from epigraphēin to write on, inscribe (epi- on + gráphēin write). —epigrammatic adj. Before 1704, shortened form of earlier epigrammatic cal, adj. (1605, formed in English from Latin epigrammat-, stem of epigrammaticus, from Late Greek epigrammatikós, from epigramma + English suffix -ical).

epigraph n. 1624, inscription on a building; borrowed from Greek epigraphē an inscription, from epigraphēin to write on, inscribe. The meaning of a motto or short pithy sentence of dedication, is first recorded in English in 1844.

epilepsy n. 1578, borrowed from Middle French épilepsie, from Late Latin epilēpsia, from Greek epilēpsīā seizure (epi- upon + lēpsis a seizure); for suffix see -Y³.

Modern English epilepsy replaced epilencie, in use before 1398 and borrowed from Old French epilencie, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin epilempsia and epilentia, alteration of Late Latin epilēpsia. —epileptic adj. 1605, borrowed from French épileptique, from Late Latin epilēpticus, from Greek epilēptikós, from epilēpsīā; for suffix see -IC. —n. 1651, from the adjective.

Modern English epileptic replaced epilentic, in use in Middle English before 1398 and borrowed from Old French epilentique, from Late Latin epilenticus.

epilogue or epilog n. Probably about 1425 epilog; borrowed from Middle French épilogue, learned borrowing from Latin epilogus, from Greek epilogos conclusion of a speech (epi- upon, in addition + lógos a speaking).

epinephrine n. 1899, adrenaline; formed in English from epi- on + Greek nephros kidney (because the adrenal glands are located on the kidneys) + English -ine².

Epiphany n. Before 1310, Epyphany; borrowed from Old French épiphanie, from Late Latin epiphania, neuter plural, from Greek epipháneia manifestation, striking appearance (in the New Testament, the advent or manifestation of Christ), from epiphanēs manifest, conspicuous, from epiphalnein to manifest, display (epi- on, to + phalnein to show).

The general literary sense of any manifestation or revelation appeared in English in 1840.

episcopal adj. About 1460, borrowed from Middle French épiscopal, from Late Latin episcopālis, from Latin episcopus BISHOP; for suffix see -AL¹. The specific application to a church governed by bishops, appeared in 1752. —Episcopalian adj. belonging to the Episcopal Church. 1768, formed from English episcopal + -ian. —n. member of the Episcopal Church. 1738, formed from English episcopal + -ian.

episode n. 1678 episod commentary in a Greek tragedy between two choric songs; 1679 episode, an incidental narrative or digression in a story, poem, etc.; borrowed through French épisode from Greek episōdion addition, (originally) neuter of episōdios coming in besides (epi- in addition + elsodos a coming in, entrance). The sense of an incident or experience that stands out from others, is first recorded in English in 1773. —episodic adj. 1711 either a shortened form of earlier episodical (1667, from episode + -ical); or formed from English episode + -ic.

epistemology n. 1856, formed in English from Greek epistēmē knowledge (Ionic Greek epístasthai understand, know how to do, from epi- over, near + hístasthai to STAND) + English -logy.

epistle n. Probably before 1200 epistel one of the apostolic letters of the New Testament, later, any letter (before 1382); borrowed from Old French epistle, learned borrowing from Latin epistola letter, from Greek epistolē message, letter, from epistellein send to (epi- to + stéllein send). The Old English pistole, epistol was borrowed directly from Late Latin epistola, and contributed to the formation epistel in Middle English. —epistolary adj. 1656, of letters or letter-writing, borrowed from French épistolaire, from Latin epistolāris, from epistola letter. The earlier Middle English pistolarie, epistolarie, n. a book of the epistles read at the Eucharist (1432) was a borrowing from Medieval Latin epistolarium, from Latin epistolāris, from epistola.

epitaph n. Before 1338 epitaf, borrowed from Old French építaphe, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin epitaphium, from Latin, funeral oration, eulogy, from Greek epitáphion, from neuter of epitáphios of a funeral (epi- at + táphos tomb, funeral rites).

epithelium n. 1748, New Latin, formed from epi- on + Greek thelē nipple, teat, so called because originally applied to tissue with a nipplelike surface. —epithelial adj. 1845, formed from English epithelium + *-al*¹.

epithet n. 1579, borrowed through Middle French épithète, or as a learned borrowing directly from Latin epitheton, from Greek epítheton, adjective often used as a noun, from neuter of epíthetos attributed, added, from epitithénai to add on, (epi- in addition + tithénai to put).

epitome n. 1529, summary or condensation; borrowed through Middle French épitomé, learned borrowing from Latin epitomē, from Greek epitomē abridgement, from epitémnein cut short, abridge (epi- into + témnein to cut). The sense of person or thing typical of something, is first recorded in 1607. —epitomize v. 1596, abridge or condense; formed from English epitome + -ize. The sense of embody, typify, is first recorded in 1628.

epoch n. 1658 epoch; earlier epocha (1614); borrowed from Medieval Latin epocha, from Greek epochē stoppage, fixed point of time, from epéchein to stop, take up a fixed position (epi- on + échein to hold). —epochal adj. 1685, formed from English epoch + *-al*¹.

eponymous adj. 1846, borrowed from Greek epónymos given as a name, giving one's name to something (epi- upon + ónyma, dialectal variant of ónoma NAME); for suffix see -OUS. —eponym n. 1846, borrowed from Greek epónymos.

equable adj. 1677, either a back formation from earlier equability (1531, borrowed from Latin aequābilitās, from aequābilis); or borrowed from Latin aequābilis equal, consistent, uniform, from aequāre make uniform; for suffix see -ABLE.

equal adj. About 1390, borrowed from Latin aequālis uniform, identical, equal, from aequus level, even, just; for suffix see *-AL*¹.

A parallel form egal equal, equivalent (obsolete in English since the 1650's) was widely used in Middle English, first recorded in 1380, and borrowed from Old French egal, igal, from Latin aequālis. —n. 1573, one who is equal to another; from the adjective. —v. 1586, compare, liken; from the noun. The sense of match, rival, appeared in 1590. —equality n. 1398 equalite, borrowed from Old French égalité (modern French égalité), from Latin aequālitatem, from aequālis equal; for suffix see -ITY. —equalize v. 1590, formed from English equal + -ize, perhaps modeled on French égaliser (1539) or equaliser (1400's).

equanimity n. 1607, fairness, impartiality; borrowed from French équanimité, learned borrowing from Latin aequanimitatem (nominative aequanimitās), from aequus even + animus mind, spirit; for suffix see -ITY. The sense of evenness of mind or temper, is first recorded in English in 1616.

equate v. Probably before 1425 equaten make equal or uniform; earlier, to place a celestial body in its proper astrological position; borrowed from Latin aequātus, past participle of aequāre make even or uniform, make equal, from aequus level, even, EQUAL; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. Equate, v. was also formed from earlier equat, equate (before 1420), past participle; borrowed from Latin aequātus. —equation n. Probably before 1425 equacioun a making even or equal; earlier, dividing the sphere into astrological houses of equal extent; borrowed from Latin aequātionem (nominative aequātiō) equal distribution, from aequāre make even or equal; for suffix see -ATION. The mathematical sense of statement of equality of two quantities, appeared in 1570.

equator n. 1391, great circle of the celestial sphere, borrowed from Medieval Latin aequator diei et noctis equalizer of day and night (because when the sun is in the celestial equator, day and night are of equal length), from Latin aequāre make equal, EQUATE; for suffix see *-OR*². The geographical sense of great circle of the earth midway between the North and South Poles, is first recorded in English in 1612. —equatorial adj. 1664; formed from English equator + -ial.

equerry n. 1591 equirrie, short for groom of the equirrie groom of the stables, alteration of earlier esquirie, esquiry stables (1552); borrowed from Middle French escuerie, escuyrie; for suffix see *-Y*³. The English spelling was influenced by Latin equus horse.

equestrian adj. 1656–81, formed in English from Latin equester (genitive equestris) of a horseman + English -IAN. Latin equester is derived from equus horseman, knight, from equus horse. —n. 1791, from the adjective.

equi- a combining form meaning equal, as in equidistance, or equally, as in equidistant. Borrowed from Latin aequi-, combining form of aequus even, EQUAL.

equilibrium n. 1608, borrowed from Latin aequilibrium (aequus equal + libra a balance, scale, plummet, of uncertain origin).

equine adj. 1788, borrowed from Latin equinus, from equus horse; for suffix see *-INE*¹.

equinox n. 1391, borrowed through Old French equinoxe, or directly from Medieval Latin equinoxium equality between day and night, from Latin aequinoctium (aequus equal + nox, genitive noctis, NIGHT).

equip v. 1523, furnish what is needed; borrowed from Middle French équiper to fit out, from Old French esquiper fit out a ship, probably from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic skipa put in order, man a ship, from skip SHIP). —equipment n. 1717, formed from equip + -ment, or borrowed from French équipement, from équiper to equip; for suffix see -MENT. Equipment has replaced earlier equipage (1579), except in the sense of a horse-drawn carriage or all of its appurtenances (probably 1721).

equity n. Before 1333, fairness, justice; borrowed from Old French équité, learned borrowing from Latin aequitatem (nominative aequitās), from aequus even, just, EQUAL; for suffix see -ITY. —equitable adj. 1646, borrowed from French équitable, from équité equity; for suffix see -ABLE.

equivalent adj. About 1425, borrowed through Middle French équivalent, and directly from Late Latin aequivalentem (nominative aequivalēns) equivalent, present participle of aequivalēre be equivalent (Latin aequus EQUAL + valēre be well, be worth); for suffix see -ENT. —n. 1502, from the adjective. —equivalence n. Before 1541, perhaps back formation from earlier equivalency (1535); formed by influence of Middle French équivalence, from Medieval Latin aequivalentia, from Late Latin aequivalentem; for suffix see -ENCE, -ENCY.

equivocal adj. 1601–02, formed in English from Late Latin aequivocus of identical sound + English *-al*¹. Late Latin aequivocus is formed from Latin aequus EQUAL + the root voc- of vocāre to call. —equivocate v. be equivocal. Probably before 1425 equivocaten, developed from equivocat, adj., borrowed from Medieval Latin equivocatus, past participle of equivocare, from Late Latin aequivocus for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —equivocation n. Before 1397 equivocacōn ambiguity; borrowed from Old French equivocation, from Late Latin aequivocātiōnem (nominative aequivocātiō), from aequivocus; for suffix see -TION. The sense of the use of equivocal language to deceive is first recorded in 1605.

-er¹ a suffix meaning person or thing that does something (player), is something (foreigner), lives somewhere (villager), makes or works with something (hatter), has something (rancher), or is connected with or involved in something (first-grader); -er is used to form nouns either from verbs, as burner, climber, or from other nouns, as rancher, New Yorker.

In the sense of a person or thing that is or has something, as in rancher, the meaning of -er absorbs some of the sense of *-er*⁵.

The suffix *-er*¹ is in part a native development, through Middle English -ere, from Old English -ere, as in sangere singer, and bæcere baker. It is a common Germanic formative suffixed to verbs to form agent nouns, but may have been originally added mostly to nouns to identify people by their occupation. The traditional Germanic form given is -ārijaz* developed as Old High German -āri (modern German -er), Old Saxon -eri, Old Icelandic -ari, and Gothic -areis. A vestige of the original Germanic form is evident in -ar, as in beggar, liar, and its equivalence to Latin -or is found in instructor, advisor, etc.

The influence of French is evident in many terms with the formation of Middle English -ere, but these terms were often borrowed through Anglo-French -er either from Old French -ier, -iere, and -er after a palatal consonant (from Latin -ārius, -āria, or -ārium; see -ARY), or from Old French -eor, -eur (see *-OR*¹, also -OUR). Most such terms are not associated with a verb (commissioner, officer, prisoner, and carpenter, danger, border). Later, by analogy, the suffix became a formative of so-called agent nouns, and in modern English it may be formed on verbs, except those ending in -or, and others fulfilled by -ent, as in correspond/correspondent, -ant, as in defend/defendant.

The English suffix -er also has the form -yer after nouns ending in w, such as lawyer and sawyer, and appears in English as -ier by analogy with -yer and by assimilation of borrowings from French of words ending in -ier, such as clothier, collier, glazier.

-er² a suffix forming the comparative of adjectives, as in softer, smoother, and of adverbs, as in slower. Middle English -er, -ere developed from Old English -ra (masculine), and -re (feminine and neuter for adjectives), and -or (for adverbs). Old English -ra, -re is cognate with Old Saxon and Old High German -iro adjective comparative suffix, German -er, Old Icelandic -ri, -ari, Gothic -iza, -ōza.

In the comparative of adjectives few words of Old English retained the vowel changes of the ancient Germanic forms and in modern English they have completely disappeared except for better and elder.

For most comparatives of one or two syllables, use of -er seems to be fading as the oral element in our society relies on more before adjectives to express the comparative; thus prettier is more pretty, cooler is more cool.

The Old English comparative suffix for adverbs, -or, as in heardor more fiercely (English harder), comparative of heardre (English hard), is cognate with Old Saxon and Old High German -ōr, Old Icelandic -r, -ar, and Gothic -is, -ōs. Compare -EST.

In the comparative degree of adverbs the vowel change of Old English in monosyllables died out in Middle English, and was replaced by adjective formations, as to work harder (with the exception of sooner). Now, as in the case with adjectives, the use of more is replacing the adverbial use of -er, as in friendlier replaced by more friendly, oftener by more often.

-er³ a suffix of nouns that were once French infinitive verb forms (Old French and Anglo-French -er, from Latin -āre), surviving in certain legal terms from Anglo-French, such as misnomer and waiver, and in a few nouns of verbal origin in Old French, such as dinner, supper, surrender, ouster.

-er⁴ a suffix meaning frequently, again and again, in verbs such as clatter, flutter, jabber, putter. Middle English -eren, developed from Old English -rian.

-er⁵ a suffix used especially in British slang to form new words by shortening a noun and adding -er (sometimes -ers) to the stem, as in Rugger for Rugby, rudders for rudiments, soccer for association (football). The usage is first recorded in the late 1800's from Rugby School and thence in Oxford University slang, thereafter coming into general currency in words like bedder for bedroom, especially during the 1920's.

era n. 1615 Æra; later era (1716); borrowed, possibly by influence of French ère epoch (1539), from Late Latin aera, ēra an era or epoch from which time is reckoned; probably the same word as Latin aera counters used for calculation, plural of aes (genitive aeris) brass, money; see ORE.

The use of this word in chronology is said to have originated in Spain in the A.D. 400's, and this method of reckoning, referred to as aera Hispanica Spanish era, probably suggested to Renaissance scholars aera Christiana Christian era.

eradicate v. Probably before 1425 eradicaten pull up by the roots, destroy; borrowed from Latin eradicātus, past participle of eradicāre root out (ē- out + rādix, genitive rādis ROOT¹); for suffix see -ATE¹. — eradication n. Probably before 1425 eradicacioun; borrowed from Latin eradicātiōnem (nominative eradicātiō), from eradicāre; for suffix see -ATION.

erase v. 1605, borrowed from Latin erāsus, past participle of erādere scrape out (ē- out, + rādere to scrape). — eraser n. 1790, American English; formed from erase + -er¹. — erasure n. 1734, formed from erase + -ure.

erbium n. 1843, New Latin, formed from (Ytt)erby, town in Sweden where the mineral containing erbium was found + -ium.

ere conj., prep. before. Probably before 1200 er, developed from Old English ær, adv. and conj. (about 725, in Beowulf) and Old English ær, prep. (before 830); cognate with Old Frisian, Old Saxon, and Old High German ēr earlier, and Gothic airis earlier, from Proto-Germanic airiz*, comparative of air*, represented by Old Icelandic ār early, Gothic air early. As an adverb the word is found in modern English erstwhile, where the form erst developed from the Old English superlative adverb ærest.

erect adj. About 1390, borrowed from Latin erectus, past participle of erigere raise or set up (ē- up, + regere to direct, keep straight, guide). — v. Probably about 1408 erecten to direct upward; later, to set up, build (1417); formed from the adjective in English, and borrowed from Latin erectus, past participle of erigere. — erection n. 1450, probably formed in English from erect + -ion after Late Latin erectiōnem (nominative erectiō), from Latin erect-, participle stem of erigere; for suffix see -ION.

erg n. 1873, borrowed from Greek érōn WORK. This is a made word from formal borrowing first imposed by the British Association (for the Advancement of Science).

ergo adv., conj. Before 1376, a word in Latin ergō therefore, possibly from Latin ē rogō* or ē regō* from the direction (ē out of, and the root of regere to guide).

ergot n. 1683, borrowing of French ergot, from Old French argot cock's spur, so called from the shape of the diseased grain; of unknown origin.

ermine n. Probably about 1175, borrowing of Old French ermine, hermine; cognate with Old Provençal ermina, ermini, Spanish armiño, and Portuguese arminho, representing Latin Armenius Armenian, the ermine having been abundant in Asia Minor; or possibly of Germanic origin comparing them to Old High German harma weasel (harmīn, adj.), Old Saxon harma, and Old English hearna shrew, possibly also meaning weasel. Ultimately it is likely that there was early confusion of the Germanic words and the Romance words because of the similarities in form and meaning.

In Middle English, probably before 1300, ermine also referred to the animal's valuable fur.

erode v. 1612, back formation from erosion, influenced by French éroder but modeled on the Latin pattern erōsiōnem, erōdere gnaw away (ē- away, + rōdere gnaw); also possibly in some instances a direct borrowing from French éroder. — erosion n. 1541, borrowed through Middle French erosion, from Latin erōsiōnem (nominative erōsiō) from erōdere; for suffix see -SION.

erogenous adj. 1889, formed in English from Greek ērōs love + English -genous producing (-gen + -ous).

erotic adj. 1651, borrowed from French érotique, from Greek erōtikós, from ērōs (genitive érōtos) love; related to erāsthai to love, desire; for suffix see -IC.

err v. Before 1300 erren; borrowed from Old French errer, learned borrowing from Latin errāre wander. The underlying sense is that error and anger are erratic or irregular and a wandering from the norm. Latin errāre is related to Old English ierre angry, straying, Old Frisian īre angry, Old Saxon irri, Old High German irri angry, irrōn astray (modern German irren err), and Gothic airzeis misled, led astray.

errand n. Probably before 1200 ernde; later ernde (about 1250) and errand (before 1325); developed from Old English (about 725) ærende message, mission, and related to ār messenger. Old English ærende is cognate with Old Frisian ernde message or mission, Old Saxon ārundi, Old High German ārunti, Old Icelandic erendi, ørendi. The original sense of an important mission (an errand of mercy, a secret errand) still appears occasionally.

errant adj. About 1369 erraunt traveling, roving, earlier in the compound proper name Bailfesmanerraunt (1335); borrowed through Anglo-French erraunt, Old French errant, present participle of errer to travel or wander, from Late Latin iterāre, from Latin iter journey or way, from the root of īre to go.

The sense of traveling or wandering, fused in the 1300's with the sense of erring or straying, from Old French errant, present participle of errer to ERR. Development of this sense is found in English arrant which is recorded in thief erraunt; see ARRANT.

erratic adj. About 1385 erratik wandering, moving, borrowed through Old French erratique, and directly from Latin errāticus, from errātum, past participle of errāre to wander, ERR; for suffix see -IC. The sense of irregular or eccentric in conduct, is first recorded in 1841, but the noun sense of an eccentric person, may have appeared in 1816.

erratum n., pl. errata. 1589, borrowing of Latin errātum, past participle of errāre ERR.

erroneous adj. About 1385, borrowed through Old French erroneus, and directly from Latin errōneus vagrant, wandering, from errōnem (nominative errō) vagabond, from errāre to wander, ERR; for suffix see -OUS.

error n. Probably before 1300 error condition of erring, borrowed from Old French error, errouir, errur, from Latin errōrem (nominative error) a wandering, straying, mistake, from errāre to wander, ERR.

ersatz adj. 1875, as an attributive use of a German word describing units of the German army reserve; German Ersatz compensation, replacement, substitute, from ersetzen to replace. —n. 1892, German Ersatz.

erstwhile adv. 1569, formed from obsolete English erst before + modern English while, adv. Obsolete English erst, adj. and adv., developed (probably before 1200) from Middle English erest earliest, earlier, former, from Old English ærest earliest, superlative of ær ERE (about 725, in Beowulf). —adj. 1903, from the adverb.

erudite adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Latin eruditus, past participle of erūdire instruct (ē- out + rudis unskilled, RUDE). —erudition n. Probably about 1400 erudicioun instruction, education; borrowed from Latin eruditōnem (nominative eruditio) an instructing, from erūdire; for suffix see -TION. The sense of learning, scholarship, is first recorded in English in 1530.

erupt v. 1657, back formation of eruption, and borrowed from Latin eruptus, past participle of erumpere break out, burst forth (ē- out + rumpere to break, RUPTURE). —eruption n. Probably before 1425 erupcioun outbreaking (of pustules); borrowed through Middle French éruption, and directly from Latin eruptiōnem (nominative eruptio) a breaking out, from erup-, stem of erumpere; for suffix see -TION. —eruptive adj. 1646, formed from English erupt + -ive, after French éruptif, éruptive, from Latin erupt-, stem of erumpere; for suffix see -IVE.

-ery a suffix forming nouns meaning: 1 a place for or a place for carrying on the business of: a (added to verbs), as in bakery = a place for baking. b (added to nouns), as in hennery = a place for hens or chickens. 2 the art or occupation of, as in cooking = the art or occupation of a cook. 3 the condition of, as in slavery = the condition of a slave. 4 the qualities or actions of, as in buffoonery = the qualities or actions of a buffoon. 5 a group of, as in machinery = a group of machines. Though -ery, as an independent suffix, is the traditional analysis of many such formations, some are indistinguishable from *-er*¹ + *-y*³, and it is uncertain whether such words as bakery, brewery, fishery and pottery were actually formed from the agent noun baker, brewer, etc. + *-y*³ or from the verb bake, brew, etc. + -ery. Some meanings parallel -ary, as hennery with statuary = a collection of statues.

In Middle English many forms in -ery were borrowed from Old and Middle French along with the agent noun ending in -er, as archer, archier and archerie. The suffix was borrowed as -erie, partly formed from -ier (Latin -ārius, English *-er*¹) + -ie, and more particularly from -ère, -eor (Latin -ātor, ātōrem, English *-er*¹, *-or*²) + -ie (Late Latin -ia, English *-y*³).

-es¹ a suffix forming the plural of nouns ending in s, z, sh, ch (as in lasses, whizzes, bushes, witches), in the plural -ies of nouns in -y after a consonant (as in dandies, duties), and in most nouns in -o, such as potatoes, mosquitoes; corresponding to *-s*¹. Middle English -es, developed from Old English -as (masculine nouns).

-es² a suffix forming the third person singular of the present indicative active of verbs in s, z, sh, ch (as in dresses, buzzes, washes, touches), in -ies for the form -y (as in hurries, magnifies), and in forms such as does, goes; corresponding to *-s*². Middle English -es, dialectal variant replacing Old English -eth.

escalator n. 1900, American English; formed from English escal- (from escalade, n., 1598, borrowed from Middle French escalade an assault with ladders on a fortification, from Spanish escalada, Italian scalata, from Medieval Latin scalare to scale, from Latin scāla ladder) + -ator, in elevator. The attributive use of escalator, designating an increase or decrease (in wages, etc.), is first recorded in 1930. —escalate v. 1922, back formation from escalator, and replacing earlier English escalade, v. (1801, probably from escalade, n.). By 1959 escalate had assumed the figurative sense of increase or expand by degrees. —escalation n. 1938, American English, formed from escalate + -ion.

escallop n. 1472, borrowed from Middle French escalope shell; see SCALLOP.

escapade n. 1653, an escape, a French word with the meaning of a prank or trick (originally, an escape), from either Spanish escapada a prank, flight, an escape, from escapar to escape; or from Italian scappata a prank, an escape, from scappare to escape; from Vulgar Latin excappāre* ESCAPE. The figurative sense of a breaking loose from restraint or rules, flighty action or conduct, is first recorded in 1814.

escape v. About 1300 ascapien, before 1338 escapen get away, get free; borrowed from Old North French escaper, ascaper, Old French eschaper, from Vulgar Latin excappāre*, literally, get out of one's cape, leave a pursuer with just one's cape (from Latin ex- out of + Late Latin cappa mantle). —n. 1402 escap from Middle English escapen, v. An earlier form eschap (1375) was borrowed from Old French eschap, from eschaper, v. —escapee n. 1865, American English, escape, v. + -ee. —escapement n. 1779, earlier scapement (1755); escape + -ment. —escapism n. 1933, American English; escape, n. + -ism.

escarpment n. 1802, gradually replacing earlier escarpe (1688); borrowed from French escarpement, from escarper make into a steep slope, from escarpe slope, from Italian scarpa SCARP; for suffix see -MENT.

-escence a suffix meaning process or state of beginning, becoming, tending to be, as in adolescence, convalescence, obsolescence; or act of displaying color or light, as in phosphorescence, iridescence, fluorescence. Borrowed from Latin -ēscēntia, from -ēscēntem -ESCENT + -ia -y³.

-escent a suffix meaning beginning, becoming, tending to be, as in convalescent, effervescent, obsolescent; or displaying color or light, as in phosphorescent, iridescent, fluorescent. Borrowed from Latin -ēscētem (nominative -ēscēns), the ending of present participles of verbs in -ēscere. In older borrowings the underlying verb was commonly borrowed as an English verb in -esce; but in the later group -escent is added to a noun stem and where a verb in -esce exists it is probably a back formation (fluoresce, phosphoresce).

escheat n. Before 1338 eschete, borrowed through Anglo-Latin escheta; and borrowed from Old French eschete, escheite inheritance, literally, that which falls to one, from Gallo-Romance excadēcta*, feminine past participle formed to Vulgar Latin excadēere* from Latin excidere to fall out (Latin ex- out + cadere to fall). Gallo-Romance excadēcta* was formed under influence of Latin collēcta gathered. —v. Before 1382 escheten, from the noun.

eschew v. About 1350 echuen; later eschewen (probably 1375); borrowed from Old French eschiver, eschever, from Frankish (compare Old High German sciuhen make fearful, Middle High German schuhen, schuwen, modern German scheuen to dread, avoid, shun).

An adjective form eschif easily frightened, appears in earlier Middle English (probably before 1200); later, disinclined or averse (about 1390); borrowed from Old French eschieu (nominative eschif) shy, unwilling, probably from Frankish (compare Old High German sciuh*, Middle High German schiech, modern German scheu shy).

escort n. 1579, borrowed from Middle French escorte, from Italian scorta, literally, a guiding, from scorgere to guide, from Vulgar Latin excorrigere* (ex- out + corrigere set right). —v. 1708, from the noun; or by influence of French escorter, from escorte, n.

escrow n. 1598, borrowed through Anglo-French escrowe, Old French escroe, escroue scrap, roll of parchment, SCROLL, from Germanic (compare Old High German scrōt scrap, shred).

escutcheon n. 1480, borrowed from Old North French escuchon, variant of semi-learned Old French escusson, from Gallo-Romance scūtīōnem* (nominative scūtīō*), from Latin scūtum shield; for suffix see -ION, -eon being a spelling variant.

-ese a suffix forming adjectives with the meaning of, belonging to, or originating in (a city or country), as in Milanese architect, Vietnamese people, with corresponding nouns meaning native or inhabitant of (a Viennese, the Japanese), language of (Chinese, Portuguese), or, by extension, typical style or vocabulary of, as in journalese, New Yorkese. Borrowed from Old French -eis or Italian -ese, from Latin -ēnsis, of, belonging to, or from (a place).

Eskimo n. 1584 Esquimaue, borrowed from Danish Eskimo or Middle French Esquimaux, pl., probably from an Algonquian source such as the Indians of Labrador who applied this name to the Eskimos of that region (compare Abnaki esquimantsec, Ojibwa ashkimeq, literally, eaters of raw meat), as opposed to Innu, meaning men, the Eskimo people's own name for themselves.

esophagus n. 1392 ysophagus; borrowed, perhaps by influence of Old French ysophage, from Greek oisophágos, a learned formation perhaps with the meaning of what carries and eats (oiso-, from oiein future infinitive of pherein to carry + -phágos, from phagein eat).

esoteric adj. 1655–60, borrowed from Greek esōterikós belonging to an inner circle, from esōtērō, comparative adverb of ēsō within; for suffix see -IC.

espalier n. 1662, a fruit tree trimmed to grow on a trellis, borrowing of French espalier, from Italian spalliera a support for the shoulders, espalier, from spalla shoulder, from Latin spatula a broad piece, blade.

especial adj. About 1385, borrowed from Old French especial, from Latin specialis belonging to a particular kind or species, from speciēs kind. Latin words with initial sp, st, sc borrowed into French before the 1400's usually add an initial e. —especially adv. Probably before 1400; formed from English especial + *-ly*¹.

Distinction in use between especial and special, has little to do with etymology, especial being confined to the sense of preeminent, special to that of particular.

Esperanto n. 1892, in allusion to the pen name "Doctor Esperanto" (in Esperanto "one who hopes"), used in a book published in 1887 about this language by L.L. Zamenhof who invented the language.

espionage n. 1793, borrowed from French espionnage, from Middle French espionner to spy, from Old French espion spy, probably from Italian spione, from a Germanic source (compare Old High German spēhōn to spy); for suffix see -AGE.

esplanade n. 1591, borrowed from French esplanade, from Middle French, probably from Spanish esplanada (influenced by Italian spianata), from esplanar make level, from Latin explanāre to level, EXPLAIN; for suffix see -ADE.

espouse v. Probably 1435 espousen take as spouse, marry; borrowed from Middle French espouser marry, betroth, from Latin spōnsāre become engaged to marry, from spōnsa SPOUSE. The extended sense of adopt, embrace is first recorded in 1622. —espousal n. Before 1393 esposaille, espousaille, borrowed from Old French espousailles (plural) act of betrothal, from Latin spōnsālia, neuter plural of spōnsālis of a betrothal, from spōnsus SPOUSE; for suffix see *-AL*².

espresso n. 1945, borrowing of Italian caffè espresso, from espresso pressed out, from past participle of esprimere, from Latin exprimere press out, EXPRESS.

esprit n. 1591; a French word from Middle French esprit spirit, mind, from Old French espirit, learned borrowing from Latin spiritus spirit.

-esque a suffix forming adjectives and meaning "resembling or suggesting the style, characteristics, etc., of," as in arabesque, Romanesque, statuesque. Borrowed from French -esque, from esquire n. 1374 esquier Englishman ranking next below a knight; borrowed from Middle French esquier, escuier squire, literally, shield bearer, from Old French, from Latin scūtarius shield bearer, from scūtum shield. This word was originally applied to a member of the English gentry, but in the 1500's was extended as a general title of courtesy or respect, and in the U.S. has become fashionable among lawyers.

Italian -esco, from Vulgar Latin -iscus*, from Proto-Germanic -iskaz* (compare Old High German -isc -ISH¹).

-ess a suffix forming nouns and meaning a female —, as in lioness, heiress, hostess, sculptress. Middle English -esse, borrowed from Old French -esse, from Late Latin -issa, from Greek -issa, feminine noun suffix, and replacing Old English -ige.

When -ess is added to a noun ending in -tor, -ter, the vowel before r is generally elided, as in actress (actor + -ess), such a derivative with the ending -tress (often equivalent to French -trice) is usually considered a reduced form of Latin -trix, -tricem.

In Middle English many words in -esse were adopted from French, such as countess, duchess, mistress, princess, or formed on nouns in -er, such as enchantress and sorceress. Many have acquired derogatory connotations, such as Jewess and Negress; others are thought to suggest male condescension, such as authoress, sculptress, the terms author and sculptor associated chiefly with males, but in reality applicable to both male and female. Except for spinster a rare vestige of Old English feminine agent nouns in -ster, and a few others (goddess, abbess), the feminine agent nouns are disappearing under social pressure.

essay n. 1597, borrowed from Middle French essai trial, attempt, essay, from Late Latin exagium a weighing, weight, from Vulgar Latin exagere*, a recompounding of Latin exigere test (ex- out + agere, perhaps in a lost meaning of to weigh). —v. 1483 essayen to test, assay, borrowed from Middle French essaier, from essai, n. —essayist n. 1609, formed from English essay, n. + -ist.

essence n. Before 1398 essencia substance of the Trinity, borrowed from Latin essentia being, essence, formed in imitation of Greek ousia being or essence, from ōn (genitive ontos), present participle of ēinai to be. A later spelling essence (1481) is a re-spelling in English borrowed from Middle French, from Old French essence (1130), from Latin essentia, from esse to be. The general sense of the most important or basic element of anything, is first recorded in English in 1656. —essential adj. Before 1398 essencyal of the essence, basic or fundamental; borrowed through Old French essentiell, and directly from Late Latin essentiālis, from Latin essentia essence; for suffix see *-AL*¹.

-est a suffix forming the superlative of adjectives and adverbs, as in warmest, slowest.

Middle English -est developed from a blend of: 1) Old English -ost-, -ust-, -ast-, found in Old Frisian and Old Icelandic -ast-, Old Saxon, Old High German, and Gothic -ōsts, from Proto-Germanic -ōstaz*; and 2) Old English -est-, -st-, found in Old Frisian, Old High German, and Gothic -ists, from Proto-Germanic -istaz*.

establish v. About 1380 establishen to fix, settle, set up; borrowed from Old French establis-, stem of establi-, from Latin stabilire make stable, from stabilis STABLE² steady; for suffix see *-ISH*². —establishment n. 1481, a settled arrangement; earlier, property, income (before 1470); formed from English establish + -ment. The sense of an institution or a business appeared in 1832. The phrase the Establishment meaning the established Church is first recorded in English in 1731; it was extended in the 1900's to refer to the ruling groups or institutions of a country.

estate n. Probably before 1200, special state or condition, status, borrowed from Anglo-French astat and Old French estat, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin; status (genitive statūs) state or condition, from sta-, a root form of stare to stand.

The sense of property or possessions, fortune, first recorded in English about 1385, evolved from an early meaning of STATE "condition with respect to worldly prosperity or fortune" (1325). The meaning of landed property, is first recorded in 1623, in American English.

esteem v. Before 1410 estymen estimate the value of; later estemen (1449); borrowed from Middle French estimer, learned borrowing from Latin aestimāre to value, appraise. The sense of value, respect, is first recorded in 1530. —n. Before 1338 steem account, worth; later extyme (probably about 1450); borrowed from Old French estime, from estimer, v. The sense of high regard, is first recorded in 1611.

ester n. 1852, borrowing of German Ester, possibly a contraction of Essigäther (Essig vinegar, from Old High German ezzih, by way of Gothic from atēcum*, metathesized by shift of t and c from Latin acētum; see ACETIC + German äther, from Latin aethēr ETHER).

estimation n. 1375 estimacion judgment, opinion; borrowed from Old French estimacion, from Latin aestimātiōnem (nominative aestimātiō) a valuation, from aestimāre to value; for suffix see -ATION. —estimable adj. Before 1475; borrowed from Old French estimable, and directly from Latin aestimābilis worthy of estimation, from aestimāre. —estimate v. About 1532, to esteem, consider; earlier estimat reputed (before 1500); borrowed from Latin aestimātus, past participle of aestimāre to value; see ESTEEM; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. In some instances estimate may be a back formation from estimation. The sense of calculate approximately, is first recorded in English in 1669. —n. 1563, valuation; earlier estymate power of the mind (1464); from the verb in English, or borrowed from Latin aestimātus, verbal noun, from aestimāre. The sense of approximate judgment, is first recorded in English in 1589, in respect to the qualities of a person or thing.

estrangle v. Probably before 1475 estraungen; borrowed from Middle French estrangier alienate, from Vulgar Latin extrāneāre* treat as a stranger, from Latin extrāneus foreign, STRANGE.

estrogen n. 1927, formed from English ESTRUS + connective -o- + -gen producing; so called from the hormone's ability to promote estrus.

estrus n. 1890 oestrus rut of animals, heat; earlier, passion or frenzy, as if brought on by a stinging or goading (1850); earlier a gadfly (1697); borrowing of Latin oestrus frenzy, gadfly, from Greek oistros gadfly, breeze, sting, mad impulse. —estrous adj. 1900 oestrous; formed from English oestrus estrus + -ous.

estuary n. 1538, inlet of the sea; borrowed from Latin aestuārium a tidal marsh or opening, from aestus (genitive aestūs) boiling (of the sea), tide, heat; for suffix see -ARY.

-et a suffix forming nouns and meaning small, little, as in islet, owlet. Borrowed from Old French -et, -ete from Vulgar Latin -ittum*, -itta*, of unknown origin. The suffix -et occurs chiefly in French words borrowed into Middle English, such as bullet, pullet, hatchet, sonnet, and tablet.

et cetera About 1150 & cetera, borrowed from Latin et cetera and the rest (et and cetera the rest, neuter plural of ceterus remaining over, probably a result of the fusion of ce eteros* there, the other).

The character &, used in Middle English Ecetera and in Ec (written in modern English etc.) represents the ligature of et.

etch v. 1634, borrowed from Dutch etsen, from German ätzen to etch, from Old High German azzōn, azzen cause to bite, feed, from Proto-Germanic atjanan*, causative of etan* to EAT (the connection with eat evolving from the process of etching which “eats away” the surface). —etching n. 1762, picture or design printed from an etched plate; earlier, art or process of engraving (1634).

eternal adj. About 1380, borrowed through Old French eternal, or directly from Late Latin aeternālis, from Latin aeternus, contraction of aeviternus of great age, from aevum AGE; for suffix see -AL. —eternity n. About 1380 eternite, later eternity (probably 1440); borrowed from Old French eternité, learned borrowing from Latin aeternitatem (nominative aeternitās), from aeternus; for suffix see -ITY.

-eth¹ a form of the suffix -th when the cardinal number to which it is attached ends in -y, such as twentieth (from twenty), fiftieth (from fifty).

-eth² a suffix forming the third person singular, present indicative active, of verbs, now archaic, as in goeth, sendeth, but occasionally used as a literary device. The form is sometimes -th, as in doth. Middle English -eth, developed from Old English -eth, -ath; cognate with Gothic -ith, -ōth, and Old High German -it, -ōt, -ēt.

ether n. Before 1398, upper regions of space; borrowed from Old French ether, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin aether the upper pure, bright air, from Greek aithēr upper air. In 1757 ether, a chemical compound, so named for its lightness and lack of color suggesting a resemblance to air. By 1842 its anesthetic properties were established. —ethereal adj. 1513, of the highest region of the atmosphere, replacing earlier ethereum, etherum in the sense of bright, shining (recorded before 1398); formed in English from Latin aethereus, aetherius, from Greek aithērios, from aithēr + English -al. The sense of light, airy, is first recorded in 1598, and that of spiritlike, immaterial, in 1647.

ethics n. 1602, fashioned after Greek tà ēthiká the ethics, but formed from plural of Middle English ethik study of morals (about 1386); borrowed from Old French ethique, from Late Latin ēthica, from Greek ēthiká; and directly from Latin ēthicē, from Greek ēthikē philosophiā moral philosophy, feminine of ēthikós (ēthikē) ethical; for suffix see -ICS. —ethical adj. 1607, formed in English from Latin ēthicus (from Greek ēthikós, from ēthos moral character, related to ēthos custom) + English -al.

ethnic n. About 1375 (Scottish), a heathen or pagan; probably borrowed directly from a translation of New Testament Greek tà éthnē the heathen, from éthnos a people, nation, Gentiles, a translation of Hebrew gōyīm, plural of gōy nation, especially non-Israelites, Gentile nation. The sense of a member of a racial, cultural, or national minority group, is first recorded in 1945 in American English. —adj. About 1470, heathen or pagan; from the noun, and as a borrowing from Late Latin ethnicus, from Greek ethnikós, from éthnos nation, probably related to éthos custom; for suffix see -IC.

The sense of peculiar to a race or nation, is first recorded in 1851, and that of having to do with or belonging to different cultural groups, in 1935.

ethno- a combining form meaning people, race, nation, or culture, as in ethnology (the science or study of races or people or their culture). Borrowed from Greek éthno-, combining form of éthnos people, nation, class.

ethnocentric adj. 1900, formed from ethno- + centric.

ethnography n. 1834, borrowed possibly through German Ethnographie geographical distribution of man, from Greek éthno- + -graphiā writing.

ethnology n. 1842, formed from ethno- + -logy.

ethos n. 1851, New Latin, or more likely directly from Greek ēthos moral character, nature or disposition.

ethyl n. 1850, formed from English ether + -yl, modeled on German äthyl, from äther ether + -yl.

etiology n. Before 1555, science of causes or causation; borrowed from Latin aetiologia, from Greek aitiologíā statement of cause, from aitíā cause, from aitōs* one's share, related to ainysthai take; for suffix see -LOGY.

etiquette n. 1750, used as a French word referring to prescribed behavior, from Old French estiquette label, TICKET. The transition from the sense of ticket, label to that of prescribed routine or behavior took place possibly from directions for behavior on a soldier's billet for lodgings.

-ette a suffix forming nouns and meaning: little, as in kitchenette, dinette; female, as in bachelorette, usherette; a substitute for, as in leatherette. Borrowed from French -ette, from Old French -ete, feminine of -et -ET.

étude n. Before 1837, borrowing of French étude, literally study, from Old French estudie, estude, estuide, from Latin studium. The term was popularized in English by the études of Chopin.

etymology n. Before 1398 ethimologie, borrowed from Old French ethimologie, learned borrowing from Latin etymologia, from Greek etymologíā, from étymon true sense of a word based on its origin (neuter of étymos true, related to eteós true); for suffix see -LOGY.

eu- a prefix for modern technical and scientific terms, such as eucalyptus, eucaryote, eugenic, in English borrowed from Greek, and meaning: 1 good or well, as in eugenic, eulogy, euphoria. 2 true, as in eucaryote. Greek eu-, from eú well, from neuter of eys good.

eucalyptus n. 1809, New Latin, from Greek eu- well + kalyptós covered, from kalýptein to cover (so called from the covering on the bud).

eucaryote or eukaryote n. 1963, formed from quasi-English eu- true + caryote or karyote cell nucleus, from Greek káryon nut, kernel.

Eucharist n. Probably about 1350 Eukaryste; borrowed from Old French eucariste, from Late Latin eucharistia, from Greek eucharistía thankfulness, the Lord's Supper, from eucháristos grateful (eu- well + the stem of charizesthai show favor); for suffix see -IST.

eugenics n. 1883, formed in English on analogy with economics, physics, etc., from Greek eugenḗs well-born, of good stock (eu- good, + génos birth) + English -ics.

eulogy n. Before 1475 ewloge; later eulogies, pl. (1591); borrowed from Latin eulogium, adaptation of Greek eulogía praise (eu- well + -logía speaking, from lógos discourse, word, from légein speak, after eú légein speak well of); for suffix see -Y³. (1808) + -ic. —eulogize v. Before 1810, formed from English eulogy + -ize.

eunuch n. Probably before 1425 enuch, later eunuk (1439); borrowed possibly through Middle French eunuque, and directly from Latin eunūchus, from Greek eunouchos castrated man (originally, guard of the bedchamber), from euno-, combining form of eunē bed + -ochos, from the stem of échein to have, hold.

euphemism n. 1656–81, borrowed from Greek euphēmismós use of a favorable word in place of an inauspicious one, from euphēmízein speak with fair words (eu- good + phēmē speaking, from phánai speak); for suffix see -ISM. —euphemistic adj. 1856, derived from English euphemism + -ist + -ic.

euphony n. About 1450 euphonie; borrowed from Middle French euphonie, from Late Latin euphōnia, from Greek euphōnía, from euphōnos well-sounding (eu- good + phōnē sound, voice, related to phánai speak); for suffix see -Y³. —euphonious adj. 1774, formed from English euphony + -ous.

euphoria n. 1882, probably by extension of earlier, and now obsolete euphoria (1706) or euphory (1684) ease or relief coming from the administration of some medical procedure; New Latin, from Greek euphoría power of bearing easily, fertility, from eúphoros, literally, bearing well (eu- well + phérein to carry). —euphoric adj. 1888, formed from English euphoria + -ic.

Eur- the form of Euro- before vowels, as in Eurasian.

eureka interj., n. 1603, earlier, cited as a Greek form EYPHKA (1570); borrowed from Greek heúrēka I have found (it), 1st person singular perfect active indicative form of heuriskein to find, supposedly uttered by the Greek mathematician Archimedes when he discovered the means of determining the proportion of base metal in the golden crown of Hiero, king of Syracuse.

Euro- a combining form created by shortening of Europe, meaning Europe or European, as in Eurobond, Eurocurrency, or as in Eurocrat (Euro- + bureaucrat), Euromarket; also (hyphenated) European and, as in Euro-Asian, Euro-American.

europium n. 1901, New Latin, from Latin Eurōpa Europe, from Greek Eurṓpē + -ium.

Eustachian tube n. 1755 (earlier as Eustachian, adj., in reference to a structure of the kidney, 1741), from Eustachius, Latinized form of Eustachio, Italian anatomist and physician who first described this structure.

euthanasia n. 1606, borrowed from Greek euthanasía an easy or happy death (eu- good + thánatos death). The sense of act or practice of painlessly putting to death, as the incurably and painfully diseased, is first recorded in 1869.

eutrophic adj. 1931, extension of earlier eutrophic promoting nutrition (probably 1884); formed from eutrophy good nutrition (1721) + -ic. Eutrophy was borrowed from Greek eutrophía good nurture, from eútrofos thriving, nourishing, (eu- good + trophē nurture, from tréphēin to nourish). —eutrophication n. 1947, formed from English eutrophic + -ation.

evacuate v. 1542, to empty or deplete (the body), from earlier evacuate, adj., depleted or empty (before 1425); borrowed from Latin ēvacuātus, past participle of ēvacuāre empty, also in Late Latin, clear out (ē- out + vacuus empty); for suffix see -ATE¹.

Evacuate replaced the Middle English verb evacuen (recorded before 1400); borrowed from Old French evacuer, from Latin ēvacuāre. —evacuation n. Before 1400 evacuacioun discharge of humors from the body, borrowed through Old French evacuatiōn, and directly from Late Latin ēvacuatiōnem (nominative ēvacuatiō), from Latin ēvacuāre; for suffix see -ATION. —evacuee n. 1934, borrowed from French évacué, from évacuer cease to occupy, from Latin ēvacuāre.

evade v. 1513, to escape; borrowed from Middle French évaider, from Latin ēvādere to escape, get away (ē- away + vādere go, walk). The sense of escape by trickery, elude, is first recorded in 1535.

evaluation n. 1755, the action of appraising or valuing (goods, etc.); borrowed from French évaluation, from évaluer to find the value of (é- out + value VALUE + -ation -ation). —evaluate v. 1842, back formation from English evaluation.

evanescent adj. 1717, disappearing or vanishing; borrowed from Latin evānēscēntem (nominative evānēscēns), present participle of evānēscere disappear or vanish (ē- out + vānēscere vanish, from vānus empty); for suffix see -ENT. —evanesce v. 1822, either a back formation of earlier evanescence; or borrowed from Latin evānēscere. —evanescence n. 1751, from evanescent, on analogy of putrescent, putrescence, etc.; for suffix see -ENCE.

evangelist n. Probably about 1200 ewangeliste one of the writers of the Four Gospels; borrowed from Old French evangeliste, evaungeliste, and directly from Late Latin evangelista (with shift from Greek eu- to Latin ev-) from Greek euangelistēs bringer of good news, preacher of the gospel, from eu-angelizesthai bring good news, preach the gospel, from eu-angelion good news, from euángelos bringing good news (eu- good + angéllein announce, from ángelos messenger, ANGEL). —evangelic adj. Probably before 1425 ewangelich, borrowed from Old French evangelique, and directly from Late Latin evangelicus (from Late Greek euangelikós, from Greek euangelion good news) —evangelical adj. 1531, formed in English from evangelic + -al.¹ —evangelistic adj. 1845, formed from English evangelist + -ic. —evangelism n. Before 1626, borrowed from Medieval Latin evangelismus a spreading of the Gospel (found in Evangelismi festum Feast of the Gospels, fifth Sunday after Easter), from Late Latin evangelium good news, gospel, from Greek euangelion good news. —evangelize v. Before 1382, borrowed from Old French evangeliser to spread or preach the gospel, and directly from Medieval or Late Latin evangelizāre, from Greek euangelizesthai bring good news, preach the gospel.

evaporation n. Before 1398 evaporacioun, borrowed from Old French evaporation, and as a learned borrowing directly from Latin evaporātiōnem (nominative evaporātiō), from evaporāre disperse in vapor or steam, evaporate (ē- + vapor steam, VAPOR); for suffix see -ATION. —evaporate v. Probably before 1425 evaporaten, in some instances a back formation of evaporation, and in others a borrowing from Latin evaporātum, past participle of evaporāre; for suffix see -ATE¹.

evasion n. Probably before 1425 evasioun means of evading; borrowed through Middle French évasion, and directly from Late Latin evāsīōnem (nominative evāsīō), from evās-, stem of Latin evādere to escape; for suffix see -SION. —evasive adj. 1725, formed from English evas(ion) + -ive, perhaps molded on French évasif, évasive, from évasion, from Late Latin evāsīōnem; or formed in English from Latin past participle stem evās- + English -ive.

eve n. Probably before 1200, variant of EVEN² (the terminal n regarded as inflectional; for a similar loss of final n, compare morrow, game, and maid).

The extended sense of the evening, or day, before a festival or holiday (as in Christmas eve), appeared about 1300 though the meaning existed in even (1121) and æfen (about 725).

even¹ adj. level, smooth, equal. Probably before 1200 evene; developed from Old English efen, efn level, even (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian even, evin level, plain, smooth, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch effen, Old Saxon eban, Old High German eban (modern German eben), Old Icelandic jafn (Danish jævn, Norwegian jevn, Swedish jämn), and Gothic ibns, from Proto-Germanic ebnaz*. —adv. indeed, fully; quite. Probably about 1200 even, developed from Old English (about 725) efne, later efen, from Old English efen, efn, adj. —v. Probably before 1200 evenen make level or equal; developed from Old English (about 975) efnan make level with, from Old English efen, efn, adj.

even² n. Archaic. evening. 1121, developed from Old English æfen (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian ēvend evening, Old Saxon āband, and Old High German āband (modern German Abend).

evening n. Probably before 1200 evening, developed from Old English (about 1000) æfnung (æfnian become evening, from æfen evening, EVEN²) + -ung -ing¹.

event n. 1570–76, outcome or result; borrowed from Middle French event, learned borrowing from Latin eventus (genitive eventūs) occurrence, issue, from evenire to come out, happen, result (ē- out + venire come; see COME). The sense of an incident, occurrence, is first recorded in 1588. —eventful adj. 1600, formed from English event + -ful. —eventual adj. 1612–15, borrowed from French éventuel, as if formed on the Latin model eventuālis*, from event-, participle stem of evenire. —eventuality n. 1828, the power of observing in phrenology; later, a possible occurrence (1852); formed from English eventual + -ity, by influence of French éventualité.

ever adv. About 1250 euere, developed from Old English æfre (about 750), probably related to Old English ā always, ever; not found in other Germanic languages. Perhaps a contraction of ā in feore, literally, ever in life (ā always + in in + feorh life); ā always, originally āw* (with change of w to f) + -re dative feminine adjective suffix, often formative of adverbs. Compare NEVER. —everglade n. (1823, American English) —evergreen n. (1644); adj. (1671) —everlasting adj. About 1225, eternal; later, perpetual, about 1303. —evermore adv. About 1290, developed from Old English æfre mā.

every adj. Probably about 1200 eauer-euch, literally, ever each; later euerech and euerele (about 1250) and euery (about 1303); developed from Old English æfre ælc ever each (æfre ever, and ælc each); see EACH, EVER. —everybody pron. (about 1390) —everyday adj. (about 1380) —everyone pron. (probably about 1200) —everywhere adv. (probably about 1200, developed from Old English æfre gehwær).

evict v. 1447 evicten recover (property) by judicial means, borrowed from Latin evictus, past participle of evincere recover property, evict, conquer (ē- out + vincere conquer). The sense of to expel by legal process is first recorded in English in 1536. —eviction n. 1461, probably borrowed from Middle French éviction, from Latin evictionem (nominative evictiō) recovery of one's property, from ēvic-, stem of evincere; for suffix see -TION.

evident adj. Before 1382, true or faithful, authentic, later, clear, plain, visible, obvious (1393); borrowed from Old French evident, from Latin evidentem (nominative evidēns) perceptible, clear, obvious (ē- fully, out of, + videntem, nominative vidēns, present participle of videre to see); for suffix see -ENT —evidence n. Probably before 1378, a particular bit of evidence, principles given in support of a belief, borrowed from Old French evidence, from Late Latin ēvidentia proof; from ēvidentem perceptible, clear, obvious; for suffix see -ENCE. —v. About 1610, from the noun. —evidently adv. About 1380, formed from English evident + -ly¹.

evil adj. 1130 iuēle; later ufel, euele (probably before 1200), and evel (about 1300); developed from Old English yfel bad, wicked, vicious (plural yfla, about 725 in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian evel evil, Old Saxon ubil, Middle Dutch evel (modern Dutch euvel), Old High German ubil (modern German übel), Gothic ubils evil, from Proto-Germanic ubilaz*. —n. Probably about 1175 evel, developed from Old English yfel that which is evil, adjective used absolutely. —evildoer n. (before 1387) evince v. 1608–11, to disprove, confute; borrowed from French évincer, from Latin ēvincere conquer, elicit by argument, prove (ē- out + vincere overcome). The sense of show clearly, reveal, is first recorded in English, in 1772–84.

eviscerate v. 1621, borrowed from Latin ēviscerātus, past participle of ēviscerāre (ē- out + viscera internal organs); for suffix see -ATE¹.

evoke v. 1623–26, probably borrowed through French évoquer, or directly from Latin ēvocāre call out, rouse, summon (ē- out + vocāre to call); or as a back formation of evocation. —evocation n. 1574; earlier, used in a specialized grammatical sense (about 1450); borrowed from Latin ēvocātiōnem (nominative ēvocātiō), from ēvocāre for suffix see -ATION. —evocative adj. 1657, formed in English from Latin ēvocātus, past participle of ēvocāre + English -ive.

evolve v. Before 1641, implied in evolved unfold or set forth in sequence; borrowed from Latin ēvolvere unroll (ē- out + volvere to roll). —evolution n. 1622, unfolding; borrowed from Latin ēvolūtiōnem (nominative ēvolūtiō) unrolling of a book, from ēvolū-, stem of ēvolvere unroll; for suffix see -TION. This word (as well as evolve, v.) was used in 1832, with reference to the theory that animals and plants developed from earlier forms; Darwin adopted the term in The Origin of Species (1859). —evolutionary adj. 1846, formed from English evolution + -ary.

ewe n. About 1300 ouwe; earlier, in the compound ewe-lamb (probably about 1200); developed from Old English ēowu (about 1000); cognate with Old Frisian ei ewe, Old Saxon ewi, Old High German ouwi, ou, Old Icelandic ær, from Proto-Germanic awī*, genitive awjōz*, and Gothic awistr sheepfold, awēthi flock of sheep.

ewer n. Probably about 1380; borrowed from Anglo-French ewer, ewiere, Old French eviere, aiguier water pitcher, from Vulgar Latin aquāria*, as in aquāria* olla water pot, from feminine of Latin aquārius of or for water, from aqua water.

ex¹ prep. out of, without, not including (chiefly in commercial use, as in ex warehouse, ex dividend). 1845, borrowed from Latin ex from, out of; see EX-¹.

ex² n. 1827, short for ex-husband, ex-wife, ex-president, etc.

ex-¹ a prefix meaning: 1 out of, from, out, as in express = press out. 2 thoroughly, utterly, as in exterminate = terminate utterly. 3 (usually in words borrowed from Latin) removing, lacking, as in expatriate. 4 (free compounding form, usually with a hyphen) former, as in ex-president, ex-convict, ex-husband. Borrowed from Latin ex-, related to the preposition ex, or ē out of or from.

Latin ex- appears before vowels and h, and before voiceless consonants such as c, q, s, and t; before voiced consonants it becomes ē-; and before f it becomes ef-.

In Old French and in Middle English, words with the prefix es- were sometimes respelled with ex-, in imitation of words from Latin; for example, exchange for eschange, exchequer for eschequer.

ex-² a prefix meaning out, from, out of, usually in words borrowed from Greek, as in exodus, exorcise. Borrowed from Greek ex-, ex, cognate with Latin ex; see the etymology of EX-¹. Greek ex- appears before vowels; the corresponding form before consonants is ec-.

ex-³ the form of exo-, meaning outside, outer, outside of, before vowels, as in exocipital.

exacerbate v. 1660, probably formed in English by back formation from earlier exacerbation, but also possibly a borrowing, perhaps influenced by French exacerber, from Latin exacerbātus, past participle of exacerbāre exasperate, irritate (ex- thoroughly + acerbus harsh, bitter); for suffix see -ATE¹. —exacerbation n. Before 1400 exacerbacyoun, borrowed from Late Latin exacerbātiōnem (nominative exacerbātiō), from Latin exacerbāre for suffix see -ATION.

exact v. 1440 exacten; borrowed from Latin exāctus, past participle of exigere, literally, drive or force out, also in the senses of demand, finish, measure (ex- out + agere drive, lead, act). —adj. 1533, borrowed from Latin exāctus precise, from the past participle of exigere, in the senses of weigh or calculate precisely. —exacting adj. (1583) —exaction n. About 1380, borrowed from Old French exaction, and directly from Latin exāctiōnem (nominative exāctiō), from exigere. —exactitude n. 1734, borrowed from French exactitude, from exact, from Latin exāctus. —exactly adv. Before 1533, though the elliptical use meaning “quite right” is not recorded before 1869.

exaggerate v. 1533, to pile up, borrowed from Latin exaggerātus, past participle of exaggerāre heighten, amplify, magnify (ex- thoroughly + aggerāre heap up, from agger, genitive aggeris heap, from aggerere bring together, carry toward; from ag- to, toward + gerere carry); for suffix see -ATE¹. The sense of magnify or overstate, is first recorded in English in 1564. —exaggeration n. 1565, borrowed from Latin exaggerātiōnem (nominative exaggerātiō), from exaggerāre exaggerate; for suffix see -ATION.

exalt v. Before 1410 exalten, borrowed through Middle French exalter, and directly from Latin exaltāre raise, elevate (ex- out, up + altus high). Also, exalt may be a back formation from earlier exaltation. —exaltation n. 1389 exaltation, through Old French exaltation, and directly from Late Latin exaltatiōnem (nominative exaltatiō) elevation, pride, from Latin exaltāre raise, exalt; for suffix see -ATION.

examine v. About 1303 examynen to test or question; borrowed from Old French examiner to test or try, learned borrowing from Latin exāmināre to test or try, from exāmen a means of weighing or testing; probably developed through exagesmen* a testing, examination, from exag-, stem of exagere, variant of exigere weigh accurately. —exam n. (1877, shortened form of examination) —examination n. About 1390 examinacioun, borrowed from Old French examination, and as a learned borrowing directly from Latin exāminatiōnem (nominative exāminatiō), from exāmināre examine; for suffix see -ATION. —examiner n. (1530) example n. Before 1382 exsauple, borrowed from Old French exemple, essample, learned borrowing from Latin exemplum, originally, that which is taken out, a sample, from eximere take out, remove, EXEMPT. An earlier form asauple appeared in Middle English before 1250, borrowed from Old French assample, variant of essample.

exasperate v. 1534, borrowed, possibly by influence of Middle French exaspérer, from Latin exasperātus, past participle of exasperāre roughen, irritate (ex- thoroughly + asper rough); for suffix see -ATE¹. —exasperation n. 1547, borrowed from Latin exasperatiōnem (nominative exasperatiō), from exasperāre for suffix see -ATION.

excavate v. 1599, probably developed from earlier excavate, adj., hollowed out (1571); borrowed from Latin excavātus, past participle of excavāre to hollow out (ex- out + cavāre to hollow, from cavus hollow); for suffix see -ATE¹. —excavation n. 1611, either formed from English excavate, v. + -ion; or borrowed through French excavation, or directly from Latin excavatiōnem (nominative excavatiō), from excavāre; for suffix see -ATION.

exceed v. About 1380 exceden, borrowed from Old French exceder, learned borrowing from Latin excēdere depart, go beyond (ex- out + cēdere go, yield). —exceeding adj. (1494); adv. (1535) —exceedingly adv. (1535) excel v. Probably about 1408 excellen, probably borrowed from Middle French exceller, and directly from Latin excellere to rise, surpass, be eminent (ex- out from + -cellere rise high or tower; related to celsus high, lofty, great). Also, excel may have been formed as a back formation of excellence. —excellence n. Probably about 1350, borrowed from Old French excellence, from Latin excellētia superiority, excellence, from excellētem (nominative excellēns) excellent, present participle of excellere; for suffix see -ENCE. —excellency n. Probably about 1200 excellencie high rank; borrowed from Latin excellētia superiority, excellence. —excellent adj. Before 1349, surpassing, superior; borrowed from Old French excellēnt, learned borrowing from Latin excellētem (nominative excellēns), present participle of excellere excel; for suffix see -ENT.

excelsior adj. 1778, in American English, the motto of New York State incorporating the Latin excelsior higher, comparative of excelsus high, past participle of excellere EXCEL. The word was popularized in the United States in the poem Excelsior (1841) by Longfellow. 1868, American English, originally a trade name; from the adjective.

except prep. About 1378 excepte, borrowed through Old French excepté, prep., or directly from Latin exceptus, past participle of excipere take out (ex- out + capere take). In Middle English, except was used as a participle with the meaning of (being) excepted, and often preceded the noun. In this position it gradually took on the function of a preposition. —conj. Before 1387, borrowed directly from Latin exceptus, past participle of excipere. —v. Before 1393 excepten take or leave out, exclude, borrowed from Middle French excepter, from Latin exceptus, past participle of excipere. —excepting prep. (1549) —exception n. About 1386 exceptioun, borrowed through Anglo-French exceptioun, Old French exception, or directly from Latin exceptiōnem (nominative exceptiō), from except-, stem of excipere take out; for suffix see -TION. —exceptionable adj. 1664, implied in exceptionableness; formed from English exception + -able. —exceptional adj. 1846, forming an exception, unusual, special, formed from English exception + -al, possibly by influence of earlier French exceptionnel (1739).

excerpt v. About 1536, borrowed from Latin excerptus, past participle of excerpere pluck out, excerpt (ex- out + carpere pluck, gather). It is possible that excerpt, v., was also in part developed from earlier excerpte taken or derived (from a book), a past participial use (probably before 1425). —n. Before 1638, borrowed from Latin excerptum, neuter past participle of excerpere to excerpt; or, in some instances possibly a noun use of the verb.

excess n. Before 1382 exces extravagant show of emotion, elation or ecstasy, also, more than enough (before 1387); borrowed through Old French exces, or directly as a learned borrowing from Latin excessus (genitive excessūs) departure, going beyond the bounds of reason or beyond the subject, from pre-Latin stem excesd- of excēdere to depart, go beyond, EXCEED. —adj. 1472–75, from the noun. —excessive adj. Before 1393 excessif, borrowed from Old French excessif, excessive, from Medieval Latin excessivus immoderate, from Latin excessum, past participle of excēdere; for suffix see -IVE.

exchange n. About 1378 eschaunge, borrowed through Anglo-French eschaunge, Old French eschange, from eschangier to exchange, from Vulgar Latin excambiāre* (from Latin ex- out + cambiāre to CHANGE). —v. 1415 eschaungen, borrowed through Anglo-French eschaungier, Middle French eschangier to exchange, from eschange, n.

exchequer n. Before 1338 escheker a session of the English king's department of treasury, earlier, a chessboard (about 1250); borrowed through Anglo-French escheker, from Old French eschequier chessboard, from eschec a check. It is disputed whether the term applied to the treasury was first used in Normandy or in England, but the name refers to a cloth divided into squares and covering a table on which accounts of revenue were reckoned with counters.

The spelling exchequer developed when es- of the original Old French spelling was mistaken as the equivalent of Latin ex-. The shift from -ker to -quer developed after 1450, modeled on the re-adopted Old French -quier.

excise¹ n. tax. 1494, borrowed probably from Middle Dutch excijs, apparently an altered form of acjis tax, by influence of Latin excisus cut out or removed, past participle of excidere; see EXCISE². The Middle Dutch acjis is traditionally derived from Old French accis tax or assessment, from Vulgar Latin accēsum*, ultimately from Latin ad- to + census tax, CENSUS.

excise² v. cut out. 1578, borrowed from Middle French ex-ciser, learned borrowing from Latin excisus, past participle of excidere cut out (ex- out + caedere to cut). —excision n. 1490, borrowed through Middle French excision, learned borrowing from Latin excisiōnem (nominative excisiō), from excis-, stem of excidere excise; for suffix see -SION.

excite v. About 1340 exciten urge on; later, to stir up the feelings of (before 1387); borrowed through Old French exciter, or directly as a learned borrowing from Latin excitare rouse, excite, frequentative form of excitare call forth, instigate (ex- out + ciere set in motion, call). —excitation n. 1384, probably borrowed from Old French excitation, from Latin excitātiōnem (nominative excitātiō), from excitare; for suffix see -ATION. —excited adj. 1660, magnetically or electrically stimulated; later, disturbed or agitated (1855); from excite, v. —excitement n. About 1425, encouragement; 1604, perhaps as a re-formation of English excite + -ment. —exciting adj. 1811, causing disease; later, causing excitement (1826); from excite, v.

exclaim v. 1570 exclame; probably, at least in part, a back formation from earlier exclamation; but traditionally considered a borrowing from Middle French exclamer, or a learned borrowing from Latin, exclamāre cry out loud (ex- intensive + clāmāre cry out, call). The English spelling was influenced by claim; so also acclaim, acclamation which follow the same pattern. —exclamation n. About 1384 exclamacioun, borrowed from Old French exclamation, learned borrowing from Latin exclamātiōnem (nominative exclamātiō), from exclamātus (past participle of exclamāre); for suffix see -ATION. —exclamatory adj. 1593, formed from English exclamat(ion) + -ory, possibly modeled on Latin exclamāt-, participle stem of exclamāre + English suffix -ory.

exclude v. Before 1349, implied in the gerund excludyng (before 1349); borrowed from Latin excludere keep out, shut out, hinder, from ex- out + claudere to close¹ shut. —exclusion n. Before 1402, borrowed from Middle French exclusion, or directly as a learned borrowing from Latin exclūsiōnem (nominative exclūsiō), from excludere; for suffix see -SION. —exclusive adj. About 1450, functioning as an adverb; borrowed, perhaps through Middle French exclusif, but more likely from Medieval Latin exclusivus, from exclus-, participle stem of Latin excludere; for suffix see -IVE.

excommunicate v. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Late Latin excommunicātus, past participle of excommunicāre, literally, put out of the community (ex- out + communis common; on the analogy of communicāre communicate); for suffix see -ATE¹. —excommunication n. 1459, borrowed possibly through Middle French excommunication, or directly from Late Latin excommunicātiōnem (nominative excommunicātiō), from excommunicāre excommunicate; for suffix see -ATION.

excoriate v. Probably before 1425 excoriaten, borrowed from Late Latin excoriātus, past participle of excoriāre strip off the hide, from Latin ex- off + corium hide, skin. The figurative sense of denounce or censure violently is first recorded in 1708. —excoriation n. Probably before 1425 excoriacioun; borrowed possibly through Middle French excoriation, but more likely directly from Medieval Latin excoriationem (nominative excoriatio), from Late Latin excoriāre for suffix see -ATION.

excrement n. 1533, borrowed from Latin excrementum, from the stem of excrētus, past participle of excernere to sift out, discharge (ex- out + cernere sift, separate; see CERTAIN); for suffix see -MENT.

excrecence n. Probably before 1425, borrowed through Middle French excrecence, or directly from Latin excrēscētia, pl., abnormal growths, from excrēscētem (nominative excrēscēns), present participle of excrēscere grow out (ex- out + crēscere grow); for suffix see -ENCE. —excrecent adj. Before 1500 excrecent resulting from addition; later, growing out of something, especially abnormally (1633); borrowed from Latin excrēscētem (nominative excrēscēns), present participle of excrēscere grow out; and a back formation from excrecence, on the model of Latin excrēscētem; for suffix see -ENT.

excrete v. 1620, borrowed from Latin excrētus, past participle of excernere to discharge; see EXCREMENT; and a back formation from excretion. —excretion n. 1603, borrowed probably from French excrétion, apparently from Latin excrēt-, stem of excernere to discharge; for suffix see -TION. —excretory adj. 1681, formed in English from Latin excrēt-, past participle stem of excernere + English suffix -ory.

excruciate v. 1570, borrowed, possibly by influence of Middle French excrucier, from Latin excruciātus, past participle of excruciāre to torture, torment (ex- out, thoroughly + cruciāre cause pain or anguish to, crucify, from crux, genitive crucis CROSS); for suffix see -ATE¹. The participial adjective excruciating is first recorded in 1599.

exculpate v. 1656–81, borrowed from Medieval Latin exculpatus, past participle of exculpāre, from Latin ex culpā (ex from and culpā, ablative case of culpa blame); for suffix see -ATE¹. —exculpation n. Before 1715, formed from English exculpate + -ion.

excursion n. 1574, digression; borrowed from Middle French excursion, or directly as a learned borrowing from Latin, excursiōnem (nominative excursiō) a running forth, excursion, from excursus, past participle of excurrere run out (ex- out + currere to run); for suffix see -SION. The sense of a trip or journey is first recorded in English in 1665.

excuse v. About 1225 escusen, later excusen (before 1338); borrowed from Old French escuser, later excuser, learned borrowing from Latin excūsāre release from a charge, excuse (ex- out, away + causa accusation, CAUSE). —n. About 1375, borrowed from Old French excuse, from excuser. —excusable adj. About 1385, borrowed from Old French excusable, from Latin excūsābilis, from excūsāre; for suffix see -ABLE.

execrate v. 1561, borrowed from Latin execrātus, exsecrātus, past participles of execrārī, exsecrārī to hate, curse (ex- out + sacrārē to devote to holiness, but also to destruction, consecrate, from sacer SACRED); for suffix see -ATE¹. Also, execrate may also be a back formation from the earlier execration. —execrable adj. About 1384, involving a curse; borrowed through Old French execrable, and directly from Latin execrābilis, exsecrābilis, from execrārī, exsecrārī to curse; for suffix see -ABLE. The sense of abominable, detestable, is first recorded in 1490. —execration n. Before 1382 execracioun the act of cursing; borrowed through Old French execration, and directly from Latin execrātiōnem (nominative execrātiō), from execrārī, exsecrārī to curse; for suffix see -ATION.

execute v. About 1385 executen carry out, perform, accomplish, borrowed from Old French executer, back formation from exécuteur executor, from Latin execūtōr, exsecūtōr doer, performer, agent nouns from execūt-, exsecūt-, past participle stems of exequī, exsequī follow out (ex- out + sequī follow). The sense of put to death, is first recorded in English in 1483.

—execution n. About 1385 execucioun act of carrying out, performance, borrowed through Anglo-French execucioun, Old French execution, from Latin execūtiōnem, exsecūtiōnem (nominative execūtiō, exsecūtiō), from execūt-, exsecūt-, past participle stems of exequī, exsequī; for suffix see -TION. The sense of putting to death, is first recorded in English in do execution, don execution of deth (about 1390). —executioner n. 1561, formed from English execution + *-er*¹. —executive adj. Probably before 1425, intended to be carried out; borrowed from Middle French exécutive; exécutive, from Old French executer execute, as if from a Latin form execūtīvus*; for suffix see -IVE. The branch of a government charged with carrying out the laws, is first recorded in 1649. —n. 1776, in American English, person or persons charged with putting laws into effect, from the adjective. The sense of businessman is first recorded in 1902, also in American English. —executive committee (1823) —Executive Mansion the White House (1838) —executor n. About 1290 esecutor one who executes a will, borrowed through Anglo-French esecutour, Old French exécuteur, from Latin execūtōrem, exsecūtōrem (nominative execūtōr, exsecūtōr) doer, performer; see EXECUTE.

exegesis n. 1619, borrowed from Greek exēgēsis, from exēgeisthai explain, interpret (ex- out + hēgeisthai to lead, guide; see SEEK).

exemplary adj. 1589 exemplarie of a kind to become an example; adjective use of earlier exemplarie example (about 1420); the adjective borrowed from, Middle French exemplaire, from Latin exemplāris that serves as an example, from exemplum example; for suffix see -ARY. —exemplar n. Before 1398 exemplar original model of the universe in the mind of God; later, a model of virtue (1447); borrowed from Old French exemplaire, exampaire, and directly from Late Latin exemplarium, from exemplum EXAMPLE.

exemplify v. Probably about 1408 exemplifier demonstrate by example, borrowed from Middle French exemplifier, from Medieval Latin exemplificare, from Latin exemplum EXAMPLE; for suffix see -FY.

exempt adj. About 1380, borrowed from Old French exempt, and directly from Latin exēptus, past participle of eximere release, remove (ex- out + emere buy, originally take). —v. About 1443, grant immunity or freedom from (a law or rule); borrowed from Middle French exempter, from Old French, from exempt, adj. —exemption n. About 1400, borrowed from Old French exemption, or directly as a learned borrowing from Latin exēptiōnem (nominative exēptiō) a taking out, removing, from exēm-, stem of eximere; for suffix see -TION.

exercise n. About 1340, effort or application, as for virtue, etc.; borrowed from Old French exercice, learned borrowing from Latin exercitium, from exercitāre, frequentative form of exercere keep busy, drive on (ex- off + arcere keep away, prevent, enclose). The sense of physical exercise, is first recorded about 1390. —v. About 1380 exercisen put into active use; from the noun. The sense of engage in physical exercise, is first recorded in 1655.

exert v. 1660, thrust forth, push out; borrowed from Latin exertus, exsertus, past participles of exerere, exserere thrust out, put forth (ex- out + serere attach, join). The sense of put into use, exercise, bring to bear, is first recorded in 1681. —exertion n. 1668, act of exerting, formed from English exert + -ion. The meaning of vigorous action, effort, is first recorded in 1777.

exhale v. Before 1400 exalen emit vapor, perfume, etc.; borrowed from Middle French exhaler, learned borrowing from Latin exhālāre breathe out (ex- out + hālāre breathe). —exhalation n. Before 1393 exalacion, borrowed through Old French, or directly from Latin exhālātiōnem (nominative exhālātiō), from exhālāre; for suffix see -ATION.

exhaust v. 1533, use up, consume, probably developed from earlier exhaust, past participle; borrowed from Latin exhaustus, past participle of exaurire draw off, take away, use up, (ex- off + aurire to draw water, etc.). —n. 1848, from the verb. —exhausted adj. 1623 —exhaustion n. 1646, fatigue, loss of strength; formed from English exhaust, v. + -ion, on the model of Late Latin exhaustiōnem (nominative exhaustiō) a drawing off. —exhaustive adj. 1786–89, formed from exhaust + -ive.

exhibit v. 1447, possibly borrowed from Latin exhibitus, past participle of exhibere to hold out, show, display (ex- out + habere to hold). Also, exhibit is a back formation from earlier exhibition. —n. 1626, legal evidence; borrowed from Latin exhibitum, neuter past participle of exhibere. The sense of something displayed publicly, is first recorded in 1862. —exhibitor, exhibiter n. 1599, formed from English exhibit + *-or*², *-er*¹. —exhibition n. Before 1325 exhibicion a display, demonstration; borrowed through Old French exhibicion, and directly from Latin exhibitionem (nominative exhibitio), from exhibere; for suffix see -TION.

exhilarate v. 1540, borrowed from Latin exhilaratus, past participle of exhilarare gladden, cheer (ex- thoroughly + hilarare make cheerful, from hilaris, later hilaris cheerful); for suffix see -ATE¹. —exhilaration n. 1623–26, borrowed from Late Latin exhilarationem (nominative exhilaratio), from Latin exhilarare; for suffix see -ATION.

exhort v. Probably about 1400 exorten encourage or admonish; borrowed through Middle French exhorter, and directly from Latin exhortari (ex- thoroughly + hortari encourage, urge). —exhortation n. About 1384, borrowed through Old French exhortation, and directly from Latin exhortationem (nominative exhortatio), from exhortari exhort; for suffix see -ATION.

exhume v. 1783, borrowed from French exhumer, from Medieval Latin exhumare (Latin ex- out of + humare bury, from humus earth). —exhumation n. 1797, borrowed from French exhumation, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin exhumationem (nominative exhumatio), from exhumare; for suffix see -ATION.

exigency n. 1581, that which is urged; replacing Middle English exigence (1447); borrowed from Middle French exigence, from Late Latin exigentia, from Latin exigens (nominative exigens), from exigere to demand; for suffix see -ENCY. —exigencies n. pl. 1659, an urgent need, demand for prompt action; from the noun singular. —exigent adj. 1670, a back formation from earlier exigency, on the model of Latin exigentem (nominative exigens), present participle of exigere; for suffix see -ENT. Also, exigent may be from Middle English exigent, n., an emergency (before 1449).

exile v. Before 1325, borrowed from Old French exilier, learned borrowing from Late Latin exiliare, from Latin exilium banishment, from exul banished person (ex- away + the root -ul-, possibly ambulare to walk). —n. Probably before 1300, borrowed from Old French exil, learned borrowing from Latin exilium.

exist v. 1602, borrowed from French exister, from Middle French, learned borrowing from Latin existere, existere stand forth, appear, exist (ex- forth + sistere cause to stand). —existence n. About 1380, reality, borrowed from Old French existence, from Late Latin existentia, existentia, from Latin existens, existens (nominative existens, existens) existent, present participles of existere, existere; for suffix see -ENCE. The sense of fact or state of existing, is first recorded about 1430. —existent adj. 1561, probably a back formation from English existence, modeled on Latin existentem; see EXISTENCE. —existential adj. 1693, of or having to do with existence, borrowed from Late Latin existentialis, existentialis, from existentia, existentia; see EXISTENCE; for suffix see -AL¹. Modern use to refer to existentialism is first recorded in English before 1937. —existentialism n. 1941, borrowed from German Existentialismus (1919, replacing earlier Existentialforhold, 1849, from Kierkegaard's Existens-Forhold, 1846), from Late Latin existentialis existential + German -ismus -ism. —exis- tentialist n. 1945, borrowed from French existentialiste, from existentialisme (about 1940), from German Existenzialismus; for suffix see -IST.

exit n. 1538, a direction for leaving the stage, a borrowing of Latin exit he or she goes out, 3d person singular present indicative of exire go out (ex- out + ire to go). The plural form exeunt appeared earlier, about 1485. —v. 1607, make one's exit, depart; from the noun.

exo- a combining form meaning outside, outer, outside of, used in new formation of scientific and technical vocabulary, such as exobiology, exoskeleton, exosphere. Borrowed from Greek éxō outside, related to ex out; see EX-². Also EX-³ before vowels.

exodus n. Old English (about 1000) Exodus, second book of the Old Testament (so named for its account of the departure of the Israelites from Egypt); borrowing of Latin exodus, from Greek éxodos a going out (ex- out + hódos way).

exogenous adj. 1830, borrowed probably from French exogène, and directly from New Latin exogenus (from Greek éxō outside, from ex out of + -génēs born or produced); for suffix see -OUS.

exonerate v. 1448, borrowed from Latin exoneratus, past participle of exonerare remove a burden, discharge (ex- off + onus, genitive oneris burden); for suffix see -ATE¹.

exorbitant adj. 1437, offensive, borrowed from Latin exorbitantem (nominative exorbitans), present participle of exorbitare deviate, go out of the track (ex- out of + orbita wheel track); for suffix see -ANT. The sense of excessive or immoderate, is first recorded in 1440. —exorbitance n. 1449, an offense; formed from exorbitant by replacement with -ance, possibly after Old French exorbitance. The sense of excessiveness, is first recorded in English in 1646.

exorcise or exorcize v. Probably before 1400 exorcizen to involve spirits; borrowed from Old French exorciser, from Late Latin exorcizare, from Greek exorkízein exorcise, bind by oath (ex- out of + horkízein cause to swear, from horkos oath). The sense of driving out evil spirits, is first recorded in English in 1546. —exorcism n. 1395, a calling up or driving out of spirits; borrowed from Late Latin exorcismus, from Greek exorkismós, from exorkízein. —exorcist n. About 1384, borrowed from Late Latin exorcista, from Greek exorkistēs, from exorkízein.

exotic adj. 1599, borrowed probably from Middle French exotique (1548), and directly from Latin exōticus, from Greek exōtikós, from éxō outside, from ex out of; for suffix see -IC. The sense of unusual or strange, is first recorded in English in 1629. —n. About 1645, an exotic plant; from the adjective.

expand v. 1422 expaunden spread out; borrowed through Anglo-French espaundre, Middle French espandre, and borrowed directly from Latin expandere to spread out (ex- out + pandere to spread). The sense of increase in size, enlarge, swell, is first recorded about 1645. —expanse n. 1667, that which is spread out, widely extended area; borrowed from Latin expān- sum, from neuter of expānsus, past participle of expandere. Also, expanse may be a back formation from earlier expansion, and a noun use of earlier expanse, adj. (about 1395). —expansion n. 1611, anything that is spread out, expanse, firmament; borrowed from French expansion, and directly as a learned borrowing from Late Latin, expānsionem (nominative expānsiō) a spreading out, from Latin expandere; for suffix see -SION. The sense of the act of expanding, is first recorded in English in 1646. —expansive adj. 1651, tending to expand; formed in English from Latin expānsus (past participle of expandere expand) + English -ive.

expatiate v. 1538, walk about, roam freely; borrowed from Latin expatiātus, expatiātus, past participles of expatiārī, expatiārī wander, digress (ex- out + spatiārī to walk, spread out, from spatium SPACE); for suffix see -ATE¹. The sense of speak or write at some length, is first recorded in English in 1612.

expatriate v. 1768, apparently borrowed from French expatriier banish (ex- out of + patrie native land, learned borrowing from Latin patria one's native country, from pater, genitive patris, FATHER). —n. 1818, from the adjective. The modern sense of a person who takes up residence in a foreign country, is first recorded in 1902. —expatriation n. 1816, borrowed from French expatriation (expatriier expatriate + -ation -ation).

expect v. 1560, to wait, defer action; borrowed from Latin expectāre, expectāre await, hope (ex- thoroughly + spectāre to look, frequentative form of specere to look at). The sense of anticipate, is first recorded in English 1601. Use as a euphemism for be pregnant, is first recorded in 1817. —expectancy n. 1600, formed in English from Latin expectantem + English suffix -ancy. —expectant adj. Before 1393, borrowed, perhaps from Old French expectant, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin expectantem, expectantem (nominative expectāns, expectāns), present participle of expectāre, expectāre. —expectation n. 1538, borrowed from Middle French expectation, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin expectātiōnem, expectātiōnem (nominative expectātiō, expectātiō) anticipation, from expectāre, expectāre; for suffix see -ATION.

expectorate v. 1601, borrowed from Latin expectorātus, past participle of expectorāre expel from the mind (literally, the breast), scorn (ex- out of + pectus, genitive pectoris breast); for suffix see -ATE¹. —expectoration n. 1672, probably borrowed from French expectoration (from Latin expectorāre + French -tion -tion).

expedient adj. Before 1400, borrowed through Old French expedient, or directly from Latin expedientem (nominative expediēns) beneficial, present participle of expedire make fit or ready, prepare; see EXPEDITE; for suffix see -ENT. —n. 1653, contrivance, resource; from the adjective. —expedience n. Probably 1457, advantage, benefit; borrowed probably through Old French expedience, from Late Latin expedientia, from expedientem (nominative expediēns) beneficial, present participle of expedire. —expediency n. 1612, formed from English expedience + -y³, or from expedient + -cy; modeled on Late Latin expedientia; see EXPEDIENCE.

expedite v. 1602, developed from earlier expedite, adj., speedy or prompt (1545), from expedit, past participle, accomplished or performed (1471); borrowed from Latin expeditus, past participle of expedire make fit or ready, prepare, literally, free the feet from fetters, and hence, free from difficulties, (ex- out + pedis* fetter, related to pēs, genitive pedis FOOT). —expedition n. Probably before 1425 expedition, borrowed through Middle French expédition, and directly from Latin expeditiōnem (nominative expeditiō), from expedire; for suffix see -TION. —expeditious adj. About 1475 expedycius useful or fitting; later, prompt or speedy (1599); probably formed in English from Latin expeditus (past participle of expedire) + English connective -i- + -ous.

expel v. About 1385, borrowed from Latin expellere drive out (ex- out + pellere to drive).

expend v. About 1413, borrowed from Latin expendere pay out (ex- out + pendere to pay, weigh). —expendable adj. 1805, formed from English expend + -able. —expenditure n. 1769, formed in English from Medieval Latin expeditus (irregular past participle of Latin expendere expend) + English -ure. The irregular Medieval Latin past participle was formed on the analogy of Latin vēditus, past participle of vēdere to sell.

expense n. Before 1382, money provided for expenses borrowed through Anglo-French expense, Old French espeuse, learned borrowing from Late Latin expēsa, originally, feminine past participle of Latin expendere EXPEND. The sense of monetary charge or cost is first recorded in English before 1400. —v. 1909, from the noun. —expensive adj. 1628, given to profuse expenditure; formed from English expense + -ive. The sense of costly is first recorded in 1634.

experience n. About 1378, borrowed from Old French experience, learned borrowing from Latin experientia knowledge gained by repeated trials, experience, from experientem (nominative experiens), present participle of experiri to try, test (ex- out of + a lost verb periri* to go through, with surviving past participle peritus experienced, tested); for suffix see -ENCE. —v. 1533, to test, try, from the noun. The sense of feel, suffer, undergo, is first recorded in 1588.

experiment n. Probably 1348, a proof of evidence; also probably before 1350, a test or trial; borrowed from Old French experiment, learned borrowing from Latin experimentum a trial, test, from experiri to try, test; see EXPERIENCE (ultimately from the same Latin verb). —v. 1484, ascertain by trial, from the noun.

expert adj. About 1384, very skillful, about 1385, experienced in, having experience of, borrowed from Old French expert, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin expertus, past participle of experiri to try, test; see EXPERIENCE. —n. Before 1420, person wise through experience, reappearing in the record of English in 1825, from the adjective. —expertise n. 1868, expert skill or knowledge, expertness, borrowed from French expertise expert appraisal, expert's report.

expiate v. 1600, make atonement, atone; borrowed, perhaps through influence of Middle French expier, and directly from Latin expiātus, past participle of expiāre make amends (ex- completely + piāre propitiate, appease, from pīus faithful, loyal, devout); for suffix see -ATE. —expiation n. Probably before 1425 expiation act of expiating or making atonement, borrowed, perhaps through Middle French expiation, or directly from Latin expiationem (nominative expiatio), from expiāre; for suffix see -ATION.

expire v. 1419 expiren terminate, become void, lapse through time, also before 1420, breathe one's last, die, borrowed from Middle French expirer, espirer, from Latin expirāre, expirāre breathe out, breathe one's last, die (ex- out + spirāre breathe). The sense of breathe out, exhale, is first recorded in English in 1590. —expiration n. Probably before 1425, vapor or breath, borrowed from Middle French expiration, from Latin expirātionem, expirātionem (nominative expiratio, expiratio), from expirāre, expirāre; for suffix see -ATION. The sense of termination, end, close, is first recorded in 1562.

explain v. About 1425, make clear; borrowed from Latin explānāre to make plain or clear, explain, literally, make level, flatten (ex- out + plānus flat). —explanation n. Before 1382, borrowed from Latin explānātiōnem (nominative explānatio), from explānāre; for suffix see -ATION. —explanatory adj. 1618; formed from English explanat(ion) + -ory, after the model of Late Latin explānātorius having to do with an explanation, from Latin explānātus, past participle of explānāre.

expletive n. 1612, word or phrase serving to fill out a sentence or metrical line; perhaps developed from conjunctioun expletif correlative sentence adverb (1450); borrowed through Middle French expletif, expletive, and directly from Late Latin expletivus serving to fill out, from Latin explere fill out (ex- out + plere to fill); for suffix see -IVE. The sense of exclamation, often in the form of a profane oath or offensive word, is first recorded in 1815. —adj. 1656–81, serving to fill out, perhaps developed from a shortening of conjunctioun expletif; see noun.

explicate v. 1531, unfold in words, give a detailed account of, borrowed from Latin explicātus, past participle of explicāre unfold, unravel, explain; see EXPLICIT. —explicable adj. 1556, probably formed from English explic(ate) + -able, on the model of Latin explicābilis capable of being unraveled, from explicāre; for suffix see -ABLE. —explication n. 1528, detailed statement or account; borrowed from Middle French explication, learned borrowing from Latin explicātiōnem (nominative explicatio), from explicāre; for suffix see -ATION.

explicit adj. 1609 explicite made clear, expressed distinctly, borrowed from French explicite, from Latin explicitus, variant past participle of explicāre unfold, unravel, explain (ex- out + plāre to fold).

explode v. 1538, to reject or discard; borrowed from Latin explōdere drive out or off by clapping (originally a theatrical word applied to an actor, meaning to drive off the stage by making noise), drive out, reject (ex- out + plaudere to clap, applaud, of uncertain origin). The extended sense of drive out with violence and sudden noise, is first recorded in English in 1660, and the sense of go off with a loud noise, as a bomb does, appeared in American English in 1790.

exploit n. About 1300 espleit outcome of action, literally, something unfolded; borrowed through Anglo-French espleit, Old French exploit an action, deed, profit, achievement, from Latin explicitum a thing settled, ended, displayed, neuter of explicitus, past participle of explicāre unfold; see EXPLICIT. The spelling exploit appeared during the 1400's as an adoption of the French form. The sense of feat or achievement, is first recorded in English about 1400, probably from French. —v. Probably before 1400 espleiten achieve, fulfill, later expleiten accomplish (probably before 1439); borrowed from Anglo-French espleiter, from espleit, n., probably formed after Latin expletum, past participle of explere fulfill, complete. The form exploiten is recorded in 1422 (probably appearing as a parallel to the noun); borrowed from Middle French exploiter, exploiter, from Old French exploit, n. The sense of make unfair use of, is recorded in 1838, as an adoption from French exploiter to make the most of, take advantage of. —exploitation n. 1803, borrowed from French exploitation (exploiter to exploit + -ation -ation).

explore v. 1585, possibly a back formation from exploration (influenced by Middle French explorer) and a learned borrowing from Latin explōrāre investigate, search out, originally said to be a hunters' term meaning to set up a loud cry (ex- out + plōrāre to cry). —exploration n. 1543–44, investigation, examination; borrowed from Middle French exploration, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin explōrātiōnem (nominative explōratio), from explōrāre investigate; for suffix see -ATION. —exploratory adj. Before 1460, borrowed from Latin explōrātorius belonging to scouts, from explōrātor scout; from explōrāre; for suffix see -ORY. —explorer n. 1684–85, formed from English explore + -er¹, and replacing earlier exploratour (about 1450), borrowed from Latin explōrātorem.

explosion n. 1656–81, rejection, borrowed from French explosion, learned borrowing from Latin explōsiōnem (nominative explōsiō), from explōdere drive out by clapping; see EXPLODE; for suffix see -SION. The sense of a going off with violence and noise, is first recorded in 1667. The sense of a rapid increase or development (as in population explosion), is first recorded in 1953. —explosive adj. 1667, tending to explode, probably formed in English from Latin explōsus (past participle of explōdere) + English -ive. —n. 1874, an explosive substance; from the adjective.

exponent n. 1706, algebraic symbol or index; borrowed from Latin exponentem (nominative exponēns), present participle of exponere put forth, EXPOUND. The mathematical use may have been influenced by earlier French exposant (1680). The sense of one who expounds is first recorded in English in 1812. —exponential adj. 1704 (mathematical sense), probably formed from earlier, and then unrecorded English exponent + connective -i- + -al¹.

export v. About 1485 exsporten carry out or away; borrowed from Latin exportāre (ex- away + portāre carry). The sense of send out (commodities) from one country to another is first recorded in English in 1665. —n. 1690, an exported article; from the verb. —exporter n. 1691, formed from English export, v. + -er¹.

expose v. Before 1422 exposen lay open, set forth, make known; borrowed from Middle French exposer, replacement (by confusion with poser to place, lay down, POSE) of Latin expōnere set forth, EXPOUND. —exposition n. About 1390, act of expounding, explanation; borrowed from Old French exposition, learned borrowing from Latin expositiōnem (nominative expositiō) explanation, narration, from exposi-, stem of expōnere set forth; for suffix see -TION. The sense of a public exhibition or display, is recorded in 1851, referring to the Crystal Palace Exposition of London. —expositor n. About 1340, a commentator on the Gospel; borrowed through Old French expositur, from Latin expositōrem, from expōnere; for suffix see -OR². —exposure n. 1605, public exhibition, formed from English expose + -ure, on the analogy of enclose, enclosure, etc.

exposé or expose n. 1803, used as a French word in a diary; past participle of exposer lay open, set forth, from Old French; see EXPOSE.

expostulate v. About 1534, to demand or claim; borrowed from Latin expostulātus, past participle of expostulāre to demand urgently, remonstrate (ex- from + postulāre to demand); for suffix see -ATE¹. The sense of reason or remonstrate in a friendly manner, is first recorded in English in 1574. —expostulation n. 1586, action of expostulating, earnest and kindly protest; borrowed from Latin expostulātiōnem (nominative expostulātiō), from expostulāre expostulate; for suffix see -ATION.

expound v. About 1340 expouden, borrowed from Old French expondre, from Latin expōnere put forth, explain (ex- forth + pōnere to put, place). The usual form in Middle English was expounen, according to the practice of borrowing from the finite part of French verbs rather than the infinitive. In the 1500s expounen became obsolete, owing to the phonetic tendency exhibited in sound for the earlier soun, and the frequent occurrence of expound as past participle.

express v. About 1384 expressen to state, represent, depict, borrowed from Medieval Latin expressare, frequentative form of exprimere to press out, represent, describe, express (ex- out + primere to PRESS¹ push). —adj. About 1380 expres clear, plain, explicit, definite, borrowed through Old French expres, and directly from Latin expressus clearly presented, from past participle of exprimere. The sense of direct, distinct, special, is first recorded probably before 1400. —adv. Probably about 1380 expresse clearly, outright, directly; borrowed from Latin expressē, from expressus clearly presented. —n. 1619, special messenger; from the adjective. The sense of a business or system for sending parcels, money, etc., by special messenger, is first recorded in 1794. —expression n. Probably before 1425, the action of pressing out; later, a putting into words (1449); borrowed from Middle French expression, learned borrowing from Late Latin expressiōnem (nominative expressiō) expression, vividness, from Latin expressiōnem a pressing out, from the stem of exprimere; for suffix see -SION. —expressionism n. 1908, formed from English expression + -ism, perhaps after German Expressionismus. —expressionist n. 1914, from expressionism, on the analogy of impressionism, impressionist. But compare earlier expressionist (1850) an artist whose work aims chiefly at expressing character, action, etc., formed from English expression + -ist. —expressive adj. Before 1400 expressif tending to press out or expel; later expressive serving as evidence (about 1450); borrowed from Middle French expressif, from expres clear, plain; for suffix see -IVE. The sense of expressing feeling, especially in an emphatic manner is first recorded in 1601. —expressly adv. Before 1393, directly, outright; 1395, specifically; formed parallel with expresse, adv., from the verb expressen.

expropriate v. 1611, probably a back formation from earlier English expropriation, influenced by Medieval Latin expropriatus, past participle of expropriare to deprive of property (Latin ex- away from + propriare to appropriate); for suffix see -ATE¹. Also, expropriate may have developed in English from earlier expropriat, adj. (about 1449); borrowed from Medieval Latin expropriatus. —expropriation n. About 1443 expropriacioun renunciation of worldly goods; borrowed from Medieval Latin expropriationem (nominative expropriatio), from expropriare; for suffix see -ATION. The meaning of action of depriving a person of property, is first recorded in 1848.

expulsion n. Before 1400 expulcioun; borrowed through Old French expulsion from Latin expulsiōnem (nominative expulsiō), from expul-, stem of expellere drive out, EXPEL; for suffix see -SION.

expunge v. 1602, borrowed from Latin expungere mark (a name on a list) for deletion by placing dots above or below, literally, by pricking, prick out (ex- out + pungere to prick, stab).

expurgate v. 1621, to purge or clear out; partly a back formation from English expurgation, and partly borrowed, by influence of earlier English expurge, from Latin expurgātus, past participle of expurgare cleanse out, purify (ex- out + purgare to PURGE); for suffix see -ATE¹. The specific sense of remove objectionable passages from a literary work, is first recorded in English in 1678. Expurgate replaced expurge (1483), borrowed from Middle French expurger, learned borrowing from Latin expurgare. —expurgation n. Probably 1440, a purging or clearing out; borrowed from Latin expurgātiōnem (nominative expurgātiō), from expurgare; for suffix see -ATION. The sense of removal of objectionable passages from a literary work, is first recorded in 1614.

exquisite adj. Probably before 1425, careful, searching; borrowed from Latin exquisitus carefully sought out, choice, from past participle of exquirere search out (ex- out + quaerere seek, procure, gain). The sense of highest degree of excellence, is first recorded in 1530.

extant adj. 1545, standing out, projecting; borrowed from Latin extantem, exstantem, present participles of extāre, exstāre stand out, be visible, exist (ex- out, forth + stāre to STAND). The sense of in existence, existing, appeared in English in 1561.

extemporaneous adj. 1656–81, borrowed from French extemporané, or directly from Late Latin extemporāneus, from Latin ex tempore offhand, in accordance with (the needs of) the moment (ex out of, and tempore, ablative case of tempus, genitive temporis time); for suffix see -OUS. —extempore adv. Before 1553, borrowed from Latin ex tempore. —adj. Before 1637, probably from the adverb in English, by influence of extend v. Before 1338 extenden to value or assess, calculate the extent of for taxation; later, to stretch out, lengthen (1387); borrowed, by influence of Old French estendre, from Latin extendere stretch out (ex- out + tendere to stretch). —extension n. Before 1400 extencioun distention, swelling, borrowed through Old French extension, and directly from Latin extēnsiōnem (nominative extēnsiō), from extendere, for suffix see -SION. —extensive adj. Probably before 1425, characterized by swelling or distention; later, far-reaching, comprehensive (1605); both meanings are probably separate borrowings from Late Latin extēnsivus, from Latin extendere; for suffix see -IVE. —extent n. About 1303 extente tax on land; borrowed through Anglo-French extente, estente valuation of land, stretch of land, in Old French extente extension, from feminine past participle of extendere, estendre extend, from Latin extendere extend. The meaning of amount or degree to which a thing extends, is first recorded in 1594.

Latin ex tempore. —extemporize v. 1644 (implied in extemporizing), formed from English extempore, adv. + -ize.

extenuate v. 1529, make light of, lessen, underrate, developed from past participle and adjective extenuat made thin, diminished, lessened (probably before 1425); borrowed from Latin extenuātus, past participle of extenuāre lessen (ex- out + tenuāre make thin); for suffix see *-ATE*¹. The phrase extenuating circumstances, is first recorded in 1840. —extenuation n. Probably about 1425 extenuacioun action of making thin or the process of emaciation; later, weakening or mitigation (1542–43); borrowed from Middle French exténuation, and directly from Latin extenuātiōnem (nominative extenuātiō), from extenuāre; for suffix see -ATION.

exterior adj. 1528 exteriour; borrowed through Middle French extérieur, and directly from Latin exterior, comparative form of exter, exterus outward, outside, from ex out of, see EX-; for suffix see *-OR*¹. —n. 1591, from the adjective.

exterminate v. 1541, drive away; borrowed from Latin exterminātus, past participle of extermināre drive out, expel, also in Late Latin, destroy, from the phrase ex termine beyond the boundary (ex out of, and terminē, ablative case of terminē boundary, end, limit); for suffix see *-ATE*¹. In some instances exterminate may be a back formation from earlier exterminacioun, extermination. The form exterminate replaced exterminen (recorded 1459); borrowed from Middle French exterminer, learned borrowing from Latin extermināre. The sense of destroy utterly, is first recorded in English in 1649. —extermination n. 1459 exterminacioun expulsion; later, utter destruction (1549); borrowed from Middle French extermination, and directly as a learned borrowing from Late Latin exterminātiōnem (nominative exterminātiō), from Latin extermināre; for suffix see -ATION. —exterminator n. Before 1400 extermynatour, borrowed through Old French exterminateur, and directly as a learned borrowing from Late Latin exterminātor destroyer, from Latin extermināre; for suffix see *-OR*².

external adj. Probably before 1425 externalle overt, later external outward, outer (1556); formed in English from Middle extinct adj. Probably before 1425 extincte extinguished, quenched, borrowed from Latin extinctus, extinctus, past participles of extinguere, extinguere EXTINGUISH. The sense referring to a family line, species of animal, or title of nobility, is recorded in 1581. —extinction n. Probably before 1425 extincion an extinguishing or quenching; borrowed from Latin extinctiōnem, extinctiōnem (nominative extinctiō, extinctiō), from extinguere, extinguere extinguish; for suffix see -TION. The sense of coming to an end or fact of dying out, is first recorded before 1470.

French externe, and from Latin externus outside + English *-al*¹. Latin externus is from exter, exterus outward; see EXTERIOR. Middle English externalle was parallel in meaning with external (probably before 1425), which was borrowed from Old French external, from Latin externus, but external became obsolete in English after 1550. —n.pl. 1635, from the adjective.

extinguish v. Probably before 1503, borrowed from Latin extinguere, extinguere quench, wipe out, obliterate (ex- out + stinguere quench); for suffix see *-ISH*². —extinguisher n. 1560, formed from English extinguish + *-er*¹.

extirpate v. 1539, perhaps developed from earlier, but then unrecorded extirpate, past participle (1541); borrowed from Latin extirpātus, extirpātus, past participles of extirpare, extirpare root out (ex- out + stirps, genitive stirpis a root or stock of a tree); for suffix see *-ATE*¹. Also, extirpate may be a back formation from earlier extirpation. Extirpate replaced extirpen (recorded probably before 1425); borrowed, through Middle French extirper, from Latin extirpare, extirpare. —extirpation n. Probably before 1425 extirpacioun removal; later, a rooting out, eradication (1526); borrowed through Middle French extirpation, and directly from Latin extirpātiōnem, extirpātiōnem (nominative extirpātiō, extirpātiō) from extirpare, extirpare; for suffix see -ATION.

extol or extoll v. Before 1400 extollen lift up, elevate, exalt; borrowed from Latin extollere (ex- up + tollere to raise). The extended sense of praise highly, is first recorded probably before 1425.

extort v. 1529, developed, from earlier extort, adj., acquired wrongfully or by force (before 1420); borrowed from Latin extortus, past participle of extorquere wrench out, wrest away, extort (ex- out + torquere to twist). In some instances extort is also a back formation from earlier extortion. —extortion n. Before 1325 extorsium act of extorting; later extorcion (about 1390); borrowed from Old French extorsion, and directly as a learned borrowing from Medieval Latin extortionem, extorsionem (nominative extortio, extorsio) an extortion, from Late Latin extortiōnem torture, from Latin extorquere wrench out; for suffix see -TION. —extortionate adj. 1789, formed from English extortion + *-ate*¹. —extortionist n. 1885, formed from English extortion + -ist; replacing earlier extorter (1591), extortor (1579), extortioner (about 1375).

extra adj. 1654, outside, without, external; borrowing of Latin extrā, adv. and prep., beyond, outside of; later (1776) by shortening of EXTRAORDINARY, used in the 1600's as an adjective, adverb, and noun having the sense of beyond what was ordinary or normal. —adv. 1823, beyond the ordinary degree, unusually; from the adjective. —n. 1777–78, person engaged for a minor part in a play, shortening of extraordinary, n. (1671), someone outside the regular or ordinary staff.

extra- a prefix meaning outside, beyond, as in extraordinary, extraterrestrial. Borrowed from Latin extrā, adv. and prep., beyond, outside of, old feminine ablative case of exter, exterus outward, outside, from ex out of; see EX-¹.

As a prefix extra- is recorded in classical Latin only in the word extraordinarius extraordinary; in Late Latin it is recorded in three or four words; but in Medieval Latin it is more common, though most words that occur in English with this prefix are modern formations.

extract v. Probably before 1425 extracten draw or pull out; borrowed from Latin extractus, past participle of extrahere draw out (ex- out + trahere to draw). —n. About 1443, summary, outline; borrowed from Latin extractum, neuter past participle (or from extracta, feminine past participle) of extrahere to extract. —extraction n. Probably before 1425 extraccioun the action of pulling out or process of withdrawal; later, origin, lineage, descent (about 1477); borrowed from Middle French extraction, learned borrowing from Late Latin extractionem (nominative extractiō), from the stem of Latin extrahere; for suffix see -TION.

extradition n. 1839, borrowed from French extradition, from Latin ex- out + trāditiō (genitive trāditiōnis) a delivering up, handing over, from trādere to hand over. —extradite v. 1864, back formation from English extradition.

extraneous adj. 1638, of external origin; borrowed from Latin extrāneus, from extrā outside of; for suffix see -OUS.

extraordinary adj. 1431 extraordinaire out of the ordinary, borrowed from Latin extraordinarius, from extrā ordinem out of order, especially the usual order (extrā out, and ordō, ordinem ORDER); for suffix see -ARY. The sense of outside of or additional to gave rise to such uses as ambassador extraordinary (the position of the adjective being influenced by French). Extraordinary served also as a noun and as an adverb in such examples as extraordinaries that occur (n.), and extraordinary fine (adv.), but in the 1800's these functions passed to extra. —extraordinarily adv. 1564, formed from English extraordinary + -ly¹.

extrapolation n. 1872, formed from English extra + (inter)polation insertion of intermediate terms in a mathematical series. —extrapolate v. 1874, formed from English extra + (inter)polate, or a back formation from extrapolation.

extravagant adj. Before 1387, referring to an added part of a papal decree, later, extraordinary or unusual (probably before 1425); borrowed through Anglo-French extravagaunt, from Middle French extravagant, and directly from Medieval Latin extravagantem, present participle of extravagari wander outside or beyond (Latin extrā outside of + vagari wander, roam); for suffix see -ANT. The extended meaning of excessive or extreme, is first recorded in 1599, and that of spending lavishly or carelessly, wasteful, in 1711. —extravagance n. 1643, a going out of the usual path, digression, probably a back formation of earlier extravagancy (1601), influenced by French extravagance, from extravagant; for suffix see -ANCE. The sense of a going beyond the bounds of reason, is first recorded in 1650, and that of excessive wastefulness, in 1727. —extravaganza n. 1754, extravagance of behavior or language; borrowed from Italian estravaganza peculiar behavior (literally, extravagance), from estravagante extravagant, from Medieval Latin extravagantem EXTRAVAGANT. The sense of a fantastic literary, musical, or dramatic work, is first recorded in 1794.

extreme adj. Probably before 1425, very severe, utter, farthest, borrowed through Middle French extreme, learned borrowing from Latin extrēmus outermost, utmost, superlative form of exter, exterus outward, outside, from ex out of; see EX-¹. —n. 1546, the end, utmost point; from the adjective.

—extremity n. Before 1375 extremities, pl., things as far or as distant as possible from each other; borrowed from Old French extremité, learned borrowing from Latin extrēmītatē (nominative extrēmītās) extremity or end, from extrēmus; for suffix see -ITY. The plural form meaning the hands and feet, is first recorded before 1422.

extricate v. 1614, clear up or unravel; borrowed from Latin extricātus, past participle of extricāre disentangle (ex- out of + trīcae, pl., perplexities, hindrances); for suffix see -ATE¹. The sense of free from difficulties, or embarrassment, is first recorded in 1631. —extrication n. 1650, formed from English extricate + -ion, modeled on Late Latin extricātiōnem (nominative extricātiō) a disentangling, from Latin extricāre.

extrinsic adj. 1541, exterior; borrowed from French extrin-sèque, from Late Latin extrīnsecus, adj., outer, from Latin extrīnsecus, adv., without, on the outside, outwardly, (formed from Old Latin extrim* from outside, an adverb to Latin exterus outside, + Latin secus alongside). The English ending -ic came from confusion between it and the French ending -que in -sèque, representing Latin -secus, secus beside. The sense of not essential is first recorded in 1622.

extrovert n. 1918, alteration of earlier extravert (1916); borrowed from German Extravert, from extra- outside + Latin vertere to turn. Compare INTROVERT.

The terms extrovert and extravert have been in the language of English science and technology since the latter part of the 1600's. The psychologist Carl Jung's coinage in German stimulated use of the term extroversion, which was already known among doctors in the field of pathology by 1836, extravert and extraversion, having been confined to the field of chemistry. —extroversion n. 1920, alteration of extraversion (1915); borrowed from German Extraversion, from extra- outside + -version a turning, from Medieval Latin versionem; see VERSION. The term also appeared in 1656–81 with reference to mysticism. —extroverted adj. 1923, alteration of extraverted (1916), formed after the earlier English verb, as a part translation of German extravertiert, from extra- outside + -vertiert turned, from Latin vertere to turn.

extrude v. 1566, borrowed from Latin extrūdere (ex- out + trūdere to thrust, push). —extrusion n. 1540, expulsion; borrowed from Medieval Latin extrusionem (nominative extrusio), from Latin extrudere; for suffix see -SION. The sense of a pushing out, is first recorded in 1638.

exuberant adj. 1459, luxuriantly fertile, overabundant; later, abounding in health and spirits, overflowing with delight (1503); borrowed, from Middle French exuberant, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin exuberantem (nominative exuberans) overabundance, present participle of exuberare be abundant, grow luxuriantly (ex- thoroughly + uberare be fruitful); for suffix see -ANT. —exuberance n. 1638, overflowing amount; a shortened form of earlier exuberancy (1611), perhaps modeled on French exubérance, from Latin exuberantia, from exuberantem (nominative exuberans), present participle of exuberare; for suffix see -ANCE.

exude v. 1574, borrowed from Latin exūdāre, exsūdāre ooze out like sweat (ex- out + sūdāre to sweat).

exult v. 1570, leap for joy; borrowed from Middle French exulter, from Latin exultāre, exsultāre, frequentative forms of exsilire leap out or up (ex- forth + salire to leap). The sense of rejoice greatly is first recorded in English in 1594. —exultation n. Before 1400, in exultation of the cross; borrowed, through Middle French exultation, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin exultationem, exsultationem (nominative exultatiō, exsultatiō), from exultāre, exsultāre exult; for suffix see -ATION.

—ey a variant form of the suffix -y¹, forming adjectives meaning full of, containing, like, as in clayey, goosey.

eye n. About 1200 eie; earlier ehe (probably before 1200); developed from Old English ēge (Mercian dialect about 700), and from later ēage (West Saxon before 800). The forms in Old English are cognate with Old Frisian āge eye, Old Saxon ōga, Middle Dutch ōghe (modern Dutch oog), Old High German ouga (modern German Auge), Old Icelandic auga, and Gothic augō, from Proto-Germanic auzōn*, earlier auzuōn*. The au diphthong is not altogether accounted for but is partly due to influence from Proto-Germanic auzōn-ear* (Gothic ausō). —v. Before 1425 eyen cause to see, make visible; later, look at or upon, behold, observe (1566); from the noun. —eyeball n. (1590) —eyebrow n. About 1410 (not to be confused with Old English ēagbræw eyelid). —eyelash n. (1752) —eyelet n. (1382) —eyelid n. (before 1325) —eyesight n. (probably before 1200) eyrie n. See AERIE.

F

fa n. Before 1300; borrowing of Medieval Latin fa, from the initial syllable of Latin famuli servants, the word sung to this note in the Hymn for St. John the Baptist's day.

fable n. Probably before 1300, a falsehood, lie, pretense; later, a fictitious or imaginative story (before 1325); borrowing of Old French fable, from Latin fābula discourse, story, play, fable, from fārī speak, tell. Before 1400 fablen tell fables; borrowed from Old French fabler, from Latin fābulārī to talk, from fābula.

fabric n. 1483, something constructed; borrowed from Middle French fabrique, learned borrowing from Latin fabrica workshop. The sense of manufactured material, is first recorded in English in 1753, and that of a textile fabric, in 1791. —fabricate v. About 1450 fabricaten to fashion, make, build; borrowed from Latin fabricātus, past participle of fabricāre to fashion, build, from fabrica; for suffix see -ATE¹. The extended sense of make up (a story), is first recorded in 1779. —fabrication n. Before 1500, construction; borrowed, perhaps through Middle French fabrication, and directly from Latin fabricationem (nominative fabricatiō), from fabricāre; for suffix see -ATION.

fabulous adj. Probably before 1425, mythical, legendary; borrowed, probably through Middle French fabuleux, learned borrowing from Latin, and directly as a fābulōsus celebrated in fable, from fābula fable; see FABLE; for suffix see -OUS. The sense of incredible, is first recorded in English in 1609.

façade or facade n. 1656–81, front part of a building; borrowing of French façade, from Italian facciata, from faccia face, from Vulgar Latin facia*; see FACE.

face n. Probably before 1300 fas; borrowed from Old French face, from Vulgar Latin facia*, corresponding to Latin faciēs form, figure, face, and related to facere make. —v. Probably before 1400 facen to disfigure; later, show a bold face, boast (1440); from the noun. The sense of confront is first recorded in 1465. —facial adj. 1609, face to face; borrowed from French facial, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin facialis of the face, from Latin faciēs face; for suffix see -AL¹. The sense "of the face" is first recorded in 1818. —n. treatment or massage of the face. 1914, American English; from the adjective. —facing n. Probably before 1400, disfiguring; later, defiance (1523), and material used in a garment (1566) or as a coating on some structure (1586).

facet n. 1625, borrowed from French facette, from Old French, a diminutive form of face FACE. The figurative sense of any one of several sides or views, is first recorded in 1820.

facetious adj. 1592, polished, urbane; later, given to joking, humorous (1599); borrowed from French facétieux, from facétie a joke, from Latin facētia, from facētus witty, elegant; for suffix see -OUS.

facile adj. 1483, borrowed from Middle French facile easy, learned borrowing from Latin facilis easy, easy to do, (of persons) pliant, courteous, from facere to DO¹ —facilitate v. 1611, borrowed from French faciliter make easy, from Italian facilitare, from facilità facility, from Latin facilitātem; see FACILITY; for suffix see -ATE¹. —facility n. Probably before 1425 facilitate gentleness; later, opportunity (1519) and aptitude, ease (1532); borrowed from Middle French facilité, from Latin facilitātem (nominative facilitās), from facilis easy; for suffix see -ITY. The sense of a place for doing something (as an educational or health facility) appeared in 1872.

facsimile n. 1662 fac simile, borrowing of Latin fac simile make similar (fac, imperative of facere make and simile, neuter of similis like, SIMILAR).

fact n. 1539, action or deed, especially an evil deed; borrowed from Latin factum event, occurrence (literally, thing done), from neuter past participle of facere to DO¹. The general sense of thing known to be true or to have really happened, is first recorded in English in 1632. —factual adj. Before 1834, derived from fact, on the analogy of actual.

faction n. 1509, a party or group formed to promote its own interests; borrowed through Middle French faction, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin factiōnem (nominative factiō) political party, class of persons (literally, a making or doing), from facere to DO¹; for suffix see -TION. —factional adj. 1650, formed from English faction + *al*¹. —factionalism n. 1904, formed in American English from factional + -ism. —factious adj. 1532, inclined to form parties, seditious, borrowed through Middle French factieux, and directly from Latin factiōsus, from factiōnem (nominative factiō) faction; for suffix see -OUS.

factitious adj. 1646, borrowed from Latin facticius artificial, from factus, past participle of facere DO¹; for suffix see -OUS.

factor n. 1432 factour agent or representative; borrowed through Middle French facteur, from Latin factor doer or maker, from facere to DO¹; for suffix see -OR². The sense of fact or circumstances producing a result, is first recorded 1816. —v. 1611, act as an agent; from the noun. The sense of express a mathematical quantity as a product of two or more numbers, is first recorded in 1848.

factory n. 1560, estate manager's office or position; later, trading post (1582); borrowed through Middle French factorie, from Late Latin factōrium oil press or mill, from Latin factor doer, maker; see FACTOR; for suffix see -Y³. The sense of a building for manufactured goods, is first recorded in 1618.

faculty n. 1 capability, power to do something. About 1380 faculte power, ability, resources; borrowed from Old French faculté, and directly from Latin facultātem (nominative facultās) power, ability, wealth, from earlier facili-tāt-s*, from facilis FACILE; for suffix see -TY². 2 members of a profession; teaching staff. About 1450; earlier, branch of knowledge (about 1380); borrowed from Medieval Latin facultatem (nominative facultas) branch of learning a translation of Greek dýnamis power, (used by Aristotle).

fad n. 1834, hobby, pet project; later, fashion, craze (1881); origin unknown; perhaps abstracted from fidfad (1830), a shortening of fiddle-faddle.

fade v. Probably before 1325 faden to lose brightness, grow pale; borrowed from Old French fader, from fade pale, weak, insipid, of uncertain origin; probably from Vulgar Latin fatidus* (a possible blend of Latin fatuus silly, tasteless, and rapidus flat, flavorless).

fagot n. 1279 implied in earlier fagotter one who makes fagots of firewood (1279); borrowed from Old French fagot, from Old Provençal fagot, of uncertain origin; perhaps from Vulgar Latin facus*, back formation from Greek phákelos bundle, with suffix mistaken for the Latin diminutive -ellus.

Fahrenheit adj. 1753, in allusion to G.D. Fahrenheit, who proposed this scale in 1714. Compare CELSIUS.

fail v. Probably before 1200 failen cease to exist or function, be unsuccessful, end, borrowed from Old French faillir be lacking, miss, not succeed, from Vulgar Latin fallire*, corresponding to Latin fallere deceive, be lacking or defective. —n. without fail. About 1275; borrowed from Old French faillie, n., from the Old French verb. —failure n. 1660 failure, formed from English fail + -ure, replacing earlier failer (1643), an Anglicized French word, from Old French faillir fail.

fain adj. Probably before 1200 fein willing, glad; developed from Old English fægen, fagen glad, cheerful, happy (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon fagin, fagan glad, Old Icelandic feginn glad, Old High German and Gothic faginōn rejoice. —adv. Probably before 1200 fein; from the adjective.

faint adj. Probably before 1300 feinte cowardly, feigned, spiritless borrowed from Old French faint or feint cowardly, feigned, sluggish, past participles of faindre or feindre avoid one's duty by pretending, FEIGN. The sense of weak or feeble, is first recorded probably about 1300. —v. Probably before 1300 feyn-ten grow weak; from the adjective. The meaning of fall into a swoon, is first recorded before 1400. —faint-hearted adj. (1440).

fair¹ adj. Probably before 1200 feier, fair pleasing to the eye, beautiful; developed from Old English fæger beautiful, pleasant (before 900); cognate with Old Saxon and Old High German fagar beautiful, Old Icelandic fagr beautiful, and Gothic fagrs fitting, from Proto-Germanic fazrās*. Related to FAIN and FAWN² to cringe.

The sense "of a light complexion" is recorded before 1175 and probably used in Old English. Another early meaning was that of free from moral stain, unblemished (about 1175), from which evolved the sense of free from bias (about 1340) and the phrase fair play, first recorded in 1595. —adv. Old English (before 1000) fægre, from fæger, adj.

fair² n. About 1250 feire; gathering to buy and sell and to exhibit animals, articles of produce, etc. borrowed from Old French feire, from Vulgar Latin fēria* holiday, market fair, corresponding to Latin fēriae (religious festival, holiday; see FEAST).

fairy n. Probably before 1300 fayrre enchantment, an illusion; later, supernatural being (before 1393); borrowed from Old French faerie land of fairies, meeting of fairies, from fae FAY. The phrase fairy tale (1749), is a loan translation of French Conte de fées tale of fairies.

faith n. About 1250 feith loyalty, fealty, allegiance; borrowed from Old French feit, feid (while still pronounced fāth, fāʔH), from Latin fidēs trust, belief; related to fidere to trust.

The various senses of faith came into Middle English from Old French within a relatively short period of time: belief and trust were already present in Latin fidēs as well as in its Greek cognate, pístis, which was rendered in the Vulgate or New Testament as fidēs. —faithful adj. (before 1325) fake adj. 1775, of unknown origin. —n. 1851, a dodge, trick, false report; possibly from the adjective. The sense of a pretender is first recorded in 1888. —v. 1851, to deceive, falsify; possibly from the adjective. —faker n. (1885) —fakery n. (1887)

As a noun and verb fake went unrecorded, until the 1850's, when it was first recorded among Londoners, in factories and small businesses in trade, though the adjective is recorded 75 years earlier. The verb, fake to rob, wound, tamper is recorded in 1812, but this seems to be a different word judging by its meaning.

fakir n. 1609, Muslim holy man who lives by begging; borrowed from Arabic faqīr a poor man, from fakr, faqr poverty. In the 1800's fakir was applied to Hindu ascetics who showed their transcendence of physical pain. Also in the 1800's, in the U.S., the word was confused with faker petty swindler.

falcon n. About 1250 faucon, borrowed from Old French faucon, faucon, faucon, from Late Latin falcōnem (nominative falcō), probably from Latin falcx (genitive falcis) sickle; so called from the resemblance of the falcon's hooked claws to a sickle. The conjecture that Late Latin falcōnem was a borrowing from a Germanic word is difficult to sustain culturally, especially since falconry, by all historical records, seems to have originated in the East and reached the Germanic tribes through Latin or Romance-speaking peoples. —falconer n. 1194, in the surname Falkenar; borrowed from Old French fauconnier and fauconnier, from faucon, faucon; for suffix see -ER¹. —falconry n. 1575, alteration (influenced by earlier falcon, 1400's) of Middle French fauconnerie, from Old French faucon falcon; for suffix see -ERY.

fall v. Probably before 1200 fallen, developed from Old English feallan (before 900); cognate with Old Frisian falla to fall, Old Saxon fallan (modern Dutch vallen), Old High German fallan (modern German fallen), and Old Icelandic falla (from Proto-Germanic fallanan*). See FELL¹. —n. Probably before 1200, a falling; from the verb. The sense of autumn, is first recorded in 1664, as a shortening of fall of the leaf (1545). —falling-out n. (1568) —fallout n. 1950, radioactive particles.

fallacy n. 1481, deception, trickery; replacement, by influence of Latin fallācia, of earlier fallace (about 1303); borrowed from Old French fallace, learned borrowing from Latin fallācia deception, from fallāx (genitive fallācis) deceptive, from fallere deceive; for suffix see -ACY. —fallacious adj. 1509, borrowed by influence of Middle French fallacieux, from Latin fallāciōsus deceitful, deceptive, from fallācia deception; for suffix see -OUS.

fallible adj. About 1412, unreliable; later, liable to be deceived or mistaken (before 1420); borrowed from Medieval Latin fallibilis liable to err, deceitful, that can be deceived, from Latin fallere deceive.

Fallopian tubes 1706, from Fallopian, Latinized name of Gabriello Fallopio, Italian anatomist who first described them; for suffix see -AN.

fallow¹ n. plowed land. Probably before 1300 falen; later falwe (about 1300), and falow (1440); developed from Old English fealg, fealh arable land; The Old English forms are cognate with East Frisian falge fallow, falgen to plow, Middle High German falgen plow up (modern German Felge plowed-up fallow land), Proto-Germanic falsō*. —adj. uncultivated. 1377 falwe; from the noun.

fallow² adj. pale yellowish-brown. Probably before 1200 falwe fallow, faded, yellowish-brown; developed from Old English fealu (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon falū pale, faded, fallow, Middle Dutch vale (modern Dutch vaal), Old High German falo (modern German fahl), and Old Icelandic fplr, from Proto-Germanic falwaz*.

false adj. Probably before 1200 false, fals; developed in part from Old English (about 1000) fals counterfeit, not genuine, and reinforced by re-borrowing in Middle English from Old French fals, faus, from Latin falsus, past participle of fallere deceive, disappoint. Old English fals was apparently a rare form also borrowed from Latin falsus, from fallere. The continental Germanic languages borrowed the word in an altered form, as found in Middle High German valsch (modern German falsch), Old Frisian falsch, Middle Dutch valse (modern Dutch vals), Icelandic falskur, Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish falsk. —falsehood n. About 1300 falshede, formed from Middle English fals false + -hede, variant of -hode -hood. —falsify v. About 1449 falsifien; borrowed from Middle French falsifier, learned borrowing from Late Latin falsificāre falsify, from Latin falsificus making false, from falsus false; for suffix see -FY; falsify replaced earlier Middle English falsen, v., recorded probably before 1200.

falter v. About 1390 faltren to stumble, stagger, tremble; borrowed perhaps from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic faltrask be burdened, hesitate, be troubled); for suffix see -ER⁴. Alternatively, falter may have originated as a frequentative form of Middle English falden (fold up, give way, fail), formed irregularly by influence of verbs like totter, welter, etc.

fame n. Probably before 1200, character (usually good) attributed to a person; later, reputation, renown, fame; borrowed from Old French fame, from Latin fāma talk, rumor, report, reputation. —famous adj. About 1380; borrowed from Anglo-French famous, Old French fameus, learned borrowing from Latin fāmōsus, from fāma FAME; for suffix see -OUS.

family n. Probably before 1425 famīlye household; borrowed from Latin familia, household (including relatives and servants), from famulus servant; for suffixal form see -Y³. —familiar adj. About 1380 famylīer; borrowed from Old French famīlier, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin familiāris domestic, from familia family; for suffix see -AR. —familial adj. 1900, borrowed from French familial, from Latin familia; see FAMILY; for suffix see -AL¹. —familiarity n. Probably before 1200 famīlīarīte; borrowed probably from Old French famīlīarīte, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin familiāritatem (nominative familiāritās) intimacy, friendship, from familiāris, see FAMILIAR; for suffix see -ITY. —familiarize v. 1608, formed from English familiar + -ize.

famine n. Before 1376 famyn extreme and general scarcity of food; borrowed from Old French famine hunger, from Gallo-Romance famina*, from Latin famēs hunger, of unknown origin.

famish v. Probably before 1400 famyschen to starve; alteration of earlier famen to starve (before 1338); borrowed as a shortened form of Old French afamer, and borrowed directly from Latin famēs hunger; for suffix see -ISH². The shift in form of Middle English famen to later famish was influenced by other verbs ending in -ish, such as ravish, admonish, anguish.

fan¹ n. device to make an air current. Before 1325 fanne device for winnowing grain; developed from Old English (West Saxon) fann a kind of basket or shovel for winnowing grain by throwing it in the air; earlier fon (before 800); borrowed from Latin vannus, from pre-Latin vatnos*, related to Latin ventus WIND. The sense of a device for agitating the air is first recorded about 1390. —v. Before 1325 fannen to winnow (grain); developed from Old English (about 1000) fannian to winnow (grain); from the noun. The sense of stir up a current of air is first recorded before 1425.

fan² n. devotee. 1889, American English, generally considered to be a revival of obsolete fan (1682), itself a shortening of FANATIC. Alternatively, the word may derive from or be influenced by the fancy (1735), a collective noun meaning all who “fancy” a certain hobby or pastime, originally applied to pigeon fanciers and later (1807) to boxing fans.

fanatic n. About 1525, a mad person; borrowed from Latin fānaticus mad, frantic, enthusiastic, inspired by divinity (originally pertaining to a temple), from fānum temple, related to fēstus festive; see FEAST. —adj. 1533, frantic, furious, mad; borrowed from Latin fānaticus. The current sense of extremely zealous, especially in religious matters, is first recorded in 1647. —fanatical adj. 1550, formed from English fanatic + -al¹. —fanaticism n. 1652, formed from English fanatic + -ism.

fancy n. 1462–65 fantsy, fansey; formed by contraction of FANTASY. Fancy and fantasy gradually differentiated in form and sense with fancy taking on the meaning of inclination, liking, desire, often whimsical, which became obsolete in fantasy in the 1600's. Both words, however, retained the sense of imagination, as in poetic fancy or fantasy, a mere fancy or fantasy. —v. About 1380 fancyen take a liking or fancy to; formed by contraction of fantasien, v., to fantasy or FANTASIZE. The form was revived by 1545; from the noun. —adj. Before 1751, fine, ornamental; from the noun. —fancy-free adj. (1590) —fanciful adj. Before 1627, formed from English fancy, n. + -ful.

fanfare n. 1769, military flourish on trumpets, bugles, etc.; borrowed from French fanfare, from fanfarer blow a fanfare, apparently of the same origin as Spanish fanfarrón braggart, Italian fānfano babbler, from Arabic farfār chatterer, and the parallel term in English fanfaron (1622, a braggart), borrowed through French fanfaron.

fang n. Before 1325 fang prey or booty, found in Old English fang a seizing or taking; also, probably before 1200 feng booty, what is captured or caught, found in Old English feng a grasping, prey or booty; both Old English forms derived from fon, v., seize, take, catch (later fongen, fengen in Middle English, probably about 1225). Cognates formed by similar development appear in Old Frisian fang, feng a catch (fā, fān to take, catch); Old High German, Middle High German fang (modern German fangen), Old High German fāhan, Middle High German vāhen, van (modern German fāhen, fängen), Dutch vang, Icelandic fang (fā), Gothic fāhan. Fang in the sense of tooth or tusk, is not found so far in Middle English, nor is it in Old English, except in the Old English compound fæng-tōth fang-tooth (literally catching or grasping tooth), but this Old English compound probably influenced the semantic development of the sense of tooth in modern English though the record is incomplete.

fantasize v. 1926, formed from English fantasy + -ize; see FANTASY and FANCY.

fantastic adj. About 1385 fantastik of or pertaining to the faculty of fantasy or imagination; also, before 1387, imaginary or unreal; borrowed from Old French fantastique, learned borrowing from Late Latin phantasticus imaginary, from Greek phantastikós able to imagine, from phantázein make visible (middle voice phantázesthai picture to oneself); see FANTASY.

fantasy n. About 1350 fantasie use of the imagination; later, apparition or phantom (probably before 1375); borrowed from Old French fantasie, learned borrowing from Latin phantasia, from Greek phantasiā appearance, image, perception, imagination, from phantázesthai picture to oneself, from phantós visible, from phainesthai appear (middle voice to phainein to show, related to pháos, phós light). The meaning of whimsical or visionary notion, illusion, appeared before 1400, followed by the sense of imagination, especially extravagant or visionary imagination, in 1539. See also FANCY. —v. About 1430 fantasien to fancy, imagine; borrowed from the Old French fantasier, from fantasie fantasy.

far adv., adj. Probably about 1200 ferr; later farr (before 1325); developed from Old English (about 725) feorr to a great distance; cognate with Old Frisian fēr far, Old Saxon ferr, Old High German ferro (modern German fern), Middle Dutch verre (modern Dutch ver), Old Icelandic fjarri, and Gothic faírra farther (originally a comparative formation, Proto-Germanic ferō*, earlier fer-s-ō*). See FARTHER, FARTHEST. —faraway adj. (before 1250) —far-fetched adj. Before 1562, replacing earlier far-fet forced or strained (about 1400), also with the sense of brought from afar (before 1349).

farce n. 1530; borrowed from Middle French farce comic interlude in a mystery play, literally, stuffing, from Old French farcir to stuff, interlard, from Latin farciō to stuff, related to frequēns crowded. —farical adj. 1716, formed from English farce + -ical.

fare¹ n. food provided. 1120 fare journey, developed in Middle English from a blend of Old English fær journey, road (strong neuter form of faran) and faru journey, expedition, companions, baggage (strong feminine form of faran). Both forms are recorded in Old English about 1000 and are derived from earlier faran to journey; see FARE². Old English fær and faru are cognate with Old Frisian ferē journey, Middle Low German vare, Middle High German var, and Old Icelandic for journey or travel and far trail or passage.

The meaning of food provided or eaten, is first recorded probably before 1200, and that of the cost of conveyance, in Scottish about 1425.

fare² v. to get along. 1100 faren to depart, journey, travel; developed from Old English (about 725) faran to journey, to make one's way; cognate with Old Saxon, Old High German, and Gothic faran to journey, Old Frisian and Old Icelandic farā (from Proto-Germanic faranan*). The meaning of get along, is first recorded in Old English about 1000, and that of be provided with food, in Middle English about 1350.

farewell v. phr. Probably before 1200 faren wel. —interj. About 1378 farewel. —n. About 1425 farewele.

farina n. flour or meal. Before 1398; borrowed from Latin farīna ground corn, flour, meal, from far (genitive farris) grits, a kind of grain; see BARLEY.

farm n. About 1300 ferme fixed rent or charge; borrowed from Old French ferme lease, from Medieval Latin firma fixed payment, from Latin firmāre to fix, settle, confirm, strengthen, from firmus FIRM. The meaning of tract of leased land, is first recorded in (1334) and tract of cultivated land, regardless of how it is held, in 1523. —v. 1435 fermen to rent (land); borrowed through Anglo-French fermer, from Old French ferme lease. The sense of cultivate, till, practice farming, is first recorded 1719. The archaic sense of rent or lease land, is retained in the phrase farm out (to lease, subcontract).

—farmer n. About 1384 fermour collector of rents or taxes; borrowed through Anglo-French fermer, from Old French fermier, from Medieval Latin firmary renter of land, tax collector, from firma; see FARM, n. The sense of one who works a farm, is now considered to be a formation of English farm + -er, but that is folk etymology, as this sense is recorded in Middle English as early as 1414. —farmhand n. (1843) —farmhouse n. (1598) —farmland n. (about 1350) faro n. Before 1735 in faro-table, apparently an alteration of Pharaoh, patterned on French pharaon faro. Though the allusion is uncertain, it is probable that one of the cards in this game formerly bore a picture of the Pharaoh, a title given to rulers in ancient Egypt.

farrier n. 1562, borrowed from Middle French ferrier blacksmith, from Latin ferriarius of iron, (also) blacksmith, from ferrum iron. Farrier replaced Middle English ferour (recorded as a surname Ferour, 1297); borrowed from Old French ferreor, from Medieval Latin ferrotor blacksmith, from ferre to bind or shoe with iron, from Latin ferrum iron.

farrow n. About 1425 fare a young pig; developed from Old English (about 700) faerh, and corresponding to West Saxon feorh, from Proto-Germanic farHaz*; cognate with Old High German fanah, farhilin young pig (modern German Ferkel), Middle Dutch verken (modern Dutch varken) pig. The sense of a litter of pigs, is first recorded in 1577. —v. produce a litter of pigs. Probably before 1200 farven, in Ancene Riwele; probably developed from Old English feargian*, from feorh young pig.

farther adv., adj. Probably before 1300 ferther; variant of FURTHER and replacing ferrer, feror, old English fierr, fyrr. The variant ferther probably developed by influence of the common vowel sound in Middle English ferre, ferrer (comparative of fer FAR) and the confusion with fertheren, furtheren to assist, support, promote, advance. The two forms have been used in all senses, but a notion has grown up that farther refers to physical distance and further to abstractions of degree or quality.

farthest adj., adv. About 1378 ferthest; formed from ferther farther + -est superlative suffix (on analogy of nerer nearer, nerest nearest); see FARTHER.

farthing n. About 1280 ferthing; developed from Old English (about 950) fēorthing, a derivative form of fēortha fourth (from fēower FOUR), and corresponding to Old Frisian fjārdeng Middle Low German vērdink and Middle High German viendinc, and Old Icelandic fjörðungur.

farthingale n. 1552 verdnyngale; borrowed from Middle French verdugale, an alteration of Spanish verdugado farthingale, literally, hooped, from verdugo hoop, rod, young shoot of a tree, from verde green, from Latin viridis green. The petticoat was so called because it was originally held out by cane hoops or rods inserted underneath.

fascēs n. pl. 1598, bundle of rods containing an ax with the blade projecting; borrowed from Latin fascēs, plural of fascis bundle (of wood, etc.). The fascēs was carried before superior Roman magistrates as a symbol of power over life and limb in which the sticks symbolized punishment by whipping, and the axhead execution.

fascicle n. Before 1500, bunch or bundle; borrowed from Latin fasciculus, diminutive of fascis bundle; see FASCES. The meaning of part of a work published in installments, is first recorded in 1647.

A variant form fascicule, borrowed from French fascicule, from Latin fasciculus, has produced several derivatives: fasciculate, fasciculated, fasciculation, etc., now used chiefly in botany, zoology, and geology.

fascinate v. 1598, put under a spell; borrowed, perhaps through influence of Middle French fasciner, from Latin fascinātus, past participle of fascināre bewitch, enchant, from fascin spell, witchcraft, of uncertain origin. Though Latin fascin may have been borrowed from Greek báskanos bewitcher or sorcerer, and its form altered by influence of Latin fari to speak, others feel that the resemblance is accidental. The sense of delight, attract, is first recorded in 1815. —fascination n. 1605, casting of a spell; borrowed from French fascination, learned borrowing from Latin fascinātiōnem (nominative fascinātiō), from fascināre; for suffix see -ATION.

fascist or Fascist n. 1921 Fascist member of a nationalistic Italian party (formed in 1919); borrowed from Italian Fascista, n. and adj., from fascista, adj., of the group, literally, of the bundle, in reference to the fasces which were the party's symbol, from fascio grouping or group, literally, bundle, from Latin fascis FASCES + Italian -ista -ist. —fascism or Fascism n. 1922 Fascism; borrowed from Italian Fascismo, formed on the analogy of such terms in Italian as Comunismo, Comunista, from Fasc(ista) + -ismo -ism.

fashion n. Probably about 1300 fasoun form, shape, appearance; borrowed from Old French façon, from Latin factiōnem (nominative factiō) a making or doing, from facere to make. The sense of style, fashion, manner (of dress, etc.), is first recorded probably before 1380. —v. 1413 fascionen to shape or form; from fasoun, or later facioun, n., fashion, possibly by influence of Middle French façonner, from Old French façon, v. —fashionable adj. 1606; formed from English fashion, n. + -able.

fast¹ adj. quick; held fast. About 1150 fast tightly closed; later, secure (probably before 1200), and firmly fixed (about 1290); developed from Old English fæst firmly fixed, steadfast (before 900); cognate with Old Frisian fest firm or firmly fixed, Old Saxon fast, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch vast, Old High German festi (modern German fest), and Old Icelandic fasti; probably originally from a Proto-Germanic form fastuz*. The sense of quick or swift, is first recorded about 1395; from the earlier adjective sense of vigorous (before 1325) and from the adverb. —adv. Before 1175 feste securely; later faste speedily (probably before 1200); developed from Old English fæste tightly, securely (before 900). The sense of quickly or swiftly, is first recorded about 975, and developed from the sense of firmly, strongly, vigorously (as in nun fast run with vigor). A similar semantic development occurred in the adjective, based on that in the adverb.

fast² v. go without food. Before 1175 festen; also fasten (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (971) fæstan (originally) to fast as a religious duty; cognate with Old Frisian festia, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch vasten, Old High German fastēn (modern German fasten), Old Icelandic fasta (Swedish fasta, Danish and Norwegian faste), and Gothic fastan keep, guard, observe (a fast); all originally meaning "hold firmly"; see FAST¹. —n. About 1200 fasten, developed from Old English fæstan (about 1000), earlier festen (before 830); borrowed probably from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic fasta a fasting).

fasten v. About 1125 festnen attach or tie to; developed from Old English (before 900) fæstnian make fast, firm; cognate with Old Frisian festnia to make firm, bind fast, Old Saxon fastnōn, Old High German fastinōn, and Old Icelandic fastna to pledge, betroth, from Proto-Germanic fastinōjanan*; for suffix see -EN¹.

fastidious adj. Probably before 1425, disdainful or haughty; borrowed from Latin fastīdiōsus disdainful, squeamish, exacting, from fastīdium loathing, almost certainly formed by contraction from pre-Latin fastu-taidiom*, a compound of fastus contempt or arrogance, and taedium aversion or disgust. Also, the word may have been borrowed into English from Middle French fastidieux, learned borrowing from Latin fastīdiōsus. The sense of easily disgusted, hard to please, is first recorded in English in 1612–15.

fat adj. Probably about 1200 fatt, developed from Old English fætt (originally) past participle of fætan to cram, stuff (before 900); cognate with Old Frisian fatt fat, Old Saxon feit, Middle Low German vet (modern German fett), Old High German feiz (modern German feist), and Old Icelandic feitr (Norwegian feit, Swedish fet, Danish fed). —n. About 1350; from the adjective. —fatten v. 1552, formed from English fat, adj. + -en¹, replacing earlier fat, v. (coincidentally in Middle English fatten), developed from Old English fættian (about 1000), from which is retained fatted calf.

fatal adj. About 1380, destined, fated; borrowed through Old French fatal, or directly from Latin fātālis, from fātum FATE; for suffix see -AL¹. The sense of causing death, is first recorded before 1420. —fatalism n. 1678, formed from English fatal + -ism. The meaning of acceptance of everything that happens, is first recorded before 1734. —fatalist n. 1650, formed from English fatal + -ist, perhaps after Middle French fataliste. —fatalistic adj. 1832; formed from English fatalist + -ic. —fatality n. 1490, borrowed from Middle French fatalité, learned borrowing from Late Latin fātālītātē (nominative fātālītās), from Latin fātālis fatal; for suffix see -ITY.

fate n. About 1385, lot or destiny of a person; borrowed through Old French fat fate, destiny, or directly from Latin fātum thing spoken (by the gods), one's destiny, from neuter past participle of fāri speak. The sense of power supposed to control what happens, is first recorded in 1410.

father n. Probably about 1175 fader; later father (before 1464, in the compound fatherhood); developed from Old English (about 825) fæder; cognates with Old Frisian feder father, Old Saxon fadar, Middle Dutch vader (modern Dutch vader), Old High German fater (modern German Vater), Old Icelandic fadhir (Swedish, Danish, Norwegian fader, far), and Gothic fadar, from Proto-Germanic fader*. —v. Before 1425 faderen, fadren be or become the father of, beget; from the noun.

The modern spelling -ther (—ƿHær) for Middle and Old English -der became widespread in the 1500's as a result of a phonetic development common to most English dialects, seen also in such words as gather, together, weather. But even when the spelling was still with d, the pronunciation with (ƿH) may have been used, especially by the 1400's. —fatherhood n. (before 1325 faderhade; later fatherhod, before 1464). —fatherland n. (1101 fæder land). —fatherless adj. (1198, in the surname Faderles, Old English fæderlēas). —fatherly adj. Before 1420 faderly, Old English (before 1000) fæderlic; adv. before 1400.

fathom n. Before 1175 fethme; later fathom (1381–82); developed from Old English (before 800) fæthm length of the outstretched arms, grasp, and earlier in a figurative sense of grasp or power (about 725, in Beowulf); with Old Frisian fethem thread, Old Saxon fathmos outstretched arms, Middle Dutch vādem fathom (modern Dutch vadem), Old High German fadam, fadum thread (modern German Faden thread, fathom), and Old Icelandic fadhm embrace, measure of length, thread (Danish, Norwegian favn fathom, embrace, Swedish famn fathom, arms), from Proto-Germanic fathmaz*. —v. About 1300 fadmen; later fathmen to embrace (probably about 1380); developed from Old English fæthmian encircle with outstretched arms, embrace (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old High German fademōn to embrace, and Old Icelandic fadhma (Danish favne, Swedish famna), from the Proto-Germanic fathmōjanan*, from fathmaz*.

The figurative sense of get to the bottom of or understand fully, is first recorded in 1625, from the literal sense of to take soundings (1607).

fatigue n. 1669, borrowed from French fatigue weariness, from fatiguer to tire, learned borrowing from Latin fatigare, (originally) to cause to break down, (later) to tire out, formed from a pre-Latin adjective fati-agos* driving to the point of breakdown, from Old Latin fatis* (in Plautus, ad fatim to bursting) and the root of agere drive; related to fatiscā crack, split, of unknown origin. From the sense of a soldier's non-military duties (1776), the term fatigues (clothes for nonmilitary work) appeared in 1836. —v. 1693, borrowed from French fatiguer. —fatigued adj. 1791, a reappearance formed from English fatigue, v., but first recorded as a past participle fatigate (probably before 1425); borrowed from Latin fatigātus, past participle of fatigare to tire out.

fatuous adj. 1608, tasteless or insipid; later, stupid but self-satisfied, foolish (1633); borrowed, possibly through Italian fatuo, and directly from Latin fatuus foolish, insipid, of uncertain origin; for suffix see -OUS.

faucet n. Probably before 1400, spigot; borrowed from Old French fausset stopper, from fausser to damage, break into, earlier falser to break, from Late Latin falsāre to corrupt, falsify, from Latin falsus FALSE.

fault n. About 1280 faute deficiency, lack, scarcity; borrowed from Old French faute, faulte, from Vulgar Latin fallita* a shortcoming, falling, noun use of feminine past participle, replacing Latin falsus, past participle of fallere deceive, disappoint; see FALSE. The meaning of a defect or imperfection, is first recorded probably before 1350.

The Middle English spelling faute gradually changed to faulte in the 1400's, probably in an effort to restore the Latin form. By the 1600's fault was the standard spelling though the l was still not pronounced. —v. About 1375 (Scottish) faul be deficient; from the noun. The sense of to blame, find fault with, is first recorded about 1450. —faulty adj. Probably about 1380 fauly.

faun n. About 1385 fawn, borrowed from Latin Faunus, one of various gods of the countryside.

fauna n. 1771, New Latin fauna, from Late Latin Fauna, name of a Roman fertility goddess who was the wife, sister, or daughter of Faunus FAUN. The word was popularized in the natural sciences after Linnaeus used it in the title of his work Fauna Suecica Swedish Fauna (1746).

faux pas 1674, borrowing of French faux pas, literally, false step. In contemporary French, gaffe is used in this sense.

favor n. Probably before 1300 favour attractiveness, charm; later, act of kindness (about 1380); borrowed from Old French favor, from Latin favōrem (nominative favor) good will or support, from favēre show kindness to. —v. About 1350 favuren approve, support, favor; borrowed from Old French favorer, from Old French favor, n. —favorable adj. Before 1376 favorable; borrowed from Old French favorable, from Latin favōrābilis, from Latin favor, n.; for suffix see -ABLE. —favorite n. 1583, borrowed from Middle French favorit, favorite, from Italian favorito a favorite, also past participle of favorire to favor, support, from favore favor, from Latin favōrem (nominative favor). —favoritism n. 1763, formed from English favorite + -ism.

fawn¹ n. young deer. Before 1338 fowen; later fawne (before 1425); borrowed from Old French faon young animal, from Vulgar Latin fētōnem*, accusative of fētō*, from Latin fētus FETUS.

fawn² v. act slavishly. About 1225 fahenen to court favor, grovel; developed from Old English fagnian rejoice, from fagen, variant of fægen glad, FAIN; used in Middle English to refer to expressions of delight, such as a dog's wagging its tail.

faze v. 1830, in American English, a dialectal variant of freeze; found in Middle English fesen frighten, drive away, discomfit (probably before 1325), Old English (about 890) fēsian, fysian send forth, drive away, corresponding to Swedish fösa drive away, and Norwegian föysa, from Proto-Germanic faujanan*.

fealty n. Probably before 1300 feute; later fealtye (probably before 1425); borrowed from Old French feaulté, fealté, from Latin fidēlitatem (nominative fidēlitās) fidelity, from fidēlis loyal, faithful; for suffix see -TY².

fear n. Probably about 1280 fere; later feere (about 1375); developed from late Old English fær uneasiness caused by possible danger; earlier, danger or peril (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon fār ambush, danger, Middle Dutch vaer (modern Dutch gevaar danger), Old High German fāra, Middle High German gevāre danger (modern German Gefahr), Old Icelandic fār misfortune, plague, from Proto-Germanic fāra-*. —v. About 1225 fearen (occurring once), but generally found in the spelling feren to frighten or terrify; developed from Old English fēran terrify, frighten (about 1000), from fær danger. The sense of feel fear, is first recorded probably about 1390. —fearful adj. About 1350 ferfull causing terror, terrible, formed from Middle English fer fear + -full -ful.

feasible adj. 1443 faisible capable of being done; later feseable (before 1475); borrowed through Anglo-French faisible, Middle French faisible, faisable, from fais-, stem of faire do, make, from Latin facere DO¹ perform; for suffix see -IBLE. —feasibility n. 1624; formed from English feasible + -ity.

feast n. Probably before 1200 feste, feaste feast, banquet, rejoicing; borrowed from Old French feste festival, feast, from Vulgar Latin festa* (feminine singular), from Latin fēsta holidays, feasts, from neuter plural of fēstus festive, joyous, related to fēriae holiday, and fānum temple. —v. Probably before 1300 fester; borrowed from Old French fester, from feste feast.

The spelling with ea developed particularly in the late Middle English period as a device to represent the sound of so-called long e.

feat n. Before 1376 fet, fait action or deed; borrowed through Anglo-French fet, Old French fet, fait, from Latin factum thing done. For spelling in ea see FEAST. The sense of an exceptional or noble deed, is first recorded probably before 1400, originally often in the phrase feat of arms, after Old French fait d'armes.

feather n. 1280, in compound fethermongere, also with old spelling feder (about 1150); found in Old English fether wing, feather (about 725); cognate with Old Saxon fethera feather, Middle Dutch vēdere (modern Dutch veder, veer), Old High German fedara (modern German Feder), and Old Icelandic fjodhr (Swedish fjäder, Danish fjeder), from Proto-Germanic fethrō*. For spelling with ea see FEAST. —v. Probably before 1300 fetheren grow feathers, (also found about 1250); developed from Old English gefetherian furnish with feathers, from fether, n. —feather bed 1369 fether-bed, also with old spelling fether (about 1300), developed from Old English fetherbed (about 1000).

feature n. About 1375 feture something created in a particular shape or form; also features of the face (1378); borrowed through Anglo-French feture, Old French feture, faiture, from Latin factūra a formation, from facere make, DO¹ perform; for suffix see -URE. The meaning of characteristic or distinctive part, is first recorded 1692. For spelling in ea see FEAST. —v. 1755, to resemble; from the noun. The meaning of make a special display or attraction of, is first recorded in 1888.

febrile adj. 1651; borrowed through French fébrile, or directly from Medieval Latin febrilis, from Latin febris a FEVER.

February n. 1373 februare; borrowed from Latin februārius in februārius mēnsis month of purification, in reference to the Roman feast of purification, held in February (the last month of the ancient Roman calendar, and after 450 B.C. becoming the second month, for which the Old English name was solmōnath, literally, mud month).

English February was a replacement of earlier feoverel (about 1225) and feoverer (about 1200); borrowed from Old French fevriel, fevrier, from Latin februārius. The alternation of r and l occurred regularly in Old French, an influence probably carried over into Middle English in the forms laurel and laurer, and reinforced by analogy of averel April.

feces n. pl. Before 1400 fecis, pl., excrement; later feces, pl. (probably before 1425); borrowed from Latin faeces sediment or dregs, plural of faex (genitive faecis), of unknown origin.

feckless adj. 1599, formed in English from earlier feck, fek effect, value, vigor (a meaning occurring about 1500, in the Scottish shortened form of EFFECT) + the suffix -less.

fecund adj. About 1425 fecounde, 1450 fecunde; borrowed from Old French fecund, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin fēcundus; fruitful.

federal adj. 1645 foederal pertaining to or based on a treaty, especially a covenant between God and an individual; formed in English from Latin foedus covenant, league (genitive foederis; related to fidēs FAITH) + English *-al*¹. The Anglicized spelling federal is first recorded in 1737 (earlier than French fédéral, 1789).

The sense of relating to a government comprising independent states is first recorded in 1707 from the context of phrases such as federal union, in which federal refers to the earliest sense of a treaty; therefore, a union based on a treaty. —federalism n. 1789 Federalism formed in American English from federal + -ism. —Federalist n. 1787, formed in American English from federal + -ist.

federate v. 1837, from English federate, adj., allied or united (1710); borrowed from Latin foederātus having a treaty, bound by treaty, from foedus (genitive foederis) covenant; see FEDERAL; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. In some instances federate, v., may also be a back formation from earlier federation. —federation n. 1721, union by agreement, league; borrowed from Late Latin foederatiōnem (nominative foederatiō), from Latin foederare league together; for suffix see -ATION.

fedora n. 1895, American English, in allusion to Fédora, a play that became popular in the U.S. after 1883. The part of the heroine, a Russian princess named Fédora Romanoff, was originally performed by Sarah Bernhardt.

fee n. Probably before 1300 fe estate held in tenure to a feudal lord; borrowed through Anglo-French fee, Old French fié, both variants of Old French fieu, fief, from Gallo-Romance feudum (also found in Medieval Latin feudum, feodum), from Frankish fēhu-ōd* payment-estate. For the first element (fēhu-*) of the compound compare the native, and now obsolete, fee livestock, movable property, money, with Old English feoh money, property, cattle, cognate with Old Saxon fēhu, Old Frisian fīa, Old High German fihu (modern German Vieh cattle), Old Icelandic fē (Danish fæ, Swedish få), and Gothic falthu, from Proto-Germanic feHu*. For the second element (-ōd) of the compound, compare Old English ēad wealth, cognate with Old Saxon ōd, Old Icelandic audhr, and Gothic auda.

The meaning of a payment for professional services, is first recorded in 1387–95.

feeble adj. Probably before 1200 feble lacking strength, weak; borrowed from Old French feible, foible weak, fleible (with loss of l in later forms by dissimilation), from Latin flebilis lamentable, that is to be wept over, from flere weep — feeble-minded adj. 1534, replacing earlier feeble-witted (about 1385).

feed v. About 1125 fedan, developed from Old English fēdan nourish, feed (about 725); cognate with Old Frisian fēda to feed, Old Saxon fōdian, Dutch voeden, Old High German fuoten, Old Icelandic foedha (Swedish fōda, Danish and Norwegian føde), and Gothic fōdjan, from Proto-Germanic fōdjanan*. The spelling feed is first recorded about 1385. — n. 1573, right to graze; from the verb. The sense of food for animals is first recorded in 1588.

feel v. Probably before 1200 felen, developed from Old English fēlan to feel (before 900); cognate with Old Frisian fēla to feel, Old Saxon fōlian, Middle and modern Dutch voelen, Old High German fuolen (modern German fühlen), from Proto-Germanic fōlijanan*. — n. About 1225 fele sensation, understanding; from the verb. — feeler n. 1435, formed from felen, v. + *-er*¹; n.pl. 1665, special part of an animal's body for touching. — feeling n. Probably before 1200 felunge act of touching or sense of touch; formed from felen to feel + -unge -ing¹. The meaning of an emotion of joy, sorrow, etc., is first recorded in 1369. — feelings n.pl. 1771, tender or sensitive side of one's nature; from the noun singular.

feign v. About 1300 feinen; borrowed from Old French feign-, stem of feindre, from Latin fingere devise, fabricate, shape, form.

feint n. 1679, borrowed from French feinte a feint, sham, pretense, from Old French feint, (originally) feminine past participle of feindre FEIGN. The noun appeared earlier, in the phrase with feint falsely, hypocritically (before 1325) as a formation in Middle English from feint, adj., in which it was partially confused in spelling with faint, adj. The adjective feint deceitful, hypocritical (about 1290, borrowed from Old French feint, faint, past participle of feindre) is now rare or obsolete in English. — v. 1833, to make a sham attack, from the noun in English; but the obsolete sense of deceive, is recorded probably about 1300, either from the adjective or borrowed from Old French feint, past participle of feindre.

feisty adj. 1896, dialectal American English, from feist small dog + *-y*¹. The form feist is from earlier dialectal American English fice, fist small dog (1805), a shortened form of fysting curre stinking cur (1529), from Middle English fysten, fisten break wind (1440), and related to Old English fisting stink.

feldspar n. 1785, alteration of earlier feldspath (1757); borrowed from German Feldspath (now Feldspat), a compound of Feld field and Spath spar. The shift in spelling was influenced by English *spar*³ mineral.

felicitate v. 1628, make happy; probably developed from earlier felicitate (1605); borrowed from Late Latin fēlicitātus, past participle of fēlicitāre to make happy, from Latin fēlix (genitive fēlicis) happy, fortunate; for suffix see -ATE¹. The sense of congratulate, is first recorded in English in 1634. — felicity n. About 1375 felicitee; borrowed from Old French fēlicité, learned borrowing from Latin fēlicitātem (nominative fēlicitās) happiness, from fēlix happy, fortunate; for suffix see -ITY.

feline adj. 1681, borrowed from Late Latin fēlinus of or belonging to a cat, from Latin fēlēs (genitive fēlis) cat, wild cat, marten, of uncertain origin; for suffix see -INE¹.

fell¹ v. knock down. Probably before 1200 fellen, feollen, fallen; developed from Old English fællan, fellan make fall, demolish, kill (before 800, in Mercian dialect, corresponding to West Saxon fyllan); cognate with Old Frisian falla, fella to fell, Old Saxon fellian, Old High German fellen (modern German fällen), and Old Icelandic fella, from Proto-Germanic fallijanan*.

fell² adj. cruel, fierce, terrible. About 1300; borrowed from Old French fel cruel, fierce, from Medieval Latin fello villain, FELON.

fell³ n. skin or hide of an animal. About 1150 felle, developed from Old English fel, fell skin, hide (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian fel skin, hide, Old Saxon fel, Middle and modern Dutch vel, Old High German fell skin (modern German Fell), Old Icelandic fell, Gothic -fill in thrūtsfill leprosy.

felloe or felly n. 1411 felowes, pl., variant of earlier felie (probably about 1200); developed from Old English felga, plural of felg rim of a wheel (before 899); cognate with Old Saxon and Old High German felga felloe, harrow (modern German Felge), from Proto-Germanic felz-*.

fellow n. About 1250 felawe; earlier feolawe companion (probably before 1200); developed from Old English feolaga partner (1016); borrowed from a Scandinavian source; compare Old Icelandic fēlagi comrade, partner, shareholder. — fellowship n. Probably before 1200 feolashcipe companionship; formed from feolaw fellow + -schipe -ship.

felon n. About 1300 feloun, feloun; from feloun, felun, adj., savage, cruel, wicked; borrowed from Old French felon, n., a wicked person, traitor, rebel, and felon, adj., wicked, malignant, from Medieval Latin fellonem, from Frankish fillo*, filljo* person who whips or beats, scourger (compare Old High German fillen to flail or scourge, Old Frisian filla). — felonious adj. 1575, either formed from English felony + -ous, or a back formation from feloniously, adv. (1447–48, probably formed in English from Middle French felonieux + -ly). By about 1600 felonious had replaced felonous (recorded before 1338). — felony n. About 1290 felonie treachery, villainy, crime; borrowed from Old French felonie, from felon, n.

felt n. Old English felt (about 1000); cognate with Old Saxon felt felt and Old High German filz (modern German Filz), from Proto-Germanic peltaz*, peltiz*.

female n. Before 1333 femele; borrowed from Old French femelle, from Medieval Latin femella a female, from Latin fēmella young female, girl, a diminutive form of fēmīna woman; see FEMININE. The spelling female is first recorded in 1373, formed by popular etymology on the analogy of male. —adj. 1382; borrowed from Old French femelle, from Medieval Latin femella of a female, from femella, n.

feminine adj. Probably about 1350 femynyn, referring to grammatical gender; later, female (about 1380); borrowed from Old French feminin, feminine, learned borrowing from Latin fēmininus feminine (in the grammatical sense), from fēmīna woman, female (Latin base fē- to suck, suckle, also found in Latin fēlāre to suck, filius son, filia daughter, originally suckling, and with fētus offspring or fetus). —femininity n. About 1390 femynynnytee; formed from femynyne feminine + -ity. —feminism n. 1851, state of being feminine; later, advocacy of women's rights (1895); borrowed from French fēminisme (1837), formed from Latin fēmīna woman + French -isme -ism. —feminist n. 1894, borrowed from French fēministe (1872), from fēminisme + -iste -ist.

femto- a combining form meaning one quadrillionth (10⁻¹⁵), as in femtometer (one quadrillionth of a meter). 1961, borrowed from Danish or Norwegian femten fifteen (with connective -o).

femur n. 1563, as a term in architecture; later, thighbone (1799); borrowing of Latin femur thigh, of uncertain origin. —femoral adj. 1782, formed in English from Latin femoris (genitive of femur thigh) + English *-al*¹.

fen n. Before 1121, developed from Old English fen, fenn marsh, dirt, mud (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian fene, fenne marsh, swamp, Old Saxon fēni, Middle Dutch venne (modern Dutch veen), Old High German fenna (modern German Fenn), Old Icelandic fen quagmire, and Gothic fani clay, mud, from Proto-Germanic fanja-*.

fence n. Before 1338 fens action of defending, a shortened form of defens DEFENSE. The meaning of enclosure or barrier, is first recorded in 1461. —v. 1435, surround with or as with a fence; from the noun. —fencing n. 1462, the act of protecting; later, an enclosure (1585) and the materials for an enclosure (1856). The spelling varied from c to s in Middle English and became fixed in the later 1500's.

fend v. Probably before 1300, shortened form of DEFEND. The phrase fend off ward or keep off, is first recorded about 1380, and the expression fend for oneself, in 1629. It is probable that fend appeared before 1279, in the derivative fender defender.

fender n. About 1350 fendour defender; earlier as a surname Fendur (1279); probably formed from Middle English fend + -our, *-or*², now analyzed as *-er*¹. The general sense of something that protects by keeping other things off, is first recorded in English in 1615, but the specific meaning of a boat fender protecting the hull is first recorded in 1294–95. Application to automobiles is found first in 1919.

fennel n. Probably before 1300 fenel, developed from Old English fenol (about 1000), a form possibly influenced by Old French fenoil, and from Old English finuġl (about 700); both Old English and Old French were borrowed from Vulgar Latin fenuculum, corresponding to Latin feniculum, from fēnum hay (appearing in the overcorrected form faenum); apparently so called from its haylike appearance and sweet odor.

feral adj. 1604, probably borrowed from Middle French feral wild, from Latin fera, in fera bēstia wild beast, from ferus wild; see FIERCE for suffix see *-al*¹.

ferment v. Before 1398; borrowed through Old French fermenter, and directly from Latin fermentāre to leaven, ferment, from fermentum leaven, related to servēre to boil, seethe. The sense of agitate, stir up, excite, is first recorded in 1660. —n. Probably before 1425, leaven or yeast; probably from the verb, and as a borrowing through Middle French ferment, from Latin fermentum leaven or yeast, drink made of fermented barley; also figuratively, anger or passion, a sense first recorded 1672. —fermentation n. About 1395 fermentacioun; borrowed from Late Latin fermentātiōnem (nominative fermentātiō) a leavening, from Latin fermentāre to ferment; for suffix see -ATION.

fermion n. 1947, formed in allusion to Enrico Fermi + -on; see FERMIUM so called because Fermi studied statistics that govern the behavior of these particles.

fermium n. 1955, New Latin, formed in allusion to the Italian atomic physicist Enrico Fermi + -ium.

fern n. Probably before 1300 ferne, developed from Old English (about 700) fearn; cognate with Old Saxon farn fern, Middle Dutch værn (modern Dutch varen), and Old High German farn (modern German Farn), from Proto-Germanic farnan*.

ferocious adj. 1646, fierce, savage; formed in English from Latin ferōcis (oblique case of ferōx fierce, wild-looking) + English -ious, variant of -ous; perhaps modeled on Middle French ferocieux, and prompted in its formation by English ferocity. Latin ferōx is a derivative of ferus wild (see FIERCE) + -ōx, -ōcem, a suffix meaning looking, appearing. —ferocity n. 1606, borrowed through French ferocité, from Latin ferocitatem (nominative ferocitās) fierceness, from ferōcis; for suffix see -ITY.

-ferous suffix added to nouns to form adjectives and meaning producing, containing, conveying, as in metalliferous, odoriferous. Formed in English from Latin -fer (from ferre to BEAR²) + English -ous.

ferret n. About 1350 furet; later ferrett (1378); borrowed from Old French furet, fuiret, diminutive of fuiron weasel, ferret, thief, from Late Latin fūrionem (compare fūrōnem cat, thief), probably from Latin fūr (genitive fūris) thief; for suffix see -ET. —v. Probably before 1430, to hunt with ferrets; from the noun, probably modeled on Middle French fureter to hunt with ferrets. The sense of search out, discover, in allusion to the use of a ferret to hunt rodents, is first recorded in 1577–87.

ferric or ferrous adj. 1799 ferric; about 1865 ferrous; both words formed in English from Latin ferrum iron + English suffixes -ic and -ous.

Ferris wheel 1893, American English, in allusion to George W.G. Ferris, American engineer who designed it for the World's Columbian Exposition held in Chicago in 1893.

ferro- a combining form meaning iron, especially in the naming of alloys, as in ferrochrome; in chemistry it means ferrous (containing iron, especially with a valence of two) as distinguished from ferric (containing iron, especially with a valence of three), as in ferroconcrete. Adapted from Latin ferrum iron.

ferrule or ferule¹ n. metal cap or band at the end of a stick, etc. 1611 ferrel, alteration of earlier verrel (1483) and verol (1410–11); borrowed from Old French vielle, virol, virole, from Latin viriola little bracelet, diminutive of viriae bracelets, from Gaulish (compare Old Irish fiar bent, crooked, and Welsh gwyn). The later form ferrel developed by influence of Latin ferrum iron, in reference to the metal cap.

ferry v. 1123 ferien, developed from Old English ferian to carry, transport (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian feria carry, transport, Old Saxon ferian, Middle High German ferien, Old Icelandic ferja to pass over, ferry, and Gothic farjan travel by boat, from Proto-Germanic farjanan*. —n. 1286 ferye place or passage where boats ferry passengers and goods; probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic ferja, n., from ferja to ferry).

The means for transporting across a ferry is first recorded in the form feribot (about 1374–75).

fertile adj. 1436 fertyle, borrowed through Middle French fertil fruitful, from Old French fertile, or directly from Latin fertilis bearing in abundance, fruitful, productive, from ferre to BEAR² carry. —fertility n. Probably before 1425 fertilite, borrowed from Middle French fertilité, from Latin fertilitatem (nominative fertilitas) fruitfulness, from fertilis fertile. —fertilize v. 1648, make fertile; formed from English fertile + -ize, probably on the model of French fertiliser. The biological sense of unite with an egg cell, impregnate, is first recorded in 1859.

ferule² n. stick used for punishing children. 1599, earlier in ferall rodde (1528), from ferula the fennel plant (before 1398); borrowed from Latin ferula fennel plant or rod (pre-Latin feselā*), probably related to festūca stalk, straw, rod.

fervent adj. 1340, ardent, earnest; borrowed from Old French fervent, learned borrowing from Latin ferventem (nominative fervēns), present participle of fervere to boil, glow.

fervid adj. 1599, burning, glowing; borrowed from Latin fervidus glowing, burning, vehement, from fervere to boil, glow. The figurative sense of impassioned, is first recorded in 1656–81.

fervor n. About 1384 fervour, borrowed from Old French fervor, learned borrowing from Latin fervor a boiling, violent heat, vehemence, passion, from fervere to boil.

fescue n. 1589, piece of straw, twig, alteration of earlier festu (about 1378); borrowed from Old French festue, festu a kind of straw, from Latin festūca straw, stalk, rod, probably related to ferula; see FERULE. The meaning of a pasture and lawn grass is first recorded in 1762.

fester n. Before 1325, a rankling sore; borrowed from Old French festre (with replacement of r for l), from Latin fistula pipe, ulcer; see FISTULA. —v. Before 1398 festren; from the noun, or possibly borrowed from Old French festrir, from festre, n. The sense of cause pain, aggravate, is first recorded about 1475.

festivity n. Before 1387 festivite; borrowed from Old French festivité, learned borrowing from Latin fēstivitatē (nominative fēstivitas), from fēstivus festive, from fēstum festival or holiday, neuter of fēstus of a FEAST; for suffix see -ITY. —festival n. 1589, a time of festive celebration, holiday, from earlier festival, adj., of a feast or holiday (probably before 1380); borrowed from Old French festival, festivel, and directly from Medieval Latin festivialis of a church holiday, from Latin fēstivus festive; for suffix see -AL. —festive adj. 1651, probably borrowed from Latin fēstivus of a feast or holiday, joyous, merry, from fēstum festival, neuter of fēstus; see FESTIVITY and FEAST; for suffix see -IVE; in later use (1735), possibly re-formed back formation from English festivity, perhaps modeled on French festif, festive. After the single recorded use in 1651, festive disappears in the record until 1735. —festal adj. 1479, borrowed from Middle French festal, festel, from Late Latin fēstālis, from Latin fēstum festival; for suffix see -AL¹. Festal replaced earlier festial, adj. (recorded before 1422); formed in English from Latin fēstum + English suffix -ial, variant of -al. —fest n. 1889, American English, (usually in compounds, such as talk fest, songfest, filmfest); borrowing of German Fest festival, as abstracted from compounds such as Volksfest folk festival, from Middle High German vēst, from Latin fēstum festival.

festoon n. 1630, borrowing of French feston, from Italian festone, from festa celebration, feast, from Vulgar Latin festa* FEAST; for ending see -OON. —v. 1789 from the noun.

fetch v. Probably before 1200 fecchen go and get; developed from Old English feccan (about 1000), apparently a variant of fetian, fatian to fetch, bring to, marry; cognate with Old Frisian fatia to grasp, seize, contain, Middle Low German vāten, Middle Dutch vatten, Old High German fazzōn to climb, mount, take in (modern German fassen grasp, contain), from Proto-Germanic fatōjanan*. —fetching adj. 1880, alluring, fascinating; earlier, crafty or scheming (1581); formed from fetch, v. + *-ing*².

fête or fete n. 1754, borrowing of French fête festival, feast, from Old French feste; see FEAST. —v. 1819, entertain; borrowed from French fêter, v., from fête feast.

fetid adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Latin foetidus stinking, from foetere have a bad smell, stink.

fetish n. 1613 fatisso, fetisso, borrowed from Portuguese fetiço charm, sorcery; probably introduced by Portuguese sailors and traders as applied to charms and talismans worshiped by inhabitants of the west coast of Africa; and later fateish (1693), fetiche (1705), borrowed from French fétiche, from Portuguese. The earlier Portuguese term fetiço was originally feitico made artfully, artificial, from Latin facticius made by art, artificial, from facere make.

The figurative sense of something irrationally revered, is first recorded in American English in 1837. The use in psychology is first recorded in 1901. —fetishism n. 1801, worship of fetishes; formed from English fetish + -ism; modeled on French fétichisme.

fetlock n. About 1330 fitlok, fetlak, corresponding to Dutch vetlock fetlock, Middle High German vizzeloch (compare modern German Fessel fetlock); related to Old High German fuoaz FOOT.

The Middle English suffix -ok (as in hillock, modern English hillock) developed from Old English -oc, a diminutive suffix, but in the Middle English period fitlok was popularly interpreted as a derivative of feet and lock (of hair).

fetter n. Old English (about 700) feter chain or shackle for the feet; cognate with Old Saxon feteras, pl., fetters, Middle Dutch vetter fetter (also in modern Dutch, lace or string), Old High German fezzera, Old Icelandic fioturr fetter, from Proto-Germanic feterō*, feteraz. The transferred sense of anything that confines, shackle, restraint, is first recorded in Old English, about 1000. —v. About 1300 feteren to chain or shackle; earlier fetheren (probably before 1200); developed from Old English gefetrian to fetter, from feter, n.

fettle n. About 1750, dress, case, condition, in English dialect of Lancashire, from earlier Middle English fettlen, fettelen to make ready, arrange (probably about 1380); of uncertain origin (compare Old English fetel belt, girdle, before 899); perhaps used in the sense of to gird up, and ultimately from the Germanic base fat-* to hold, so as to be cognate with Old High German fezzil chain, band, fetter (modern German Fessel).

fetus n. Before 1398, borrowed from Latin fētus (genitive fētūs) a bearing, hatching, offspring, young, from the base fē- to generate, bear, also to suck, suckle, found in Latin fēmina female; see FEMININE. —fetal adj. 1811, formed from English fetus + -al.

feud n. Before 1325 fede enmity, hatred, hostility, (considered to be a word generally restricted to northern dialectal use); borrowed from Old French fede, feide (as in fede mortel deadly feud), from Old High German fēhida (modern German Fehde feud); cognate with Old Frisian feithe enmity, and related to, though not a derivative of, Old English fēhth enmity (found about 725, in Beowulf), (from Proto-Germanic faiHithō*) and fāh hostile; see FOE. In the 1500's, the word was adopted in England as foode, fewd, possibly an alteration because of a semantic connection with feud feudal estate, from Medieval Latin feudum. —v. to quarrel. 1673, from the noun.

feudal adj. 1614, possibly borrowed through French féodal, from Medieval Latin feudalis, feodalis, from feudum, feodum feudal estate; see FEE; for suffix see *-AL*¹. —feudalism n. 1839, formed from English feudal + -ism.

fever n. Probably before 1200 feure, later fever (probably before 1300); developed from Old English (about 1000) fēfer, fēfor, borrowed from Latin febris fever, and related to fovēre to warm, heat. The word also appears in Middle English as fièvre (1393), borrowed from Old French fièvre, from Latin febris. —fever- ish adj. Before 1398 feverish causing fever; formed from fever + -isch -ish. Later the word was re-formed in English with the meaning of excited, restless; first recorded in 1634, formed from fever + -ish.

few adj. Probably about 1150 fewe, developed from Old English feawe, contracted form fēa (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian fē little, Old Saxon fā, Old High German fao, Old Icelandic fār, and Gothic fawai, pl., few. —n. Probably about 1175 fewe; formed from the adjective.

fez n. 1802, borrowed from French fez, from Turkish fes, probably in allusion to Fez, Morocco (city where this type of cap was principally made).

fiancée or fiancee n. 1853, borrowing of French fiancée, feminine form of fiancé, past participle of fiancer betroth, from Old French fiancer, from fiance a promise, trust, from fier to trust, from Vulgar Latin fidāre*; see AFFIANCE.

fiasco n. 1855, a theatrical or musical failure; later, a dismal failure (1862); borrowed through French, especially in the phrase faire fiasco turn out a failure, from Italian far fiasco, literally, make a bottle, from fiasco bottle, from Late Latin flascō, flascōnem; see FLASK. The sense development is unknown.

fiat n. Before 1631 (in reference to the phrase Fiat lux let there be light, in the Book of Genesis); earlier, as a partial Latinism in a document (about 1384); borrowed through Medieval Latin from Latin fiat let it be done, 3rd person singular present subjunctive of fieri.

fib n. 1611, a trivial lie, of uncertain origin; perhaps from earlier fibble-fable nonsense (1581), reduplication of FABLE. —v. 1690, from the noun. —fibber n. 1723, formed from fib, v. + *-er*¹.

fiber n. 1540 fibre, borrowing of French fibre, from Old French fibra, learned borrowing from Latin fibra a fiber, filament, of uncertain origin (possibly related to Latin filum thread, through the Latin base fi-). The figurative sense of character or nature, is first recorded in 1855. —fiberboard n. (1897) —fiberglass n. (1937) —fiber optics (1956) —fibrous adj. 1626, probably borrowed by influence of French fibreuse, as a formation from New Latin fibrosus, from Latin fibra; for suffix see -OUS fibrin n. 1800, formed from English fiber, fibra + *-in*².

fibula n. bone in the lower leg. 1615, New Latin, from Latin fibula clasp, brooch, earlier fivibula*, from Old Latin fivere, replaced by the analogical Classical form figere to fix, fasten; see DIKE. Traditionally, the bone was so called because it resembles a kind of clasp, similar to a modern safety pin, used by the ancient Romans, though by about 1540, Latin fibula was, in fact, a loan translation of Greek perōnē bone in the lower leg, also, clasp or brooch.

-fic a suffix forming adjectives and meaning making, doing, causing, as in pacific (making peace), honorific (doing honor), terrific (causing terror). Borrowed (through French -fique) from Latin -ficus, from the root of facere make, DO¹ perform.

-fication a suffix forming nouns and meaning a making, doing, causing, usually corresponding to verbs in -fy, as in pacification, glorification, purification; sometimes added directly to a noun or adjective, especially in technical and scientific terms, as in ossification, reification. Borrowed (through Old French -fication) from Latin -ficiōnem, from -ficiātus, past participle ending of verbs in -ficāre -FY.

fiche n. 1949, borrowed from French fiche slip of paper or form, from Old French fiche point, from ficher to fix, fasten, from Vulgar Latin ficicāre*, from Latin figere to fix fasten. The meaning of card, strip of film, etc., is first recorded in 1959, as a shortening of microfiche (1950).

fickle adj. Probably before 1200 fikel false, deceitful, treacherous; developed from Old English (before 1000) ficol deceitful, related to befician deceive, and fācen deceit, treachery; for suffix see *-LE*². The Old English fācen is cognate with Old Saxon fekan deceit, Old High German feihhan, and Old Icelandic feiken deterioration, corruption. The meaning of changeable, not constant, is first recorded in about 1303.

fiction n. About 1412 ficioun something made up; invention of the mind; borrowed from Old French fiction and from Latin fictiōnem (nominative fictiō) a fashioning or feigning, from figere to shape, form, devise, feign. —fictitious adj. 1615, not real or genuine; formed in English, perhaps on the model of earlier French ficticieux hypocritical, from Medieval Latin fictitiū, a misspelling of Latin ficticiū (with substitution of the English spelling -ous) artificial, counterfeit, from fictus, past participle of figere.

-fid a combining form meaning split or divided into parts, as in bifid. Borrowed from Latin -fidus, related to findere to split; see BITE.

fiddle n. Probably before 1200 fithle, later fede (before 1398) and fydell (about 1450); developed from Old English fithle, corresponding to Old High German fidula, Middle Low German vedel (modern German Fiedel), Middle Dutch vedel, vedele (modern Dutch vedel, veel), and Old Icelandic fidhla.

These words are probably derived from Medieval Latin vitula, vidula (for the shift from Latin v to f compare Old English fann from Latin vannus) and may have come from Vulgar Latin vitula*, perhaps related to Latin vītulārī be joyful, of uncertain origin. It is also possible that Vulgar Latin vitula*, represented in Old French viole, and Italian and Spanish viol, was itself a borrowing from the same Germanic source as Old English fithle. —v. About 1378 fithelen play the fiddle; later fydelen (1440); from the noun. The meaning of play nervously, fidget, is first recorded in 1530. —fiddler n. Before 1280, developed from Old English fithelere; formed from fithle + -ere *-er*¹.

fidelity n. Probably before 1425 fidelite, borrowed from Middle French fidélité, learned borrowing from Latin fidēlitas (nominative fidēlitas) faithfulness, adherence, from fidēlis faithful, from fidēs FAITH; for suffix see -ITY.

fidget n. 1674, the fidget uneasiness; later, the fidgets (1753); apparently formed from fidge, v., move restlessly (1575), perhaps a variant of fiken move quickly or restlessly (before 1250); ultimately borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Swedish fikja move briskly). The meaning of a restless person, first recorded in 1837, is from fidget, v. —v. move restlessly. 1809, American English, from the noun. —fidgety adj. 1730–36, formed from English fidget, v. + *-y*¹.

fiduciary adj. Before 1640, held in trust; borrowed, possibly through French fiduciaire, from Latin fiduciarius (holding) in trust, from fiducia a trust, from fidere to trust; see FAITH; for suffix see -ARY. —n. 1631, a trustee; borrowed from Medieval Latin fiduciarius trustee, from Latin adj.

fi interj. About 1300 fi, possibly borrowed from Old French fi, fy, and perhaps even reinforced by some Scandinavian form (compare Old Icelandic, fi, Danish fi), probably an imitation of the sound of disgust made in response to a disagreeable smell. Latin has the words fue and fi, which are semantically related; however, every language developed its own terms for such basic expressions, probably independently of others.

fief n. 1611, borrowed from French fief, from Old French, variant of fieu fee; see FEE.

field n. 1155 feld; later feild (before 1325), and field (before 1393); developed from Old English (about 725) feld field, and probably related to Old English folde earth, land, cognate with Old Saxon folda earth, and Old Icelandic fold. Also cognates are found in Old Frisian and Old Saxon feld field, Middle Dutch velt (modern Dutch veld), and Old High German feld (modern German Feld), from Proto-Germanic felthuz*.

The spelling with ie was probably introduced by Anglo-French scribes, who represented the long e sound with the spelling ie in such French words as brief and piece, from which the practice spread to native words (field, fiend, etc.). —v. 1529, to fight; from the noun (in the sense of battlefield). —field day (1747) —fielder n. 1310, one who works in fields; in baseball, 1868. —field glasses (1836) fiend n. Probably about 1200 fend; later feend (about 1395); developed from Old English feond enemy, foe (about 725, in Beowulf); originally present participle of feogan to hate. The formation of fiend is parallel to friend and in Old English is cognate with Old Frisian fiand enemy, Old Saxon fiond, Middle Dutch viānt (modern Dutch vijand), Old High German fiant (modern German Feind enemy), fiēn to hate, Old Icelandic fiāndi enemy, fā to hate, Gothic fiyands enemy, fijan to hate (from Proto-Germanic fijējanan*). For the spelling with ie see FIELD. —fiendish adj. 1529, formed from English fiend + *-ish*¹.

fierce adj. 1240, proud, noble, bold; later ferse ferocious, wild, savage (about 1378) and fierce (before 1393); borrowed from Old French fers, fiers, nominative form of fer, fier wild, ferocious, from Latin ferus wild, untamed.

fiery adj. About 1300 fuyri; later firy (about 1385), and fiery (about 1443); formed from Middle English fier fire (about 1250; also fuyr, fir; see FIRE) + *-y*¹.

The spelling with ie arose by confusion with Old English fyr fire, in which y, representing a long i sound, was transcribed as i, γ, and ie in Middle English. The e was an orthographic indication of the long i sound. Discrepancies with γ still exist in English: sirup, syrup; siren, syren.

fife n. 1555, probably borrowed from German Pfeife fife or pipe, from Old High German pfīsa, Middle High German pfīse; or fife may be an alteration of Middle French fifre fife, borrowed from Swiss German pfifer piper, a derivative of Old High German pfīsa fife, PIPE.

fifteen adj. Old English fiftēne, fiftȳne (about 725, in Beowulf), from fif five + -tēne, -tȳne -teen, from tēn TEN. Old English fiftēne is cognate with Old Frisian fiftine, Old Saxon fifteen, Dutch vijftien, Old High German finfzehan (modern German funfzehn), Old Icelandic fimtān, and Gothic fimftaihun.

fifth adj. Before 1325 fyfthe; earlier fifte (probably about 1200); developed from Old English fifta (827), from fif FIVE + -ta; for suffix see -TH². Old English fifta is cognate with Old Frisian fifta, Old Saxon fifto, Dutch viijfde, Old High German fimfto (modern German funfte), Old Icelandic fimmti, and Gothic fimfta. Fifth, with the spelling -th, was a re-formation in Middle English of earlier fifte, on analogy with fourth, seventh, ninth, etc.

fifty adj. Probably before 1200 fifti; developed from Old English fiftig (about 725, in Beowulf), from fif five + -tig group of ten, -TY¹. Old English fiftig is cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon fiftich, Dutch viijftig, Old Icelandic fimmti, and Old High German finfzig (modern German funfzig).

fig n. Probably before 1200 fige, borrowed from Old French fige, figue, from Old Provençal figa, from Vulgar Latin fica*, from Latin figus fig tree, fig. In Middle English the form fike fig, coexisted with fige until about 1500, and developed from Old English fic, borrowed from Latin figus fig.

fight v. 1122 fihten, developed from Old English (about 900) fehtan to fight; cognate with Old Frisian fiuchta to fight, Middle Dutch and Middle Low German vechten, and Old High German fehntan to fight (modern German fechten to fence, fight), from Proto-Germanic feuhtanan*. —n. Probably before 1200 fihte, developed from Old English feoht a fight (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian fiucht a fight, Old Saxon fehnta, Dutch gevecht, and Old High German gifeht (modern German Gefecht); all derived from the same Germanic source. —fighter n. Before 1325 fighter, developed from Old English feohtere.

The spelling with gh developed in Middle English before 1325 when scribes about 1100 began to substitute gh for γ and for earlier ȝ, especially before t.

figment n. Probably before 1425, literary myth; borrowed from Latin figmentum something formed or fashioned, figure, creation; for suffix see -MENT.

figure n. Probably before 1200, numeral; borrowed from Old French figure, learned borrowing from Latin figūra a shape, form, figure; for suffix see -URE. The meanings of a form or shape and of a statue or likeness are first recorded in English before 1300. —v. 1389 figuren to represent; probably from the noun, by influence of Old French figurer, from Latin figūrāre to shape or form, from figūra. —figurative adj. Before 1397 figuratif allegorical, typical; borrowed through Old French figuratif, figurative, or directly from Late Latin figūrātīvus figurative (of speech), from Latin figūrāre; for suffix see -IVE.

—figurehead n. 1765, ornament on the bow of a ship; later, person who is the head of a group, organization, etc., without real authority (1883). —figurine n. 1854, borrowed from French figurine, from Italian figurina, diminutive of figura, from Latin figūra figure.

filament n. 1594, borrowed, possibly by influence of Middle French filament, from New Latin filamentum, from Late Latin filāre to spin, draw out in a long line, from Latin filum thread.

filbert n. About 1390, borrowed from Anglo-French philber, in allusion to Saint Philibert, a Frankish abbot; so called because the nuts ripen near his feast day.

filch v. About 1300 filchen to snatch, take as booty, of unknown origin.

file¹ v. to place (papers, etc.) in order. 1473, put (documents) on record; borrowed from Middle French filer string documents on a wire for preservation or reference, from fil thread or string, from Latin filum thread. —n. 1525, string or wire on which documents are strung for preservation or reference; borrowed from Middle French fil string. The meaning of a catalog or a collection, as of papers, is first recorded in 1566.

file² n. line or row. 1598, line of people; borrowed from Middle French file row, from filer spin (thread), march in file, from Late Latin filāre to spin, draw out in a long line, from Latin filum thread; see FILE¹. —v. 1598, arrange (people) in a line, from Middle French filer.

file³ n. metal instrument for rubbing, smoothing, etc. Probably before 1200 file, vile, developed from Old English feol (before 800 fil, in Mercian dialect), cognate with Old Saxon fila file, Middle Dutch vile (modern Dutch vijsl), Old High German filala (modern German Feile), and Old Icelandic fel, thēl; from Proto-Germanic finhlō*. —v. Probably before 1200 filen, vilen, developed from Old English filian; possibly from the noun in Old English.

filet n. Before 1399, thin slice of meat or bacon; passing into an Anglicized spelling fillet after 1475, and appearing as a reborrowing from modern French in 1841; see FILLET.

filial adj. Before 1425, borrowed probably from Middle French filial, and directly from Late Latin filialis of a son or daughter, from Latin filius son, filia daughter; for suffix see -AL¹. filibuster n. About 1851, in American English Fillibustier, Filibustier; later filibuster (1855) any American who engaged in uprisings in Latin America; borrowed from Spanish filibustero a freebooter, and from French flibustier. The word is recorded earlier in English flibutor pirate or adventurer (before 1587); borrowed from Dutch vrijbutter freebooter. Perhaps French flibustier came from English flibutor, and earlier directly from the Dutch in the form of fribustier. The distinction of nomenclature among the adventurers in the Caribbean area during the 1500's and 1600's is confused by the activities they engaged in. The French buccaneers turned to plundering so that term overlapped with the freebooter or filibuster.

Though the meaning of an act or instance of obstructing legislation by prolonging debate, is first recorded in 1890 in the Congressional Record, it is implied earlier in the sense of legislator who prolongs debate (1853), a sense replaced in the form filibusterer (1855). —v. to engage in a legislative filibuster. 1853, in American English; from the noun.

filigree n. 1693, alteration of filigreen (1682) and earlier filigrane (1668); borrowed from French filigrane filigree, from Italian filigrana (from Latin filum thread + grānum grain).

fill v. Probably about 1200 fillen, developed from Old English (before 1000) fyllan; cognate with Old Frisian fullia, fella to fill, Old Saxon fullian, Dutch vullen, Old High German fullen (modern German füllen), Old Icelandic fylla, and Gothic fulljan from Proto-Germanic fullijanan*. —n. 1250 fill, developed from Old English fyll, fyllu, fyllu full supply (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old High German fulli (modern German Fülle), Old Icelandic fyllr, and Gothic usarfullei great abundance, fullō fullness.

fillet n. Before 1325 filet headband; later, slice of meat or bacon (before 1399); borrowed from Old French filet, diminutive of fil thread; see FILET; for suffix see -ET. —v. 1604, bind with a narrow band; from the noun. The meaning of cut (fish or meat) into fillets, is first recorded in English in 1846.

flip v. About 1450 philippen to flip (something) with the fingers or snap the fingers; possibly imitative of the sound. —n. 1530, a toss with the fingers or a snap of the fingers, from the verb. The meaning of thing that rouses or excites, appeared before 1700.

filly n. 1404 fyly; possibly borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic fylija filly, fyl filly or foal); related to foal.

film n. Before 1400 vilm; later fylme (1440); developed from Old English (about 1000) filmen membrane, skin; cognate with Old Frisian filmene skin from Proto-Germanic filminjan*. The meaning of a thin coat of something is first recorded in English in 1577, and was extended to a coating of chemicals spread on photographic paper, by 1845; then to include the coating and the paper or celluloid, by 1895. The sense of a motion picture was first recorded in 1905. —v. 1602, to cover with, or as if with a film, from the noun. The sense of to photograph is first recorded in 1899. —filmy adj. 1604, formed from English film, n. + *-y*¹.

filter n. Probably before 1425 filtre felt (used to filter liquids); borrowed through Middle French filtre, and directly from Medieval Latin filtrum felt (used to filter liquids), from a Germanic source (compare Old Saxon filt FELT). —v. 1576, pass (a liquid) through a filter; borrowed probably from Middle French filtrer, from New Latin filtrare, from Medieval Latin filtrum felt. —filtrate v. 1612, probably a back formation from filtration; for suffix see -ATE¹. —filtration n. 1605, perhaps borrowed from French filtration (1578), from filtrer to filter; for suffix see -ATION.

filth n. Probably before 1200 fulthe, later filth (before 1325); developed from Old English (about 1000) fyllth; cognate with Old Saxon fulitha foulness, filth, Dutch vuile, and Old High German fulida, from Proto-Germanic fullithō*. —filthy adj. Before 1300 fulthe corrupt, sinful; later filthi unclean (1384); formed from English filth + *-y*¹.

fin n. Old English fin (about 1000); cognate with Middle Low German vinne fin, Middle Dutch vinne fin (modern Dutch vin), Middle High German vinne nail, Swedish fena fin, Norwegian finne fin, from Proto-Germanic finnō*.

finagle v. 1926, American English, possibly a variant of dialectal fainague to cheat or renege (at cards), of unknown origin.

final adj. Before 1338 finale, borrowed through Old French final, and directly from Latin finalis of or pertaining to an end, from finis end. —finality n. 1541, borrowed through Middle French finalité, from Late Latin finalitatem (nominative finalitās), from Latin finalis final; for suffix see -ITY. The word was re-formed in English (1833 or before) from final + -ity. —finalize v. 1922, in Australian English, formed from final + -ize.

finale n. 1783, borrowed from Italian finale final, from Latin finalis final, from finis end. The word was first recorded in an English glossary of terms in music (1724) as an Italian word.

finance n. Probably about 1400 fynance, fenaunce settlement, retribution; borrowed from Middle French finance ending, settlement of a debt, from Old French finance wealth, revenue, extra levy, from Medieval Latin financia money, payment, from finare* pay a fine or tax, from finis a payment in settlement, fine or tax (Latin finis end). The meaning of management of money, is first recorded in English in 1770. —finances pl. 1730, formed in English on the model of earlier French finances, pl. —v. 1827, from finance, n. The earlier obsolete meaning of ransom, appeared about 1616. —financial adj. 1769, formed from English finance, n. + -ial, variant of *-al*¹. —financier n. 1618, borrowed from French financier.

finch n. Probably about 1200 finçq; later fynch (about 1387–95); developed from Old English (before 700) finç; cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch vinke finch (modern Dutch vink), Old High German fincho (modern German Fink), from Proto-Germanic finkiz*, finkjōn.

find v. 1013 finden, developed from Old English findan come upon, alight on (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian finda to find, Old Saxon findan, fithan, Middle and modern Dutch vinde, Old High German findan (modern German finden), Old Icelandic finna, and Gothic finthan, from Proto-Germanic finthanan*. —n. 1825, from the verb. —finding n. About 1300, an abandoned child; later, a discovery, that which is found out.

fine¹ adj. of high quality. About 1250 fin free from blemish, refined, pure; borrowed from Old French fin perfected, of highest quality, from Latin finis end, limit, (hence) acme, peak, height, as in finis boni the highest good, finis honōrum the highest of honors. A number of Romance languages developed this usage from Latin including Old High German fin (modern German fein), Middle and modern Dutch fijn, Icelandic fin, and Swedish fin. —fine arts (1767) —finery n. 1680; formed from English *fine*¹, adj. + -ery.

fine² n. money paid as penalty. About 1250 fin ending, conclusion, borrowed from Old French fin end, from Medieval Latin finis; a payment in settlement, fine, or tax (Latin finis end); see FINANCE.

The sense of payment as punishment for an offense is first recorded about 1399, and developed from a general meaning of payment by way of compensation, especially as a settlement ending a dispute. In English, the original meaning of conclusion, is still used in the phrase in fine. —v. About 1300 finen pay as a ransom or penalty; from the noun.

finesse n. 1528, fineness, delicacy; hence, subtle strategy (1530); borrowed from Middle French finesse fineness, subtlety, from Old French fin subtle, delicate, FINE¹ possibly confused with fineness. —v. 1746, to use a special stratagem for taking a trick in whist; from the noun.

finger n. Before 1121 finger; developed from Old English (about 825) finger; cognate with Old Frisian finger, Old Saxon finger, Dutch vinger, Old High German finger (modern German Finger), Old Icelandic fingr (Norwegian, Swedish and Danish finger), and Gothic figgers, from Proto-Germanic finzraz*. —v. Before 1425 fingeren touch or point at with a finger; from the noun. The meaning of identify a criminal, is first recorded in 1930, and originates from underworld slang. —fingering n. About 1386 fyngerynge the action of using the fingers in playing a musical instrument. —fingermark n. (1840) —finger nail n. (about 1225) —fingerprint n. (1859); v. (1905).

finial n. 1426 fenial putting an end to, binding; later finial, adj. (1433), variant of FINAL.

finicky adj. 1825, dialectal variant, formed from finikin, finicking (1661, dainty, mincing from finical, 1592, too dainty or particular) + *-y*¹. Finical is from English *fine*¹ delicate + -ical, as in cynical, ironical.

finish v. Before 1375 finischen; borrowed from Old French finiss-, stem of finir (alteration of fenir to end), from Latin finire to limit, set bounds, end, from finis boundary, limit, border, end; perhaps related to figere to fix, fasten; for suffix see *-ISH*². The alteration of the older French fenir to finir was influenced by fin end, from Latin finis boundary, limit, end. —n. 1779, from the verb. —finished adj. (1583; from finish, v.)

finite adj. 1410, limited in space or time; borrowed from Latin finītus, past participle of finire to limit, set bounds, end; see FINISH.

fink n. 1903, of uncertain origin (possibly borrowed from German Fink a frivolous or dissolute person; or German Fink finch, in the sense of informer, parallel to old slang sing to turn informer, and stool pigeon an informer; or perhaps the word appeared during the Homestead Strike in 1892, in reference to Pinks or Pinkerton operatives called in to break up the strike). —v. Slang. 1925, American English, from the noun.

Finnish adj. 1789–96, formed from Finn + *-ish*¹, and replacing Finnic (1668) formed from Finn (Old English Finna, pl., corresponding to Old Icelandic Finnr) + -ic.

fiord or fjord n. 1674, borrowing of Norwegian fiord, fjord, from Old Icelandic fiordhr; see FORD, and FIRTH.

fir n. Probably about 1300 fir; later firr (before 1325); firre, perhaps developed from Old English furh-, fyrh- (found only in furhwudu fir-wood), or more likely borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic fýri fir forest, fura fir, Danish fyr); cognate with Old Saxon furie pine, Old High German forha, foraha pine (modern German Föhre), from Proto-Germanic furHōn*, furHjōn*.

fire n. 1122 fir; found in Old English (about 725) fyr; cognate with Old Frisian fiur, fiör fire, Old Saxon fiur, Dutch vuur, Old High German fiur, fiur (modern German Feuer), Old Icelandic fýri, fýrr flame, and Gothic fōn fire. A Middle English spelling fier (about 1250) is still found in modern English fiery, adj. The spelling fire is first recorded (probably about 1200), but did not become fully established until about 1600. —v. Probably about 1200 furen arouse, excite, inflame; later firen set a fire (before 1393); from the noun. Old English fýrian to supply with fire (recorded once, about 970) is not recorded in Middle English. The informal meaning of dismiss or discharge, is first recorded in 1885 in American English, from the earlier sense of throw (a person) out of a place, recorded in 1871, which is an extension of to discharge a gun, bullet, etc., originally, to apply fire to gunpowder (1530). —firebrand n. (probably before 1300) —firelight n. (about 725, in Beowulf) —fireman n. 1377, tender of a fire; 1714, person hired to put out fires. —firewood n. (1378) firkin n. 1391 ferdkyn, small cask; apparently borrowed from Middle Dutch vierdekijn*, veerdelkijn*, diminutives of vierde, veerde, literally, fourth, fourth part; for suffix see -KIN.

firm¹ adj. fixed, stable. About 1378 ferme, borrowed from Old French ferme, from Latin firmus firm, stable, a dialectal development of pre-Latin fermos*. —v. About 1303 fermen make firm, establish; borrowed through Old French fermer, or directly from Latin firmāre, from firmus, adj. The spelling with i was not established until the late 1500's, modeled on the Latin.

firm² n. business concern. 1744, name or title of a company; borrowed from German Firma a business or name of a business, originally, signature, from Italian firma signature, from firmare to sign, Latin firmāre make firm, affirm, confirm, from firmus firm, stable; see FIRM¹.

firmament n. arch of the sky. About 1250 firmament; borrowed from Latin firmāmentum firmament, literally, a support or strengthening, from firmāre make firm, strengthen, from firmus FIRM¹ fixed; for suffix see -MENT.

Latin firmāmentum was used in the Vulgate to translate Greek sterēōma of the Septuagint, with the meaning of firm or solid structure (from sterēōin make firm, from sterēós firm).

first adj. Probably about 1200 firste, found in Old English fyrst earliest, foremost (963); cognate with Old Frisian ferist, ferost, ferst first, Old Saxon furist first, furisto prince, Middle Dutch vorste prince (modern Dutch vorst), Old High German furist first, furisto prince (modern German Fürst), and Old Icelandic fyrrst first. —adv. Before 1121 first; found in Old English fyrst (963); from the adjective. —n. Before 1393 ferste, from the adjective. —first-born adj., n. (about 1350) —firsthand adj., adv. (1696) —first-rate adj., adv. (1666) firth n. About 1425, Scottish, from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic fiordhr, in the dative case fiordhi; see FORD; FIORD).

fiscal adj. 1563, of or pertaining to a state treasury; borrowed from Middle French fiscal, from Late Latin fiscālis of or belonging to the state treasury, from Latin fiscus treasury, purse, (originally) basket made of twigs; of unknown origin. The general sense of financial, was abstracted from phrases such as fiscal agent (1841) and fiscal year (1843).

fish n. Probably before 1200 fish; earlier fiss (probably about 1175); developed from Old English (about 750) fisc; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon fisc fish, Middle Dutch visc (modern Dutch vis), Old High German fisc (modern German Fisch), Old Icelandic fiskr (Norwegian, Swedish and Danish fisk), and Gothic fisks, from Proto-Germanic fiskaz*. —v. Probably about 1225 fissen, fysshēn, developed from Old English (before 899) fiscian to catch fish; cognate with Old Frisian fiskia to fish, Old Saxon and Old High German fiskōn (modern German fischen), Old Icelandic fiska (Swedish fiska, Norwegian and Danish fiske), and Gothic fiskōn, from Proto-Germanic fiskōjanan*. —fishy adj. Probably about 1475, formed from English fish, n. + *-y*¹. The sense of suspicious, is first recorded in 1840.

fission n. 1841, division of a cell or organism; borrowed, perhaps by influence of earlier fissure, from Latin fissio (nominative fissio) a breaking up or cleaving, from fid-, root of findere to split; for suffix see -ION. The meaning as pertaining to atoms is first recorded in English in 1939. An early general sense of cutting into smaller parts is recorded in 1617, but does not appear again until 1865. —v. to split or divide. 1929; from the noun.

fissure n. Before 1400, borrowed from Old French fissure, or directly from Latin fissūra, from fid-, root of findere to split; for suffix see -URE.

fist n. Probably 1200 fust, later fist (probably before 1300); found in Old English (before 900) fyft; cognate with Old Frisian fest fist, Old Saxon and Old High German füst (modern German Faust), Middle Dutch vuust (modern Dutch vuist), from Proto-Germanic fūHstiz*, earlier funHstiz*.

fistula n. 1373, borrowed from Latin fistula pipe, ulcer, of uncertain origin; see FESTER.

fit¹ n. the way something fits. Before 1250 fitte an adversary of equal power, a match; later, the fitting of one thing to another (1823), and the way something fits (1831). The early meaning is of obscure origin, possibly derived from Old English fitta*, from fitt a conflict or struggle; the later meanings are from the verb. —adj. Probably about 1375 fytt fitting or suitable; possibly from the noun (though not in the present meaning of the adjective, which may be from fite*, past participle of the verb fitten to be suitable). —v. Probably before 1400 fitten to marshal troops; later, to be suitable (probably before 1420). Early use of the verb may be derived from noun sense of an adversary or match (a meaning which itself may have existed in English longer than the record shows); the later meaning of be suitable, probably came from the adjective sense of fitting or proper, perhaps influenced by or even, in some cases borrowed from, Middle Dutch vitten to suit. —fitter n. (1660) —fitting adj. (1535); n. (1607; ittings fixtures or apparatus, 1864). —fitness n. (1580) fit² n. sudden attack, as of anger. Before 1376 fitte an experience of hardship, excitement, pain, etc., probably developed from Old English fitt conflict, struggle, of uncertain origin, though possibly related to *fit*¹, n. The meaning of a sudden sharp attack, paroxysm, is first recorded in English before 1547. —fitful adj. characterized by fits; formed from English *fit*² + -ful. The modern sense of shifting, changing, is first recorded in 1810.

five adj. Before 1175 five, developed from Old English (about 1000) fif; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon fif five, Dutch vijf, all showing loss of n, and with Old High German funf, fimf, funf (modern German funf), Old Icelandic fimm (Norwegian, Danish, and Swedish fem), and Gothic fimf, from Proto-Germanic fimfe*.

fix v. About 1370 fixen set (one's eyes or mind) on something; probably borrowed from Old French fixer, from fixe, fix fixed, from Latin fixus, past participle of figere to fix, fasten. Alternatively Middle English fixen might have developed from an adjective use in English borrowed from Latin fixus, past participle of figere, but the later date of the adjective in English (about 1395) makes this seem doubtful, unless the record of English is defective. Another word in Middle English, fichen to fix or fasten (about 1350), was borrowed from French ficher, fichier (ultimately from Latin figere), but this was gradually displaced by fix.

The meaning of fasten, attach, is first recorded about 1386, that of settle, assign, before 1500, which evolved into adjust, arrange (1663), and repair (1737). The sense of tamper with (a jury, etc.), is found in 1790. —n. 1809, American English, predicament, condition; from the verb. —fixation n. Before 1393 fixacion chemical process, borrowed from Medieval Latin fixationem (nominative fixatio), from fixare to fix; for suffix see -ATION. The sense of emotional attachment, is first recorded in 1910. —fixture n. 1598, act of fixing, probably alteration of Late Latin fixūra (from Latin fixus, past participle), on analogy of mixture; for suffix see -URE. The sense of something fixed or securely fastened is first recorded in 1812.

fizz v. 1665, move with a hiss or sputter; imitative of the sound, and perhaps related to fizzle. —n. 1812, from the verb.

fizzle v. About 1532, to break wind without noise, probably an alteration of obsolete fist (Middle English fisten break wind, 1440) + *-le*³. The meaning of make a hissing sound is first recorded in 1859, preceded by the sense of fail, recorded before 1847. These extended senses may be derived from noun uses. —n. 1598; from the verb, though the senses of the action of hissing (1842), and failure (1846) are not considered as derived from the verb.

fjord n. See FIORD.

flabbergast v. 1772, perhaps an arbitrary formation from flabby (or flapper) and aghost; not from Scottish flabrigastit worn out with exertion, which first appeared in the 1800's.

flabby adj. 1697, variant of flappy flap + *-y*¹. —flab n. 1923, back formation from flabby.

flaccid adj. 1620, borrowed through French flaccide, or directly from Latin flaccidus flabby, from flaccus flabby, of uncertain origin.

flag¹ n. banner. Perhaps 1481; of uncertain origin. This word is found in all modern Germanic languages (for example Danish flag, Norwegian flagg, Swedish flagga, Dutch vlag, German Flagge), but apparently it was first recorded in English, and that is perhaps the source of the other Germanic words. If the word is English in origin, it might be related to FLAG³ (compare Middle English flakken flutter). —v. 1856, in American English, to stop by waving a flag; from the noun.

flag² n. aquatic plant. Before 1387 flagge reed, rush; perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Danish flæg yellow iris, and if semantically related to fluttering or waving in the wind, as reeds do, then perhaps related in form to Old Icelandic flakka to flicker, flutter, which suggests a possible relationship with English *flag*³).

flag³ v. get tired, grow weak. 1545, flap about loosely or hang down; perhaps variant of flakken, flacken to flap or flutter (1393), and possibly more remotely flakeren to flutter or wave (before 1325); both forms probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic flakka to flicker, flutter). The meaning of become limp or droop is first recorded in 1611, followed by that of become feeble or languid, lose strength (1639).

flag⁴ n. flagstone. 1415–16, probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic flaga slab of stone). —flagstone n. (1730) flagellate v. 1623, borrowed from Latin flagellātus, past participle of flagellāre, from flagellum whip, diminutive of flagrum whip, scourge; cognate with Old Icelandic blaka beat back and forth; for suffix see -ATE. Flagellate replaced flagellen (recorded before 1464), borrowed from Latin flagellāre. Also, probably a back formation from flagellatō in some uses. —flagellation n. Before 1415 flagellacyon; borrowed, perhaps through French flagellation, or directly from Latin flagellātiōnem (nominative flagellātiō), from flagellāre; for suffix see -ATION. —flagellum n. 1807, a whip (later, a long whiplike tail or part, as of certain bacteria, 1852); reborrowed from Latin flagellum; see FLAIL. The term is found earlier in Middle English flagelle (before 1398), but disappeared after 1500.

flagon n. 1459, borrowed from Middle French flacon, from Old French flacon, (earlier) flascon, from Late Latin flascōnem bottle; see FLASK.

flagrant adj. Before 1500 flagraunt radiant, glorious; later, flaming, burning (1513); borrowed, probably through French flagrant, from Latin flagrantem (nominative flagrāns) burning, present participle of flagrāre to burn; for suffix see EFFULGENT; for suffix see -ANT. The sense of glaringly offensive or scandalous, is first recorded in 1706.

flail n. Probably about 1200 flegl, suggesting development from Old English flegel*, of which Late Old English (before 1100) figel seems to be a variant corresponding to Middle Dutch, Dutch, and Middle High German vlegel flail, Old High German flegel, and modern German Flegel, and was probably a borrowing of Late Latin flagellum winnowing tool or flail, from Latin flagellum whip. The word is rare before the late 1300's, then recorded as feil, flail, influenced by or reborrowed from Old French flael, flaiel a whip, from Late Latin flagellum. —v. Before 1500 flaylen; from the noun.

flair n. About 1390 flayre fragrance or odor; borrowed from Old French flair odor or scent, from flairer to smell, from Late Latin flagrāre, altered form of Latin fragrāre emit (a sweet) odor; see FRAGRANT. The Late Latin spelling with l developed from Latin fragrāre by dissimilation of r . . r to l . . r.

The meaning of keen perception, literally, power or sense of smell, is first recorded in 1881 as a reborrowing of French flair, from Old French, and the extended sense of special ability, natural aptitude or talent, is first recorded in American English in 1925.

flak n. 1938, antiaircraft gun, borrowed from German Flak, an acronym formed from Fl(ieger)a(bwehr)k(anone), literally, airplane defense cannon (Flieger flier, airplane + Abwehr defense + Kanone cannon). The meaning of antiaircraft fire, is first recorded in 1940 and the sense of a barrage of criticism, is first recorded about 1963, in American English.

flake n. Before 1325, a particle; possibly developed from Old English flacca*, flakes of snow, flac-*, in flaeor flying; probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic flakna to flake off, peel, flak loosened or torn piece, probably related to flā to skin, FLAY). —v. Before 1420 flaken fall in flakes, from the noun. —flaky adj. 1580, formed from English flake, n. + *-y*¹.

flamboyant adj. 1832, of an architectural style with flamelike curves; borrowing of French flamboyant flaming, wavy, present participle of flamboyer to flame, from Old French flamboier, from flambe FLAME; for suffix see -ANT. The sense of showy or ornate (first recorded in 1879), is an extension of brilliantly or flamingly colored (1851). —flamboyance n. 1891, from flamboyant, on analogy of such forms as clairvoyant, clairvoyance; for suffix see -ANCE.

flame n. About 1303 flamme blazing fire, later flawme (about 1340), and flambe (about 1375); borrowed through Anglo-French flaume, flaumba, Old French flamme, flambe or flamble, from Latin flammula small flame, diminutive of flamma flame.

—v. About 1303 flammen; later flaumen (1350); borrowed through Anglo-French flaumer, flaumber, from Old French flammer, flamer, flamber, from the noun flamme, flambe. —flam-mable adj. 1813; formed in English from Latin flammāre set on fire + English -able.

flamenco n. 1896, borrowed from Spanish flamenco, literally, FLAMINGO. Probably first applied to the Gypsy singing and dancing of Andalusia, in reference to the “provocative appearance” of the dancers.

flamingo n. 1565, borrowed from Portuguese flamingo, from Spanish flamingo, variant of flamenco (originally) Fleming, a native of Flanders, from Dutch Vlaming; so called from association of the bird’s coloring with the pinkish complexion of the Flemish or Dutch.

flange n. 1688 flang part that widens out, of uncertain origin; perhaps connected with Old French flanc; see FLANK.

flank n. side. Probably before 1300 flaunke, developed from Late Old English (before 1100) flanc the fleshy part of the side between the ribs and the hip; borrowed from Old French flanc, probably with a replacement of fl for hl from Frankish hlanca* (compare Old High German hlanca loin, side). The military sense of the extreme left or right side of an army in the field, is first recorded in 1548. —v. 1548, to shoot on the flank or sideways; from the noun. The sense of guard, protect, or defend on the flank, is first recorded in 1596.

flannel n. 1300–01 flaunneol a kind of woolen cloth or garment, apparently variant of flany sackcloth (before 1400); borrowed probably from Old French flaine a kind of coarse wool. The traditional source of flannel is Welsh gwlanen woolen material, but the Welsh consonant cluster gw would produce gl as in the name Gwladys which became Gladys.

flap n. Probably before 1300 flappe a blow, stroke, slap; probably imitative of the sound of striking. The meaning of anything that hangs down, such as the flap of a coat, is first recorded in 1522; the sense of a flapping motion or noise, such as the flap of a bird’s wings, is recorded in 1774, and from this meaning evolved the sense of excitement, commotion, agitation (1916). —v. About 1330 flappen dash about, shake; later, beat or strike (about 1350); from flappe, n. —flapjack n. Before 1600; formed from English flap, n. + Jack, personal name used humorously.

flare v. About 1550, spread out (hair), of unknown origin. —n. bright, unsteady light. 1814, from the verb.

flash v. Probably before 1200 flasken to dash or splash, as water, etc.; later flaschen (before 1387); probably imitative of the sound. The meaning of give off a sudden short light or flame, is not recorded in English until 1548, but it is found in the earlier phrase flasshen in a fire burst into flame (probably before 1400). —n. 1566, burst of flame; from the verb. An earlier form, Middle English flaske (1306), parallels the early verb use of splash (water), but there is no record of burst of flame; rather it retained its association with water in the meaning of a rush of water. —flashy adj. 1583, splashing; later, sparkling (1609), and showy, cheaply attractive (before 1690).

flask n. 1355–56 flaske case; later flask cask or keg (1393); borrowed from Medieval Latin flasco, flasca container, bottle, from Late Latin flascō, flascōnem bottle, from a Germanic source (compare Old English flasce, flaxe bottle, Middle Dutch flasce, modern Dutch fles, Old High German flaska, modern German Flasche, and Old Icelandic flaska). The meaning of a glass or metal bottle, especially one with a narrow neck, is first recorded in 1693.

flat¹ adj. level, spread out. Probably about 1300, borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic flatr flat; cognate with Old Saxon flat flat or shallow, Old High German flaz even or flat). —n. 1167, in the place name Kirkeflat; later, level ground (probably about 1390); from the adjective. The musical sense of a half note below natural pitch, is first recorded in 1594. —flatboat n. (1660) —flatfooted adj. (1601) —flatten v. 1375 flatten to prostrate oneself; later, to fall flat (before 1400); replaced by the modern English form flatten make flat (1630), re-formed from English flat, adj. + *-en*¹.

flat² n. 1801, Scottish, floor or story of a house, alteration of Middle English flet room or hall (recorded before 1200), found in Old English flet a dwelling, floor, ground (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon flet (genitive fletties) room, house, Old High German flezzi floor in a house, and Old Icelandic flatr FLAT¹. The meaning of a set of rooms or residence on one floor, is first recorded in 1824.

flatter v. Probably before 1200 flaten praise insincerely; later flatteren (probably about 1225); borrowed from Old French flater to flatter, (originally, stroke with the hand, caress), from Frankish flat* level, flat compare Old High German flaz FLAT¹. —flatterer n. About 1350, formed from Middle English flatteren + *-er*¹. An earlier form flatour (1340) was borrowed from Old French fleteor, flatour. —flattery n. About 1330 flaterie, borrowed from Old French flaterie, from flater to flatter; for suffix see -ERY.

flatulent adj. 1599, borrowed from Middle French flatulent, an irregular formation from Latin flātus (genitive flātūs) a blowing, a breaking wind, from flāre to BLOW² puff. The French form was probably patterned on words like virulent and succulent, also borrowed from Latin. —flatulence n. 1711, vanity, pomposity (figurative sense), from flatulent, on the analogy of such words as eminent, eminence; for suffix see -ENCE.

flaunt v. 1566, to display oneself in flashy clothes; of unknown origin. The transitive use of display ostentatiously, show off, is first recorded in 1827. The form of the word points to a French origin, but no likely French source is evident.

flautist n. 1860, borrowed from Italian flautista, from flauto flute, from Old Provençal flaüt; see FLUTE; for suffix see -IST.

flavor n. Probably about 1380 flavor aroma, odor (usually pleasing); alteration (influenced by savor) of a borrowing from Old French flaour, flaor, flaur smell, odor, from Vulgar Latin flātor odor (literally, that which blows), from Latin flātor blower, from flāre to BLOW² puff. The sense of taste, savor, is first recorded in 1697. However, an earlier use (1671) suggests this sense even though seemingly contrasted with “taste.” —v.

1730–36, to give flavor to, season, from the noun. —flavoring n. 1845, from flavor, v. An earlier form existed in Middle English: 1422 flauryng perfume; borrowed from Middle French flaur.

flaw¹ n. fault, defect. Before 1325 flay a flake; later flaw a flake (probably before 1400), and flawe fragment (probably before 1425); probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Swedish flaga flake, Old Icelandic flaga slab of stone, Icelandic and flā to skin, FLAY). The sense of a defect, fault, is first recorded in 1586, in reference to character, reasoning, etc., and later in reference to material things (1604); probably extended from the original meaning of a fragment. —v. 1423, implied in flaved, flawed, probably meaning “chipped”; past participle of flauen* to chip or flake.

flaw² n. gust. 1513, probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Swedish flaga gust of wind; cognate with Middle Low German vlage gust, assault, Middle Dutch vlāghe, modern Dutch vlaag gust).

flax n. Before 1325 flax flax fibers; earlier in the compound flexland field for flax (1207); developed from Old English flex cloth made of flax, linen (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian flax, Middle Dutch, modern Dutch, and Middle Low German vlax, Old High German flahs (modern German Flachs), from Proto-Germanic flaHsan*. —flaxen adj. About 1450 flaxen, flexon; (earlier in a surname Flaxenmehed 1273); formed from English flax + *-en*².

flay v. Probably about 1300 fleyen, earlier flen (probably about 1225) and flan (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (before 800) flēan; cognate with Old High German flahan to skin, Middle Dutch vlaen, Old Icelandic flā to skin, from Proto-Germanic flaHanan*. The meaning of scold or criticize severely, is found in Middle English before 1333. The spelling flay appeared in the late 1300's but was not established until the mid-1800's.

flea n. Before 1300 flei, developed from Old English (about 700) flēah; cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch vlō flea (modern Dutch vlo), Old High German flōh (modern German Floh), Old Icelandic flō; from Proto-Germanic flauH-*. The spelling flea was not established until after 1550.

fleck v. About 1378, implied in the past participial form flekke spotted; probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic flekka to spot). The verb form in Middle English may be with -ed, assuming the form used with nouns to create such formations as long-legged, where there is obviously no verb form as its base. —n. 1598, spot, blemish, freckle; perhaps from the verb in English; or borrowed from Middle Dutch vlecke spot; corresponding to Middle Low German vlecke spot, blot, Dutch vlek, Old High German flech, flechho (modern German Fleck spot, stain, flecken to spot, stain), and Old Icelandic flekk spot, from Proto-Germanic flek-*.

flection n. 1603 flexion change, modification; borrowed from Latin flexiōnem (nominative flexiō) a bending or turning, from flex-, past participle stem of flectere to bend; for suffix see -ION.

The sense of a bending or a bend, curve, or joint appeared in 1607. In the late 1700's the spelling was altered to flection, by influence of inflection and on analogy with words such as direction, spelling retained in American English.

fledgling n. 1846, young bird; formed from fledge + -ling. The sense of an inexperienced person, is first recorded in 1856. —fledge v. acquire feathers. 1566, from Middle English flegge winged, ready to fly (probably before 1300); developed from Old English -flyge, as in unflyge unfledged; cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch vlugge ready to fly, quick (modern Dutch vlug quick), Old High German flucki (modern German flügge ready to fly, from Middle Low German), from Proto-Germanic fluzja-*. For the development of the English spelling see EDGE.

flee v. Probably before 1200 flien, fleien, developed from Old English (about 825) flēon take flight, run away; cognate with Old Frisian fliā to flee, Old Saxon flīohan, Middle Dutch vliēn (later Middle Dutch and modern Dutch vlieden), Old High German flīohan (modern German fliehen), Old Icelandic flýja, and Gothic thliuhan, from Proto-Germanic fleuHanan*; probably related to Old English flēogan to FLY move through the air.

The past tense and past participle fled became established in the 1400's after a weak past tense fledde and past participle fled or fledd developed (about 1250, by influence of Scandinavian past-tense forms such as Swedish flydde and Danish flyede, corresponding to Old Icelandic past tense flýdha) displacing the Old English forms of the strong verb flēon with its past tense flēah, and past participle flogen.

fleece n. About 1380 flees, developed from Old English (before 1000) flēos, flies, flȳs; cognate with Middle Low German vlūs fleece, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch vlies, Middle High German vlūs (modern German Vlies fleece, Flaus, Flausch thick woolen material or coat). The German forms with v- show the popular etymological association of the word with Latin vellus fleece. —v. 1537, shear (the wool) from a sheep; (hence, figuratively) to obtain by unfair means; from the noun.

fleet¹ n. Before 1147 flete, developed from Old English (before 1000) flēot ship, floating vessel, from flēotan to float; cognate with Old Frisian fliāta to float, Old Saxon flīotan, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch vlieten to flow, Old High German flīozan to flow, float (modern German fließen to flow), Old Icelandic fljóta to flow, float; related to Old English flōwan to FLOW; see also FLOAT. The meaning of a naval force is recorded in Middle English before 1200; later a transferred sense, originally applied to a troop of armed men, appeared before 1400, establishing a usage that led to such applications as a fleet of trucks.

fleet² adj. swift, rapid. Before 1529 flete, probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic fljót swift, related to fljóta to flow, float; see *FLEET*¹). —fleeting adj. 1563, passing swiftly, soon gone; from fleet, v. to drift, probably before 1200, later, to fly, move swiftly (probably about 1200); developed from Old English flēotan to float, swim (about 725, in Beowulf), corresponding to Old Frisian flīāta to flow, Old Saxon flotan, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch vlieten, Old High German fliozan to float, flow (modern German fließen to flow), Old Icelandic fljóta (Swedish flyta, Norwegian flyte, flöta, Danish flyde); compare FLEET¹.

Fleming n. Probably before 1150 flameng; also found in Old English Flæming; borrowed from Old Frisian Fleming.

Flemish adj. Before 1325 flemmysshe, probably borrowed from Old Frisian Flemsche; also possibly formed from earlier English Flem(ing) + *-ish*¹. —n. Before 1325, possibly from the adjective.

flesh n. Probably before 1200 flesch, developed from Old English (before 800) flæsc; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon flesk flesh, Middle Low German vles, Dutch vlees, and Old High German fleisk (modern German Fleisch).

flexible adj. About 1412; borrowed from Middle French flexible, or directly from Latin flexibilis that may be bent, pliant, from flexus, past participle of flectere to bend; of uncertain origin; for suffix see -IBLE. —flex v. Before 1521, possibly a back formation from flexible, after Latin flex-, past participle stem of flectere.

flick n. 1591 flicke; probably imitative of the sound; but it is found in the earlier phrase not worth a flykke worthless, trivial (about 1445). —v. 1816, from the noun.

flicker¹ v. shine with a wavering light. Probably before 1200 flikeren behave frivolously, trifle; later flekeren waver, vacillate (about 1300); developed from Old English (about 1000) flīcorian to flutter, flap so as to beat quickly and lightly; cognate with Low German flickern and modern Dutch flikkeren, and perhaps related to Old English flacor flying, fluttering; cognate with Middle Dutch flackeren to flap, flutter, Middle High German vlackern to flicker (modern German flackern), and Old Icelandic flakka to flicker, flakka to flutter.

The sense of shine with an unsteady light (1605) did not come into common use until the 1800's. —n. 1857, a flickering, from the verb.

flicker² n. woodpecker of North America. 1808, American English, possibly from the habit of flitting to and fro among trees, especially while feeding, thus showing briefly its white spots of plumage on the wings and suggesting wavering light.

flight¹ n. act or manner of flying. Before 1225 flīht, developed from Old English (before 900) flyht a flying, flight, from Proto-Germanic fluhtiz*; related to Old English flēogan to FLY². The spelling flight is first recorded about 1385; for the development of the modern spelling; see FIGHT. —flighty adj. 1552, swift; later, fickle or frivolous (1768–74); formed from English flight + *-y*¹. flight² n. act of fleeing. Probably before 1200 fluht; later flīht (about 1200), not found in Old English, but suggested by corresponding forms in Old Frisian flecht act of fleeing, Old Saxon fluht, Dutch vlucht, Old High German fluht (modern German Flucht), Old Icelandic flōtti, and Gothic thlauhs; from the Germanic source of Old English flēon to FLEE; for spelling see FIGHT.

flimsy adj. 1702, of uncertain origin (perhaps a formation by metathesis of i and l, suggested by film gauzy covering, with the ending patterned on clumsy, lousy, tricksy, and similar adjectives).

flinch v. 1579, draw back, turn aside; probably borrowed from Old French flenchir, flainchir to bend, from Frankish hlankejan*; compare (Middle) High German lenken to bend, turn; see LANK. The meaning of draw back from pain, wince, is first recorded before 1677.

fling v. Probably before 1300 flingen to dash, rush; also to be swung, thrown, or shot forth; probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic flengja to beat, thrash, fling). —n. 1550, especially in have a fling at an attempt or attack on; from the verb; and in make a flying start to do something (1325).

flint n. 1157–63, developed from Old English (about 700) flint flint or rock; cognate with Old High German flins flint, rock, Middle Dutch vlint, Old Icelandic fletta (in compounds) slate, slab, and Swedish flinta stone splinter; related to SPLIT and SPLINTER. —flintstone n. (before 1325) flip¹ v. 1529, as an element in flip-flop; possibly imitative of the sound, but also probably imitative of the form fillip to toss (1450) and possibly even a contraction of it; compare FILLIP. The meaning of get excited about something, is first recorded in 1950. —n. 1692, quick blow or stroke, from the verb, and possibly modeled after flip, v.

flip² n. a hot drink usually containing beer and sugar. 1695, in the sense of a whipped-up mixture, noun use of *flip*¹, v.

flip³ adj. shortened form of FLIPPANT.

flippant adj. 1605, fluent or talkative; perhaps formed from *flip*¹ move nimbly + -ant, on analogy of adjectives such as rampant. The sense of disrespectful or impertinent, is first recorded in 1677.

flirt v. 1553, to turn up one's nose, sneer at; later, to rap or flick, as with the fingers (1563–87); of uncertain origin (possibly related to East Frisian flirt a flick or light blow, and flirtje a giddy girl). The meaning of play at courtship (1777), presumably evolved from the earlier noun sense. —n. 1549, stroke of wit, sneer or jibe; probably from the verb, though first recorded slightly later than the noun. The meaning of a person who plays at courtship, is first recorded before 1732, but is implied in flirtation (1718).

flit v. Before 1200 flutten convey, move, take; later flytten change, vary (1369); and fluttynge passing, transitory (probably before 1387); of uncertain origin, perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic flytja carry away or out, help). —n. 1835, from the verb; earlier flitting, n., act of changing (before 1400).

float v. Probably before 1200 floten, developed from Late Old English flotan (1031); cognate with Middle Dutch vlōten to float, and Old Icelandic flota, from Proto-Germanic flutō-janan*. Also, influenced by Old French floter (modern French flotter), of Frankish origin. —n. Before 1121 flote state of floating, later, fleet of ships (about 1300); developed from a fusion of Old English nouns: flot body of water, and flota ship or fleet; both forms cognate with Old High German flōz fleet, raft, stream (modern German Floss raft), Middle Low German and Middle Dutch vloete stream, raft (modern Dutch vlot raft), and Old Icelandic floti stream, fleet; from the same Germanic source as Old English flēotan to flow, float. The sense of a raft or other objects that float, is first recorded in 1322.

flock¹ n. group. Probably before 1200 floc, developed from Old English floc group of persons (894); cognate with Middle Low German vlocke crowd, flock (of sheep), and Old Icelandic flokk crowd, troop, of unknown origin. —v. About 1300 flocken gather in a group or crowd, congregate; from the noun.

flock² n. tuft of wool. About 1250 flockes, probably borrowed from Old French floc, from Latin flocus (pre-Latin flōcos*). Alternatively, *flock*² may be an inherited word, cognate with Middle Dutch and Middle Low German vlocke (modern Dutch vlok), Old High German floccho down, flock (modern German Flocke).

floe n. 1817, probably borrowed from Norwegian flo layer, slab, from Old Icelandic flō layer, related to flak loosened or torn piece; see FLAKE.

flog v. 1676, a slang term, perhaps originally school slang and therefore a shortened and altered form of Latin flagellare FLAGELLATE, from student exposure to that language.

flood n. 1125 flod inundation; developed from Old English flōd a flowing of water, flood (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon flōd flood, Middle Dutch vloet (modern Dutch vloed), Old High German fluot (modern German Flut), Old Icelandic flōdh, and Gothic flōdus, from Proto-Germanic flōdus*. For development of the vowel see BLOOD. —v. 1663, from the noun.

floor n. Before 1200 flor, developed from Old English flōr floor (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Middle Dutch and modern Dutch vloer floor, Middle Low German vlōr floor-board, meadow, Old High German vlur field, plain (modern German Flur), Old Icelandic flōrr floor of a cow stall, from Proto-Germanic flōruz*. —v. Probably 1440 flooren furnish with a floor; earlier, implied in florynge act of making a floor (1387); from the noun. The meaning of puzzle or confound, is first recorded in 1830. The spelling floor, floore is not recorded before about 1390, and did not become fully established until the mid-1600's.

flop v. 1602, probably variant of FLAP, to indicate a duller or heavier sound. The sense of fall or drop down heavily, is first recorded in 1836, and collapse or fail, in 1919. —n. 1823, the action of flopping; from the verb. The figurative use of a failure, collapse, breakdown, appeared in 1893.

flora n. 1777, New Latin flora, from Latin Flōra name of a Roman goddess of flowers, from flōs (genitive flōris) flower; see BLOOM. The word was popularized in the natural sciences after Linnaeus used it in the title of his work Flora Suecica Swedish Flora (1745). —floral adj. 1753, borrowed, by influence of earlier French floral, from Latin flōrālis of flora or flowers, from Flōra a Roman goddess.

florescence n. 1793, borrowed from New Latin florescentia, from Latin flōrescentem (nominative flōrescēns) blooming, present participle of flōrescere, form expressing the beginning of the action of flōrēre to blossom, FLOURISH; for suffix see -ENCE.

floret n. Probably before 1400 flourette, borrowed from Old French florete, diminutive of flor flower; later, floret (1671), reformed in English from Latin flōris (genitive of flōs flower) + English -et.

florid adj. 1642, bright or blooming; borrowed through French floride flourishing, and directly from Latin flōridus flowery, blooming, from flōs (genitive flōris) flower; see BLOOM. The meaning of ruddy, is first recorded in 1650.

florin n. About 1303 florēn Florentine coin marked with a lily (literally, flower); borrowed from Old French florin, and from Italian fiorino, from fiore flower, from Latin flōrem (nominative flōs) flower; see BLOOM.

florist n. 1623, formed in English from flor-, stem of Latin genitive flōris (nominative flōs flower).

floss n. 1759, found in floss-silk and floss-silk, probably a partial translation of French soie floche, from Old French soye floche (soye silk + floche tuft of wool, from floc *FLOCK*²). An earlier form exists in the surname Flosmonger (1314 Floss may be an earlier borrowing from a Dutch, Scandinavian, or Low German word cognate with English FLEECE: compare Dutch vlos floss, Danish flos, Middle Low German vlūs fleece).

flotation n. 1806 flotation, from float, v. + -ation. The current spelling appeared about 1850, probably by influence of French flottaison (see FLOTSAM), which was used in technical terms translated into English, such as ligne de flottaison line of flotation.

flotilla n. 1711, borrowing of Spanish flotilla, diminutive of flota fleet, from flotar to float, from Germanic forms of float, n. and v. (Dutch vlot raft, and vloeten float; Old High German floz raft, and flozzan float; Old Icelandic floti raft, fleet, flota float, launch; see FLOAT).

flotsam n. 1607 flotsen, found in earlier Anglo-French floteson, in French and Middle French flottaison a floating, from Old French floter to float + -aison, from Latin -ātiō(em); formed from Germanic forms of float, n. and v. (see FLOTILLA). The spelling flotsam is first recorded in 1853, by influence of jetsam.

flounce¹ v. fling the body 1542, to plunge, perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare dialectal Swedish flunsa to plunge, fall with a splash, Norwegian flunsa to hurry). The spelling flounce was possibly influenced by bounce, especially in its earliest uses. Flounce is recorded in the sense of fling oneself about showing anger or impatience in 1761. —n. 1583, from the verb.

flounce² n. wide ruffle. 1713, alteration (probably influenced by *flounce*¹) of earlier frounce pleat, wrinkle, fold (about 1378); borrowed from Old French frounce fold, gather, wrinkle, from Frankish hrunkja* wrinkle (with replacement of Frankish hr- by fr-; also compare Old High German runza, runzala wrinkle, modern German Runzel, and Old Icelandic hrukka), of unknown origin. —v. 1672, to trim, curl, later, to trim or adorn with flounces (1611).

flounder¹ v. struggle awkwardly. 1592, to stumble; of uncertain origin, perhaps an alteration of FOUNDER, influenced by Dutch flodderen to flop about. —n. 1867, act of floundering; from the verb.

flounder² n. a kind of flatfish. 1304–05 flundr; later flounder (1450); borrowed through Anglo-French floundre, Old Norman French flondre, apparently from a Scandinavian source (compare Swedish and Norwegian flundra flounder, Old Icelandic flydhra); related to Middle Low German flundere, vlundere flounder (modern German Flunder).

flour n. Probably about 1225 flur, a special use of flur flower, in the sense of flower being the finest part of meal (compare flour of huete, literally, flower of wheat, 1340, and French fleur de farine fine wheaten flour). The spelling flower for this word was used as late as 1809, and even Johnson's Dictionary (1755) does not recognize the spelling flour, but after about 1830 the modern spelling flour is the accepted form.

flourish v. Probably before 1300 florisen to blossom, flower; later florishen (about 1303), and flourishen (probably about 1350); borrowed from Old French floriss-, stem of florir, from Vulgar Latin flōrīre*, corresponding to Latin flōrēre to bloom, blossom, flower, flourish, from flōs (genitive flōris) a flower; for suffix see -ISH². —n. Before 1500, a blossom; later, bloom, vigor, prosperity (1597); gradually developing from Middle English flourishing. —n. the season of blooming; decoration, embellishment (about 1303).

flout v. 1551, apparently a special use of flowten to play the flute (about 1410); see FLUTE, v. Similar developments of sense are found in the verbs hoot and whistle.

flow v. Old English flōwan (before 830; earlier flēow past tense, probably about 750); cognate with Middle Low German vlōien to flow, Middle Dutch vloien (modern Dutch vloeijen), Old High German flouwen to wash, rinse, and Old Icelandic flāa to flow, flood.

flower n. Probably before 1200 flur blossom of a plant; borrowed from Old French flur, flour, flor, from Latin flōrem (nominative flōs) flower; see FLOUR. The modern spelling flower began to appear probably before 1349 in the form flowre, and became so deeply entrenched that the spelling flour for milled grain, was not completely accepted as a differentiated form until the 1830's; see BOWER for shift in spelling. —v. Probably before 1200 fluren to blossom, flourish, probably from Middle English flur, n., flower. —flowery adj. 1369 floury, formed from Middle English flour, flur flower + -y¹.

flu n. 1839 flue, a shortening of INFLUENZA. The spelling flu is first recorded in 1893.

flub v. 1924, American English. The origin is unknown but it may have been influenced by earlier verbs with similar meanings, such as fluff and flop, and possibly in some as yet undetected way with flubdub bombastic language (1888), though the semantic barrier is hard to overcome. —n. 1952, from the verb.

fluctuate v. 1634, possibly developed from earlier English fluctuate, adj., wavering; borrowed from Latin fluctuātum, past participle of fluctuāre, from fluctus (genitive fluctūs) wave, from past participle of fluere to flow; see FLUENT. Also fluctuate may be a back formation from fluctuation. —fluctuation n. About 1450, borrowed through Middle French fluctuation, or directly from Latin fluctuātiōnem (nominative fluctuātiō), from fluctuāre; for suffix see -ATION.

flue n. 1582 flue; of uncertain origin; possibly with the more generalized meaning of passage or channel connecting it with earlier use, meaning a mouthpiece of a hunting horn (1410), suggesting comparison with Middle English flouen, v., flow, blow steadily (recorded before 1150, and found in Old English flōwan), and with Old French fluie stream.

fluent adj. 1589, borrowed from Latin fluentem (nominative fluens), present participle of fluere to flow; for suffix see -ENT. —fluency n. 1623, abundance; later, a smooth and easy flow (1636); possibly borrowed from Late Latin fluentia flowing, flow, from Latin fluentem, present participle of fluere to flow; or formed from English fluent + -cy, perhaps in part, suggested by, and replacing, earlier English fluence fluency (1607).

fluff n. 1790, apparently a variant of floow, flue woolly substance, down, nap (1589); borrowed perhaps through Flemish vluwe, from French velu shaggy, hairy, from Latin vellus fleece, or perhaps through Vulgar Latin villūtus*, from Latin villus tuft of hair; see VELVET. —v. 1872, move or settle down like fluff, from the noun. The slang meaning of make a mistake in speaking or performing, is first recorded in theater slang (1884).

fluid adj. Probably before 1425 fluide, borrowed possibly through Middle French fluide, and directly from Latin fluidus fluid, flowing, from fluere to flow; see FLUENT. —n. 1661, from the adjective. —fluidity n. 1603, borrowed from French fluidité, from fluide + -ité -ity, or perhaps formed from English fluid + -ity.

fluke¹ n. flat end of each arm of an anchor. 1561, origin uncertain (perhaps a special use of fluke³ fish, because of the resemblance of the anchor's shape to the flat shape of the fish). Fluke, meaning a whale's flattened tail, is first recorded in 1725.

fluke² n. lucky chance. 1857, lucky shot in billiards; of uncertain origin (possibly from English dialect fluke a guess, though this meaning is not recorded before 1876).

fluke³ n. flatfish. Probably before 1400, developed from Old English (before 700) flōc flatfish; cognate with Old Icelandic flōki flatfish, Old Saxon flaka sole of foot, Old High German flah smooth (modern German flach); see PLEASE.

flume n. Probably before 1200 flum stream of water, river; borrowed from Old French flum, from Latin flūmen river, from fluere to flow; see FLUENT.

flunk v. 1823, college slang in American English, to back out, give up, fail; origin unknown (traditionally considered to be an alteration of funk, in British university slang, to be frightened, shrink from, evade).

flunky or flunkey n. 1782, footman, liveried servant, in Scottish dialect; of uncertain origin (traditionally considered a possible alteration of flanker person positioned at either flank, but outside of military use this term is not recorded before 1827). Originally a Scottish term flunky assumed the meaning of a flatterer or toady, in 1855.

fluorescence n. 1852, formed from English fluor colored mineral which exhibits a glowing light in ultraviolet light + -escence. — fluorescent adj. 1853, formed from English fluor + -escent.

fluoride n. 1826, formed from English fluor(ine) chemical element + -ide. — fluoridate v. 1949, back formation from fluoridation. — fluoridation n. 1949, the addition of fluoride to drinking water; formed from English fluoride + -ation. An earlier meaning of process by which a mineral absorbs fluorine, is first recorded in 1904.

fluorine n. 1813, formed from English fluor mineral containing fluorine (New Latin fluor, a term applied by earlier scientists to several minerals, from Latin fluor a flowing, flow, from fluere to flow; see FLUENT) + English *-ine*².

flurry n. 1686, in American English, sudden light fall of snow accompanied by wind; probably formed from English flurr to scatter, fly with whirling noise (1627) + *-y*³, perhaps from an earlier verb flouren to sprinkle, as with flour, sugar, or spices (before 1399), which may be the source of flurr. The sense of a sudden commotion, is first recorded in 1710. — v. Before 1757, agitate or fluster; from the noun. The sense of shower down, as snow, is first recorded in 1883, in American English.

flush¹ v. to spurt. 1548, rush out, flow copiously; probably related to FLUSH³ to fly up suddenly, through the shared notion of sudden movement. The meaning of cause to rush or flow so as to redden the face, is first recorded in 1667. — n. 1529, rush of water, possibly from the verb or from earlier flush, also spelled flusche (1311), which explains the date.

flush² adj. even, level. About 1550, perfect or faultless; later, plentiful, abundantly full or supplied (1603); perhaps an extended use of FLUSH¹ (flow copiously). The meaning of even, level, in the same plane, is first recorded in 1791, perhaps originally applied to a river running full, and therefore level with its banks.

flush³ v. fly up suddenly. About 1250 flisen, flusen; later flusshen (about 1399); perhaps related to flash and its variant flushe (see FLUSH¹ and FLASH) showing a connection with Dutch vlacke and the source of fl-.

flush⁴ n. hand of cards all of one suit. Before 1529, perhaps borrowed from Middle French flus, found also in Old French flux a flowing, as a run of cards, learned borrowing from Latin fluxus FLUX.

fluster v. 1604, to excite with drink, earlier, implied in flöstryng agitation or excitement; probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Icelandic flaustur haste, hurry). — n. 1710, from the verb.

flute n. Before 1325 floute the musical instrument; earlier, implied in flouter a flutist (1225); borrowed from Old French flaute, fleüte, from Old Provençal flaut, of uncertain origin.

The meaning of a channel as one of several on the side of a column, is first recorded in 1660. — fluted adj. 1611, from flute, n. + *-ed*². — flutist n. 1603, probably borrowed from French flûtiste and replacing earlier English flouter (1225).

flutter v. About 1300 floter be tossed by waves; later, fluctuate, shift (about 1380); developed from Old English (before 1000) floterian float to and fro, be tossed by waves, a frequentative form of flotan to float. — n. 1641, a fluttering, from the verb.

flux n. About 1350 flīx excessive flow (of blood); later flux (about 1378); borrowed through Old French flux, or directly from Latin flūxus (genitive flūxūs), from past participle of fluere to flow; see FLUENT. The meaning of continuous succession of changes, is first recorded in 1625. — v. Probably before 1425 fluxen to flow; from the noun.

fly¹ n. insect. Probably before 1200 flehe; later flie, flye (about 1300); developed from Old English (before 800) flēge, flyge; cognate with Old Saxon fliega fly, Middle Dutch vlieghe (modern Dutch vlieg), Middle Low German vlēge, Old High German flioga (modern German Fliege), from Proto-Germanic flewz(j)ōn*, and Old Icelandic fluga. — housefly n. (before 1425) fly² v. move through air with wings. Before 1175 flyen, fleon; developed from Old English flēogan (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian fliāga to fly, Old Saxon fliogan, Middle Dutch vlieghe (modern Dutch vliegen), Old High German fliogan (modern German fliegen), Old Icelandic fljúga, from Proto-Germanic flewzanan*. — n. Before 1450 flie flight, flying; developed from Old English flyge, from flēogan, v. The meaning of something attached by the edge, with the sense of flapping as a wing does, is recorded in the use of a tent flap or fly (1810), and the covering for buttons that close an opening on a garment (1844). — flier or flyer n. 1440, thing that flies, earlier Flier (1289, as a surname); formed from Middle English flyen + *-er*⁴. The meaning of aviator, is first recorded in 1934, but probably developed earlier during World War I. — flying saucer unidentified flying object (1947).

foal n. Before 1200 fole; developed from Old English (about 950) fola; cognate with Old Frisian fola foal, Old Saxon folo, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch veulen, Old High German folo (modern German Fohlen, Füllen), Old Icelandic foli, and Gothic fula, from Proto-Germanic fulōn*. — v. to give birth to a foal. Before 1387 folen, from the noun.

foam n. About 1275 fom something unstable; later, saliva (1290), and froth on the seashore (before 1393); developed from Old English (before 700) fām foam, froth; cognate with Old High German feim foam, from Proto-Germanic faima-*.

—v. Probably about 1375 (in northern dialect) famen to flow over, flood; later fomen to froth at the mouth, slaver (about 1395; developed from Old English fāmgian to foam (about 725). —foamy adj. About 1385 fomy, developed from Old English (before 1000) fāmig, from fām foam; for suffix see -Y¹.

fob¹ n. piece of leather, ribbon, etc., that hangs from a pocket, and is usually attached to a watch. 1653, small pocket for valuables; of uncertain origin (compare Low German Fobke little pocket and dialectal German Fuppe pocket).

fob² v. Probably about 1375 fobben cheat or trick, impose upon; from the noun fobbe cheat, trickster (also about 1375), or perhaps related to FOP, n. The phrase fob off to put off deceitfully, try to satisfy with an excuse or pretense, is first recorded in 1597.

focus n. 1644, point at which sound waves meet; New Latin focus central point, from Latin focus hearth, fireplace. The New Latin use was in reference to the burning point of a lens (at which heat rays meet). The transferred meaning of center of activity or energy, is first recorded in 1796. —v. 1775, bring into focus; from the noun. —focal adj. 1693, formed from English focus, n. + -al¹.

fodder n. Probably before 1200 fodder, developed from Old English (about 1000) fōdor, related to fōda FOOD. Compare UDDER.

foe n. Probably before 1200 fo, developed from Old English (about 1000) gefā adversary in deadly feud, from fāh, fā at feud, hostile (about 725, in Beowulf), from Proto-Germanic faiHaz*; cognate with Old High German fēhan to hate, gifēh hostile, and Gothic bifaihō envy; see FEUD¹ quarrel.

fog n. 1544, thick mist; probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Danish fog spray or shower, especially in sne-fog snowstorm, Old Icelandic fok snow flurry, ffūk snowstorm, ffūka be driven by the wind). —v. 1599, envelop with or as with fog; from the noun. —foggy adj. 1544, perhaps formed from English fog, n. + -y¹, or possibly borrowed directly from a Scandinavian source.

fogy or fogey n. 1780 foggie (Scottish), originally applied to an army pensioner or veteran; indeterminately related to earlier fogram (noun 1775, old-fashioned person; adjective 1772, antiquated).

foible n. Before 1648, weak point of a sword blade; borrowed from French foible, n. (now obsolete and replaced by faible), from foible, adj., weak, from Old French foible, feble FEEBLE. The general meaning of a weak point or failing, is first recorded in 1673.

foil¹ v. baffle. Probably before 1300 foilen to trample down, later, to spoil a trace or scent by running over it (about 1410); perhaps borrowed from Old French fouler trample, from Vulgar Latin fullāre* to clean cloth, from Latin fullō one who cleans cloth, fuller. The meaning of overthrow or defeat is first recorded in 1548, and that of frustrate the efforts of, in 1564.

foil² n. very thin sheet of metal. About 1325 foyle, borrowed from Old French feuille, foille leaf, from Latin folia leaves, plural of folium leaf; see FOLIAGE.

foil³ n. light sword with a blunt end, used in fencing. 1594, of uncertain origin (possibly from *foil*¹ to frustrate or blunt the efforts of, in the sense of a blunted weapon).

foist v. 1545, probably borrowed from dialectal Dutch vuisten take in hand, from Middle Dutch, from vuist FIST. The earliest use referred to concealment of a flat die in the palm of the hand, in order to cheat at dice.

fold¹ v. bend over on itself. About 1250 folden, developed from Old English, Mercian Dialect faldan, in West Saxon fealdan (before 899); cognate with Middle Low German volden to fold, Middle Dutch vouden (modern Dutch vouwen), Old High German faldan (modern German falten), Old Icelandic falda, Gothic falthan, from Proto-Germanic falthanan*. —n. About 1250 fold; from the verb. —folder n. 1552, one who folds, from fold, v. + -er¹. The meaning of a folding cover for loose papers, is first recorded in 1911.

fold² n. pen for animals, especially sheep. Before 1200 fold; developed from Old English (before 700) falded, fald, falod; cognate with Old Saxon fald pen, enclosure, Middle Low German vālt enclosure, dunghill, Middle Dutch vaelt, and modern Dutch vaalt dunghill, of unknown origin.

—fold a suffix meaning: ——— times as many, as in tenfold, or formed or divided into ——— parts, as in manifold. Old English Northumbrian dialect -fald, in West Saxon -feald; cognate with Old Frisian -fald, -faldech -fold, Old Saxon -fald, Dutch -voud, Old High German and modern German -falt, Old Icelandic -faldr, Gothic -falths.

foliage n. 1447 foylage; later foillage, feillage (1601); borrowed from Middle French feuilleage, foillage, from Old French feuille, foille leaf, from Latin folia leaves, plural of folium leaf; for suffix see -AGE. The modern spelling (1664) is in imitation of Latin folium leaf which was accompanied by a shift in i and l that disguises the connection with foil; see FOIL².

foliate adj. 1626, beaten into a thin sheet or foil; later, resembling a leaf (1658); borrowed from Latin foliatus leaved, leafy, from folium leaf; for suffix see -ATE. —v. 1665, to apply silver leaf to; later to beat into leaf or foil (1704), and put forth leaves (1775); possibly a back formation from foliation, or more likely, from foliate, adj. —foliation n. 1623, the leafing of a plant; borrowed possibly from French foliation, or directly from Latin foliatus; for suffix see -ATION.

follic acid 1941 follic (from Latin folium leaf + English -ic; so named because of its abundance in green leaves, such as those of spinach).

folio n. 1447, borrowed from Late Latin foliō leaf or sheet of paper, from Latin foliō, ablative of location (usual in page references) of folium leaf. The meaning of a sheet of paper folded once, first recorded in 1582, is a borrowing from Italian in foglio, from Latin foliō.

folk n. Old English folc common people, tribe, multitude follicle n. Probably before 1425 follicule, borrowed from Latin folliculus little bag, diminutive of follis bellows (literally, leather bag for inflating).

(about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian folk people, folk, Old Saxon, Middle Low German, and Middle Dutch volc (modern Dutch volk), Old High German folc (modern German Volk), and Old Icelandic folk band of warriors, troop, people; from Proto-Germanic folkan*. —folksy adj. 1852, in American English, sociable or informal; formed from English folks, n.pl. + *-y*¹.

follow v. Probably before 1200 folwen, follewen, later folowen (about 1340); developed from Old English folgian (about 725, in Beowulf); related to fylgan to follow; cognate with Old Frisian folgja, fulgia, Old Saxon folgon, Middle Dutch volghen (modern Dutch volgen), Old High German folgēn (modern German folgen), and Old Icelandic fylgja; from Proto-Germanic fulǵ-*. —follower n. Probably before 1200 folhere, developed from Old English folgere (folgian + -ere -er¹); cognate with Old Frisian folgere, Old High German folgari (modern German Folger). —following n., adj. (before 1325 foluing).

folly n. Probably before 1200 folie, borrowed from Old French from fol FOOL; for suffix see *-y*³.

foment v. About 1425 fomenten apply hot liquids; borrowed from Middle French fomentier, or directly from Late Latin fōmentāre, from Latin fōmentum warm application, from fōvēre to warm, cherish, encourage. The extended sense of stimulate, instigate (an action or course, especially trouble), is first recorded in 1622, possibly from the same sense in French.

fond adj. About 1340 fonnyd foolish, silly; later fond (probably about 1375); developed from past tense of fonnen to fool, be foolish, perhaps from fonne fool (before 1325), of uncertain origin; possibly related to FUN, v. The meaning of foolishly tender, is first recorded in 1579, followed by the sense of having strong affection for (1590).

fondle v. 1694, pamper, found earlier in the participial form fondling (1676); developed as a frequentative form of earlier fond dote upon (1530), a special use of FOND, adj.; for suffix see *-LE*³. The sense of caress, is first recorded in 1796.

fondue n. 1878, a French term first recorded in a cooking dictionary, originally, feminine past participle of fondre melt; see FOUND² melt.

font¹ n. basin holding water for baptism. Old English (about 1000) font, fant; borrowed from Latin fōns (genitive fontis) fountain, spring (in Medieval Latin fons baptismalis baptismal font).

font² n. set of type of one size and style. 1578, a casting; borrowed from Middle French fonte, from feminine past participle of fondre melt; see FOUND² melt.

food n. Probably before 1200 fode, later foode (before 1387) and food (1420); developed from Old English fōda (about 1000), from Proto-Germanic fōdōn*; also related to fōdor fodder (from fool n. Probably about 1200 fol; later fool (about 1375); borrowed from Old French fol, from Latin folis bellows, leather bag (in late Vulgar Latin used in the sense of windbag, empty-headed person, fool). —v. About 1350 foolen be foolish, act like a fool; later fool make a fool of (1596); borrowed through Anglo-French foler to play the fool, from Old French foler, folier, from fol, n. —foolhardy adj. Before 1250 folherdi, borrowed from Old French fol hardi. —foolish adj. Before 1325 foles, later foolish (1380); formed from Middle English fol, n. + -ish. —foolscap n. Before 1700, from fool's and cap, because this type of paper was originally watermarked with a cap worn by court jesters. —fool's gold a mineral (1872, in American English).

Proto-Germanic fodran*, which is cognate with Old High German fuotar food, fodder (modern German Futter), Old Icelandic fōdhr fodder, fēdha, fēdhi food, and Gothic fōdeins food; see also FEED.

foot n. About 1125 foet; later foot (before 1325); developed from Old English fōt (about 725, in Beowulf), from Proto-Germanic fōt*; cognate with Old Frisian fōt foot, Old Saxon fōt, fuot, Dutch voet, Old High German fuoz (modern German Fuss), Old Icelandic fōtr, and Gothic fōtus.

As a linear measurement foot is first recorded in Old English (before 1000). The sense of being at the bottom of something (at a person's feet) is also recorded in Old English about 950), and the figurative meaning to be subject to another (under one's foot) is found in Old English (about 825). —v. Probably before 1400 footen move the foot, dance, from foot, n. The informal sense of pay (a bill), is first recorded in 1848, from the meaning of place the sum at the foot of a bill. —footage n. 1892, piecework system to pay miners; later, length (in feet) of motion-picture film (1916); formed from English foot, n. + -age. —football n. (1409) —foothills n. pl. (1850, in American English) —footing n. 1296, in building; later, position of the feet on the ground (before 1398). —footman n. (probably before 1300) —footstep n. (before 1250) fop n. 1440 foppe foolish person, of uncertain origin (compare German foppen to cheat, deceive; perhaps related to FOB² to cheat). The sense of one who is foolishly attentive to his appearance, dandy, is first recorded in 1672–76.

for prep. Old English for for, before, on account of (about 725, in Beowulf), from Proto-Germanic fura*; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon for, Middle Dutch vore (modern Dutch voor), Old High German fora before, furi for (modern German für, vor), Old Icelandic fyr for, and Gothic fair. The use of for and fore was gradually differentiated in Middle English from the previous interchangeable use of Old English. —conj. About 1123 for, abstracted from Old English phrases, such as for than the for the (reason) that, because, since.

for- a prefix meaning away, opposite, as in forbear, forgo, or completely, as in forlorn, forsake. Old English for-, fær-; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon for-, Old High German fra-, fir-, far-, Dutch and German ver-, Gothic fra-, fair-, faür-, Old Icelandic fon-, fynin-; related to the root of Old English for FOR.

forage n. Before 1333 forage, borrowed from Old French forage, fouage pillage, forage, from fuerre fodder, straw, from Frankish fōdr* food (compare Middle Low German vōder, Old High German fuotar fodder, FOOD). The term is also found in Anglo-Latin foragium, farragium (about 1273). —v. 1417, borrowed from Middle French fourager to plunder, collect forage, from fouage, n. —forager n. Probably before 1387, something that afflicts, borrowed from Old French forragier, fouragier, from forage, fouage, n.; for suffix see -ER¹.

foray v. 1375 (Scottish), back formation from earlier forreyer, forrier raider, forager (before 1338 foreri); borrowed from Old French forrier, from forrer to forage; related to fuerre fodder; see FORAGE. —n. About 1375 (Scottish), from the verb. The word fell into disuse in the 1600's, but was revived in the 1800's by Scott.

forbear¹ v. abstain, refrain. 1137 forberen refrain from destroying; developed from Old English forberan bear up against, control one's feelings, endure (about 725, in Beowulf), formed from for- against (related to Old English for FOR) + beran to BEAR² carry. —forbearance n. 1576, a refraining from enforcing payment of debt; formed from *forbear*¹ + -ance. The meaning of refraining from, is not recorded before 1591.

forbear² n. 1470, an ancestor, forebear; formed from English for-, fore- + beer (be + *-er*¹) one who exists; now replaced by forebearer (1578).

forbid v. Probably about 1175 forbēden; later forbiden (about 1425); developed from Old English forbēodan (about 725); formed from for- against (related to Old English for FOR) + bēodan to command; see BID. Old English forbēodan is cognate with Old High German farbiotan, Middle High German and modern German verbieten, Dutch verbieden, Old Icelandic fyrirbjōdha, and Gothic faurbiudan, showing the process of formation was not confined to English.

force n. Probably before 1300 fors, later force (before 1325); borrowed from Old French force, from Late Latin fortia, from neuter plural of Latin fortis strong; see FORT. —v. Probably before 1300 forcen, borrowed from Old French forcier, from Vulgar Latin fortiāre*, from Late Latin fortia force. —forcible adj. About 1422, borrowed from Middle French forcible.

forceps n. 1563, borrowed from Latin forceps (compound of formus hot + the root of capere to take, hold).

ford n. Old English ford (before 899), and found in such place names as Hartford, Oxford. Old English ford is cognate with Old Frisian forda, Old Saxon and Low German ford, Old High German furt (modern German Furt), from Proto-Germanic furdús*; also found in place names such as Frankfurt, and Old Icelandic fjörðr fiord. —v. to cross shallow water. 1614, from the noun.

fore adv., prep. Old English fore, prep., before, in front of (about 725, in Beowulf); Old English fore, adv., before, previously (about 750); cognate with Old Frisian fora, fara before, fore, Old Saxon and Old High German fora (modern German vor), Old Icelandic fyrir, and Gothic faurā; from the same Germanic source as Old English for FOR. —adj. Before 1450, forward; later, former, or earlier (1490); and, in or at the front (1500–20); abstracted from compounds such as forecast, forepart (fore- + cast, part). Since such compounds were sometimes written as two words, the first element came to be treated as an adjective. —n. front part. 1636 (as in to the fore in the front, ready at hand); from the adjective. —interj. (in golf) 1878, probably a contraction of before.

fore- a combining form meaning front; in front, as in foreman, foremast, or before, beforehand, as in forewarn, forerunner. Found in Old English fore-, unstressed form of FORE, adv.

forearm¹ n. 1741, formed from Middle English fore- + *arm*¹ limb of the body.

forearm² v. 1592, formed from Middle English fore- + *arm*² take up weapons.

forecast v. About 1400, implied in forecasting; formed from Middle English fore- + casten contrive. —n. About 1422; probably from the verb.

forecastle n. 1407 forcastelle; earlier Anglo-French forechasteil (1338); probably formed from Middle English fore- + castel fortified tower, after earlier Anglo-French.

foreclose v. About 1300, borrowed from Old French forclōs, past participle of forclōre exclude (for- out + clōre to shut). —foreclosure n. 1728, formed from English foreclose + -ure.

foreground n. 1695, formed from English fore- + ground.

forehead n. Probably before 1200, found in Old English forhēafod, fore-hēafod, formed from for-, fore- + hēafod head.

foreign adj. About 1250 ferren; later foreyne (about 1380); borrowed from Old French forain, forein, from Late Latin forānus on the outside, exterior, (generally found as forāneus), from Latin foris, forās outside, literally, out of doors, from a lost noun fora*, (related to foris DOOR), and altered from fura* by influence of foris. The spelling with g is possibly the result of a confused association with reign and sovereign and is first recorded in 1565, but did not become fully established until the late 1600's. —foreigner n. 1413 foreyner; later foreigner (1565) outsider, from Middle English foreyne + *-er*¹.

foreman n. 1222 forman; formed from for-, fore- + man.

foremost adj. Before 1525 formoste, alteration of formeste (probably before 1200, the superlative of forme first); developed from forme, adj. first and Old English fyrmost earliest, first (about 725, in Beowulf; the superlative of forma); related to fruma beginning. Old English forma is cognate with Old Frisian forma first, Old Saxon formo, and with Old Icelandic frum-first, and Gothic fruma first. —adv. 1551 formoste, alteration of Middle English formest (before 1225); developed from the adjective in Middle English and Old English.

forensic adj. 1659, shortened form of earlier forensical (1581, formed from Latin forēns-, stem of forēnsis of a forum, place of assembly + English -ical), or perhaps formed from forēns- + English -ic.

foresee v. About 1384 forsen, developed from Old English fore- sēon (fore- + sēon to see, see ahead). —foreseeable adj. 1804, formed from English foresee + -able.

forest n. Probably before 1300, borrowed from Old French forest, usually considered a learned borrowing from Late and Medieval Latin forestem silvam the outside woods. The phrase has two senses which carry over into Middle English: a large, wooded area; and a wooded area at the disposal of a king or other high nobleman, often enclosed, and devoted usually to hunting. But the sense is taken to refer to the woods lying outside of a park, from Latin foris outside (literally, out of doors), from a lost noun fora*, related to foris DOOR, and altered from fura*, by influence of foris. Alternatively, it has been proposed that Old French forest was a borrowing from Old High German forst forest (originally, fir forest), from Medieval Latin. —v. 1818, from the noun. —forested adj. 1612, formed from English forest, n. + *-ed*². —forester n. About 1300 forester; later forster, foster (before 1387); borrowed from Old French forestier, from forest; for suffix see *-ER*¹. —forestry n. 1693 (in Scottish law) the privileges of a royal forest; borrowed from Old French foresterie, from forest; for suffix see -ERY. The meaning of science of cultivating and managing forests, is first recorded in 1859.

forestall v. Before 1350 forstallen to intercept (goods) before they reach the market, from the earlier noun forestal an intercepting or waylaying, ambush (about 1120); developed from Old English foresteall (about 1000, a compound of fore before + steall standing position, *STALL*¹).

forever adv. Before 1375 for ever; later forever (1670).

foreword n. 1842, formed from fore- + word, perhaps modeled on, or a loan translation of, German Vorwort preface, modeled on Latin prae-fatiō preface.

forfeit n. Before 1376 forfet penalty for a crime, borrowed from Old French forfait crime, originally past participle of forfaire transgress (for- outside, beyond, + faire do). —v. About 1350 forfeten to transgress or sin; probably borrowed from Old French forfait, past participle of forfaire transgress. —forfeiture n. Before 1338 forfeture, borrowed from Old French forfaiture, from forfait crime; for suffix see -URE.

forge¹ n. smithy. 1279, borrowed from Old French forge, earlier faverge, from Latin fabrica workshop, from faber (genitive fabri) workman in hard materials, smith. —v. About 1350 forger make, shape, create; borrowed from Old French forgier, from Latin fabricāre fabricate, from fabrica. The meaning of make a fraudulent imitation, counterfeit, is first recorded before 1325, influenced by Anglo-French forger to forge, falsify. —forgery n. 1583 forgerye invention, fiction, a deceit; later, the action of counterfeiting or falsifying (1593); formed from English *forge*¹ + -ery.

forge² v. move forward steadily. 1769; earlier, probably in a figurative use (1611), of uncertain origin; perhaps a transferred use of *forge*¹, with reference to the effect of steadily hammering away at something.

forget v. Before 1250 forgeten, developed from Old English (about 725) forgytan (for- away, amiss, opposite + -gietan or -getan get, as in begietan beget); corresponding to Old Frisian forjeta forget, Old Saxon forgetan, Dutch vergeten, and Old High German firgezzan (modern German vergessen).

The Old English form was respelled under the influence of Middle English geten to get, acquire. —forgetful adj. About 1384 forgetful, formed from forget + -ful.

forgive v. Before 1121 implied in forgifenness; developed from Old English (about 900) forgiefan give, grant, forgive (for- completely + giefan GIVE), corresponding to Old Saxon fargeban give, forgive, Dutch vergeven forgive, Old High German firgeban (modern German vergeben), Old Icelandic fyrirgefa, and Gothic fragiban. The Old English form was respelled in Middle English by analogy to forgive.

forgo or forego v. Probably before 1200 forigon do without; give up; developed from Old English (about 950) forgān go away, pass over, forgo (for- away + gān GO); associated with Middle High German vergān, vergēn forgo (modern German vergehen pass away).

fork n. Probably before 1200 forken, pl. gallows; later fork a forked weapon (probably before 1300), and pitchfork (about 1325); developed from Old English forca forked instrument used by torturers (about 1000); borrowed from Latin furca pitchfork, of uncertain origin; however, many of the Germanic languages borrowed the word, including Old Frisian forke, Old Saxon furka, Middle Dutch vorke Old High German furcha, and Old Icelandic forkr, generally with the meaning of pitchfork. Old North French forque fork (from Latin furca), influenced the meaning of instrument for eating, first recorded in 1463. —v. Before 1325 forken divide into branches, from the noun.

forlorn adj. 1137 forloren disgraced, dishonored; repudiated; later forlorn forsaken, abandoned (1535), past participle of forlesen be deprived of, lose, abandon (1102); found in Old English forlēosan (about 725, in Beowulf); from for- completely + -lēosan to LOSE. Past participles corresponding to Middle English forloren include Old High German furlorn, firloran (modern German verloren) lost, and Dutch verloren.

The sense of wretched, miserable, is first recorded in 1582.

form n. Probably before 1200 furme, later forme (about 1300); borrowed from Old French forme, learned borrowing from Latin fōrma form, mold, shape, case. —v. About 1300 formen, formen; borrowed from Old French former, from Latin fōrmāre, from fōrma form, mold, etc. —formation n. Before 1398 formacioun, borrowed through Old French formation, or directly from Latin fōrmatiōnem (nominative fōrmatiō), from fōrmāre to form. —formative adj. 1490, borrowed from Middle French formatif, formative, from forme, n.; for suffix see -ATIVE.

-form a combining form meaning having the form of _____, as in cuneiform, or having _____ form or forms, as in multiform. Borrowed through French -forme, or directly from Latin -fōrmis, from fōrma shape, FORM.

formal adj. About 1390 formal, borrowed through Old French formel, and directly from Latin fōrmālis, from fōrma FORM; for suffix see *-AL*¹. —n. 1605, plural, things that are formal; later, formal concept (1903, in philosophy) and formal dress (1941); from the adjective. —formality n. 1531, literary form, agreement as to form, borrowed from Middle French formalité, from Latin fōrmālis formal; for suffix see -ITY. The meaning of convention, something done for the sake of form, is first recorded in 1597. —formalize v. 1597, formed from English formal + -ize.

formaldehyde n. 1872, formed from form-, abstracted from form(ic acid) + aldehyde, New Latin formation abstracted from al(cohol) dehyd(rogenatum) dehydrogenized alcohol.

format n. 1840, borrowed from French format, from German, from New Latin liber formatus book formed (in a special way); from Latin fōrmātus, past participle of fōrmāre to FORM. —v. 1964, from the noun.

former adj. Before 1375 former, comparative of forme first (patterned on formest foremost); see FOREMOST. Earlier (about 1160) use of former may be that of a Middle English innovation appearing in an Old English text. The striking significance of former is that it assumes the function of a comparative formed on an old superlative (the m in forme and Old English forma is a superlative element). —formerly adv. 1596, formed from English former + -ly¹.

formic acid 1791, formed in English by shortening of Latin formica ant + English suffix -ic (so called because it was first obtained from red ants); see PISMIRE.

formidable adj. About 1450 formydale; borrowed from Middle French formidable, learned borrowing from Latin fōrmīdā-bilis, from fōrmīdāre to fear, from fōrmīdō terror or dread; for suffix see -ABLE.

formula n. Before 1638, a set form of words used in a ceremony or ritual; borrowed from Latin fōrmula form, rule, method, formula (literally, small form), diminutive of fōrma FORM; for suffix -la see English equivalent -LE¹.

The sense of prescription or recipe, is first recorded in 1706, the mathematical use (algebraic formula) in 1796, and that in chemistry (as in molecular formula) in 1846. —formulate v. 1860, express in a formula; formed from English formula + -ate, possibly by influence of earlier French formuler. —formulation n. 1876; formed from English formulate + -ion, possibly after earlier French formulation.

fornication n. About 1303 fornycacyoun, borrowed from Old French fornication, learned borrowing from Late Latin fornicātiōnem (nominative fornicātiō), from fornicārī fornicate, from Latin fornix (genitive fornicis) arch, vault, brothel, probably from forus, furnus oven of arch or dome shape. In ancient Rome prostitutes traditionally solicited under the arches of certain buildings. —fornicate v. 1552, borrowed from Late Latin fornicātus, past participle of fornicārī fornicate; for suffix see -ATE¹. In later instances, fornicate may have been a back formation from earlier fornication.

forsake v. Probably before 1200 forsaken decline, refuse, also cease, abandon, desert; developed from Old English (about 700) forsacan decline or refuse (for- completely + sacan to deny, refuse). —forsaken adj. About 1250, from the verb.

forsooth adv. Probably before 1200 forsoth, developed from Old English forsōth (before 899), also found as for sōth, from for and sōth truth.

forswear v. Probably about 1175 forsweren; developed from Old English forswerian forswear, swear falsely (about 725, in Beowulf; compound of for- completely + sverian to SWEAR).

forsythia n. 1814, American English; New Latin Forsythia, the genus name, in allusion to William Forsyth, Scottish horticulturist who brought the shrub from China.

fort n. Probably before 1375 forte courage, fortitude; later, fortress, stronghold (1435); borrowed from Middle French fort, noun use of Old French fort, adj., strong, fortified, from Latin fortis strong; see BARROW.

forte n. something one does very well. 1648, strong part of a sword blade; later fort strong point of a person's abilities (1682); borrowed from French fort strong point, fort, from Middle French fort FORT. The final -e was added in the 1700's, on analogy with Italian forte strong.

forth adv. Before 1121 forth; developed from Old English (before 700) forth forward, onward; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon forth forward, onward, Dutch voort, Middle High German vort (modern German fort), from Proto-Germanic furtha-*; related to Old English for FOR and FURTHER. —forthcoming adj. 1531–32; formed from forth + coming, after earlier forthcomen (about 1250), found in Old English forthcuman (before 1000). —forthright adj. About 1290, found in Old English forthriht (about 1000); formed from forth + riht right. —forthwith adv. Before 1325 forthwit, earlier forthwith, prep. (probably about 1200); formed from forth + with, possibly also influenced by earlier forthmid (1120, prep. 1114), found in Old English forth mid.

fortify v. Probably before 1425, increase efficacy (of medicine), later, to provide with fortifications (1433); borrowed from Middle French fortifier, learned borrowing from Late Latin fortificāre, from Latin fortis strong; see FORT; for suffix see -FY. —fortification n. 1429, strengthening; later, defensive earthwork, tower (1435); borrowed from Middle French fortification, from Late Latin fortificātiōnem (nominative fortificātiō), from fortificāre fortify; for suffix see -ATION.

fortitude n. 1422, possibly borrowed from Middle French fortitude; earlier fortitudo (before 1175); borrowed from Latin fortitūdō strength, from fortis strong, brave; see FORT; for suffix see -TUDE.

fortnight n. About 1300 fourteniht, contraction of Old English (before 1000) fēowertȳne niht fourteen nights (referred to as the ancient Germanic method of reckoning by nights, mentioned in Tacitus; but evinced in Celtic culture by Welsh wythnos eightnight [week] and pythefnos fifteen-night [fortnight], by including the night preceding the first day and the night following the last day).

fortress n. Probably before 1300 fortress, later, variant forteresse; borrowed from Old French forteresse strong place, variant of fortelesse, from Medieval Latin fortalitia, from Latin fortis strong; see FORT. The suffix -ess represents Latin -itia forming nouns denoting quality or condition and though not active in English, it can be found in such words as duress and largess.

fortuitous adj. Before 1652, borrowed from Latin fortuitus, from forte by chance, ablative case of fortis (genitive fortis) chance; see FORTUNE; for suffix see -OUS.

An earlier form, fortuit (about 1380) was borrowed from Old French fortuit, from Latin fortuitus, but was replaced by fortuitous, which became the established form in the 1600's.

fortune n. Before 1325 fortune chance or luck (personified as a goddess, Dame Fortune); borrowed from Old French fortune, learned borrowing from Latin fortūna, from a lost noun fortus* (genitive fortūs*), from fortis (genitive fortis) chance, luck. —fortunate adj. Before 1387 fortunate, borrowed from Latin fortunatus provided with good fortune (quasi-past participial form); from fortūna FORTUNE. —fortuneteller n. 1590, earlier fortunetelling, n. (1577); formed from tellen fortune (1413).

forty adj. 1124, but not recorded in a Middle English spelling before 1200; developed from Old English fēwertig (about 750, fēower four + -tig -ty¹, group of ten); cognate with Old Frisian fiuwertich, Old Saxon fiuwartig, fiartig, fiortig, Old High German fiorzug (modern German vierzig), Old Icelandic fertugr, and Gothic fidwōr tigjus. —fortieth n., adj. 1107 fowertigethe, developed from Old English (about 1000) fēwertigotha (fēower four + -tig -ty¹ + -otha -eth¹).

forum n. Before 1464 forum public place, marketplace (in ancient Rome); borrowing of Latin forum marketplace, apparently related to foris, forās out of doors, outside; see FOREIGN. The sense of assembly, or place, for public discussion, is first recorded in 1690.

forward adj. Probably before 1200 forwarde, developed from Old English (before 900) foreweard toward the front (fore + -weard -ward). —adv. Probably about 1300 forward; developed from Old English forewearde (about 875), from foreweard, adj.; cognate with Dutch voorwaarts and modern German vorwärts. —n. Before 1225 forward; developed from Old English foreweard the fore or front part (about 1000); from the adjective. —v. 1596, from the adverb.

fosse n. 1327, Fosse ditch, pit; earlier, in place name Vosepole a pool in a ditch (1296), and in an Old English reference to the Fosse principal Roman road in Britain (1130–35), so called from the drainage ditch dug on either side of the road; borrowed through Old French fosse, and directly from Latin fossa ditch, from feminine of fossus, past participle of fodere to dig.

fossil n. 1619, rock or mineral dug out of the earth; borrowed from French fossile, from Latin fossilis dug up, from fossus, past participle of fodere to dig. —adj. 1654, obtained by digging; from the noun.

foster v. About 1125 fostrien nourish, bring up, rear (a child); later fostren (probably before 1200); probably to be found in Old English (before 1050) fōstrian* nourish, foster, formed from fōstor food, nourishment, a bringing up; from the same Germanic source as Old English fōda FOOD. The figurative sense of encourage, strengthen, is first recorded about 1378, earlier support, nurture (about 1125). —adj. 1 related. 1618, from the meaning “in the same family, but not related by birth”; abstracted from compounds such as found in Old English fōstor-, as in fōstorfæder (before 800) foster father, and foster brother (Old English fōster-brōthor, before 1000). 2 of or for a foster child or children, foster parent (1649).

foul adj. About 1250 foul; developed from Old English fūl dirty, vile, corrupt (before 800–1000); cognate with Old Saxon and Old Frisian fūl foul, Middle Dutch vuul (modern Dutch vuil), Old High German fūl (modern German faul foul, lazy), Old Icelandic fúll, and Gothic fūls from Proto-Germanic fūlaz*.

In Middle English foul was the opposite of fair, thus foul play meant unfair conduct; but later developed the sense of treacherous or violent dealings (1610). The sense of foul out of play in foul ball, is first recorded in 1860, in American English. —v. Probably before 1200 fulen make or become foul; developed from Old English fūlian (about 899), and Old English fylan; both from fūl, adj. —n. 1304, a muddy place; later, that which is foul, deceitful, ugly (before 1420); developed from Old English fūl foulness, impurity, guilt, offense (about 750); from the adjective.

found¹ v. establish. About 1290 founden; borrowed from Old French fonder, from Latin fundāre to lay the bottom or foundation of something, establish, from fundus bottom, foundation. —foundation n. Before 1387 fundacioun, borrowed from Old French fondation, or directly from Latin fundātiōnem (nominative fundātiō) foundation, from fundāre. —founded adj. Before 1325, from the verb. —founder n. Before 1338, borrowed through Anglo-French fundur, Old French fondeor, from Latin fundātor.

found² v. cast (metal). Before 1399 founden, funden to mix or mingle; later found melt, cast (1562); borrowed from Middle French fondre pour out, melt, mix together, from Old French fondre, from Latin fundere melt, cast, pour. —foundry n. 1601, borrowed from French fonderie, fondrie, from Middle French, from fondre to melt, pour, found.

founder v. Before 1338 fondren knock down, later foundren to stumble (about 1385); borrowed from Old French fondrer fall to the bottom, from fond bottom. The earlier sense of sink to the ground (about 1385), was extended to mean to fill with water and sink, and is first recorded in 1610.

foundling n. Probably before 1300 fundelyng, formed from funden, founden found (past participle of finden to FIND) + -ling.

fount n. Before 1449 funte, later fount (1593); probably a shortening of fountain, on analogy with mount, mountain; influenced by Middle French font fount, from Latin fontem (nominative fons) spring.

fountain n. About 1410 fownteyne natural spring; borrowed from Old French fontaine, from Late Latin fontāna a fountain, spring, from Latin, feminine of fontānus of a spring, from fons (genitive fontis) spring. The meaning of an artificial jet or stream of water, especially a structure built for such a jet or stream, is first recorded in 1509.

four adj. 1122 fourer; later four (probably before 1200) and four (about 1280); developed from Old English (about 725) fēower; cognate with Old Frisian fiuwer, fiower, fiōr four, Old Saxon fiuwar, fiwar, fior, Dutch vier, Old High German fior (modern German vier), Old Icelandic fiōrir (Norwegian and Danish fire, Swedish fyra), and Gothic fidwōr. —fourth adj., n. About 1200 ferthe, developed from Old English fēorþa; for suffix see -TH². The later spelling fourth (before 1450) was patterned on the development of four. —four-footed adj. Before 1325 four footed, developed from Old English fēowerfōte, -fēte (fēower four + -fōte -footed); cognate with Old Frisian fiuwerfoted, Old High German fiorfuozzi (modern German vierfüssig). —fourteen adj., n. About 1300; developed from Old English fēower-tēne, fēowertýne (fēower + -tēne, -týne -teen, from tēn TEN); cognate with Old Frisian fiuwertine, Old High German fiorzehan (modern German vierzehn), Old Icelandic fiōrtān, and Gothic fidwōrtathun.

four-flusher n. 1904, American English, from earlier verb four-flush to bluff (1896), from four flush a poker hand with four cards of the same suit, instead of the five to make a flush (1887); for suffix see -ER¹.

fowl n. Before 1200 fiuvel; developed from Old English fugel bird (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian fugel bird, Old Saxon fugal, Middle Dutch voghel (modern Dutch vogel), Old High German fogal (modern German Vogel), Old Icelandic fugl, and Gothic fugls; apparently related to Old English fleoƿan to FLY². The narrower sense of domestic rooster or hen, is first recorded in 1580.

fox n. Old English (before 830) fox; cognate with Old Saxon vohs fox, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch vos, Old High German fuhs (modern German Fuchs), Old Icelandic foa vixen, and Gothic faúhō. —v. Before 1250, implied in foxing, n., a clever deceit.

foyer n. entrance hall. 1859, lobby, lounge; borrowed from French foyer room for actors when not on stage (literally, fireplace), from Old French foyer, from Latin focārius having to do with the hearth, from focus hearth, fireplace; see FOCUS.

fracas n. 1727, borrowed from French fracas, from Italian fracasso an uproar, crash, from fraccassare to smash, crash, break into pieces.

fraction n. Before 1410 fraccioun a breaking or dividing of the heart; later, a breaking, fracture of a bone (probably before 1425); borrowed through Anglo-French fraccioun, and directly from Late Latin fractiōnem (nominative fractiō) a breaking, especially into pieces, from Latin frag-, root of frangere to BREAK. The mathematical sense is first recorded in 1391, and something broken off, a fragment, scrap, in 1606.

fractious adj. 1725, hard to manage, unruly; formed from fraction (in the obsolete sense of a brawling, discord) + -ous, probably patterned on captious.

fracture n. Probably before 1425 fracture, borrowed from Middle French fracture, learned borrowing from Latin fractūra a breach, break, cleft, from frag-, root of frangere to BREAK; for suffix see -URE. —v. 1612, implied in fractured broken (bone); from fracture + *-ed*².

fragile adj. 1513 fragyll morally weak; either a back formation of earlier English fragility, influenced by Middle French fragile; or a direct borrowing of Middle French fragile, learned borrowing from Latin fragilis brittle, easily broken, from frag-, root of frangere to break. The sense of easily broken or delicate, is first recorded in 1607, with a transferred sense of frail, in 1858. —fragility n. Before 1398, borrowed from Old French fragilité, from Latin fragilitatem (nominative fragilitas) brittleness, from fragilis brittle, easily broken, from frag-, root of frangere to break; for suffix see -ITY. The sense of fragile quality, delicacy, is first recorded in 1474.

fragment n. Probably before 1425 fragmente, borrowed from Latin fragmentum a fragment or remnant, from frag-, root of frangere to break; for suffix see -MENT. —v. break into fragments. 1818, from the noun. —fragmentary adj. 1611, formed from English fragment + -ary.

fragrant adj. About 1450 fragrante; borrowed from Latin fragrantem (nominative fragrans) sweet-smelling, present participle of fragrāre emit (a sweet) odor; for suffix see -ANT. —fragrance n. 1667, borrowed through French fragrance, or directly from Latin fragrantia, from fragrantem, present participle; for suffix see -ANCE.

frail adj. Probably about 1350 frele weak, delicate; borrowed from Old French frele, fraile, from Latin fragilis easily broken; see FRAGILE. —frailty n. About 1340 frelte; borrowed from Old French fraileté, from Latin fragilitatem (nominative fragilitas), from fragilis fragile.

frame n. About 1250 frame composition or plan, earlier, profit, benefit (probably about 1200); from the verb and a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic frami advancement). —v. Probably before 1300 framen join timber, etc., construct; developed from Old English (about 961) framian to profit, be helpful, make progress, from fram forward (see FROM), influenced in meaning by Old English fremman (before 800), fremian (about 1000) help forward, promote, benefit, and probably by Old Icelandic frama to further, execute. Old English fremman is cognate with Old Frisian fremma perform, Old Saxon fremmian promote, further, and Old Icelandic fremja to further, carry out, execute. The meaning of compose, devise, fashion, is recorded probably before 1400, and that of invent or fabricate a story with evil intent in 1514. —frame of mind (1711) —framework n. (1644).

franc n. About 1390 frank, borrowing of Old French franc, apparently from Medieval Latin Francus FRANK¹, from, or in reference to, Francorum Rex King of the Franks, on gold coins first made during the reign of Jean le Bon, 1350–64.

franchise n. About 1300 franchise freedom; borrowed from Old French franchise freedom, from franch-, variant stem of franc free + -ise, as in bêtise; see FRANK¹. —v. Probably before 1387 franchisen make a person a freeman in a city or town; from the noun franchise.

francium n. 1946, New Latin; formed from Francia, Latin form of France + -ium.

Franco- a combining form meaning France or French, as in Francophile, Francophone, or French and _____, as in Franco-German. Borrowed from Medieval Latin Francus Frank; see FRANK¹, adj.

frangible adj. Probably before 1425 frangible, borrowed from Middle French frangible, learned borrowing from Medieval Latin frangibilis, from Latin frangere to BREAK; for suffix see -IBLE.

frank¹ adj. Probably before 1300 franc free, liberal, generous; borrowed from Old French franc free, sincere, genuine; also earlier in English, in the surname Franc (1182); from Franc a freeman, a Frank (member of the Germanic people that conquered Gaul), from Frankish (compare Old High German Franko and Old English Franc a Frank). The sense of outspoken, candid, is first recorded in English in 1548.

The origin of the ethnic name Frank is uncertain (possibly derived from the word for their national weapon, represented by Old English franca javelin, lance). The name did not come from the adjective meaning "free," rather Old French Franc acquired the meaning "free" because only the dominant Franks possessed the status of freemen. —v. 1708, send in the mail free of charge, from the adjective. —Frankish adj. of the ancient Franks. 1802, formed from English Frank + -ish. The noun Frankish, Germanic language of the Franks, is first recorded in 1863, though an earlier formation exists in Frenkis (before 1400). Earlier forms Frankische (1338) and Frankis (before 1325), are variant terms for Middle English Frensh French. The form Frencise (French) is first recorded about 1070.

frank² n. 1936, American English, shortened form of FRANK-FURTER.

Frankenstein n. 1838, monster causing the ruin of its creator, in allusion to Baron Frankenstein, a character in Mary Shelley's novel Frankenstein (1818). Frankenstein was mistakenly taken in popular usage as the name of this monster.

frankfurter n. 1894, American English; borrowed from German Frankfurter, originally, of Frankfurt; so called because a sausage somewhat like the American hot dog (sometimes referred to as a frankfurter sausage) was originally made in Germany and associated with the city of Frankfurt am Main.

frankincense n. Before 1398 fraunkencense, apparently from Old French frank genuine or true, and encens incense.

frantic adj. About 1378 frantyk crazed, frenzied; variant of frentik (before 1376); see FRENETIC. The extended sense of panicky with worry, wild with grief, etc., is first recorded in 1464.

frappe adj. 1848, American English, borrowing of French frappé, from past participle of frapper to chill, beat, from Old French fraper to hit, strike; of unknown origin. —n. 1922, from the adjective.

fraternal adj. Perhaps 1421 fraternal; borrowed probably from fratricide¹ n. killer of one's own brother or sister. Before 1500 fratricide, borrowed through Middle French fratricide, and directly from Latin frātrīcīda (frāter brother + -īda killer, *-CIDE*¹).

Middle French fraternel, and from Medieval Latin fraternalis, from Latin frāternus brotherly, from frāter BROTHER; for suffix see *-AL*¹. —fraternity n. Before 1338 fraternite brotherhood; borrowed through Old French fraternité, and directly from Latin frāternitatem (nominative frāternitās), from frāternus fraternal; for suffix see -ITY. —fraternize v. 1611, borrowed from French fraterniser, from Latin frāternus fraternal; for suffix see -IZE.

fratricide² n. a killing of one's own brother or sister. 1568 fratricide, borrowed through Middle French fratricide, and directly from Latin frātrīcīdium (frāter BROTHER + -īdium a killing, *-CIDE*²).

fraud n. 1345–46 fraude criminal deception, false representation; borrowed from Old French fraude, learned borrowing from Latin fraudem (nominative fraus) deceit, injury. —fraudulent adj. Before 1420 fraudulent, borrowed from Middle French fraudulent, from Latin fraudentus cheating, fraudulent, from fraudem (nominative fraus) deceit.

fraught adj. Before 1375, loaded or full, past participle of Middle English fraughten to load (a ship) with cargo, from earlier noun fraght cargo or lading of a ship (1228), variant of freghte FREIGHT; also, in part, from Middle Dutch vrachten, vrachten to load or furnish with cargo. The figurative use (as in fraught with difficulties), is first recorded in 1576.

fray¹ n. fight. About 1350, variant form of AFFRAY.

fray² v. become ragged. About 1405, to wear, crush; 1410, to rub; borrowed from Middle French frayer, from Old French freier, from Latin fricāre to rub.

frizzle v. Before 1825, an East Anglian variant of earlier fazle to unravel, fray (1643); from facelyn to fray (1440), from fasyll fringe or frayed edge, a diminutive formed from Old English fæs fringe; cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch vese fringe, fiber, chaff, and Old High German fesa chaff, fasa fringe, fiber (modern German Faser fiber, thread, fasern to fray, unravel); for suffix see *-LE*¹. —n. 1865, American English, weary condition; from the verb.

freak n. 1847, in freaks of nature; earlier, something very unusual, a fancy (1784); and capricious notion, (1563); of uncertain origin, probably related to Old English frician to dance. —v. 1637, to streak or fleck whimsically, from the noun sense of whim. The slang use freak out become excited is first recorded in 1965 in American English, from the noun freak user of drugs (1945), but is found earlier in the meaning change, distort (1911).

freckle n. 1380, implied in fraced spotted; alteration of fraknes, probably from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic freknótt freckled, Icelandic frekna freckle, Swedish fräknar).

free adj. Probably before 1200 fre, developed from Old English (about 725) frēo free; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon frī free, Dutch vrij, Old High German frī (modern German frei), Old Icelandic frjǫls, and Gothic freis, from Proto-Germanic frījaz*. —adv. 1250, from the adjective. —v. Probably before 1200 frien; later fren (about 1250); developed from Old English (725) frēon, frēogan to free, love; cognate with Old Frisian frīa, frīaia make free, Old Saxon frīohan to court, woo, Middle Low German vrien make free (modern German befreien to free, freien to woo), Old Icelandic frjā to love, Gothic frījōn to love. —freedom n. Probably before 1200, developed from Old English (about 888) frēodōm (frēo free + -dōm -dom).

freebie or freebee n. 1946, American English slang, from an earlier freebee, freeby, adj., free of charge (1942 free, adj. + suffix -bee -by).

freebooter n. 1570 frebetter, borrowed from Dutch vrijbuit, from vrijbuiten to rob, plunder (vrij free + buit booty, from buiten to exchange or plunder, from Middle Dutch būten, related to Middle Low German būte exchange).

freeze v. About 1325 fresen; developed from Old English (before 971) frēosan turn to ice; cognate with Middle Low German vrēsen to freeze (modern German frieren to freeze), Old High German friosan to freeze, Old Icelandic frjōsa, from Proto-Germanic freusanan*. The sense of chill or be chilled is first recorded (before 1393), and the figurative sense as with fear, etc. (about 1400). The related sense of become motionless, is first recorded before 1393, and the extension of fix at a definite value or level, or to make non-transactable, as assets, is first recorded in 1922. —n. About 1400, from the verb. —freezer n. 1847, machine for freezing (originally, ice cream).

freight n. 1228 fraght cargo or lading of a ship; later freghte the transporting of goods or passengers, passage money (1389), and freight (1442); borrowed from Middle Dutch or Middle Low German vracht, vrecht, probably from an unrecorded Old Frisian word (cognate with Old High German frēht earnings), ultimately derived from the base of Gothic fra- FOR- + aihts (from Proto-Germanic aiHtiz*) property, possession, from aigan to possess, have. —v. Before 1375 fraughten to load (a ship) with cargo; later freghten (1415) and freighten (1449). —freighter n. 1622, one who loads a ship; formed from English freight, n. + -er. The meaning of cargo vessel is first recorded in 1836.

French adj. Probably before 1200 Frensch of France or its inhabitants; developed from Old English frēncisc, originally, of the Franks (Franca Frank + -isc -ish; the suffix producing vowel change in Franca; see FRANK¹); cognate with Old High German frenkeisc, frenqisc. —n. Probably before 1200 frensch, developed from Old English frēncisc, from the adjective. —french fries 1918, American English (earlier french fried potatoes, 1894).

frenetic adj. Before 1376 frentik crazed, delirious, frenzied; later frenetik (about 1385); borrowed through Old French frenetique, from Latin phrenēticus delirious, alteration of Greek phrenētikós, from phrenitis inflammation of the brain, frenzy; for suffix see -IC.

frenzy n. Probably before 1396 frensye delirium, insanity; contraction of earlier frenesye (about 1378); borrowed from Old French frenesie, from Medieval Latin phrenesia, from phrenesis, back formation from Latin phrenēticus delirious; see FRENETIC. The extended sense of excited state of mind, is first recorded probably before 1400. —frenzied adj. (1796) frequent adj. About 1450, ample or profuse; borrowed through Middle French frequent, or directly from Latin frequentem (nominative frequēns) crowded, repeated; for suffix see -ENT. The meaning of common, usual, well-known, is first recorded in 1531, followed by that of happening at short intervals, often recurring in 1604. —v. 1477, visit often; borrowed through French fréquenter, or directly from Latin frequentāre to do or use often, from frequentem. —frequency n. 1553–87, a crowd; borrowed from Latin frequentia a crowd, throng, from frequentem. The meaning in physics of the rate of recurrence of a vibration is first recorded in English in 1831; for suffix see -ENCY. —frequentative n. 1530, verb which expresses a repetition of an action; borrowed from Latin frequentativus, from frequentāre; for suffix see -ATIVE.

fresco n. 1598 in fresco, in frisco, literally, in fresh (air); borrowed from Italian fresco cool, fresh, from a Germanic source (compare Old High German frisc fresh).

fresh adj. Probably before 1200 fersch unsalted, pure, sweet, eager; later fresh (1288); developed from Old English fersch (about 893); cognate with Old Frisian fersk fresh, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch versch (modern Dutch vers), Old High German frisch (modern German frisch). Before the 1300's, the spelling with fre- became prevalent, along with the wider meaning of new, novel, recent, in part influenced by Old French fres or freis, (feminine) fresche, from a Germanic source. —freshen v. 1697, formed from English fresh + *-en*¹. —freshet n. 1596, fresh water flowing into the sea, from earlier fresh flood, stream of fresh water (1538); formed from English fresh, adj. + -et.

fret¹ v. be peevish, unhappy or worried. 1127 freten; developed from Old English fretan eat, devour (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch vrēten devour (modern Dutch vreten), Old High German frezzan (modern German fressen), and Gothic fra-itan; all derived from a Germanic compound formed from the base of Gothic fra- completely, FOR- + itan to EAT. The meaning of eat away, corrode, is first recorded before 1200, and the transferred sense of irritate or worry, about 1200. —n. Before 1420, probably from the verb, but possibly developed from Old English fræt*.

fret² n. ornamental interlaced pattern. About 1386, borrowed from Old French frete interlaced work, trellis-work, probably from a Germanic source.

fret³ n. About 1500, ridge on a guitar, banjo, etc., to dampen a string; of unknown origin (possibly borrowed from Old French frete ring or ferrule; see FRET²).

friable adj. 1563, borrowed through Middle French friable, and directly from Latin friabilis easily crumbled or broken, from friāre rub away, crumble into small pieces; related to fricāre to rub; for suffix see -ABLE.

friar n. Probably before 1200 frere, later fryer (before 1450), and friar (before 1596); borrowed from Old French frere brother or friar, from Latin frāter BROTHER. The shift in spelling parallels briar, brier and choir, and may be a spelling from pronunciation.

fricassee n. 1568, borrowed from Middle French fricassée, from fricasser mince and cook in sauce; of uncertain origin; possibly a compound of Middle French frire to fry + casser, quasser break, cut up. —v. 1657, from the noun.

fricative adj. 1860, formed from Latin fricātus (past participle of fricāre to rub) + English -ive. —n. 1863, from the adjective.

friction n. 1563, a chafing or rubbing; borrowed probably through Middle French friction, and directly from Latin frictiōnem (nominative frictiō) a rubbing or rubbing down, from fricāre to rub; frictus. The sense of resistance to motion or surfaces that touch is first recorded in 1722, though earlier mention of the principle is alluded to in 1704. The figurative extension of a disagreement or clash, is first recorded in 1761.

Friday n. 1148 Friedai; earlier fridei (1137); developed from Old English (before 1000) frīgedæg, literally, Frigga's day (in allusion to the Germanic goddess of heaven and of love); corresponding to Old Frisian frīgendei, frīadei Friday, Middle Low German vrīdach, Middle Dutch vrīdag (modern Dutch vrijdag), Old High German frīatag (modern German Freitag), and Old Icelandic frjādagr.

friend n. Probably about 1175 frend; developed from Old English frēond (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian friond, friond friend, Old Saxon friond, Dutch vriend, Old High German friont (modern German Freund), Old Icelandic frændi, and Gothic frijōnds; from the present participle of Proto-Germanic frijōjanan*. The formation of friend parallels that of fiend; the spelling change is also found in field. —friendship n. Probably before 1200 friendshipe; developed from Old English frēondscipe (about 725, in Beowulf); formed from Old English frēond friend + -scipe -ship.

frieze n. 1563, borrowed from Middle French frise, originally, a ruff, from Medieval Latin frisium embroidered border, variant of frigium, phrygium, probably from Latin Phrygium Phrygian, Phrygian work, as in Phrygiae vestes (ornate, presumably embroidered, garments), from Phrygia, an ancient country in Asia Minor known for its embroidery. The general meaning of any decorative band painted or sculpted, is first recorded in 1847.

frigate n. 1585, borrowed from Middle French frégate, from Italian fregata, of unknown origin.

fright n. About 1250 frigt, developed from Old English (about 950) fryhto, variant of fyrhtu fear, dread (before 830); related to forht afraid (from Proto-Germanic furhtaz*), and fyrhtan to frighten. Old English fyrhtan and forht are cognate with Old Frisian fruchte fear, fruchtia to fear, Old Saxon forht, foraht afraid, forhta fear, forhtian to fear, Middle Dutch vrucht, vrocht fear, vruchten to fear, Old High German forht, foraht afraid, forhta fear, Old High German furihten, for(a)htan to fear. For the development of the modern spelling see FIGHT. —frighten v. 1666, from fright, n. + -*en*¹, replacing earlier fright, v. (Middle English figten, about 1250, developed from Old English fyrhtan to frighten).

frigid adj. Probably before 1425; borrowed from Latin frigidus cold, chill, cool, related to frigere be cold, frigus (genitive frigoris) cold, coldness, frost.

frill n. 1591, of uncertain origin, sometimes associated with frill, v., shiver with cold, in allusion to the way a hawk or other bird ruffles its feathers when cold. The figurative sense of useless ornament, is first recorded in 1893, probably as an extension of earlier sense of ornamented dress or mannered air (before 1845). —v. 1574, furnish or decorate with a frill, probably borrowed from the same source as the noun.

fringe n. 1354 frenge, borrowed from Old French frenge, from Vulgar Latin frimbria*, corresponding to Latin fimbriae, pl., fibers, threads, fringe; of uncertain origin; see the verb below. The figurative sense of outer edge or margin (as of society), is first recorded in 1894. The spelling fringe parallels hinge and singe. —v. 1480, furnish or decorate with a fringe; probably from the noun, and though verbal forms appeared as early as the 1200's, they probably reflect forms of the noun, as in frenge (1275) frenge + -*ed*² and frengyng (1437–39) frenge + -ing -*ing*¹. frippery n. 1568, old clothes, borrowed from Middle French friperie old clothes, an old-clothes shop, from Old French freperie, from frepe, ferpe, felpa rag, from Late Latin faluppa chip, splinter, straw fiber; for suffix see -ERY. The sense of tawdry attire, is first recorded in 1637.

Frisbee n. 1957, from Frisbie, in Mrs. Frisbie's pies of the Frisbie bakery in Connecticut, where the prototype pie tins came from.

frisk v. 1519, probably developed from Middle English frisk lively (about 1450); borrowed from Middle French frisque lively, brisk, possibly from a Germanic source (compare Old High German frisc lively, FRESH). The meaning of run the hands rapidly over a person's clothing to search is first recorded in 1789. —n. 1525, from the verb. —frisky adj. Probably before 1500, formed from frisk, adj., lively (about 1450) + -*y*¹.

fritter¹ v. waste little by little, especially in fritter away. 1728, perhaps from the noun (unrecorded at the time), but also possibly confused with *fritter*² a small fried cake. —n. 1767 fritters fragment or shred; possibly an alteration of earlier fitters fragments or pieces (1532), from fitter to fragment; of uncertain origin.

fritter² n. small fried cake. 1381 frutur, before 1399 frytour; borrowed from Old French friture, from Late Latin frictūra a frying frivolous adj. 1459 fryvolus of little importance, silly; probably a borrowing of Latin frivulus silly, empty, trifling, diminutive of a lost adjective frivos* broken, crumbled, from friāre break, rub away, crumble; for suffix see -OUS. The borrowing was possibly also influenced by frivol a trifle; later also used as an adjective; borrowed from Middle French frivole, from Latin frivolus. — frivolity n. 1796, borrowed from French frivolité, from frivole frivolous.

friz or frizz v. 1660, probably borrowed from French friser to curl, perhaps from the stem of frise to *FRY*¹ cook. The spelling and pronunciation of this word have been influenced by *frizzle*¹ to curl. — n. 1668, frizzed hair; from the verb.

frizzle¹ v. curl (hair). 1565–73, of uncertain origin (perhaps related to Old English frīs curly; cognate with Old Frisian frīse lock of hair; or possibly formed in English from Middle French friser to curl + English *-le*¹). — n. 1613, crisp curl; from the verb.

frizzle² v. fry with a sputtering noise. 1839, probably imitative, perhaps formed from *fry*¹ with the spelling influenced by sizzle. — n. a hissing noise. (1894) fro adv. Before 1325 fra, in Northern British dialect; also, about 1325 fro, in Midland British dialect; from earlier fro, prep. (before 1200); probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic frā, adv., prep., from). The term survives in ordinary speech in to and fro.

frock n. 1350, robe worn by monks and friars, cowl; borrowed from Old French froc a monk's habit, from Frankish (compare Old High German hroc, modern German Rock coat; cognate with Old Frisian hrock, Old Saxon hroc). The sense of a garment worn by a woman or child, is first recorded in 1538.

frog¹ n. Probably before 1200 frogge; later froge (before 1338), and frog (1463), developed from Old English frogga (about 1000), a diminutive formation related to frox, forse, frosce frog; cognate with Middle Dutch vorse frog (modern Dutch vors), Old High German frosk (modern German Frosch), and Old Icelandic frosker, from Proto-Germanic fruska-z*. Another form existed in Middle English frude, froud frog or toad, from Old Icelandic fraudhr frog. — frogman n. (1945).

frog² n. fastening for clothing. 1719, belt loop for carrying a weapon; of uncertain origin (perhaps from Portuguese froco, from Latin flocus FLOCK² tuft). The sense of ornamental fastening for a coat, is first recorded in 1746.

frolic v. 1583, from earlier adjective, joyful, merry (1538); borrowed from Middle Dutch vrolyc (vro- glad + lyc LIKE). Middle Dutch vro is cognate with Old Frisian frō happy, glad, Old Saxon frā, frō, fraho, Old High German frō (modern German froh glad, fröhlich joyful, merry), Old Icelandic frār swift, nimble. — n. 1616, mirth or a prank, from the verb.

from prep. Old English (before 800) from; earlier fram (about 700); related to Old English fram, adv., forward, forth, away; cognate with Old Saxon fram from, away, forward, Old High German fram, Old Icelandic frā from, fram forward, Gothic fram forward.

frond n. 1785, earlier cited as a Latin word in an English text (1753); borrowed from Latin frōns (genitive frondis) leaf, leafy branch, foliage.

front n. About 1300, forehead; borrowed from Old French front forehead or brow, from Latin frōntem (nominative frōns) forehead. The meaning of foremost part, is first recorded before 1338. — v. 1523, to face; probably from the noun, and in others borrowed from Middle French fronter, from Old French front front. — frontal adj. 1656, borrowed from French frontal, and from New Latin frontalis, from Latin frōntem forehead; for suffix see *-AL*¹.

frontier n. Probably before 1400 frountere front line of an army, earlier frountres an altar cloth hanging over the edge (1392); borrowed from Old French fronter, frontier, from front brow. The meaning of border of a country or settled land, is first recorded in 1413.

frontispiece n. 1597–98 frontispice front of a building; borrowed from Middle French frontispice, probably from Italian frontespizio, and from Late Latin frontispicium facade, originally, a view of the forehead (Latin frōns, genitive frontis, forehead + specere look at). The meaning of a title page of a book, is first recorded in 1607, borrowed from earlier French (1500's), and that of a picture facing the title page, in 1682. The last syllable of the original spelling was assimilated (by folk etymology) to -piece.

frost n. Old English (about 725) forst; also (before 800) frost a freezing or becoming frozen, extreme cold; cognate with Old Frisian frost, forst frost, Old Saxon frost, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch vorst, Old High German frost (modern German Frost), and Old Icelandic frost (Norwegian, Swedish, and Danish frost); related to Old English frēosan to FREEZE. — v. 1635, to cover with frost or as if with frost.

Even Middle English had both frost and forst until sometime before 1475. It is not clear what established the spelling frost except that it has been the prevailing form among most of the Germanic languages, and its antecedents are found also in Proto-Germanic frusta-*. — frosted adj. 1645, in reference to white or gray hair; later, covered with sugar or icing (1856); from frost, v. — frosting n. 1617, frost; later white sugar covering or icing (1858); from frost, v. — frosty adj. 1375, probably developed from Old English frostig.

froth n. About 1384, probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic frodha, fraudh froth). The noun is not found in Old English, but the Germanic base freuth-* appears in Old English āfrēothan to froth. — v. About 1384, from the noun.

frou-frou n. 1870, a rustling, as of a dress; borrowing of French frou-frou, possibly imitative of the sound. The sense of fussy details or frills, is first recorded in 1876.

froward adj. Probably before 1325 fraward, contrary; later froward (about 1330); formed from English fro FRO (shortened form of from) + -ward, literally, turned away from (the opposite of toward). A Middle English variant frommerd (probably before 1200), later fromward (before 1300), is found in Old English fromweard turned from or away (before 899); formed from from + -weard -ward.

frown v. About 1395 frownen, borrowed from Old French froignier to frown or scowl, related to froigne scowling look, probably from Gaulish frognā*.

An earlier form in Middle English frouncen (before 1395, scowl; earlier, wrinkle, before 1325); is now obsolete. —n. 1581, show of disapproval; earlier frowne of the lowering of clouds (before 1420); from the verb. The literal meaning of wrinkling of the brow, is first recorded in 1605.

frowzy or frowsy adj. 1681, ill-smelling or musty; possibly related to dialectal English frowsty smelly; of uncertain origin.

fructify v. 1340 fructifien, borrowed from Old French fructifier, learned borrowing from Late Latin fructificāre bear fruit, from a lost adjective fructificus* fruit-bearing, from Latin fructus fruit + the root of facere make; see FRUIT; for suffix see -FY. —fructification n. 1615, either formed from English fructify + -ation; or borrowed from French fructification, modeled on Late Latin fructificāre + -tion.

fructose n. 1864, fruit sugar; formed in English from Latin fructus fruit + English -ose².

frugal adj. 1598, possibly a back formation from earlier frugality; or borrowed through Middle French frugal, from Latin frūgālis, from the undeclined adjective frūgī economical, useful, proper, originally the dative case of frūx fruit, profit, value; related to fructus FRUIT; for suffix see -AL¹. —frugality n. 1531, borrowed from Middle French frugalité, from Latin frūgālītatem (nominative frūgālītās) economy, thriftiness, from frūgālis frugal.

fruit n. Probably before 1200 fruit, later fruit (probably about 1200); borrowed from Old French fruit, from Latin fructus (genitive fructūs) fruit, produce, profit, from frūg-, stem of frūi to use, enjoy. The spelling with i, after the French, became established in the 1500's. —v. About 1378, to bear or come to fruit, from the noun. —fruitful adj. About 1390, formed from Middle English fruyt + -ful. —fruitless adj. Before 1400; formed from Middle English fruyt + -less.

fruition n. 1413 fruycion enjoyment; also frucioun (before 1415); borrowed through Middle French fruition, and directly from Late Latin fruitionem (nominative fruitiō) enjoyment, from Latin frūi to use, enjoy; for suffix see -TION. The meaning of act or state of bearing of fruit, is first recorded in 1885 (by mistaken association with fruit), and the figurative sense of realization or fulfillment, in 1889.

frump n. 1553, mocking action, jeer; later, shabby, un-stylish woman (1817); of uncertain origin, perhaps a shortening of frumple to wrinkle or crumple (frumplen, 1440); borrowed from Middle Dutch verrompelen, (ver- for-, completely + rompelen to RUMPLE).

frustrate v. 1445 frustraten, borrowed from Latin frustrāre, past participle of frustrāri to deceive, disappoint, frustrate, from frustrā in vain. —frustration n. 1461, nullification; later, act of frustrating, disappointment (about 1555); either formed from English frustrate + -ion, or borrowed, probably through Middle French frustration, from Latin frustrationem (nominative frustratiō), from frustrāre; for suffix see -ATION.

fry¹ v. cook in hot fat. About 1300 frien; borrowed from Old French frīre, from Latin frīgere to roast or fry. —n. 1634, excessive heat; 1639, fried food; from the verb. —frying pan (1355) fry² n. young fish. 1293 fry, probably borrowed through Anglo-French frei, Old French frai, froi spawn, from froier, freier to rub, spawn (by rubbing the belly on sand); see FRAY² wear away. *Fry*², children or offspring, is first recorded in Scottish before 1400; by 1577 applied to the young of other creatures, especially those produced in large numbers. The sense of young or insignificant persons as a group, is first recorded before 1577. According to many sources these are unrelated to the meaning of young fish, and are borrowed from Icelandic frjó, fræ seed, from Old Icelandic frjó, fræ; cognate with Swedish frö, Danish, and Norwegian frø seed, and Gothic fraiwa seed, offspring.

fuchsia n. 1753, New Latin Fuchsia, the genus name, in allusion to Leonhard Fuchs, a German botanist.

fuddle v. 1588, to tipple; later, to confuse with or as with drink (about 1600); of uncertain origin (compare Low German fuddeln work in a slovenly manner as if drunk, in dialect, swindle, from fuddle worthless cloth, related to Dutch vodde rag, tatter). The commoner variant of this word is befuddle, a derivative which appeared in 1887.

fuddy-duddy n. Informal. fussy, old-fashioned person. 1904, American English, of uncertain origin.

fudge¹ v. put together clumsily or dishonestly. Probably 1674, apparently an alteration of earlier fadge make suit, fit (1573); of unknown origin. —n. made-up story. 1797, from the verb.

fudge² interj. bunk. 1766, perhaps from FUDGE¹. —n. 1791, from the interjection.

fudge³ n. soft candy. 1896, American English; possibly a special use of FUDGE¹.

fuel n. Probably before 1200 feoule, later fuell (before 1398); borrowed from Old French feuaile, fouaille bundle of firewood, from Gallo-Romance focālia*, from Latin focus hearth. —v. About 1592, from the noun.

fugitive adj. About 1380 fugityf running away, fleeing; borrowed through Old French fugitif fugitive, or directly from Latin fugitivus fleeing (but more often as a noun, a runaway), from fugi-, stem of fugere run away, flee; for suffix see -IVE. —n. Before 1382 fugitif, borrowed from Old French fugitif; from the adjective.

fugue n. 1597 fuge musical composition based on short interwoven themes; borrowed from Italian fuga, literally, flight, a learned borrowing from Latin fuga act of fleeing, from fugere to flee.

The current spelling fugue, first recorded in 1667, was introduced from French fugue, also from Italian fuga.

-ful a suffix forming adjectives (or nouns) and meaning: 1 having, characterized by, as in careful, thoughtful; 2 having a tendency to, as in harmful; 3 having the qualities of, as in masterful; 4 (forming nouns) enough to fill a —, as in mouthful, cupful. The form is found in Old English -ful, -full, a suffix formed on the adjective full FULL.

fulcrum n. 1674, borrowed from Latin fulcrum bedpost, from fulcīre to support.

fulfill or fulfil v. About 1250 fulfilen promise or prophesy, also as a variant before 1200; developed from Old English fullfyllan fill up, make full (about 1000); formed from Old English full FULL + fyllan to fill. The sense of carry out, satisfy (a prophecy, promise, commandment, etc.), is recorded probably before 1250, and may be a literal translation of Latin implēre, adimplēre. —fulfillment or fulfilment n. 1775, formed from English fulfill or fulfil + -ment.

full adj. Old English full complete, full (917); cognate with Old Frisian full, foll full, Old Saxon full, Dutch vol, Old High German fol (modern German voll), Old Icelandic fullr, and Gothic fulls, from Proto-Germanic fullaz*, earlier fulnaz*. —adv. Old English full (before 899); from the adjective.

fulminate v. Probably before 1425 fulminaten to hurl or discharge (a formal condemnation); borrowed, perhaps by influence of Old French fulminer, from Latin fulminātus, past participle of fulmināre hurl lightning, lighten, from fulmen (genitive fulminis) lightning, which is related to fulgēre to shine, flash. —fulmination n. 1502, discharge of a formal condemnation, borrowed from Middle French, from Latin fulminātiōnem (nominative fulminātiō) discharge of lightning, from fulmināre; for suffix see -ATION.

fulsome adj. About 1250 fulsum abundant or full; formed from Middle English ful full + -som *-some*¹. Fulsom plump, well-fed, is recorded by about 1350, but by 1642 the meaning is extended to overgrown or overfed. The general meaning of offensive to tastes or sensibilities, is recorded as early as 1375 (in Scottish), followed by other pejorative senses including coarse, gross, sickening (about 1410), and offensive to good taste, because of excessive flattery, praise, cordiality, or attention, (1663). However, since the 1960's fulsome frequently appears in the favorable senses of very flattering, or complimentary; full or complete, a usage that represents a return to the original meaning of the word.

fumble v. About 1450 fomellen grope; later fumble grope about awkwardly (perhaps earlier, see FUMBLER, but recorded 1534); of uncertain origin, possibly from a Scandinavian source, and probably cognate with Low German fummeln, fommeln to fumble, grope (modern German fummeln fumble, handle awkwardly), Dutch fommelen to fumble, tumble, and Old Icelandic fálma (Swedish fumla, famla to fumble, grope). —n. 1647, from the verb. —fumbler n. 1519; formed from English fumble, v. + *-er*¹. The -b- in fumble is probably a development parallel to the change of Middle English cremelen to crumble and momelen to mumble.

fume n. About 1390 fume vapor or exhalation as given by the body or producing emotions, dreams, etc.; later, smoke or vapor given off, especially by a heated substance (about 1395); borrowed from Old French fum smoke, steam, vapor, from fumigate v. 1530, back formation from fumigation, possibly by influence of Old French fumiger to smoke; and in some instances borrowed from Latin fūmigāt-, past participle stem of fūmigāre to smoke (from a lost adjective fūmigus* smoke-driving, from fūmus smoke, fume + the root of agere to drive; see AGENT); for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —fumigation n. About 1380, act of generating smoke as part of a ceremony, later, treatment with aromatic fumes (probably about 1439); borrowed through Old French fumigation, from Latin fūmigātiōnem (nominative fūmigātiō), from fūmigāre; for suffix see -ATION.

Latin fūmus smoke. —v. Before 1400, to fumigate; borrowed from Old French fumer, from Latin fūmāre to smoke, steam, from fūmus smoke. The figurative sense of to exhibit anger is first recorded in 1522.

fun n. Before 1325 fon a fool, later, a jester or buffoon (probably before 1350); of uncertain origin. The spelling fun may represent a variant pronunciation of fon. Fun is first recorded before 1700, meaning a trick, hoax, joke; possibly from Middle English fonnen to fool or be foolish, act foolishly (before 1400); see FOND. The meaning of amusement appeared in 1727, and was stigmatized in Samuel Johnson's Dictionary as "a low cant word." —funny adj. 1756, formed from English fun, n. + *-y*¹. —funny bone 1840, from the sensation when the nerve of the elbow is struck.

function n. 1533 funcion proper work or purpose; borrowed through Middle French fonction, from Old French function, and directly from Latin functiō (genitive functiōnis) performance, execution, from functus, past participle of fungi perform, execute, discharge. The use of function in mathematics was probably introduced from the Latin functiō, by Leibnitz. —v. 1856, from the noun. —functional adj. 1631, formed from English function + *-al*¹. —functionary n. 1791, formed from English function, n. + -ary, patterned after French fonctionnaire (1770).

fund n. 1677 fund bottom, foundation, basis; borrowed from French fond a bottom, floor, ground, also a merchant's stock or capital, from Latin fundus bottom, piece of land. The spelling fund is a Latinization of earlier fond, fonds foundation, groundwork (1664). The meaning of stock or sum of money, is first recorded in English in 1673 from French. —v. 1776, provide a fund; from the noun.

fundament n. 1380, borrowed from Latin fundamentum, from fundāre to found; see FOUND¹. The present form replaced Middle English fundement, fondement (recorded about 1300); borrowed from Old French fondement, learned borrowing from Latin fundamentum.

fundamental adj. About 1443 fundamental primary, original; probably formed from English fundament + *-al*¹, and modeled on Late Latin fundamentālis of the foundation, from Latin fundamentum foundation; see FUNDAMENT. —fundamentalist n. 1922, American English; formed from English fundamental + -ist. —fundamentalism n. 1923, American English; formed from English fundamental + -ism.

funeral n. 1437 funerelles, pl., funeral rites; borrowed from Middle French funérailles, pl., learned borrowing from Medieval Latin funeralia, pl., funeral rites, but originally neuter plural of Late Latin funerālis having to do with a funeral, from Latin funus (genitive funeris) funeral, death, corpse; for suffix see -AL¹. As in Middle French, the singular and plural of the English word were used in the same sense until the end of the 1600's; by the mid 1600's, the spelling funeral was also fixed. —adj. About 1385, borrowed from Late Latin funerālis; see FUNERAL. —funereal adj. 1725, borrowed, by influence of Middle French funerail, from Latin funereus, from funus funeral; for suffix see -AL¹.

fungus n. 1527 fungus toadstool, mushroom; borrowed from Latin fungus mushroom, and replacing earlier fungue mushroom (before 1398), borrowed from Old French fungue*, fonge, from Latin fungus. —fungous adj. Probably 1440, borrowed from Latin fungosus, from fungus mushroom.

funk¹ n. panic. 1743, recorded as Oxford University slang (before 1677); possibly borrowed from Flemish fonck perturbation, agitation, distress; of unknown origin (compare also Old French funicle wild, mad).

funk² n. strong smell. 1633, probably borrowed from dialectal French funkière smoke, from funkier, from Old French funkier, variant of fungier give off smoke, from Latin fūmigāre to smoke. —funky adj. 1784, strong or bad smelling; formed from English *funk*², n. + -y¹. The word was probably first adopted in American jazz slang in the title Funky Butt (about 1900). The sense of strong, earthy, deeply felt, as applied to jazz music, is first recorded about 1954. In the 1960's the meaning of funky was extended to fine, stylish, excellent.

funnel n. 1402–03 funell, borrowed from Middle French fonel, probably through Provençal founil, enfounilh funnel, from Late Latin fundibulum, shortened from Latin īnfundibulum a funnel or hopper in a mill, from īnfundere pour in (in- in-² + fundere pour, FOUND²). —v. 1594, from the noun.

fur n. Probably about 1375 furre fur trimming or lining, garment trimmed or lined with fur; earlier, fur in the surname Furhode (1301, a hood lined or trimmed with fur); probably borrowed from Old French fouurer, forer to line, sheathe, from fuerre sheath, covering, from Frankish; compare Old High German fuotar, fōtar lining, Middle Low German vōder (modern German Futter), Old Frisian fōder coat lining, Old English fōder sheath, case, Old Icelandic fōdhr lining, and Gothic fōdr sword sheath, from Proto-Germanic fōdrān*. An alternate form existed in Middle English furrūre, forour (before 1338); borrowed from Old French fouurrēure, forreūre, and had a verb furrūren (probably before 1350). These lengthened forms died out in the late 1400's. —adj. 1597; from the noun. —v. Probably before 1300 fur, borrowed from Old French fouurer, forer, from fuerre sheath, covering; see the noun. —furrier n. 1296 furrere; borrowed probably through Anglo-French, from Old French forreor, from fouurer, forer line or trim with fur; for suffix see -IER. —furry adj. Before 1674, formed from English fur + -y¹.

furbish v. About 1384 furbushen, probably a back formation from furbisher, ultimately borrowed from Old French forbiss-, stem of forbir, fourbir to polish, from a Germanic source (compare Old High German furben to sweep, clean, Middle High German fürben to polish); for suffix see -ISH². —furbisher n. About 1260, in the surname Furbisur, borrowed from Old French fourbisseur, forbisseur, from forbiss-; see FURBISH; for suffix see -ER¹.

furious adj. About 1375, borrowed from Old French furieux, learned borrowing from Latin furiosus full of rage, mad, from furia rage, passion, FURY; for suffix see -OUS.

furl v. 1556, of uncertain origin; possibly borrowed from Middle French ferler to furl (1553 or 1606), from Old French ferlier (fer firm, from Latin firmus, + lier to bind, from Latin ligāre). —n. roll, coil, curl. 1643, from the verb.

furlong n. Probably before 1300 furlong developed from Old English (about 900) furlang, originally, the length of the furrow in the common field (furh FURROW + lang LONG¹, adj.).

furlough n. 1625 vorloff, borrowed from Dutch verlof, literally, permission, from Middle Dutch (ver- completely, for- + laf permission). The spelling with gh developed during the 1600's and became fixed in the 1770's; it represents the f of off, once pronounced in this word, and even though lost probably before the 1700's as evidenced by the spelling furlow (1707), the spelling with gh remained. —v. to grant a furlough. 1783, from the noun.

furnace n. Probably about 1200 furneise, Middle English fur-neise; borrowed from Old French fornais, fornaise, from Latin fornācem (nominative fornāx) an oven, kiln; related to formus, furnus oven, and formus WARM.

furnish v. 1442 fournesshen provide, fit out, equip, borrowed from Middle French furniss-, stem of furnir, fornir furnish, accomplish, from Old French, from Vulgar Latin fornire*, alteration of formire*, fromire*, from a Germanic source (compare Old High German frummen carry out, execute, see FOREMOST); for suffix see -ISH². —furniture n. 1529, action of fitting out or equipping; borrowed from Middle French fourniture, from fournir, furnir FURNISH. The meaning of movable household articles appeared in 1573.

furor or furore n. Probably before 1475 furour rage, fury; borrowed from Middle French fureur, learned borrowing from Latin furor, related to furia rage, passion, FURY. The form furore is first recorded as a borrowing of the Italian, from Latin furōrem (nominative furor).

furrow n. Before 1325 forow; earlier forw (about 1300) and furg (before 1250); developed from Old English (before 800) furh furrow; cognate with Old Frisian furch furrow, Middle Dutch vore (modern Dutch voor), Old High German furuh (modern German Furche), and Old Icelandic for furrow, ditch, from Proto-Germanic furH-*. —v. About 1425 forwen to plow; from the noun. The sense of make wrinkles in, is first recorded in 1593.

further adv. Probably before 1200 further, developed from Old English (about 1000) furthor, forthor to a more advanced point, more forward (corresponding to Old Frisian further, Old Saxon furthor, Old High German furdur, obsolete German fürder); see FARTHER. —adj. 1155 furthur; later further (before 1387); developed from Old English (about 1000) furthra, from furthor, adv. —v. Probably before 1200 furthren, furthrien go forth, proceed, assist, improve; later furtheren (about 1303); developed from Old English fyrtthrian help forward, assist, from furthor, adv. and furthra, adj. —furtherance n. About 1435, formed from Middle English furtheran + -aunce -ance. —furthermore adv. Probably about 1200 further more.

furtive adj. 1612, implied in earlier furtively (1490); borrowed from French furtif, furtive, from Latin furtivus stolen, hidden, secret, from furtum theft, robbery, from fūr (genitive fūris) thief.

fury n. About 1385 furie rage, agony, madness; borrowed through Old French furie, from Latin furia violent passion, rage, madness; related to furere to rage, be mad. The earlier use of furios (1375), means that specific dates are of no more consequence than an indication that these words were in the vocabulary in the latter part of the 1300's.

fuse¹ v. melt together. 1681, probably a back formation from fusible or fusion, perhaps formed by influence of French fuser; in some instances also borrowed from Middle French fuser, from Latin fusus, past participle of fundere pour, melt. —fusible adj. About 1395, borrowed from Old French fusible, from Medieval Latin fusibilis, from Latin fūs-, stem of fundere; for suffix see -IBLE. —fusion n. 1555, a melting; borrowed from Middle French fusion, from Latin fusiōnem (nominative fusiō), from fūs-, stem of fundere; for suffix see -SION. The figurative sense of a blending together of different things is first recorded in 1776.

fuse² or fuze n. tube, cord, etc., to detonate an explosive device. 1644, borrowed from Italian fuso spindle (originally spindle-shaped device), from Latin fusus spindle, of uncertain origin; probably also influenced by French fusée spindleful of hemp fiber, and especially English fusee musket fired by a fuse. The meaning for the device that breaks an electrical circuit is first recorded in 1884, and is so named for the shape and sometimes erroneously attributed to *fuse*¹ because fuses have an element that melts to break the circuit.

fuselage n. 1909, borrowed from French fuselage, from fuselé spindle-shaped, from Old French fus* spindle, from Latin fusus spindle.

fusilier or fusileer n. 1680 fusilier soldier armed with a light musket or fusil; borrowed from French fusilier, from fusil musket, from Old French fusil, fuisil, foisil musket (earlier, steel for a tinderbox), from Vulgar Latin focilis* (petra) (stone) producing fire, from Vulgar Latin focus* fire, from Latin focus hearth; for suffix see -IER.

fusillade n. 1801, borrowed from French fusillade, from fusiller to shoot, from fusil musket; see FUSILIER; for suffix see -ADE. —v. 1816, from the noun.

fuss n. 1701, bustle, ado, commotion, perhaps imitative of a bubbling or sputtering sound, expressing commotion or agitation.

tion. —v. 1792, from the noun. —fussy adj. 1831; earlier implied in fussily (1817); formed from English fuss, n. + *-y*¹.

fustian n. Probably before 1200 fustane kind of coarse, thick cloth; later fustian (1380); borrowed from Old French fustaigne, fustaine, from Medieval Latin fustaneum, probably from Latin fūstis staff, stick of wood, probably a loan translation of Greek xylina lina linens of wood (cotton). Also derived from Fostat, town near Cairo, where this cloth was manufactured. The figurative meaning of inflated, pompous language, is first recorded about 1590. —adj. 1429–30 fusteyn made of fustian; later fustian worthless, pretentious (1523); from the noun.

fusty adj. 1491 fusty smelling of mold; developed from earlier fust wine cask (1481–90); borrowed from Old French fust, fuist (originally, stick, stave), from Latin fūstis staff, stick of wood; of uncertain origin; for suffix see *-y*¹.

An earlier term foist wooden cask, and its adjective foyste musty, smelling of a cask (about 1450) were also borrowed from Old French fuist, fust.

futile adj. About 1555, borrowed from Middle French futile and directly from Latin fūtilis vain, worthless, futile (literally, pouring out easily), from the base of fundere pour, melt. —futility n. 1623, probably formed from English futile + -ity, modeled on French futilité, from Latin fūtilitatem (nominative fūtilitās), from fūtilis.

future adj. About 1380 future, futur; borrowed through Old French futur, future, and directly from Latin futūrus about to be, irregular suppletive future participle to esse to be; see BE. —n. About 1380, probably from future, futur, adj., the use modeled on Latin futura, neuter plural of futūrus. —futurism n. 1909, movement in art originating in Italy; borrowed from Italian futurismo (futuro future, from Latin futūrus + -ismo -ism).

fuzz¹ n. fluffy hair or fibers, down. 1674 fuzze mass of fluffy particles, from earlier fusse (1601, or by shortening of fusball, 1597, a puffball of tiny spores); or possibly a back formation from earlier fuzzy; of uncertain origin. —fuzzy adj. 1616, spongy or fluffy; of uncertain origin, perhaps from Low German fussig; spongy; however, if fuzz was formed from earlier fusse, then fuzzy was probably formed from English fuzz + *-y*¹, implied also in earlier fussiness (1613). The sense of blurred, indistinct, is first recorded in 1778.

fuzz² n. 1929 the fuzz the police, American English, of uncertain origin; perhaps a special application of *fuzz*¹.

-fy a suffix forming verbs and meaning: make or cause to be, as in simplify; become, as in solidify; bring into a certain state, as in calcify, horrify. Adopted from Old French verbs ending in -fier, or formed on analogy of such verbs, from Latin -ficāre (sometimes as a replacement of -ficere), from -ficus making, from facere to make, DO¹ perform. The usual ending for these verbs in English is -ify, with i treated as a simple connective. The same practice is found in -fic (see -FIC), and in -ficient, and -fication, and -faction.

G

gab v. 1369 gabben speak foolishly, talk nonsense; earlier, scoff, jeer (probably about 1150); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic gabba to mock). The meaning of chatter or gabble was a widespread usage in Northern English and Scottish dialects before its first recorded use in 1786. —n. Before 1325 idle talk; earlier gabbe gibe, taunt (probably about 1200); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic gabb, gabba mockery).

gabardine n. closely woven cloth. 1904, from the earlier sense of dress, covering (1594); variant of GABERDINE.

gabble v. talk rapidly. 1577, formed from English gab, v. + *-le*³. —n. rapid talk. 1601, meaningless noises made by animals, especially geese, from the verb.

gaberdine n. long, loose outer garment. 1520, borrowed from Spanish gabardina (gabán overcoat and tabardina coarse coat), influenced by Middle French gaverdine, galverdine; of uncertain origin.

gable n. 1347–48 gabell; earlier, in the place name Mykelgavel (1338). The form in the south of England was gable, borrowed through Old French gable, probably from Old Icelandic gaf gable. The form in Scotland and the north of England was gavel, probably borrowed directly from Old Icelandic gaf. The word is related to Old English gafol, geafel fork, possibly all forms developing from Proto-Germanic gabla*, having the sense of fork, as found in Middle and modern Dutch gaffel, and Old High German gabala (modern German Gabel) fork.

gad v. Before 1460 gadden move about restlessly, of uncertain origin perhaps a back formation from gadling, gadeling wandering (probably about 1150); or suggesting association with gad a goad for driving cattle (see GADFLY). —gadabout n. wanderer. 1837, developed from gad-about, adj. (1817); formed from English gad, v. + about.

gadfly n. 1626, fly that bites cattle; probably formed from gad goad (1250 metal rod) + *fly*¹ insect. Earlier (1591) gadfly is recorded with the meaning of someone who likes to go about, often stopping here and there. This strongly suggests some association with gad (move about restlessly) and in turn confusion with gad (a goad; borrowed from a Scandinavian source, compare Old Icelandic gaddr spike, cognate with Gothic gazds, Old High German gart, from Proto-Germanic gazdaz*).

gadget n. 1886 gadjet, probably a simple phonetic spelling of a term said to be known as early as the 1850's, apparently in the jargon of sailors for a small device, fitting, or piece of mechanism of unknown or indefinite name. Perhaps a borrowing of French gâchette piece of a mechanism, a diminutive form of gâche staple of a lock, wall staple or hook (compare gizmo for a similar but later formation).

gadolinium n. 1886, New Latin gadolinium; formed in allusion to the Finnish chemist Johan Gadolin (discoverer of gadolinite, a silicate containing this element) + -ium.

Gaelic adj. 1774, earlier Gathelik (1596); formed from Gael, Scottish Gaidheal, from Old Irish Góidhel + -ic. —n. 1775, from the adjective.

gaff n. Probably before 1325 gaffe iron hook; borrowing of Old French gaffe boat hook; see GAFFE. The specific meaning of hook on a fishing spear, appears in 1656. Slang use as in stand the gaff, get or give the gaff, is first recorded in American English in 1896. —v. 1844, from the noun.

gaffe n. 1909, borrowing of French gaffe blunder (originally, boat hook), from Old French gaffe, from Old Provençal gaf, probably from West Gothic gafa* hook, from Proto-Germanic gafa*.

gaffer n. 1589, old man, apparently contraction of godfather, originally a title of address for an elderly man; the vowel partially influenced by grand-, in grandfather. In the 1800's the term was applied to a foreman or supervisor from which later meanings emerged, such as that of a master glass blower or an electrician in charge of the lighting of a film or television studio set.

gag¹ v. choke. About 1440 gaggen strangle, suffocate; possibly imitative of the sound made in choking, but perhaps related to Old Icelandic gaghal with head thrown back. The sense of stop up (a person's mouth) to prevent speech or outcry, is first recorded in 1509. —n. 1553, from the verb.

gag² n. joke. 1805, a made-up story, deception, possibly developed from earlier gag (1777) to deceive, take in or ply (a person) with talk, especially in the sense of stuff or fill, *GAG*¹. The extended meaning of a joke is first recorded in 1863.

gaga adj. 1920, probably borrowed from French gaga senile, foolish.

gage¹ n. pledge. Probably before 1300 gage pledge to fight; borrowed from Old French gage, guage, from Frankish wadjā-*, related to Gothic wadi pledge (from Proto-Germanic wadjan*).

gage² v. See GAUGE.

gaggle n. Before 1450 gagalle flock of geese; possibly borrowed from Old Icelandic gagl goose.

gaiety or gayety n. See GAY.

gaily adv. See GAY.

gain n. 1473 gayne booty or prey; but implied in earlier gainage profit from agriculture (before 1393); borrowed from Middle French gain, from Old French gaigne, from gaignier to gain, (also) cultivate land, from Frankish waidanjan* (compare Old High German weidenōn to hunt, pasture, weidōn to hunt, seek food, weida pasture, fodder, modern German Weide pasture, weiden to pasture); cognate with Old English wāth hunt, wāthan to hunt, wander, and Old Icelandic veidhr hunt, veidha to hunt; the basic Proto-Germanic noun being warthō*. —v. 1530 gaine profit; borrowed from Middle French gaigner, from Old French gaignier.

Gain replaced or merged with gein advantage, benefit, remedy; and geinen be useful, suitable, serve (before 1200); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic gegn, adj., ready, serviceable; and gegna to suit). —gainful adj. 1549, implied in gainfully; formed from English gain, n. + -ful.

gainsay v. Before 1325, implied in earlier genseyying contradiction, literally, a saying against; formed from gain- against (Old English gegn-, gēan-) + say.

gait n. About 1450 gait, gate, derivative use of gate a going or walking, departure, journey (probably before 1300), and earlier, way, road, path (probably about 1200); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic gata way, road, path); cognate with Old High German gazza street (modern German Gasse), and Gothic gatwō. The form gait was not fully established before the 1750's, gate being found in 1588.

gaiter n. 1775, borrowed from French guêtre, from Middle French gwestre* (misspelled guietre), probably from Frankish urist* instep, cognate with modern German Rist instep.

gala n. 1625, festive dress or attire; borrowed from Italian gala, and later also from French gala, from Old French gale merriment, from galer make merry, from Gallo-Romance walāre*, from Frankish wala*, cognate with Old English wel, Gothic waila; see WELL¹. Related to GALLANT, but also suggesting a connection with Middle English gale song, singing, merriment (probably before 1200); borrowed from Old French gale merriment. The sense of festive occasion is first recorded in 1777.

galaxy n. About 1380, the Milky Way; borrowed from Late Latin galaxias Milky Way, from Greek galaxiās, from gála (genitive gálaktos) milk. The technical meaning of stars in a system is first recorded in 1848. —galactic adj. 1839, of the Galaxy (Milky Way); borrowed from Late Latin galacticus milky, from Greek gála (genitive gálaktos) milk. The sense of pertaining to a galaxy or galaxies in general, is first recorded in 1849.

gale n. Before 1547 gaile wind; origin uncertain.

galena n. 1601, borrowed from Latin galēna a mixture of silver and lead ores, dross from smelting lead; of uncertain origin (possibly from Greek).

gall¹ n. Probably before 1200 galle gall bladder; later gall bile (1373); developed from Old English galla bile (Anglian dialect, before 830), gealla bile (West Saxon). Old English galla is cognate with Old Saxon and Old High German galla bile (modern German Galle), Middle Dutch galle (modern Dutch gal), and Old Icelandic gall, from Proto-Germanic gallōn-*. The informal meaning of impudence, boldness, is first recorded in American English in 1882, and developed from embittered spirit, rancor (probably about 1200, possibly by influence of that sense in Latin). —gall bladder (1676) gall² n. sore spot. About 1395 galle, developed from Old English gealla painful swelling (about 1000); borrowed from Latin galla GALL³ lump on plant. —v. Probably before 1325 gallen have sores, be sore; from the noun. The sense of irritate or annoy, is first recorded in 1573, from the meaning of harass in warfare (1548). —galling adj. 1583, irritating, offensive; from *gall*², v.

gall³ n. lump that forms on injured plants. Before 1398 galle, borrowed from Old French galle, learned borrowing from Latin galla oak apple, gallnut, of uncertain origin.

gallant adj. About 1440 galaunt stylish, showy; also before 1450, brave, noble in spirit; borrowed from Old French galant courteous (earlier, spirited or dashing), from present participle of galer make merry, of uncertain origin. In form and meaning the word is probably connected with Middle English gale merrymaking, and GALE. —n. Probably 1388 galaunt dissolute man, rake; later, man of fashion (1448); borrowed from Old French galant, n., from Old French galant, adj. —gallantry n. 1595, fine appearance; borrowed from French galanterie, from Old French galant, adj. and n. The meaning of gallant behavior, is first recorded in 1632.

galleon n. 1529 gallion, galion; borrowing of Old French galion galleon, from Spanish galeón galleon, an armed merchant ship, formed on galea galley, from Medieval Greek galéa GALLEY.

gallery n. Probably before 1439 gallerie covered walkway or passage; borrowed from Middle French galerie a long portico, gallery, from Medieval Latin galeria, of uncertain origin (perhaps alteration of galilea, galilaea church porch, probably from Latin Galilaea, from Greek Galilā Galilee, the northernmost region of Palestine in the time of Christ).

The meaning of a building to house works of art is first recorded in English in 1591, and the sense of those people who occupy a gallery, as in a theater, is found in 1649.

galley n. Probably about 1225 galeie, borrowed from Old French galie, galee, probably through Catalan galea, from Medieval Greek galéa, of uncertain origin.

Gallic adj. 1672, borrowed from Latin Gallicus pertaining to Gaul or the Gauls, from Gallia Gaul, and Gallus a Gaul.

—Gallicism n. 1656, borrowing of French gallicisme (gallic + -isme -ism).

gallinaceous adj. 1783, borrowed, possibly by influence of earlier French gallinacé, from Latin gallināceus of poultry, from gallina hen, from gallus rooster; for suffix see -ACEOUS.

gallium n. 1875, New Latin, probably formed from a play on words by translating French le coq rooster into Latin gallus + -ium.

gallivant v. 1819, a humorous alteration of gallant, v. (1608, play the gallant, flirt, gad about, from GALLANT, adj.).

Gallo- a combining form meaning Gaul, Gaulish, Gallic, as in Gallo-Latin, Gallo-Romance; or France, French, as in Gallophile. Borrowed from Latin Gallo-, combining form of Gallus inhabitant of ancient Gallia Gaul.

gallon n. Probably about 1225 galun, later gallon (1475); borrowed from Old North French galon (probably Norman dialect), corresponding to Old French jalon liquid measure, related to jale bowl and jaloie measure of capacity, from Medieval Latin galleta bucket or pail, of uncertain origin (perhaps from Gaulish galla vessel).

gallop v. Before 1425 galopen, borrowed from Middle French galoper, from Old French galoper, variant of Old North French waloper; see WALLOP. —n. 1523 galoppe; from the verb. These forms existed along with walop, wallop (Scottish use as early as 1375), but replaced walop, wallop by the late 1500's.

gallows n. 1400 gallowes; earlier galwes, plural of galwe gallows (about 1300), and in the place name Galowe (1228–40); developed from Old English galga (probably Mercian, about 725, in Beowulf), gealga (in West Saxon); cognate with Old Frisian galga gallows, Old Saxon and Old High German galgo (modern German Galgen), Old Icelandic galgi gallows, gelgia twig, stick, Gothic galga cross from Proto-Germanic galz-*.

galore adv. 1675, in abundance; borrowed from Irish go léir, corresponding to Gaelic gu léir sufficiently, enough (go, Gaelic gu, usually thought to mean to, is a particle prefixed to an adjective to form an adverb and does not have the meaning usually ascribed to it).

galosh n. About 1364–65 galoches, pl., a kind of footwear; earlier variant galeys, probably galegs, pl. (1353); and found in the surname Galoche maker or seller of galoshes (1306); probably borrowed from Old French galoches, possibly a word derived from Vulgar Latin galopia*, from galopus*, from Greek kālōpōdion, diminutive of kālōpous shoemaker's last (kālon wood + poús foot).

galumph v. 1872, apparently from a blend of gallop and trumph; coined by Lewis Carroll.

galvanism n. 1797, electricity produced by chemical action; borrowed from French galvanisme or from Italian galvanismo, formed in allusion to the Italian scientist Luigi Galvani + -isme, -ismo -ism. —galvanic adj. 1797, formed from English galvan(ism) + -ic, perhaps modeled on French galvanique. —galvanize v. 1802, either formed from English galvan(ism)

+ -ize, or borrowed from French galvaniser, from galvanisme galvanism. The figurative sense of excite as if by an electric current, is first recorded in 1853.

gambit n. 1656 gambett, borrowed from Italian gambetto, literally, a tripping up (as a trick in wrestling), from gamba leg, from Late Latin gamba. The current spelling came from French gambit. Gambit in the sense of any opening move to gain some advantage, is first recorded in English in 1855.

gamble v. 1726, implied in gambling playing for high stakes; alteration of gamner, gamener (1509), from gamen, gamenen to play, jest, be merry (probably before 1200) or a derivative from game to play games (1594). The intrusion of b may come from confusion with the homophone gambol, v., in the meaning be playful or sportive (1602). —n. 1823, risky venture; from the verb. —gambler n. (1747).

gambol n. 1596, alteration (by loss of d) in gambolde a leap or spring (1530), from gambad leap of a horse (1503); borrowed from Middle French gambade, possibly through Provençal gambado, campado, and camba leg, from Late Latin gamba, camba horse's hock or leg, from Greek kampē bend; see *CAMP*¹. The sense of frolicsome movements, merrymaking appeared in 1596. —v. 1590, alteration (probably by influence of noun gambolde, gambauld), of gambade to leap or spring (1508); borrowed from Middle French gambader, from gambade, n. The sense of to be sportive or frolicsome, is found in 1602.

gambrel n. 1851, in gambrel roof, so called from the shape of a gambrel a horse's hind leg (1601); earlier, stick to hang slaughtered animals on (1547); borrowed from Old North French (Norman dialect) gamberel, from gambe leg, from Late Latin gamba.

game¹ n. amusement. Probably before 1200 gome (West Midland dialect) and game; developed from Old English gamen joy, fun, amusement (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian game joy, glee, Old Saxon, Old High German, and Old Icelandic gaman game, sport, merriment, of unknown origin. The meaning of wild animals caught for sport is first recorded about 1300. —v. Before 1325 gamen to play, be merry, formed from a blend of gomen (West Midland dialect, probably before 1200), from the noun; and a shortened form of gommen (also West Midland dialect, probably before 1200), later gomenen; developed from Old English gamenian to play, from gamen joy. —adj. 1725, brave, spirited; from the noun. —gaming n. 1501, gambling; formed from English game, v. + -ing. —gamy adj. spirited, plucky. 1844, formed from English game, n. + *-y*¹. The sense of having a strong taste or smell, as of game, is first recorded in 1863.

game² adj. lame. 1787, of uncertain origin (possibly a variant of gammy, slang for bad, 1839, though the date is late, the record of slang is often defective).

gamete n. 1886, borrowed from New Latin gameta, from Greek gametē wife, gamētēs husband, from gamein marry.

gamin n. 1840, street urchin; borrowed from French gamin, perhaps from Berrichon dialect gamer to steal.

gamma n. Probably before 1425, third letter of the Greek alphabet; borrowed from Latin gamma, from Greek gámma, from a Semitic source (compare Hebrew gímel the third letter of the Hebrew alphabet, literally meaning a camel, originally formed from the hieroglyph of a camel). — gamma globulin (1937) — gamma ray (1903).

gammon n. Probably before 1425 gambon hindquarter of a pig; later gammon (1611); borrowed from Old North French gambon ham, from gambe leg, from Late Latin gamba leg.

— gamous a combining form producing adjectives and meaning marrying, as in monogamous; or joining in reproduction, as in homogamous. Borrowed from Greek -gamos, from gámos marriage.

gamut n. Before 1450, lowest tone in a musical scale of all the recognized notes in medieval music; a contraction of Medieval Latin gamma ut (gamma Greek letter and ut, later replaced by *do*²). In medieval musical notation the names of the notes were taken from the syllables in a Latin hymn to St. John the Baptist. The figurative sense of whole scale or range of a thing is first recorded in 1626.

— gamy a combining form producing nouns and meaning marriage, as in monogamy; or union in reproduction, as in heterogamy. Borrowed from Greek -gamiā (as in monogamiā monogamy), from gámos marriage; see -GAMOUS.

gander n. Before 1250 gandre, developed from Old English gandra (about 1000); cognate with Dutch gander, and Middle Low German ganre, from Proto-Germanic gánez-*. The slang meaning (by craning the neck as a gander does) of a long look is first recorded in 1914, from the verb (1903).

gang n. 1400, band of men; earlier, a number of things used together (probably 1340); also, a going, journey (probably about 1200), a road, path (1199); developed from Old English (before 830) gong a going, journey, step, passage. The disparity of meanings indicated two sources: group of men and set, directly from Old Icelandic; and a going, journey, way, from Old English; cognate with Old Frisian, Old Saxon, Dutch, Old High German gang (modern German Gang) a going, Old Icelandic gangr a going (but also, a group), and Gothic gagg a going, from Proto-Germanic ganzaz*. — v. Informal. 1856, from the noun. This new verb is a reintroduction of the verb use in English, which is earlier found in the obsolete gangen (probably about 1200, wander). The sense of arrange tools or machines in gangs is American English (1900). — gangster n. 1896, American English; formed from English gang, n. + -ster. — gangway n. Old English gangweg road, passage, thoroughfare (about 1000); formed from gang, n. + weg way.

ganglion n. 1681, swelling on the sheath of a tendon; borrowing of Late Latin ganglion, from Greek ganglion, earlier used in the sense of a nerve bundle by Galen, the physician and writer of the 100's A.D., and first recorded in English in 1732.

gangrene n. Before 1400 cancrena, cancrene; later gangrene (1563); borrowing of Medieval Latin cancrena, from Latin gangraena, from Greek gángraina an eating or gnawing sore.

— gangrenous adj. 1612, formed from English gangrene, n. + -ous.

gantlet n. See GAUNTLET.

gantry n. 1356 ganter wooden stand for barrels; borrowed from Old North French gantier, Old French chantier, from Latin cantherius rafter, frame, borrowed from Greek kanthēlios pack ass, from the framework placed on its back, kanthēlion rafter, of unknown origin.

gap n. Before 1325; earlier in the place name Grenehougap (1261); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic gap chasm, related to gapa to GAPE). — v. 1847, to notch, make jagged; from the noun. The sense of make a gap, is first recorded in 1893.

gape v. Before 1250 gapen, probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic gapa to open the mouth, gape; cognate with Middle Low German, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch gapen to gape, Middle High German and modern German gaffen to gape, stare, Old English ofergapian neglect, forget), of unknown origin. — n. 1535, act of opening the mouth, a yawn; from the verb.

gar n. 1765, American English, shortening of GARFISH.

garage n. 1902, borrowing of French garage place where a vehicle is sheltered, from Middle French garer to shelter, from Germanic; (compare Old High German warōn take care, modern German wahren, safeguard); see WARY. — v. 1906, from the noun.

garb n. 1591, grace, stylishness; borrowed from Middle French garbe graceful outline, from Italian garbo grace, elegance, perhaps from Germanic; (compare Old High German garawi, garwi adornment, GEAR). The sense of fashion of dress, appeared in 1622 from manner of doing something, style of living (1599). — v. 1836, from the noun.

garbage n. 1422, entrails or waste parts of an animal; of uncertain origin (some relation may exist with garbelage removal of refuse from spices, and with Old French garbage, variant of jarbage, a bundle of sheaves, entrails). The specific meaning of refuse is first recorded in English in 1583.

garble v. 1419–20 garbelen to inspect and remove refuse from; borrowed through Anglo-French garbeler to sift, from Middle French, and from Medieval Latin garbellare, from Arabic gharbala to sift. The Arabic word is related to ghirbāl sieve, perhaps from Late Latin cribellum, diminutive of Latin cribrum sieve, and related to cernere to sift, separate. Existence of Italian garbellare and Spanish garbillo reinforce the opinion that this was a widespread term among Mediterranean traders. The sense of confuse, mix up or distort by mutilating or making unfair selection from (a statement, writing, etc.), is first recorded in 1689–92.

garden n. 1171–83 gardin, borrowed from Old North French gardin, from gart garden, from Frankish (compare Old High German garto garden, modern German Garten; related to gart enclosure, YARD; cognate with Old Saxon gard enclosure, Old English geard, Old Icelandic gardhr, and Gothic gard-s; the sense of garden is also found in Old Frisian garda, Old Saxon gardo, and Old High German). —v. 1577; from the noun. —gardener n. (1130), as part of a surname in Cardiner, later Gardiner (1169); borrowed from Old North French gardinier*, from gardin + -ier (compare Old High German gartināri, modern German Gärtner).

gardenia n. 1757, New Latin, formed in allusion to the American naturalist Alexander Garden.

garfish n. 1440 garfysche, compound of Old English gār spear (with reference to the fish's jaws) + fisc FISH.

gargantuan adj. 1596, in allusion to Gargantua (a large-mouthed giant in novels of French satirist Rabelais supposedly from Spanish and Portuguese garganta gullet, throat); for suffix see -AN.

gargle v. 1527 gargle, gargil; probably borrowed from Middle French gargouiller to gurgle, bubble, and replacing Middle English gargarisen (recorded probably before 1425, and borrowed from Latin gargarizare). Middle French gargouiller was formed from Old French gargouille throat, waterspout, perhaps formed from garg-, imitative of sounds made in the throat + goule*, dialect for mouth, from Latin gula throat —n. 1657, from the verb.

gargoyle n. 1286 gargurl; later gargoille (1363); borrowed from Old French gargole, gargouille throat, waterspout; see GARGLE.

garish adj. 1545 garishe unpleasantly bright, gaudy; possibly formed from Middle English gawren to stare (about 1200), from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic gaurr rough fellow) + *-ish*¹.

garland n. Probably about 1300 gerlond; borrowed from Old French gerlande, garlande, perhaps from Frankish wēron* (compare Middle High German wieren adorn, bedeck).

garlic n. About 1150 garleyc; later garlec (before 1300); developed from Old English gārleac (about 700, Mercian), later gārleac (West Saxon); formed from gār spear (with reference to the cloves) + leac LEEK. Old English gār is cognate with Old Saxon and Old High German gēr spear (modern German Ger), Old Icelandic geirr (from Proto-Germanic gaizás*).

garment n. Probably before 1400 garment, variant of earlier Middle English garnement (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French garnement, from garnir fit out, provide, adorn; see GARNISH; for suffix see -MENT.

garner v. Before 1400 (in Scottish) garner, from the noun. —n. storehouse for grain. Before 1325, earlier gerner (probably before 1200); borrowed from Old French gernier, variant of grenier storehouse, garret, from Latin grānārium granary; see GRANARY.

garnet n. About 1325 gernet; later garnet (about 1400); borrowed from Old French grenat garnet, originally an adjective, of a dark-red color, a form abstracted as grenate, from pomegrenate POMEGRANATE.

garnish v. Probably about 1380 garnysen decorate, adorn; borrowed from Old French garniss-, stem of garnir, guarnir (older warir) provide, furnish, defend, from a Germanic source (compare Old High German warōn provide, take heed, WARN); for suffix see -ISH². The legal sense of notify of the attachment of a person's money or property to settle a debt, is first recorded before 1577. The specific meaning of embellish food, is found in 1693. —n. 1393, set of dishes, from the verb. The meaning of things placed on or around food to embellish it, is first recorded in 1673. —garnishee n. 1627, formed from English garnish, v. + -ee. —v. 1892, from the noun. —garnishment n. 1523, a notice of attaching money or property; formed from English garnish, v. + -ment. The sense of decoration or adornment is first recorded in 1550. —garniture n. 1532, outfit, furniture, equipment; borrowed from Middle French garniture, from garnir provide, furnish. The sense of decoration or ornament, is first recorded in 1667.

garret n. Probably about 1300 garite watchtower; later attic or loft (1310); borrowed from Old French garite watchtower, place of refuge, from garir (older warir) defend, preserve, from a Germanic source (compare Gothic warjan forbid, Old High German weren, modern German wehren defend, Old English werian hold, defend, from Proto-Germanic warjanan*).

garrison n. About 1250 garisoun treasure, payment; later gar-nysoun, pl., body of armed men (1338), and protection, fortress (1410); borrowed from Old French garison defense, from garir defend; see GARRET.

The variant Middle English garnyson was a separate borrowing from Old French garnison, from garnir defend; (see GARNISH) displaced by garrison by the 1500's. —v. 1569, from the noun.

garrote n. 1622, borrowed from Spanish garrote, literally, stick for twisting cord, of uncertain origin (possibly from French as evidenced by earlier Old French garoquier, garochier to garrote). —v. 1851, from the noun.

garrulous adj. About 1611, borrowed from Latin garrulus talkative, from garrere to chatter; for suffix see -OUS. Possibly also a back formation from garrulity. —garrulity n. 1581 garrulitie, borrowed from Middle French garrulité, from Latin garrulitatem (nominative garrulitās), from garrulus; for suffix see -ITY.

garter n. Before 1325 garter, borrowed from Old North French gartier, from garet bend of the knee, perhaps from Gaulish (compare Welsh gar, garr leg, referring to the bone). One of the earliest references in English (about 1353) is to the Garter (highest order of English knighthood), according to tradition established by Edward III about 1344. —v. About 1440 garteren, from the noun.

gas n. 1658, from Dutch gas, probably an alteration of Greek cháos empty space, CHAOS (since g in Dutch represents a sound somewhat like the modern Greek sound transcribed as ch); coined by the Flemish chemist Van Helmont in the sense of an occult principle supposedly present in all bodies, probably suggested by the Swiss-born alchemist Paracelsus, who used Greek cháos in the sense of proper element of spirits such as gnomes. The technical sense of any fluid substance that can expand without limit (as air), is first recorded in 1779. Later, as experiment developed knowledge, meanings were specialized to mixture of gases that can be burned for fuel, light, etc. (1794), anesthetic (1894), and poison gas (1900). —v. 1889, from the noun. —gaseous adj. 1799, formed from English gas, n. + -eous, form of -ous.

gash n. 1548 gashe, alteration of earlier garsshe (1530), from Middle English garce (probably before 1200); borrowed from Old French garse*, from Old North French garser to scarify, wound, apparently from Vulgar Latin charassāre*, from Greek charássein engrave. —v. 1570 gashe, alteration of Middle English garsen (before 1398); borrowed from Old North French garser to scarify.

The loss of r during Middle and early modern English is characteristic of a sizable group of words, including bass (Middle English barse), dace (Middle English darse), bust break (Middle English burst), etc., in which the final consonant sound or sounds influenced the elimination of the preceding r-sound.

gasket n. 1622 casquette small rope or plaited coil used to secure a sail, later gassit (1626), and gasket (1630); of uncertain origin. Gasket meaning a packing (originally of braided hemp) to seal metal joints is first recorded in 1829.

gasoline n. 1865 gasolene; later gasoline (1871), American English; formed from gas + -ol (from Latin oleum OIL) + -ene, variant of *-ine*². The shortened form gas is first recorded in 1905.

gasp v. Before 1393 gaspen, of uncertain origin; perhaps borrowed from the Scandinavian (compare Old Icelandic geispa to yawn, Danish gispe gasp, Norwegian giespe yawn, Swedish gäspa). —n. 1577, from the verb.

gastric adj. 1656, formed in English from Greek gastēr (genitive gastrós) stomach + English suffix -ic.

gastro- or gastr- (before vowels) a combining form meaning stomach, as in gastrovascular, gastroenteritis (inflammation of the enteric membrane lining the stomach and intestines), gastrectomy (surgery or cutting of the stomach). Borrowed from Greek gastro-, combining form of gastēr (genitive gastrós) stomach.

gastronomy n. 1814, borrowed from French gastronomie, from Greek gastronomía, from gastrónomos one who arranges or prepares food, literally, prepares for the stomach (gastēr, genitive gastrós stomach + -nómos arranging, regulating). —gastro- adj. 1828, borrowed from French gastronomique, from gastronomie gastronomy.

gastropod n. 1854, earlier gasteropod (1826); borrowed from New Latin Gasteropoda, Gastropoda, pl., name of a class of mollusks (from Greek gastēr, genitive gastrós stomach + podós, genitive podós FOOT; from the ventral position of its "foot" or locomotive organ).

gastrula n. 1877, New Latin gastrula (from Greek gastēr, genitive gastrós stomach + Latin -ula, diminutive suffix).

gate n. About 1200 gate, developed from Old English gæt (about 700), and geat, get, pl. geatu, gatu (778); cognate with Old Frisian gat, jet hole, opening, Old Saxon gat eye of a needle, hole, Low German and modern Dutch gat gap, hole, breach, and Old Icelandic gat opening, passage; from Proto-Germanic jatan*.

-gate a combining form meaning scandal, as in Koreagate, laborgate (1973, used chiefly in allusion to the Watergate scandal of corruption and cover-up in the Nixon administration).

gather v. 1137 gaderen come together, accumulate; developed from Old English gadian, gædrian (probably about 750); cognate with Old Frisian gaderia to gather, Frisian gearjen, Middle Dutch gaderen (modern Dutch garen), Middle Low German gadderren to gather, Middle High German gatern unite; related to Old English gæd fellowship, gada companion, and gōd GOOD. Gather, together, father, weather, and similar words, were spelled with a d until the 1500's; the change to th before r reflected a change in pronunciation that occurred in most of the English dialects before the 1500's. —gathering n. 1137 gadering a meeting, assembly; developed from Old English gædering (1050–1175); from the verb.

gauche adj. 1751, awkward, tactless; borrowed from French gauche left (originally, awkward, awry), from Middle French gauchir turn aside, swerve, from Old French gaucher, gauchier trample, reel, walk clumsily, from Frankish walkan* (compare German walken to full cloth; see WALK).

gaudy adj. 1583, showy, tastelessly fine; earlier, deceptive, full of trickery (before 1529); formed from English gaud, n. (1333 gaude deception or trick; later, ornament or rosary bead, 1361; possibly borrowed from Anglo-French gaudir be merry, from Latin gaudēre rejoice) + *-y*¹; see JOY.

The noun use of gaudy meaning a feast or festival, usually marked by frivolity (1561), is found with reference to a college event at Oxford or Cambridge.

gauge or gage v. 1440 gaugen, borrowed through Anglo-French gauge, from Old North French gauger, from gauge gauging rod, perhaps from Gallo-Romance galga, collective plural of Frankish galgo* (compare Old High German galgo rod, GALLOWS). An earlier use gauge over tower over something, is recorded before 1400. —n. About 1332, standard, in a surname Gageman; from Old North French gauge gauging rod.

The spelling variants gauge and gage have existed since the first recorded uses in Middle English, though in American English gage is found exclusively in technical uses.

gaunt adj. 1440 gawnt, thin and bony; earlier a surname, in Anglo-French le Gant (1247); borrowed from Middle French gant, of uncertain origin.

gauntlet¹ n. iron or steel glove. Probably before 1425 gantelet, borrowed from Middle French gantelet, semi-diminutive of gant glove, from Frankish want*, from Proto-Germanic wantuz* (compare Old Swedish vanter glove, Swedish and Danish vante mitten, glove, and Old Icelandic votttr glove, Norwegian vott mitten); for suffix see -LET.

The spelling with u is a variant in Middle English and did not become firmly established until the 1500's.

gauntlet² or gantlet n. punishment in which the offender runs between two rows of men who strike him with weapons. 1661, in the phrase run the gantlet, alteration of earlier gantlope (1646); borrowed from Swedish gatlopp, probably by English soldiers who fought along with Swedish military forces during the Thirty Years' War. Swedish gatlopp is a compound of Old Swedish gata lane and lopp course, from Middle Low German lōp (cognate with Middle Dutch lōpen to run); see GAIT and LOPE. The gradual shift from gantlope to gauntlet (influenced by gauntlet¹) did not become fixed until the mid-1800's.

gauss n. 1882, unit of magnetic field strength (later called an oersted); in allusion to the German mathematician Karl Gauss.

gauze n. 1688 gauze; earlier gais (1561); borrowed from French gaze, possibly through Spanish gasa, apparently from Arabic qazz raw silk.

